Szinetár, György (George) (Debrecen, 22 February 1905 - Budapest, 14 May 1974) – Writer and poet. He studied at Nyíregyháza. Between 1926 and 1932 he lived in Berlin. He worked for the UFA Film Studio as an assistant director. From 1932 until 1938 he was a journalist in Budapest. In 1938 he traveled to Paris, writing articles for the left-wing papers, such as the Soir and others, publicizing Hungarian culture and literature. In the meantime, he wrote several theatre plays, including Gray Walls (Szürke falak) (1933); Without Love (Szerelem nélkül) (1936), and After the Premier (Premier után) (1939). From 1940 to 1941, he served in the French Army. He returned to Hungary before the end of World War II, where he was arrested and sent to a detention camp. After 1945, he was active in the revival of Hungarian film production as an instructor at the Academy of Film and Dramatic Art, and as a dramaturge at the Hunnia Studios and Honvédfilm. He directed several films, such as: Mrs Szabó (Szabóné) (1949); Crafty Matt, the Goose-herd (Ludas Matyi) (1950); With Full Steam (Teljes gőzzel) (1952), and Gerolstein Adventure (Gerolsteini kaland) (1957). He was Editor of the magazine Movie Life (Mozi élet) from 1946 to 1948, and The Little Drummer (Kisdobos) from 1958. He also wrote comedies and musicals: Patronizing the Arts (Műpártolás) (1946); Trip to the Moon (Utazás a holdba) (1961); Susmus (1962), and New Tales about the Typewriter (Új mesék az írógépről) (1967). He wrote a stage adaptation of Géza Gárdonyi's historical novel, The Stars of Eger (Egri Csillagok), translated into English under the title Eclipse of the Crescent Moon. He also wrote a sports musical, Knock-out, which was performed in 1969. Other works include The Thief of Voices (A hangok tolvaja) (1933); Life Tells a Tale (Mesél az élet) (1933); The Story of Eight Boys (Nyolc fiú története) (1935); I Want You To Know ... (Akarom hogy tudd ...) (1943); The First Step (Az első lépés) (1960); Storm on the Plains (Vihar a Pusztán) (1967), and I, Katalin Varga (Én, Varga Katalin) (1968). He was a recipient of the Attila József Prize (1950). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7667.

Szinetár, Miklós (Nicholas) (Budapest, 8 February 1932 - ) – Stage manager and theater director. After completing the Academy of Dramatic Art, he became a manager of the Metropolitan Operetta Theater (Fővárosi Operettszínház), Budapest in 1953, and later Head Manager. From 1960 he was Artistic Manager of the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház). From 1962 he was Senior Manager of Hungarian Television (MTV); from 1971, Artistic Leader; from 1974, Artistic Director; from 1979 Deputy President, and from 1986 to 1990, Senior Manager. Since 1954, he has been teaching at the Academy of Dramatic Art. Since 1993, he has been Director of the Metropolitan Operetta Theater. He is a multi-faceted artist and an important creator of television shows. Apart from spectacular, novel staging of operas, he manages ballet for the stage, as well as for films. He brings to life the most valuable characteristics of the various genres; be it classical drama or operetta, it reveals human traits, and at the same time modernizes the traditions. His stage managing includes Brecht-Weill's Beggar's Opera (Koldusopera); Ibsen's An Enemy of the People (A nép ellensége); Shaw's Saint Joan; Kodály's Háry János; Mozart's Così fan tutte (Mindenki így csinálja!), and Wagner's Tannhäuser. His feature films include Mirage in all Quantity (Délibáb minden mennyiségben) (1961); Háry János (1975); Gypsy Princess (Csárdáskirálynő) (1971), and The Fortress (Az erőd) (1978). He is the author of the book, My Adventures (Kalandjaim) (1988). He is a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1970), the Jászai Mari Prize (1956, 1961), the Merited Artist title (1967), the Outstanding Artist title (1978), the Béla Balázs Prize (1974), and the Prima Prize (2012). – B: 1445, 1105, T: 7456.

Szini, Gyula (Julius) (Budapest, 9 October 1876 - Budapest, 17 May 1932) – Writer and journalist. He was a descendant of a village schoolmaster and cantor of the Reformed Church, who was the friend of Mihály (Michael) Táncsics and János (John) Vajda. He read Law at the University of Budapest and then worked as a Judge; in 1900, he gave up his position as a Judge and joined the editorial staff of the paper, Pest Diary (Pesti Napló) of Budapest. Later, he became an associate of The News (Az Újság) and, during the same period, he published critical articles in the Hungarian Genius (Magyar Génius) and The Week (A Hét), and later in the Observer (Figyelő), edited by Ernő (Ernst) Osvát, and also in the journal West (Nyugat). During the months of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic (1919), he was a member of the Writers' Directorate, while in the Horthy era he withdrew from public life. He translated numerous novels and plays. In selecting his themes he was attracted to the rare, the peculiar and the unusual; he stood far from realism; he was more of a symbolist. His works include Spiritual Adventures (Lelki kalandok) short story (1908); Profane Love (Profán szerelem) novel (1914); Modern Women (Modern nők) studies (1923), and His Selected Short Stories (Válogatott elbeszélései) (1933). In 1929, he was awarded the Baumgarten Prize. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Táncsics, Mihály; Vajda, János; Osvát, Ernő; Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary.

Szinyei Merse, Pál (Paul) (Szinyeújfalu, now Chminianska Nova Ves, Slovakia, 4 July 1845 - Jernye, now Jarovnice, Slovakia, 2 February 1920) – Painter. He was a descendant of an old Hungarian noble family. His father was sub-prefect of County Sáros, later its Lord Lieutenant. He encouraged young Paul to become an artist. His mother was Valéria Jekelfalussy. In 1864 he was enrolled in the Academy of Arts in Munich, where Strähuber, Anschütz, later Sándor (Alexander) Wagner were his teachers. He also became acquainted with the noted German teacher Karl von Piloty, who took him as his student in 1868. From his master he did not adopt the formal academic method, only learned drawing and the rules of designing. The direct and individual tone and color-richness of his art were becoming manifest already in his youthful works, e.g. Faun and Nymph (1868). As early as 1869, when he was 24, his individual form of expression became evident in his plein air masterpieces such as Clothes-drying (Ruhaszárítás) and Swing (Hinta) (both in the National Gallery in Budapest). He was in his favorite element: realism mixed with poetry of the portrayal of life and nature. Soon he painted his first important work, the lyrical Pair of Lovers (Szerelmespár) (also in the National Gallery), Mother and her Child (Anya és gyermeke) and, about the same time, he started working on Picnic in May (Majális), one of the finest paintings by a Hungarian artist, completed in 1873 (now in the National Gallery). This splendid plein air work, brimming with youthful life, a hymn to the beauty of nature and the joy of life, did not reach the merited success and, as a result, Szinyei Merse became discouraged. Giving up painting in earnest, he went back to his family estate at Jernye, got married, managed the farming work, and only for relaxation did he do some painting. But even during this phase of his life, he produced some notable works, like Woman in Violet Dress (Lilaruhás nő) (1874), a painting of his wife, held in the National Gallery. In 1882 he went to Vienna and started painting again in earnest. For example, the work he named Lark (Pacsirta) (1883) was painted then, but it also received unfavorable criticism, further depressing him. His divorce in 1887 also added to his low spirits. Only from 1894 did he start exhibiting again, with works like Melting of Snow (Hóolvadás) and A Field of Poppies (Pipacsos rét). Finally, he was re-discovered by young artists: in the 1896 exhibition, where his Majális scored a resounding success, he became regarded as the creator of the Hungarian plein air painting, who discovered the effect of open air and sunshine and, in the eyes of the young members of the Nagybánya (now Baia Mare, Romania) artist colony, he was the forerunner of their aspirations. Because of the revived interest in his work, he started painting again, but his paintings did not compete with his youthful achievements; in place of his daring creativity came objective naturalism, mostly scenes, painted from life. In 1897, Szinyei Merse was made a Member of Parliament. In 1905, his collective exhibition, organized in the National Salon, proved a great success and, in the same year, he was made Director of the Academy of Applied Art in Budapest, a position he held until his death. In 1907, he took part in the foundation of the Hungarian Impressionists and Naturalists' Circle (MIÉNK) and several of his paintings appeared at exhibitions abroad. In the spring of 1919, he retired to Jernye due to his illness. There is the Szinyei Merse Society; a High School and a Street in Budapest and Kecskemét bear his name. – B: 0883, 0934, 1031, 1068, T: 7456.→Lyka, Károly; Molnár C., Pál.

Szinnyei, József (Joseph) (Pozsony, now Bratislava in Slovakia, 26 May 1857 - Budapest, 14 April 1943) – Linguist. In 1878, at the University of Budapest, he obtained a Ph.D. in Arts and a Dip. Ed.. From 1879 to 1880, he was on a state scholarship and he studied in Finland. Then, for a year and a half he was Editor of the paper, Ország-Világ (Land and World) and, in 1881, he became an official at the National Széchényi Library, Budapest. From 1883 he became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) in Finnish Language and Literature at the University of Budapest. From 1886 on, he was Professor of Hungarian Linguistics and Literary History at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), where, from 1891, he also gave lectures in Finno-Ugrian Comparative Linguistics. From 1893, he was Professor of Ural-Altai Linguistics at the University of Budapest, and in 1923-1924, its Vice-Chancellor. From 1928 he was Librarian of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; and, from 1896 for 34 years, Editor of the journal, Linguistic Proceedings (Nyelvtudományi Közlemények), and President of the Hungarian Linguistic Society. In 1899, he was awarded the First Prize of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (member since 1896). From 1927, he was a Member of the Upper Houses of Parliament. Initially, he dealt with the history of literature, while later he focused on the phonology and morphology of the Finno-Ugrian languages, and Hungarian language history. His works include The Origin of the Hungarian Language (A magyar nyelv eredete) (1883); Finnish-Hungarian Dictionary (Finn-magyar szótár) (1884); The Hungarian Language (A magyar nyelv) (1887, 1929); What did the Hungarian Language Sound like During the Times of the Árpád Dynasty? (Hogy hangzott a magyar nyelv az Árpádok korában?) (1895); Hungarian Comparative Linguistics (Magyar nyelvhasználat) (1896); Hungarian Dialect Dictionary, vols. i,ii (Magyar tájszótár I, II) (1893-1901), and The Origin, Language and Culture of the Hungarians at the Time of the Carpathian Conquest (A magyarság eredete, nyelve és honfoglaláskori műveltsége) (1919, also in German 1920, 1923). His linguistic work appeared in German and in Finnish. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Szirmai, Albert (Sirmay) (Budapest, 2 July 1880 - New York, 15 January 1967) – Composer and conductor. After completing his studies at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, he became the répétiteur of the People's Theater-Comic Opera (Népszínház-Operettszínház), where his first work for the stage, The Yellow Domino (A sárga domino) was presented in 1907. Later on, he worked as a conductor in the Modern Theater Cabaret (Modern Színház Cabaret), then in the Andrassy Boulevard Theater (Andrássy úti Színház). His popular operettas, staged at the King Theater (Király Színház), were soon shown in Vienna, Berlin and London. He achieved his greatest successes with Alexandra, in London, and with Miska, the Grandee (Mágnás Miska) in Vienna, Milan, Berlin, etc. The best artists sang his chansons written for the poems of Jenő Eugene) Heltai, Andor (Andrew) Gábor, Mihály (Michael) Babits, and Ernő (Ernest) Szép. In the late 1920s, he decided to emigrate and, from 1928 he lived in New York; but his later works did not achieve success. He became Senior Editor of the music publisher Chappel. In his last years, he visited Hungary, where several times two of his new pieces were successfully played. His works include Belle of the Ball (Báلكirálynő) (1908); The Dancing Hussars (Táncos Huszárok) (1909); Bluebell (Harangvirág) (1918); Alexandra (1923); Legend of Tabán (Tabáni legenda) (1957), and Girls of Fairyland (Tündérlaki lányok) (1964). His work Miska, the Grandee (Mágnás Miska) was made into a feature film in 1948. – B: 0883, 1445, 1672, 1742, T: 7456. → Babits, Mihály; Gábor, Andor; Heltai, Jenő; Szép, Ernő.

Szirmai, Károly (Charles) (Temerin, now in Serbia, 27 June 1890 - Verbász, now Vrba, Serbia, 6 October 1972) – Writer, poet and literature historian. He earned a Ph.D. in Law at the University of Budapest in 1914. First he worked as a clerk in Budapest; then, in the 1920s, he moved to Verbász, where he worked as an official in the local sugar factory until his retirement in 1955. He founded and edited the short-lived journal Light and Darkness (Fény és Sötétség) in 1910. His literary activity was united with the unfolding of the Yugoslav-Hungarian literature. He was a member of the Yugoslav Writers' Association and the Pen Club from 1932. With Kornél (Cornelius) Szenteleky, he was co-editor from 1933, and Editor-in-Chief from 1937 to 1941 of the literary journal Shock (Kalangya). He regarded it as his editorial task to feature the entire Hungarian literature, allowing space not only for the writers of Southern Hungary (Voivodina), but also for the Hungarian writers of Czechoslovakia and Romania; from among the Hungarian writers he was the first to acquaint the readers of the journal with the names of László (Ladislav) Németh, Péter Veres, Lőrinc (Lawrence) Szabó, and others; he also developed close connection with the south-Slavic literary life. His first works appeared in Budapest journals Sunrise (Napkelet) and Hungarian Review (Magyar Szemle). After 1945, he took part in Yugoslav-Hungarian intellectual life and played an important role in organizing its literary life. In recognition of his volume entitled Music-making Remoteness (Muzsikáló messzeség) (1969), he was granted the Bridge (Híd) Prize in 1969. His works include The Poet of Death (A halál költője), study (1943); In the Storm (Viharban) short story (1952); Vortex (Örvény) short story (1962); Walls, Bare Walls (Falak, puszta falak) short story (1970); Self-seeking (Önkeresés) autobiography and poems (1970), and Evening of Words (Szavak estéje), studies, critiques (1978). His short stories also appeared in Serbo-Croatian. In his honor a literary prize was established in Verbász (now Vrbas) and Temerin villages in Vajdaság, Serbia. – B: 0883, 1257, 1031, T: 7456. → Szenteleky, Kornél; Németh, László; Veres, Péter; Szabó, Lőrinc.

Szirmay, András (Andrew) (Pazdics, now Pozdišovce, Slovakia, 18 June 1656 - ? after 1722) – Kuruc military officer. He was landed gentry from County Zemplén; during 1667 and 1670 he was a schoolmate of Count Imre (Emeric) Thököly in the high school of Eperjes (now Prešov, Slovakia); later he studied military architecture in Frankfurt an der Oder. In 1681, he took part in the Diet of Sopron, later joining Thököly. The famous feat of arms in the Thököly insurrection is linked to Szirmay's name: the taking of the fort and town of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) in July-August 1682. As a reward, Thököly appointed him councilor of the County Szepes Treasury, and the artillery head of the Kuruc Army. In the 1690s he worked in the administration of County Zemplén, from 1697 he was the treasurer of Northern Hungary (Upland, Felvidék, now Slovakia). In 1704, he joined Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II; and during the War of Independence, he acted as the sub-prefect of County Zemplén. Szirmay described the taking of the fortress of Kassa, entitled Accurata description citadellae Cassoviensis (published by Márton György Kovachich: in Scriptores rerum Hungaricum minores I., (1798). Lajos (Louis) Németh published his autobiography (in Történelmi Tár, 1882); Ferenc (Francis) Karsa published his More Detailed Diary (Részletesebb napló) (in Adalékok Zemplén vármegye történetéhez, 1896-1904). – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Thököly, Count Imre; Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc.

Szirmay, Ferenc (Francis) (Budapest, 22 March 1916 - Auckland, New Zealand, 7 December 1985) – Sculptor and painter. He studied in Hungary, and traveled to Austria, Germany, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Yugoslavia and Albania while on a study tour. Together with some other young artists, he organized an art show of their works in Budapest in 1939. During World War II, he was a war correspondent for the Hungarian Air Force at the Eastern Front. He exhibited between 1945 and 1956 in Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Romania. Szirmay took part in the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, and consequently fled to Auckland, New Zealand in 1957. He worked at the New Zealand Herald for 21 years as an associate member. On the strength of his several one-man shows, he became a well-known Hungarian sculptor/painter. Among his works is the bronze statue God of the Sea, erected at the Tangaros Harbor of Tauranga Island. His other bronzes are Young Nick in Gisborne, and the Spirit of Napier in Napier. – B: 1220, T: 7675.

Szirtes, Ádám (Tápiósép, 10 February 1925 - Budapest, 27 July 1989) – Actor. He obtained his diploma from the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, in 1950. First, he played at the Miners' Theater (Bányász Színház,) and at the People's Army Theater (Katona Színház). Later he became contracted with the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Miskolc in 1952. Five years later, in 1957, he received a contract from the National Theater in Budapest and remained its member till 1973. Thereafter, he was a member of the Kisfaludy Theater (Kisfaludy Színház) of Győr, and from 1976 until his retirement in 1985, he was a member of the Thalia Theater (Thália Színház). Later, he still continued to play in the theater, in films and on television. His interpretation of simple folk stands out among his roles. His playing is characterized by savory phrasing, and simplicity. He entered into the history of Hungarian film-making with his first feature film role as Jóska Góz in A Foothold (Talpalatnyi föld). His roles include Bottom in Shakespeare's A Midsummer-Night's Dream (Szeniványéji álom); Balga in Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde; Tiborc and also Petúr bán in Katona's Bánk bán; János Hulla in Zs. Móricz's Gentlemen's Fun (Úri muri), and Sámson in Sándor Petőfi's Tiger and Hyena (Tigris és hiéna). His more than 100 feature film roles include Foothold (Talpalatnyi föld) (1948); Merry-go-round (Körhinta) (1955); People Possessed (Megszállottak) (1961); Háry János (1965), Pansy (Árvácska) (1975); Captive Man's Sons (Rab ember fia) (1-2; TV, 1978); Golden Time (Aranyidő) (TV, 1986), and The Golden Age of Transylvania (Erdély aranykora) (1989). He was awarded the Mari Jászai Prize (1955), the titles of Merited Artist (1970), Outstanding Artist (1983), and the Kossuth Prize (1988). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Szitnyai, Zoltán (Selmecebánya, now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia, 27 May 1893 - Salzburg, Austria, 11 June 1978) – Writer. He attended High School in Selmecebánya and in the Jesuit Boarding School for Boys in Kalocsa. He completed his education at the University of Budapest, and became a civil servant in Győr, later in Budapest. His writings were published in literary circles and in daily newspapers. His novels vividly portrayed life in the small towns of the Felvidék (Northern Hungary, now Slovakia). Some of his novels were turned into movies; many were translated into German, English, French and Italian. In 1945, following World War II, he was condemned by the People's Tribunal to five years of hard labor for his nationalistic articles. In 1949 he was freed and he left for Salzburg, Austria, where he worked relentlessly until his death. Altogether, he published twenty books, novels, essays, and a collection of articles. – B: 0883, 1672, T: 3240.

Sziveri, János (John) (Muzsla, now Mužla, Slovakia, 25 March 1954 - Budapest, 1 February 1990) – Poet. He attended high school in Mostar (Bosnia-Herzegovina) and Nagybecskerek (now Zrenjanin, Serbia); then he studied Hungarian Language and Literature at the Faculty of Arts of the University of Újvidék (now Novi Sad, Serbia). He was an editor of the literary column of the paper, Illustrated News (Képes Újság). In 1985 he became a drama critic of the People's Theater (Népszínház) of Szabadka (now Subotica, Serbia). Among his works are Free Exercises (Szabad gyakorlatok), poems (1977); Dia-Songs (Dia-dalok), poems (1987), and What Wind Brought You? (Mi szél hozott?), poems (1989). He also did literary translations. He was a multi-faceted poet. He received the Sinkó Prize in 1978, and the Writers' Association of Voivodina Prize (1988). To keep his memory alive, his friends founded the János Sziveri Prize (1991). – B: 1031, 1257, T: 7456.

Szívós, István Jr. (Stephen) (Budapest, 24 April 1948 - ) – Water-polo player, as was his father. From 1962 he was a competitor for the Gymnastics Club of Ferencváros (suburb of Budapest); between 1968 and 1980 he competed for the Gymnastics Club of the University of Budapest, medical section. In 1965, and between 1968 and 1974, he was National Champion seven times without a break, and in 1978 also National Champion. In 1964 he was the winner of the Hungarian People's Republic Cup (and also in 1965, 1967, 1970, 1973 and 1974). In 1972 and in 1978 he was the gold medal winner of the Cup of the European Champion Teams and, in 1978, the gold-medal winner of the Super Cup. He was fifth at the European Championships in Utrecht. He won the bronze medal at the 1968 Mexico Olympics. He came second in the 1970 European Championships at Barcelona and the 1972 Munich Olympics. In 1973 he was World Champion at Belgrade and European Champion at Vienna in 1974. He placed second in the 1975 World Championships at Cal and was Olympic Champion at the 1976 Montreal Olympics. In 1977 he became the European Champion. He came second in the 1978 World Championships and earned a bronze medal at the 1980 Moscow Olympics. Between 1966 and 1980, he appeared on 308 occasions in the selected category. Szívós obtained a diploma in dentistry at the Medical Faculty of the University of Budapest and, from 1979, was a research worker, later assistant lecturer in the Pediatric Dental Clinic Department. At the same time, in 1981, he obtained a diploma as a specialist trainer at the School of Physical Education. Since 1983, he has been the leading trainer at the Gymnastics Club of Ferencváros (FTC) and, since 1986 he has been federal captain of the replacement-selected team. From 1991 to 1998 he was Executive President of the FTC; from 2002 he was in charge of the water polo section of the Central School of Sports. His son Márton is the Hungarian champion of the Budapest Honvéd team and a water polo player with a silver medal at the World Championships. – B: 2111, T: 7456.→Szívós Sr., István.

Szívós István Sr. (Stephen) (Szeged, 20 August 1920 - Budapest, 22 June 1992) – Water polo player, father of István (Stephen) Szívós Jr. He competed in three Summer Olympic Games as part of the Hungarian Olympic team. They won the silver medal in the 1948 Summer Olympic Games in London. He played seven matches and scored twelve goals. Four years later he was also a member of the Hungarian Olympic team, which won the gold medal in the 1952 Summer Olympic Games in Helsinki. He played six matches and scored 16 goals. At the 1956 Summer Olympic Games of Melbourne, he won his second gold medal with the Hungarian team. He played one match. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Szívós Jr., István.

Szkhárosi Horváth, András (Andrew) (16th century) – Protestant preacher and songwriter. After leaving the Franciscan Order, he became an avid fighter for the Reformation. Between 1542 and 1549, he was a militant preacher of the Reformation in Tállya. Ten of his songs survived in the Songbook of Péter Bornemisza. In his song, On Two Kinds of Beliefs (Kétféle hitről) he compared the Roman Catholic and Protestant beliefs. In his song, On the Principality (Az fejdelemségről), he opposed the Hungarian aristocracy with a rare poetic force. He raised his voice against the oppression of serfs in his song, On Parsimony (A fösvényeségről). His songs pictured the people's plight and dreams as they were tormented by the Turks and the aristocracy. In his songs, the life of villages and country towns in the 16th century are depicted. He was the most important songwriter of the Hungarian Reformation. Áron (Aaron) Szilády published the new edition of Szkhárosi's songs (1880). – B: 1138, 0883, 1257, T: 7103. → Szilády, Áron.

Szluha, Nepumuk János S.J. (John) (Gyalu, now Gilău, Transylvania, Romania, 23 August 1725 - Győr? 1780?) – Jesuit missionary. He completed his high school studies in Buda, where he entered the Jesuit order in 1738. His mathematical talent soon became evident. After his ordination, he taught in Sopron. In 1746, he applied for a missionary assignment with Dávid Fáy and József (Joseph) Kayling. They arrived in Lisbon in 1752, where they set off to the Maranon Mission in Brazil; they arrived in São Luis on 16 July; Szluha participated in mapping Maranhão (Brazil). In 1755 he worked with Fáy among the Guajara Indians, along the River Pisiare. In 1759 he was imprisoned on the order of Pombal, but his brother, General György (George) freed him. After he returned to Hungary in 1760, he worked in Győr, Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia) and Sopron. In 1763 he was an army chaplain. Until the dissolution of the Jesuit Order, he was a Rector at the Seminary of Győr (1770-773). – B: 0945, T: 7103. → Jesuits, Hungarian, in Latin America.

Szócs, Géza (Marosvásárhely, now Târgu Mureș, Romania, 21 August 1953 - ) – Poet, journalist and politician. He completed his studies in Hungarian Language and Literature at the Arts Faculty of the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) in 1978. Until 1982, he was a journalist for the newspaper Truth (Igazság), in Kolozsvár; in 1982, he was a teacher in Lyceum No. 3, but until 1985, he was unemployed. He was an outspoken critic of the Ceausescu regime's policy against Hungarians in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). In 1985 and 1986, he was a researcher at the Institute of History of Literature and Linguistics. Out of necessity, he emigrated in 1986. From 1986 to 1989, he was a free-lance journalist in Geneva, Switzerland. In 1989 and 1990 he was founder and leader of the Budapest office of Radio Free Europe. He returned to Transylvania in April 1990. Then, in 1990-1991, he was Secretary and, from 1991 to 1993, Vice-President of the Romanian Hungarian Democratic Alliance (Romániai Magyar Demokratikus Szövetség – RMDSZ), representing it as a Senator from Kolozsvár in Bucharest, as well as in the parliamentary meetings of the European Union in Strasbourg. His works include Did You Go across the Water? (Te mentél át a vizen?), poems (1976); The Hospitable Man, or Sindbad in Marienbad (A vendégszerető, avagy Szindbád Marienbadban), poems (1990), and Who Swapped the People? (Ki cserélte el a népet?), play (1996). He was awarded the Robert Graves Prize in 1986, the Attila József Prize in 1992. He was also active in the Hungarian World Federation. In 2010, in the 2nd Orbán Government, he became Secretary responsible for Hungarian Culture. – B: 1036, T: 7456.

Szohner, Gabriel (Artist's name: Gabriel von Ursus) (Gyöngyöshalma, 29 December 1936 - ) – Poet, novelist and painter. He moved to Canada in 1956. His first short stories and poems appeared in Hungarian-Canadian newspapers, and he received a Canada Council grant to complete his work, The Immigrant, published in 1977. His English short stories and poems have appeared in Western News, Canadian Fiction Magazine, and other periodicals. He is a renowned painter, working in oil in a figurative expressionist style. He has exhibited in Toronto, Montreal, Hamilton, Vancouver and New York. – B: 0892, T: 4342.

Szöke Béla (Jósvafő, 21 October 1894 - Budapest, 19 November 1980) – Mechanical engineer, inventor, technology historian and candidate for a Technical Science Degree (1972). He participated in World War I, was discharged with the rank of lieutenant, and graduated as a mechanical engineer in Budapest in 1922. He started his career at the Weiss Manfred Works Co. (1922-1925). Following this, he worked as a design engineer at the First Hungarian Husbandry Machines until 1940. His remarkable achievement of this period is the combined wheat-sorting machine. After 1940, he worked mainly in management positions, designing various machines. With his co-workers, he successfully designed a transverse skiver machine, onto which he implemented a joystick control, which received the Grand Prix at the 1958 exhibition in Brussels. He retired in 1955, after which he started publishing articles, books and studies. In this period, he was involved with the history of technology, editing Our Great Technical People, vols. i,ii,iii. (Műszaki Nagyjaink, I,II,III) (1967). With his sister, Anna, he compiled a graphical perpetual calendar. He registered a total of twenty patents. His other works include Vibrations Occurring While Turning (Esztergáláskor fellépő rezgések) (1953), and Cutting Tool Geometry (A forgácsolószerszámok geometriája) (1966). He was awarded the Donát Bánki Prize (1963), the GTE Prize for Literature (1962, 1965), and the MTESZ Prize (1975). – B: 0883, T: 7697.

Szöke, Edit (Mrs. Edit Kiss) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 12 March 1954 - ) – Writer, literary translator. In 1973 she completed high school in Pozsony. From 1973 to 1981 she attended a Hungarian-Slovakian course at the Faculty of Arts of the Komenský University of Pozsony, obtaining a high school teacher's certificate. During 1980-1981, and from 1986 to 1990, she was the language editor of the Literary Review (Irodalmi Szemle); and from 1981 to 1986, Editor of the Madách Kiadó (Publisher); from 1989 to 1995 she ran the Free Time (Szabadidő) column of the paper Day (Nap). From 1996 to 1998 she was Editor, later Editor-in-Chief of the paper, Our Life (Életünk). In 1999 she was Editor of the Today Paper (Mai Lap). Between 2000 and 2007 she was Manager of the Madách-Posonium Culture Bookstore. She was a member of the PEN Club of Pozsony from 1989, and The Independent Hungarian Initiation. Her articles, notes, commentaries, essays, short stories and studies (translated from the Czech and Slovakian) on everyday life were published in the Literary Review (Irodalmi Szemle) and Day (Nap) (1991); A Real Danger: Indifference (Reális veszély: a közöny) was published in 1991; Our Pedants, Cleanliness-maniacs (Pedánsaink, tisztaságmániásaink) (1991), and Contemporary Small Encyclopedia of Hungarian Writers (Kortárs magyar írók kislexikona) (1989). Her Czech and Slovak translations into Hungarian include Burning-hot Kisses (Égető csókok), short story by J. Boček, with Mária O. Bertha (1987); The Identity Crisis (Az azonosságtudat válsága), essays by V. Havel (1991), and My First Calendar (Első naptáram); Leporello,

By K. Dašková, (1991). She was the Editor of the Madách Calendar (Madách Naptár), with József (Joseph) Fazekas (1991). – B: 1083, 1890, T: 7456.

Szőke, Kató (Katalin Homonnay) (Budapest, 17 August 1935 - ) – Swimmer. Her father is Márton Homonnay, her mother Katalin Szőke, a backstroke swimmer. From 1947 she was a competitor for the Csepel Paper Works and, from 1949 the Budapest Kinizsi National Council of Workers in the Food Industry. Up to 1951 she won altogether 24 national youth championships. In 1954 she was the adult Hungarian Champion in the 100 m and 200 m free-style swimming. From 1950 she was a member of the selected pool. In the 1952 Helsinki Olympics, she became the Olympic Champion in the 100 m free-style swimming, and in the 400 meter relay. In 1954 at Torino, she was European Champion in both events. In the Budapest College of World Championships, she received a gold medal in both the free-style and the 400 m relay and came second in the free style swimming. At the 1956 Melbourne Olympics, she came seventh in the 400 m relay; after this, she did not return to Hungary; she settled in America, living in Toronto, later in Los Angeles. – B: 2111, T: 7456. → Homonnay, Márton.

Szőke, Szakáll (Blonde Beard, Jenő Gerő, S. Z. Sakall) (Budapest, 2 February 1884 - Los Angeles, Hollywood, Calif. USA, 12 February 1955) – Actor and cabaret writer. After years of working in the civil service, in 1908 he started working for the Cabaret of the Modern Stage (Modern Színpad Kabart) of Endre (Andrew) Nagy. From 1913 to 1917 he was Artistic Director of the Sör Cabaret, where he also played. In January 1919 he became Artistic Director of the Crystal Palace (Kristály Palota). In 1920 he appeared in the Black Cat Cabaret, (Fekete Macska Kabaré) and in the Winter Garden (Téli Kert). In 1922 and 1923, he was a member of the Palace Cabaret (Palace Kabaré) and, from 1922 to 1925, a member of the Apollo Cabaret (Apolló Kabaré). He also appeared with his troupe in Vienna. After 1928, he played on the stages of Vienna and Berlin. In 1928 he was Director of the Boulevard Theater of Berlin. After 1933, he was only able to play in Vienna because of the National Socialist takeover in Germany, but he did shoots of some films in Budapest. In 1937 he was invited to play in the Royal Theater (Royal Színház). In 1938 he emigrated to England, from where he went to the USA in 1940. He has 85 feature films to his credit, among them the famous Casablanca (1943), and Yankee Doodle, both directed by Michael Curtiz (Mihály Kertész). He appeared with Humphrey Bogart, Ingrid Bergman, Errol Flynn, Elizabeth Taylor, Gene Kelly and Judy Garland. Later, he appeared also in comic roles of prose, and musical works taking up entire evenings. He was a popular character actor. He wrote a number of successful one-act plays and film scripts. He appeared in Hungarian, German and American films, further increasing his popularity. His short plays included String Quartet (Vonósnégyes) (1922); Young Paul Kelemen (Kelemen Palika) (1923), and The Leader (A vezér) (1924). He wrote a book entitled My Life under Emperor Francis Joseph, Adolf Hitler and the Warner Brothers (1954). – B: 1037, 1445, 1081, T: 7456. → Nagy, Endre; Kertész, Mihály.

Szokolay, Sándor (Alexander) (Kunágota, 30 March 1931 - ) – Composer. His musical talent was already prevalent at a young age. After completing his secondary studies at the Music High School of Békéstarhos, he continued his studies at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest (1950-1957). There he studied composition with Ferenc (Francis) Szabó and Ferenc (Francis) Farkas. He was a teacher (1952-1955), employed by the Board of Budapest Music Schools. From 1955 to 1959 he was Music Editor of the Hungarian Radio. From 1959 to 1966 he taught at the Department of Composition of the Academy of Music, where he was a professor from 1966 to 1994. From 1994 until his retirement he worked at the Hungarian Television. He was involved in the works of a number of learned societies. Szokolay is the Founder President of the Kodály Society (1978); former President of the Board of National Foundation, and President of the Hungarian Artistic Academy; member of the editorial board of the Lutheran magazine, Diakonia (1995-1996), and of the paper, New Hungary (Új Magyarország); President of the Hungarian Chamber of Music, and member of the Hungarian Academy of Arts. His works include Ballade of Horror (Az iszonyat balladája) ballet (1951); Operas: Blood-Wedding (Vérnász) (1964); Hamlet (1968); Sámson (1973); Ecce homo, passion-opera (1984); The Wise Nathan (A bölcs Náthán) (1994); Szávitri (1999). Oratorios: March of Fire (A tűz márciusa) (1958); Istar's Descent into Hell (Istár pokoljárása) (1960); Negro Cantatae (Néger-kantáta) (1962); Deploration (1964); Christmas Pastoral (Karácsonyi pasztorál) (1970); Apocalypse (Apokalipszis), (1971); Song of Pentecost (Pünkösdi ének) (1972); Ady-Cantata (Ady-kantáta) (1970); Homage to Kodály (Hódolat Kodálynak) (1975); Libellus Ungaricus (1979); Confessio Augustana (1980); Luther-Cantata (Luther Kantáta) (1983); Hungarian Psalm (Magyar zsoltár) (1990); Choral-Requiem (Korál-rekviem) (1992), and Improve the Nation (Jobbítsd a nemzetet) (2000). His other works include two String quartets, Concert pieces (violin, piano, trumpet). Solo sonatas (violin, flute, violoncello); Choir pieces: Missa Panonica; Quattro Madrigali; Musica Notturna; Hungarian Missa, etc. Cantatas: Jeremiada; Orbis Pictus; Aeternitas temporaria, and Palme. There are also songs, chamber works, two string quartets and pieces for piano and organ. Szokolay's music is influenced by B. Bartók, I. Stravinsky, A. Honegger, and by dodecaphony (twelve-tone music) and atonality as well. His works were well received around the world: in Vienna, Toulouse, Berlin, Moscow, Zagreb, and many other places. Szokolay is one of the most outstanding Hungarian composers, with international fame in the second half of the 20th century. He is the recipient of a number of awards and prizes, including the Erkel Prize (1960 1965), the Kossuth Prize (1966), the Merited and Outstanding Artist titles (1976, 1986), the Bartók-Pásztor Prize (1987, 2001), the Hungarian Heritage Prize (1998), the Kodály Prize (1999), the Corvin Chain (2001), and the Prima Prize (2009). – B: 1031, 1445, 1865, T: 7456, 7103. → Farkas, Ferenc; Bartók, Béla.

Szollás, László (Ladislav) (Budapest, 13 November 1907 - Budapest, 4 October 1980) – Figure skater and physician. He became a competitor at the Budapest Skating Club in 1922, and was also a member of the Hungarian Athletic Club. With Emilia Rotter, he was the national double figure-skating champion between 1931 and 1936 continuously. In the 1929 World Championships in Budapest, he came fifth. In the 1930 European Championships in Vienna, he won a silver medal. In 1931 in Berlin, he was World Champion, while in the European Championships of St. Moritz, he was second; in the 1932 Lake Placid Olympics, he came third and, in the World Championships in Montreal, he received a silver medal. He was World Champion in Stockholm in 1933, in Helsinki in 1934, and in Vienna in 1935. At the same time, he was European Champion in Prague in 1934. He received a bronze medal at the 1936 Olympics in Garmisch-Partenkirchen. He also worked as a physician in the Sports Hospital and in the National Institute of Physical Education and Sports Hygiene in Budapest. – B: 1031, 2111, T: 7456.

Szóllósy, András (Andrew) (Szászváros, now Orăștie, Romania, 27 February 1921 - Budapest, 6 December 2007). – Composer and musicologist. He was a student of Zoltán Kodály and János (John) Viski while studying composition at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, between 1939 and 1946. He also attended Philosophy classes at the University of Budapest, as a member of the Eötvös College. After that, he continued his studies at the Saint Cecilia Academy in Rome with maestro Goffredo Petrassi. The composing career of Szóllósy turned to its best in the 1970s, after the success of his III Concerto in Paris, when he composed the Trasfigurazioni and Musica per Orchestra, a monumental composition. At the request of the King Singers, he composed two extraordinary vocal compositions the Fabula Phaedri, and the Miserere. His String Quartet was presented at the 1993 Orlando Festival in the Netherlands; the composition for piano, entitled Landscape with Corpses (Tájkép halottakkal), was presented at the Orkney Island festival. Szóllósy's compositions were performed in many of America's big cities. Between 1954 and 1977, he composed music for thirty-one feature films, seventeen plays, and eighteen radio plays. Among his six albums are Les Mysteres de la Naissance (The Mysteries of Birth) (1999); Works for Orchestra and Chamber (2003), and Music Colors – Hungarian Contemporary Music (1989-2004). As a musicologist, he laid the foundation of the research of Bartók and Kodály. At the end of the 1990s, it was recognized that Szóllósy András was one of the main Hungarian composers after Bartók, the “third maestro” after György Ligeti and György Kurtág. His compositions won him membership in the Széchenyi Academy of Literature and Arts. His work was rewarded with prizes; recipient of the Erkel Prize (1971), the titles of Merited and Outstanding Artist (1982, 1985), the Kossuth Prize (1985), the Bartók-Pásztory Prize (1986 and 1988), the Commandeur l'Ordre des l'Arts et des Lettres (1987), the Middle-Cross with Star of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2006), and the Széchenyi Prize (2007). – B: 1850, 1031, T: 7697.→Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán; Viski, János; Ligeti, György; Kurtág, György.

Szóllósy, Pál (Paul) (Budapest, 1 September 1927 - ) – Lawyer. He earned a Ph.D. in Law at the Law School of the University of Budapest in 1950. He was also a certified attorney in 1954 and, from 1956, a legal advisor for a Corporation; later, worked as a practicing attorney. After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he fled to the West in early December 1956, and settled in Switzerland. He pursued various economic studies in London and St. Gallen, Switzerland. In 1968 he obtained a Ph.D. in Economics. From 1964 he was an official of Swiss Insurance Companies. In 1988, he retired as a deputy director of the Swiss Reinsurance Company. From January to August 1957, he was Editor of Viennese Hungarian Courier (Bécsi Magyar Híradó). Apart from this paper, he published articles in Fellow Traveler (Útitárs); Literary News (Irodalmi Újság), and New Horizon (Új Látóhatár). Since its foundation, he has been one of the leaders of the European Protestant Free University. (Európai Protestáns Szabadegyetem). From 1981, he has been President of the Association of Hungarian-language Protestant Congregations of Switzerland. His main work is Die Berechnung des Invaliditätsschadens im Haftpflichtrecht europäischer Länder (1970). – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Szolnok – Town near the center of the Great Hungarian Plain, at the confluence of the Zagyva and Tisza Rivers, on the right banks of the Tisza; seat of County Jász-Nagykun-Szolnok. It is a transportation center and a river port, and is the gateway to the Trans-Tisza region. It is on the Budapest-Debrecen, and Budapest-Nagyvárad (Oradea) lines, leading to Transylvania; several international railway lines converge on the great bridge over the Tisza (400m long), completed after World War II. A new railway station was built in Szolnok in 1977. Population was 25 379 in 1901; 38 764 in 1930; 42 008 in 1941; 80 859 in 1994 (ethnically all Hungarian). The town's inhabitants used to be mainly primary producers; but of these by 1941 only 14% remained, while 30% were living from industry, 21% from commerce and transport, 9,5% public service and freelance, 12% from pension and capital, 5% day-work. Besides the town's large transit trade, Szolnok has several industries: manufacture of furniture, textiles, chemicals and paper and cellulose products; there is also a brickyard, a sawmill and a flourmill. Commercially important items are timber, grain crop and livestock. Hotels and thermal baths are located on the riverbank over the source of the subterranean calcareous thermal waters of 56°C, which are pumped from a depth of 957m, regarded suitable for the treatment of rheumatic and female illnesses. In its history it was ravaged or destroyed 17 times by enemy action, consequently the town is devoid of extant historic buildings. Culturally and educationally important are the Neoclassical Town Hall, the Szigligeti Theater, the County Hall, the town's Museum, an artists' colony (founded in 1901), several high schools and special schools, and the Ferenc Verseghy Literary Circle; a statue of Verseghy was erected in the town. There is a Franciscan Convent, a Baroque Parish Church; the Romanesque Castle Church was destroyed by the Vlachs (Romanians) in 1919 during the Romanian occupation, and rebuilt in 1922; there is also a Gothic Reformed Church and a Lutheran Church. The statue of the heroic general (one of the 12 martyrs of Arad of 1849) János (John) Damjanich was erected in 1912. One of Damjanich's victories over the Austrian forces was at Szolnok in 1849. There is also a Damjanich memorial in Szolnok, the work of István (Stephen) Szentgyörgyi. In Roman times, Szolnok was already a commercial settlement and, during the Árpád dynasty (1000-1301), it was a well-known salt unloading center. The town's old earthwork fortification was strengthened in 1550; but from 1552 to 1685 the town was under Turkish occupation; then, in 1697, Thököly's army burnt it down. It was once again destroyed by Rákóczi' army in 1706. Count Johann Ludwig Rabutin, Imperial General (1642–1717) destroyed the castle. During World War I, the town suffered a great deal from the fighting between the Red Army and the Romanian forces, and it was under Romanian occupation from July 1919 to 25 February 1920. – B: 1068, 1582, 1789, 1816, 7456, T: 7456.→Thököly, Count Imre; Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Damjanich, János.

Szombathely (Latin: Savaria, German: Steinamanger) – Town in western Hungary, near the Austrian border, on the banks of the River Gyöngyös (Güns), 213 m above sea level. In Roman times, it was already a town, Savaria or Sabaria, acting as the capital of the province of Pannonia, now Transdanubia. In modern times, it is the seat of County Vas in Hungary. It is a very important railway junction, leading to Austria. The population was 24751 in 1901 and 35 758 in 1930 (nearly all Hungarians, with about 1000 Germans); 42879 in 1941 (97% Hungarian and 80% Roman Catholic); by 1994, it was 85 932. The town developed as an important agricultural center, involving mainly wine preparation, fruitgrowing and honey production. Industries of the town include tanning, textile-milling, ribbon works, carpet- and blanket-making, footwear production, ironworking, distilling and manufacturing agricultural machinery; there is a flour mill, brickyards, power station and sawmill as well. The town has an Episcopal Palace with a sizeable library and an Archive; also a Seminary, a Premonstrian High School (founded in 1771), a variety of other schools (secondary and primary), a municipal School of Music (1795), a Museum with a large library (1908), commercial and agricultural schools, Law Court, attorneys and school inspectorate. Opposite the Cathedral stands the bronze statue of Bishop Szily, the first bishop of the town (work of István Tóth, 1909). The Town Hall was built in 1880 (work of Hauszmann; it was extended to two stories in 1926), in front of it stands the statue of the poet Dániel Berzsenyi (work of György Kiss, 1896). The County Hall dates from 1771, built according to the plans of Chevrieux. The town has a large hospital (with 1000 beds) an open-air swimming pool and a general cemetery. The transportation system in the town center is comprised of streetcars. The town paper is the County Vas (Vasvármegye), and the journal on local history is the Transdanubian Review (Dunántúli Szemle). The history of the town begins with the Huns, who destroyed it about 445 but, in Charlemagne's time (9th century), it was again a flourishing town, the estate of the Archbishop of Salzburg, who settled Germans there and named it Stein am Anger. A little later, by the 10th century, it had become a western border town of the Hungarian Kingdom. King St. Stephen (1000-1038) directed the town to the Bishop of Győr. In 1407, Bishop János granted the town's charter. In 1605, during Bocskai's freedom fight, his foot soldiers ransacked the town. In 1777, Empress Maria Theresa made the town an Episcopal See. The Episcopal Palace (Püspökvár) and the fine Baroque Cathedral with two spires were built between 1781 and 1813; the Cathedral was seriously damaged in World War II, but it was repaired in 1947. Ruins of a Roman triumphal arch, an amphitheater, and an aqueduct have been excavated nearby. – B: 1068, 1582, 1789, 1816, 0881, 7456, T: 7456. → Berzsenyi, Dániel; Bocskai, Prince István; István I, King; Mária Terézia, Empress and Queen.

Szombathelyi, Ferenc (Francis) (Knausz until 1934, when he assumed his mother's name) (Győr, 17 May 1887 - Újvidék, now Novi Sad, Serbia, 4 November 1946) – Military officer. He completed the Honvéd (country defense) Cadet School of Pécs in 1906, later studying at the Military School (Kriegsschule) in Vienna. In 1919, during the rule of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic, he served in the Red Army. In the 1920s he saw service in the Honvéd general staff. From 1926 on he served at various high positions. From 1936 to 1938, he served as Commanding Officer of the Ludovika Military Academy in Budapest. From 1938, he was Commander of the 8th Army Corps of the town of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). In 1941, he became Commander of the Carpathian wing of the Hungarian armed forces, later to join the German attack on the Soviet Union. From 6 September 1941 to April 1944, he was Chief of the General Staff and, from 1 November 1941, he was Colonel General. Under German pressure he had to leave his assignment. In October 1944, when Regent Horthy attempted to take Hungary out of the war, Szombathelyi was arrested by the right-wing Arrow Cross authorities and kept in confinement at Sopronkőhida. In 1946, when Hungary was under Soviet military occupation, the people's tribunal sentenced him to a 10-year imprisonment term, and later, the National Council of People's Tribunals sentenced him to life imprisonment. Still later, as a condemned prisoner, he was illegally handed over to Yugoslavia, where, together with the leaders and officers responsible for the atrocities at Újvidék, he was executed by firing squad after having undergone torture. On 16 March 1994, the Supreme Court of Hungary had squashed the sentence of the Council of the People's Tribunal. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456. → Royal Hungarian Ludovika Military Academy; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Szombathy, Gyula (Julius) (Budapest, 3 January 1945 - ) – Actor. He obtained his diploma from the Academy of Dramatic Art in 1968, and was engaged by the Szigligeti Theater (Szigligeti Színház) of Szolnok, where he remained until 1974. Afterward, he played at the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház) of Budapest until 1992. He appeared in a number of films, and often plays various roles in TV-plays, cabarets and entertaining programs. He is an engaging figure on stage with an excellent sense of humor, successful especially in comedies, cabarets and entertainment programs. His more than 40 stage roles include Dromio of Syracuse in Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors (Tévedések vígjátéka); Bottom in Shakespeare's A Midsummer-Night's Dream (Szentivánéji álom); Wolf in Molière's Georges Dandin, ou le Mari confondu (Dandin György), and Ivan in Bulgakov's Ivan the Terrible (Iván, a Rettentő). There are some 70 feature and TV films to his credit, including features Shining Winds (Fényes szelek) (1966); Black Diamonds i,ii (Fekete Gyémántok I,II) (1976); Snow White (Hófehér) (1983), and the Cat of Satan (A sátán macskája) (2007). His TV films include Stop Arturo Ui (Állítsátok meg Arturó Uit) (1975); Family Circle (Családi kör) (1980); Black Convent (Fekete Kolostor) (1986); Octagon (1989); Little Town (Kisváros) (1993-1999), and Among Friends (Barátok közt) (2009). He received the Mari Jászai Prize (1979), the Small Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1995), the Officer's Cross of the Republic of Hungary (2005), and the Merited Artist title (2009). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Szombathy, Viktor (Volkó) (Rimaszombat, now Rimavská Sobotá, Slovakia, 8 April 1902 - Budapest, 12 August 1987) – Writer and translator of literary works. He completed his secondary education in Rimaszombat in 1920, continuing his studies at the University of Budapest, where he attended lectures in History of Art and Medicine, while also working as a contributor for the Hungarian News of Prague (Prágai Magyar Hírlap) in Budapest. From 1930 to 1938, he was a secretary at the Hungarian Cultural Association of Slovensko, then became Director of the Jókai Museum Komárom (now Komarno, Slovakia). He was Editor of the dailies Komárom News (Komáromi Lapok) and Hungarian Sunday (Magyar Vasárnap), as well as the journal Hungarian Writings (Magyar Írás). Between 1938 and 1943, he was Secretary of the Széchenyi Hungarian Cultural Association and edited the journals Holiday (Ünnep) and Source (Forrás). From 1943 until 1948, he was Head of the Cultural Department of the Hungarian National Bank (Magyar Nemzeti Bank), Budapest. Between 1948 and 1950, he lived from translating literary works and working for Hungarian Radio. From 1950 to 1954, he lectured on technical subjects at a Company, and later worked as a librarian. From 1954 until his retirement in 1965, he worked as Director of the Technical Club of Builders (Építők Műszaki Klubja) Budapest. In his work are the characteristic figures of Felvidék (now Slovakia), he published mainly youth novels and travelogues. His works include Scout Adventure (Cserkészkaland) youth novel (1926); Silver Antenna (Ezüstantenna) poems (1928); Ballad of the Green Mountains (Zöld hegyek balladája) novel (1936); Vértess-Gerecse, monograph (1960); Two Swords, two Lions (Két kard, két oroszlán) youth novel (1976); The Tale Spreads from Castle to Castle (Száll a rege várról várra) Slovakian castle tales (1979, 1996); The Turkish Whistle Emits a Sound (Megszólal a töröksíp) youth novel (1988), and Conjuring up the Spirits (Szellemidézés) (2004). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Vienna Award I.

Szomory, Dezső (Desider) (Mór Weisz) (Pest, 2 June 1869 - Budapest, 30 November 1944) – Writer. Soon after starting his studies at the Academy of Music, he changed over to journalism. Early on, he was a contributor to the paper, Nation (Nemzet), then to Pest News (Pesti Hirlap), and the Pest Diary (Pesti Napló). In 1890, in order to escape from military service, he went to France and lived in Paris and London for fifteen years, working as a correspondent for the Pest News. While abroad, he studied dramatic art at the University of Paris. His first stage work, Friday Evening (Péntek este) appeared on stage at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, while he was still living in Paris. In England, he attended lectures at the University of Oxford and, in 1906 he returned to Budapest and lived exclusively for literature. In 1908 he joined the writers' circle of the paper West (Nyugat). His first works showed the effect of French naturalism of the late 19th century; but later, following the secession movement of the early 20th century, he developed an increasingly romantic, stylized language with musical overtones, which was increasingly affected and fanciful. His main ambition was to develop a poetic language, which had a musical effect; but his exaggerations often made them art for art's sake. Early in his career, his works showed a conservative, aristocratic attitude, grappling with social problems. Because of the horrors of World War I, and as a result of its aftermath, his criticism became more trenchant, at times depicting with sarcasm the life of the citizens of the Capital City and country towns. He handled the genre of short stories and novels well, e.g. The Divine Garden (Az isteni kert) short-stories (1910), or the novel The Heavenly Messenger (A mennyei küldönc) (1926); but he was most successful with his dramatic works, especially the Habsburg trilogy, The Grand Lady (A Nagyasszony) (1910); Marie Antoinette (Mária Antónia) (1913); Emperor Joseph II (II József császár) (1918); the drama featuring King Louis II (II Lajos király) (1922), and Master Horeb (Horeb tanár úr) (1934). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Szondi, Lipót (Leopold) (Nyitra, now Nitra, Slovakia, 11 March 1893 - Küsnacht am Rigi, Switzerland, 24 January 1986) – Neurologist, psychiatrist and teacher of mentally defective children. He was 5 years old when he moved with his family to Budapest, where he completed his high school, and later chose medicine for his career. In World War I, he worked as an ambulance orderly, and as physician of a military unit. He earned his Medical Degree after the War and worked for the Psychological Laboratory of the Outpatient Department of the Apponyi Polyclinic beside Pál (Paul) Ranschburg. From 1919, he ran a private practice in psychology and endocrinology. In his scientific research, he conducted investigations into physical, genetic and hormonal conditions. From 1927, Szondi was a lecturer at the College for Handicapped Children, and Head of its Pathology and Therapy Laboratory. It was there that he started to deal with family-tree studies and fortune analysis. He founded the State Pathological and Therapeutic Laboratory. He carried out research on the neurological and psychiatric connections of endocrinal secretion, featured in his works: Schwachsinn und innere Sekretion (1923), and Mental Deficiency (A fogyatékos értelem) (1925). He also studied the connection between physique and children's diseases, discussed in his works Disorders in Physical Growth (A növés zavarai) (1926); The Physical Sizes of School Children (Az iskolás gyermekek testi méretei) (1929), and Konstitutionsanalyse psychisch abnormer Kinder (1933). He determined a completely new course in experimental "deep psychology" with his studies that he called "lot-analysis", as a result of his family-tree researches. His other works include Lectures from the Domain of Experimental Instinct-diagnostics (Előadások a kísérleti ösztöndiagnosztika köréből) (1939). Owing to the Jewish laws he lost his position in 1941. On 29 July 1944, he was deported to the camp at Bergen-Belsen; but, at the end of 1944, he managed to escape, was granted political asylum in Switzerland, and settled in Zürich. There he developed the Szondi Circle and, apart from having a practice in psychology and psychiatry, he resumed his earlier studies, especially in lot-analysis (Szondi-test). The Szondi Institute (Stiftung-Szondi-Institut) was formed in 1969. He received an honorary doctorate from the University of Paris (Sorbonne). His further works include The Experimental Analysis of the Ego (Az én kísérleti elemzése) (1942); Schicksalanalyse (1948); Triebpathologie (1952); “Ich-Analyse”. Die Grundlage zur Vereinigung der Tiefenpsychologie (1956); Die Triebvermischten (1984), and Cain the Law-breaker, Mozes the Law-giver (Kain a törvénytörő, Mózes a törvényalkotó) (1987). – B: 0883, 1021, 1068, 1730, T: 7456.

Szondy, György (George) (? - Fort of Drégely, northeast of the Börzsöny Range, on the banks of the Ipoly River, 9 July 1552) – Castellan of a border fortress. Not of noble descent, probably the scion of a market town burgher family. He won his way with his bravery in the fighting around the border fortresses during the Turkish occupation of the central part of Hungary (1526-1686). From 1545, he was Castellan of the fortified castle of Drégely. In 1552, with a force of 10,000, Ali, the Turkish Pasha of Buda, laid siege to the small castle, which was in a run-down condition at the time, and defended by a mere 150 men. No external help was expected; the Turkish guns pounded the castle to ruins, and fighting was beyond hope. Still, Szondi rejected Ali's call for surrender, burnt his valuables, stabbed his horses to death, sent his two Turkish prisoners back to Ali, and sallied out to die a hero's death. There is a statue of him and a Street bearing his name in Budapest, and a school named after him in Balassagyarmat. Several poets wrote verses about him, such as J. Arany, F. Kölcsey and G. Czuczor. – B: 0883, 1068, 1122, T: 7456. → Arany, János; Czuczor, Gergely; Kölcsey, Ferenc.

Szondy, István (Stephen) (Berettyóújfalu, 29 December 1925 - ) – Athlete. In 1938, he was a breaststroke swimmer and water-polo player at the Sports Club of the Hungarian National Army Association in Cegléd. In 1941, at the Ludovika Military Academy, they noted his capabilities and he was oriented toward pentathlon. During the following years, he studied at cadet schools, later at the School of Physical Education, obtained a Degree in Education in 1950, and started as a trainer in Újpest (Budapest suburb). In the meantime, from 1946, he was the pentathlonist of the Sports Club of Cegléd and, from 1949, of the Fáklya Sports Club, Budapest. Since 1950 Szondy has been active in sports in Budapest. In 1951, and again in 1954, he was the national pentathlon individual champion. In 1951, he was also a team champion in épée-fencing. In 1954 he received a bronze medal in high jump. From 1947 to 1955 he was a member of the selected pool. He came in 18th at the London Summer Olympics, while at the Helsinki Olympics he was group champion, and in the individual event he earned a bronze medal. At the World Championships in 1953 at Rocas, Santo Domingo, Chile, he came second in the individual event. In the 1954 Budapest Olympics he was a team world champion, and came in third in the individual event. In 1955, at Magglingen, Switzerland, he was again a team world champion and came fifth in the individual. In 1955 Szondy gave up pentathlon. In October 1956, he went on a tourist trip to Vienna. On hearing the news about the revolution in Hungary, he settled in the Federal Republic of Germany. From September 1957, he worked as a sports teacher and fencing trainer in Wolfburg. From 1962 to 1987, he was a lecturer at the Goethe University of Frankfurt, and a trainer of the Frankfurt TV 1860, while, from 1969 to 1970, he worked in Warendorf as the government trainer of the German Pentathlon Council. While living in Alterstadt, he retired in 1987. He returned to settle in Hungary. – B: 2111, 1031, T: 7456.

Szongott, Kristóf (Christopher) (Marosbogát, now Bogata, Romania, 21 March 1843 - Szamosújvár, now Gherla, Romania, 24 January 1907) – Writer, teacher and a specialist on Armenia (Armenologist). In 1963 he became a teacher at the Armenian High School of Szamosújvár, where he taught for forty years. In 1887, he founded the journal Armenia, of which he was publisher and editor for 20 years; to a large extent he was also the author of the articles in it. He published rich ethnographic material in his works, dealing with the history of Armenians. In 1905 he established the Armenian Museum, of which he was the first director. He translated and published the 5th century chronicle entitled Great Armenia by Mózes Chorenei (1892). His works include Monography of the Royal Hungarian Town of Szamosújvár, vols. i-iii (Szamosújvár magyar királyi város Monographiája I-III) (1893-1901); The Ethnography of the Armenians of Hungary (A magyarországi örmények ethnográphiája) (1903), and The Origin and Ancestral Homeland of the Hungarians (A magyarok eredete és őslaka) (1905). He was the foremost researcher of Armenology in Hungary. – B: 0883, 1134, T: 7456.

Szontágh, Gusztáv (Gustavus) (Csetnek, 9 April 1793 - Pest, 7 June 1858) – Philosopher, esthetician and critic. He read Law in Késmark (now Kežmarok, Slovakia), and spent his young law student years in Rozsnyó (now Rožňava, Slovakia) and Kenyhec (now Kehrec, Szlovákia). He began a military career in 1813, and took part in the Napoleonic wars. After 23 years of military service, he retired as a Captain in 1836. Thereafter, he lived exclusively for his writings and scientific works. From 1836, he was a member of the Kisfaludy Society. He wrote philosophical studies and articles on economics. He was one of the best-known critics of his age. He endeavored to develop an independent, particularly Hungarian philosophical system, the so-called Conventional philosophy, with an eclectic, agnostic, neo-Kantian character, glossing over social contradictions. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (correspondent 1832, ordinary 1839). He was also a well-known melon-grower. His works include Propylaeums for Hungarian Philosophy (Propylaeumok a magyar philosophiához) (1839). With his work Propylaeums to Conventional Philosophy (Propylaeumok a társasági philosophiához), he won the Grand Prix of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1846. He also wrote Hungarian Conventional Philosophy (A magyar egyezményes philosophia) (1855), and The Basics of the Hungarian Pantheon (A magyar Pantheon alapjai) (1856). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Szontágh, Miklós (Nicholas) (Alsókubin, now Dolni Kubin, Slovakia, 11 August 1843 - Újtátrafüred, now Vel'ký Slavkov, Slovakia, 2 December 1899) – Physician, botanist and balneologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Vienna in 1868. From 1868 to 1873 he was Editor of the journal Natural Scientific Bulletin (Természettudományi Közlöny); from 1878 he was a physician of the Tátrafüred Baths. He was the first to recognize the climatic healing power of the High Tatra Mountain. In 1876 he founded the Health Resort of Új-Tátrafüred, which was the first T.B. Sanatorium of Historic Hungary in the Carpathian Basin. From 1883 to 1885 he was Editor of the magazine Tatra Area (Tátravidék), and he published several tourist guides, popularizing the Tatra. He also published a Tatra Monograph. He organized a tourist-guide and rescue-training course. He was also engaged in balneology, climatology and geographic research. His works include

Carpathian Pictures (Kárpáti képek) (1870); Über die Heilung Lungenkranken in der subalpinen Region der Hochgebirge, mit besonderer Bezugnahme auf die Heilanstalt in Neu-Schmecks (1884), and High Tatra and its Mountainous Area (Magas-Tátra és hegyvidéke) (1896). A mountain peak and a mountain lake were named after him. – B: 1730, T: 7456.→ Tátra Range, High.

Szónyi, Andrew John (Budapest, 1934 - ) – Engineer, educator, administrator and management consultant. He was educated at the Budapest Polytechnic (1956). He moved to Canada after the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight and continued his education at the University of Toronto, obtaining his M.Sc. (1958), Ph.D. (1962), and MBA (1971). He was Professor of Management and Engineering at the University of Toronto (1981-1990); senior consultant at the Ontario Development Corp. (1971-1981); Program Director, Management Education Program, Huzhong University of Science and Technology, People's Republic of China (1983-1986), and at the same time Director of the Engineering and Management Centre, University of Toronto, (1983-1986); during the same years visiting professor at the University of Linz, Austria. He has been a member of the Science Council of Canada, the Professional Engineers of Ontario and the Canadian Society of Chemical Engineers. He is author of Small Business Management Fundamental (4th ed. 1991); State of Small Business (1988-1989), and Principles of Engineering Economic Analysis (2nd ed. 1982). – B: 0893, T: 4342.

Szónyi, István (Stephen) (Újpest, 17 January 1894 – Zebegény, 30 August 1960) – Painter. First, he studied painting under the direction of Károly (Charles) Ferenczy, then under István (Stephen) Réti after World War I. He was in search of the unity of dramatic expressiveness and plein air. His works influenced a number of his contemporaries. In the late 1920s, he settled in Zebegény in the picturesque Danube Bend, where his interest was attracted to problems of atmosphere in painting. He created his own style with sunny colors, soft tones and harmony. This style was typical of the post-Nagybánya school. He painted pictures of the village people of the Danube-bend. Among his works are An Evening in Zebegény (Zebegényi este) (1928); My Mother (Anyám) (1930); Calf for Sale (Eladó a borjú) (1933); Evening (Este) (1934); The Gray Danube (A Szürke Duna) (1935), and On the Way Home (Hazafelé) (1938), all products of tempera technique. In the 1940s, Szónyi painted frescoes for churches, e.g. the Új-Nádorváros Church in Győr. He painted Garden Bench (Kerti pad) (1943), and By the Well (1945), both tempera pictures; Potato Pickers (1950), and Mill Yard (Malomudvar) (1952), belong to his series in plein air style. His last major task was the secco fresco for the post office in Csepel, Budapest (1955-1956). From 1938 until his death, he was a teacher at the Academy of Fine Arts. He was a recipient of numerous awards, among them Francis Joseph (Ferenc József) Jubilee Prize (1930), the Small Gold Medal of the State (1933), the Gold Grand Prix of the State, and the Grand Prix of Vienna (1939). A memorial Museum, an Art Colony, and a friendly circle in Zebegény bear his name. – B: 0934, 1031, 0883, T: 7456.→Ferenczy, Károly; Nagybánya Artist Colony.

Szörényi, Éva (Elvira Lersch) (Budapest, 26 May 1917 - Los Angeles, USA, 1 December 2009) – Actress. In 1935 she completed her studies at the College of Dramatic Art, Budapest, and she was a member of the National Theater, Budapest until 1956. She left for Austria because she took part in the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight. In 1957, she emigrated to the USA. She visited Hungary in 1991. She was on friendly terms with the renowned writer Sándor (Alexander) Márai, who also lived in the USA at the time. She took an active part in émigré Hungarian circles. She proved to be equally outstanding in her acting in classical and modern works, tragedies and comedies, with careful interpretation and deep insight. Her roles include Cordelia in Shakespeare's King Lear; Armande in Molière's Les Femmes savantes (The Learned Ladies, Tudós nők); Elmira in Molière's Tartuffe; Luise in Schiller's Love and Intrigue (Ármány és szerelem); Margaret in Goethe's Faust; Lady Anna in Shakespeare's Richard III; Titania in Shakespeare's Midsummer-Night's Dream (Szentivánéji álom); Desdemona in Shakespeare's Othello; Tünde in Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde; Éva in Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája); Melinda in Katona's Bánk bán, and Eszter Rhédey in Móric's Úri muri (Gentry's Fun). There are more than 30 feature films to her credit, among them The Grandmother (A nagymama) (1936); Fatal Spring (Halálos tavasz) (1939); An Old Waltz (Régi keringő) (1941); Erkel (1952), and American Rhapsody (Amerikai rapszódia) (2001). Her dramatic art was recognized with the Kossuth Prize in 1952, the titles of Merited Artist and Outstanding Artist in 1954, the Imre Nagy Memorial Tablet in 1997, and the Hungarian Heritage Prize in 1997. – B: 1445, 1742, T: 7456. → Márai, Sándor.

Szörényi, László (Ladislav) (Budapest, 22 March, 1945 -) – Literary historian, critic and politician. He completed his university studies at the University of Budapest, in Latin, Greek and Persian languages (1968). He was on a scholarship in Florence, Italy, and at Columbia University, New York. From 1968 he worked at the Literary Department of the Hungarian Academic of Sciences, in 1997 as Appointed Director. He was Ambassador to Italy (1991-1995). Since 1997, he has been Professor of Italian in the Neo-Latin Department of the University of Budapest. His works include Delfinary (Delphinarium), a philological grotesques (1998, 2000), in which he enumerated the falsifications of Marxist Literary History in translation of works of Hungarian writers. A selection from his works: Little Hungarian Rhetoric, co-writer (Kis magyar retorika) (1988, 1997); Do Something With Your Past, studies (Multaddal valamit kezdeni) (1989); Huns and Jesuits, Chapters of History from the Hungarian Latin Hero's Epic (Hunok és Jezsuiták, Fejezetek a magyarországi latin hősepika történetéből) (1993); Long-step, (Hosszúlépés) short novels (1997); Studia Hungaro-Latina, Studies on Ancient Hungarian Literature (Tanulmányok a régi magyar irodalomról) (2000). He is a recipient the Toldy Ferenc Memorial Medal (1989), the Széchenyi Memorial Medal (1991), the Golden Pen Prize (1994), the Attila József Prize (1999), and the Széchenyi Prize (2011). – B: 0874, 0878, 0877, T: 7103.

Szörényi, Levente (Gmunden, Austria, 26 April 1945 -) – Guitar player, singer, composer and text writer. He studied violin, guitar and voice from Géza Bágyoni for four years. From 1965 he worked with János (John) Bródy. In 1962 he was a member of the Mediterranean Ensemble, in 1963 and 1964 the Balassa Ensemble, and from 1965 to 1973 the Illyés Ensemble, that won first prize in the Radio's amateur competition in 1962. In 1966, they performed at the dance music festival with All the Kisses are Still Hurting (Még fáj minden csók); they won in 1968 with When I Was Still a Little Kid (Amikor én még kis srác voltam). In 1973, they performed at the pop festival of Miskolc; from 1974 to 1981 he was one of the founding members of the Fonográf Ensemble; in 1981 he participated in The Concert; in 1984 he retired from the stage. In 1987, Szörényi was the composer of the songs for the Remain Among Us (Maradj köztünk) charity concert; in 1988, he participated in the international folk music festival called The House of the Rising Sun (A felkelő nap háza). His major musical pieces include Human Rights, oratorio (1968); Kőműves Kelemen, rock-ballad (1982); István, the King (István, a király), rock-opera (1983); Fehér Anna, rock-ballad (1988), In the Sweet Joy of Your Shining Lap... Innin and Damuzi (Fénylő ölednek édes örömében...Innin és Damuzi), oratorio (1989); Attila, the Sword of God (Attila az Isten kardja) (1993), and The Cursed (A kiátkozott) (1997). His recordings include 6 Illés, 8 Fonograf, 20 Zsuzsa Koncz, and 5 Judit Halász recordings. His films include These Young People (Ezek a fiatalok); Homecoming (Hazatérés); The Concert (A Koncert), and István the King (István a király). He was Composer of the Year in 1983. He was awarded, among others, the Erkel Ferenc Prize (1983), the Special Prize of the Foundation for Hungarian Art (1990), the Jenő Huszka Prize (1996), and he shared Kossuth Prize (2000). – B: 0874, T: 7684.

Szóts, István (Stephen) (Szentgyörgyválya, now Valea Sangeorgiului, Transylvania, now in Romania, 30 June, 1912 - Vienna, 5 November 1998) – Film-director, scriptwriter. He began his secondary studies at the Military Cadet School of Sopron and Kőszeg, and graduated at the Ludovika Military Academy, Budapest, but did not complete his studies there; rather, he studied painting in evening classes with Vilmos (William) Aba-Novák and Béla Iványi-Grünwald in Budapest. Finally, he decided he would make motion pictures. In 1940, he became an apprentice at the Hunnia Film Studio, Budapest. Soon he was conscripted into the army. After having been demobilized he returned to the world of feature films. In 1941 the premiere of his film, entitled Men on the Snow-capped Mountain (Emberek a havason) took place. It became a huge success, not only in Hungary but even world-wide. This ballad-like feature film is full of nature scenes of the beautiful Transylvanian region, which was partly repossessed by Hungary (1940-1944). His next major film, entitled Song From the Wheatfields (Ének a búzamezőkről) (1947) enhanced his reputation worldwide. Communist authorities in Hungary banned this film, and with it his career was broken. Szóts made a couple of short films, such as Kádár Kata (1944); Stones, Castles and Men (Kövek, várak, emberek) (1955), and Which One From the Nine? (Melyiket a kilenc közül?) (1956). Finally, he decided to settle in Austria in 1957, where he became involved in making short films, including Hallstädter Ballade (Hallstadti ballada) (1960); Stephansdom (1962); Das Grabmal des Kaisers (A császár síremléke) (1962); Betty Fisher (1968) Gustav Klimt (1969); Otto Wagner (1971), and Fritz Wotruba (1975). Between 1964 and 1969, he taught at the Austrian Academy of Film. Szóts is regarded as the first Hungarian classic filmmaker. His first feature film won the main prize of the Venice Film Festival in 1942. His works, especially the Men on the Snow-Capped Mountain exercised an impact upon Italian and Austrian cinematography. Carlo Lizzani, Umberto Barbaro, and Alberto Lattuada, praised its humanism, social theme, naturalism, balladic style and contrast-light technique. After 1989, he received many belated distinctions: Honorary Doctor of the Academy of Dramatic Art, the Hungarian Art Prize, the Kossuth Prize, and the Middle Cross of the Republic of Hungary. He became a member of the Hungarian Academy of Arts, and a Member of the Széchenyi Academy. – B: 1090, 1031, T: 7103. → Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy; Aba-Novák, Vilmos; Iványi-Grünwald, Béla.

Szózat (Appeal to the People, Divine proclamation) – Poem, written by the great poet Mihály (Michael) Vörösmarty in 1836. It is regarded as a second Hungarian national anthem. Its first line runs: To your home country be steadfastly faithful, oh Magyar! (Hazádnak rendületlenül légy híve óh magyar!). In 1840, András (Andrew) Bartay, Director of the National Theater, Budapest, called for a competition to compose the music to the lyrics. This was won by Béni Egressy, and this work became a national anthem.

In the mind of Hungarians, the thoughts in the Szózat are regarded as a second national anthem, intertwined with those in the first national National Anthem, the Himnusz (Hymn). There were times when the Szózat came to the forefront, especially during the protests against the Habsburg Absolutism. Generations of Hungarians have embraced these two anthems into their hearts, and throughout the world, every Hungarian listens to them by remaining standing. – B: 0942, 1178, 1230, 1153, T: 3240.→Vörösmarty, Mihály; Egressy, Béni; Erkel, Ferenc.

Sztankay, István (Stephen) (Budapest, 14 February 1936 - ) – Actor. On completing the Academy of Dramatic Art, he became a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Miskolc in 1961. From 1963, he was an artist of the National Theater, Budapest, and from 1974 that of the Madách Theater (Madách Színház) of Budapest. In 1990 he worked freelance; but from 1991 he became a member of the Attila József Theater (József Attila Színház) in the Capital. His personality and idiosyncratic voice is equally well suited for classical and modern roles. He provided successful interpretations in a number of films and TV-plays. His roles include Dauphin in Shaw's Saint Joan (Szent Johanna); Matthias in Vörösmarty's Czillei and the Hunyadis (Czillei és a Hunyadiak); Romeo in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet; Orsino in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night, or What You Will (Vízkereszt, vagy amit akartok); Viktor in Zorin's A Warsaw Melody (Varsói melódia); John Calvin in A. Sütő's Star on the Stake (Csillag a máglyán), and Ghost-Lad (Szellemfi) in E. Szigligeti's Liliomfi. There are more than 45 feature and TV films to his credit, including The Promised Land (Az ígéret földje) (1961); Swan-song (Hattyúdál) (1963); Three Nights of a Love (Egy szerlem három éjszakája) (1967); Star on the Stake (Csillag a máglyán) (1968); The Golden Age of Transylvania (Erdély aranykora) (1989); Victory at Waterloo (Waterlooi győzelem) (2000), and My Darlings (Egyetleneim) (2006). He received the Mari Jászai Prize (1966, 1974), the Merited Artist title (1978), and the Kossuth Prize (1998). – B: 1445, 1105, 1031, 1742, T: 7456.→Schütz, Ilona.

Sztárai, Mihály (Michael) (Drávasztára ?, ? - Tolna ?, 1575) – Reformer, Lutheran pastor, poet and playwright. He probably studied at the Sárospatak College; then became a Franciscan monk. During his ministry at Sárospatak, he reorganized with others the famed College. He took part in the disastrous Battle of Mohács against the Ottoman Turkish army (1526). Later on, his Order sent him to Padua to study at the University, where he also received musical training. It was here that he became acquainted with the doctrines of Martin Luther and he decided to join the Reformation Movement. Returning to Hungary, he lived under the protection of the Transylvanian voivode Péter Perényi (Transylvania or Erdély, now part of Romania) and acted as the tutor of his son, Ferenc. In Sztárai's opinion King Lajos (Louis) II's autocratic rule was the direct cause of the Mohács disaster. From 1544, Sztárai was already active in Laskó (now Lug, Croatia) in County Baranya, and also in Slovenia; in these areas he reformed 120 churches. He worked as preacher in such diverse parts of Hungary as Laskó, Tolna, Gyula, Sárospatak and Pápa. Together with Gergely Szegedi, he was the originator of the practice of psalm singing by the congregation. His Hungarian-language psalm-paraphrases, Biblical and church-historical tales are all outstanding works, even poetically. He wrote: Story of the Escape of Ferenc Perényi (Historia Perényi Ferenc kiszabadulásáról) (1543). He completed paraphrases in verse of 16 Psalms, and he composed 6 songs with lyrics. His polemic plays, the first in the Hungarian language, are pioneering, such as the On the Marriage of Priests (Papok házasságáról), and the Mirror of the True Ministry (Az igaz papságnak tikere, 1550). He did a great deal in spreading culture and rendered a great service in cultivating Hungarian-language literature. A High School at Tolna is named after him, and a statue of him was erected at Nagyharsány (south of the Villány Range). – B: 0930, 1031, 1068, 1105, 1257, T: 7456.→Reformed College at Sárospatak; Szegedi Kis, István.

Sztehló, Gábor (Gabriel) (Budapest, 25 November 1909 - Ementhal, Switzerland, 28 May 1974) – Lutheran (Evangelical) pastor. He completed his theological studies in Sopron, afterwards he spent a year in Finland on a scholarship. From 1932, he was an assistant pastor in Budapest, Hatvan and Nagytarcsa, where he established the first Hungarian People's College. From 1942 until 1944, he was the mission minister of the Bánya Church District. In the summer of 1944, he became a hospital pastor in Budapest, then, later that year he became employed by the Good Pastor Council of the General Convent. Supported partly by the latter, as well as other initiatives, he organized children's asylums, where many orphaned and Jewish children were offered refuge up to Christmas 1944. Altogether, 1540 of them found refuge in these homes. After the War he founded a home for orphans, called Gaudiopolis (Örömváros), the first children's city. In 1950, the asylums were taken over by the state, and he became an assistant pastor in Kőbánya. For a decade, starting in 1951, he was Director of the Institute for Disabled Children in Pesthidegkút. In 1961, he traveled to Switzerland to his family, where he fell ill. Following his recovery, until his death, he was a pastor in Hoflüh-Hasliberg, then in the Interlaken der Oberhasli region. In 1972, Israel conferred a distinction upon him. A tree preserves his memory in the Memorial Park Yad Vashem in Jerusalem, established in honor of Christians who provided aid for Jews under persecution. – B: 0883, T: 7667.

Sztevanovity, Zorán (Zoran Stevanović) (Belgrade, Yugoslavia, 4 March 1942 - ) – Musician, guitarist, singer and composer of Serbian origin. His parents were on a diplomatic mission in Prague, and they moved to Hungary in 1948. In 1960, he founded in Budapest an amateur ensemble called Zenith, later called Metro, which gradually became successful. Zoran left his studies at the Budapest Polytechnic, where he read Electrical Engineering, and became a professional musician. At this time, Metro was one of the three most popular Beat Ensembles in Hungary, along with Illés and Omega. Metro published two albums and about 40 singles. After Metro's break-up in 1972, Zorán began a solo career. He played bass in the band Taurus XT, and spent some years abroad. He has been working with Gábor Presser, pianist-composer of the Locomotiv GT since 1976. He has several LP albums; the first one from 1977 became one of the most successful albums published in Hungary ever. It contained his best-known song, My Father Believed (Apám hitte). In the late 1980s and early 1990s, he presented a program on Radio Calypso. He was the first in Hungary to make an unplugged concert in 1993 in the Budapest Sports Hall. Emotion, poetry, and often a dry sense of humor feature his songs, which are almost all composed by Gábor Presser, and written by his brother Dusán. His recordings include Metro (1969); Zorán i,ii,iii (1977, 1978, 1978); Sweet Years (Édes évek) (1985); You Belong To Me (Hozzám tartozol) (1989), and In the Circle (A körben) (2004). He is a recipient of several distinctions, including the Silver Flute (1967), LP of the Year (1977); Singer of the Year (1977, 1978), the Franz Liszt Prize (1982, 1992), Excellent Performer of the Year (1987), the Golden Giraffe Prize (1994), the Cross of Honor of the Order of the Republic of Hungary (1994), the Golden Europe Prize (1994), and the Lyra Prize (1998). – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Presser, Gábor; Metro Ensemble, Omega Rock Band; Illés Ensemble.

Sztójay, Döme (Dominic) (Dimitrije Sztojakovich) (Versec, now Vrsac, Voivodina, Serbia 5 January 1883 - Budapest, 22 August 1946) – Politician, military officer. In 1919, he worked in Miklós (Nicholas) Horthy's counter-intelligence corps. As a Colonel, then General, he was the Military Attaché to Berlin from 1927 (still under the name Sztojakovich). From 1933, he was in charge of the Prime Minister's National Defense Office. From 1935 until 1944, he was a Lieutenant-General, Ambassador Extraordinary and at the same time Minister Plenipotentiary in Berlin. During the German occupation of Hungary, on 19 March 1944, he soon became Prime Minister and, from March until July of 1944, Minister of Foreign Affairs. He committed a significant numbers of troops in support of the War, signed an economically disadvantageous treaty with Germany, and issued anti-Jewish legislation that called for the isolation of the Jews of Hungary, putting them in ghettos, pillaging their property and, except for Budapest, deporting them to Polish extermination camps. In July 1944, he fell ill and was forced to resign. Later he fled to Germany. After the War he was returned to Hungary. The People's Court sentenced him to death for war crimes and he was executed by firing squad. – B: 0883, T: 7667.→Horthy, Miklós.

Szűcs, Jenő (Eugene) (Ócsa, 31 May 1926 - Budapest, 13 October 1978) – Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree from the Faculty of Medicine in the University of Budapest in 1951. From 1952, he was a medical officer in the army; from 1952 to 1955 a company physician; from 1955, a surgeon of the Central Military Hospital and, from 1970, its Head Physician, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. From 1956, in the National Community Public Health Institute (OTKI), he gave lectures on the organization of public health. He was engaged in the prevention of catastrophes and organizing medical service in the army. His works include Surgical Service for Soldiers Injured in the War (Háborús sérültek sebészeti ellátása) (1972), and Service for the Injured in War and in Peace (Sérültek ellátása háborúban és békében) (1977). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Szűcs, Lajos (Lewis) (Apatin, now in Serbia, earlier in Hungary, 10 December 1943 - ) – Soccer player. His wife was the actress Ildikó Pécsi. He began his career in the Dózsa Youth Team in Újpest; later, he became a first class player in Dorog. Between 1966 and 1969, he was a soccer player on the Ferencváros team, named after a suburb of Budapest, where he was twice Hungarian Champion. In 1971 he was registered with the Kispest team. He spent six seasons with the Honvéd team. In 1977, aged 34, he was contracted with the Section II Budapest Vasas Izzó team, appearing with them until 1980, when he ended his involvement in active sports. In the Section I, he scored 30 goals in 377 championship matches. In the Hungarian selected team, between 1967 and 1973 he played on 37 occasions, scoring two goals. He was champion at the 1968 Mexico Olympics, and he won a silver medal at the 1972 Munich Summer Olympic Games. Appearing 11 times in an Olympic selected team, he scored 4 goals. In 1972 he was placed fourth in the Belgian European Championships in football. In 1968 as a member of the world-selected team, he played with Dezső (Desider) Novák, Flórián Albert and János (John) Farkas against Brazil in Rio de Janeiro. In the same year, in the Golden Ball election, he received 17th place. In 1981 he earned a diploma in training in the Training College for Physical Instructors. Between 1980 and 1995 he acted as the replacement, reserve and youth-trainer for the Ferencváros team and, on occasions, the field trainer of the adult team. Szűcs was the footballer of the year in 1968 and also in 1971. – B: 1031, T: 7456.→Pécsi, Ildikó.

Szűcs, Mihály (Michael) (Debrecen, 22 October 1922 - Budapest, 20 June 1990) – Violinist. At first, he studied music in his birthplace and later, as a student of Ede (Edward) Zathureczky at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest. During the years 1941 to 1943, he appeared as an assistant and, from 1943, as an ordinary member of the Metropolitan Orchestra of Budapest. Between 1944 and 1955, he was Conductor of the Opera House Orchestra, and from 1955 its Concert Master. In 1967, he was appointed Professor at the Academy of Music. From 1955, he played second violin in the Tátrai String Quartet, formed in 1946. With the Quartet, he appeared at concerts all over Europe, as guest of major festivals in Hungary and abroad. With the Tátrai String Quartet he made recordings of almost the entire string quartet repertoire. For his recording work, he received several international grand prix, and was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1958. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Zathureczky, Ede; Tátrai, Vilmos.

Szűcs, Sándor (Alexander) (Biharnagybajom, east of Karcag, 23 October 1903 - Debrecen, 2 August 1982) – Ethnographer, writer and museologist. He completed his ethnographic and geography studies at the University of Debrecen; later from 1931 to 1935, he was a research fellow in the Geographic Institute there. He was responsible for organizing the People's College of County Bihar, later becoming its Director at Bihartorda (1946-1949). After its closure he continued farming on his property at his birthplace. From 1952 to 1963, he was Director of the István Gyórfy Nagykun-Museum of Karcag, from where he retired in 1963. Until his death, he lived in Biharnagybajom. He was the ethnographic immortalizer and chronicler of the “three regions” – Sárrét, Kunság and Hajdúság – with their old-time life forms on the Great Plain (particularly the life of the shepherds and the primitive fisherman, pákász, living a predatory life in marshes from hunting and fishing); he also wrote about their superstitious beliefs. Early in his career, he published his scientifically processed collections in studies and essays; these works about his collections he transformed later on into simple stories, suited for the simple reader. His works include The World of the old Sárrét (A régi Sárrét világa) (1942); Freelancers of the Puszta (Pusztai szabadok) (1957); Outlaws, Gendarmeries and Other Old Notables (Betyárok, pandúrok és egyéb régi hírességek) (1969); Old Hungarian Life on the Water (Régi magyar vízivilág) (1977), and Scientific Debate (Tudományos disputa) (1980). The house where he was born is a Museum. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Szűgyi, Zoltán (Ada, Yugoslavia, 9 September 1953 -) – Poet. His tertiary education commenced at the Medical School of the University of Újvidék, (now Novi-Sad, Serbia) (1972-1973), and continued at the Faculty of Arts, at the same University, where he studied Hungarian Literature (1973-1977). He worked for the journal Hungarian Word (Magyar Szó), Újvidék from 1977 to 1985, and from 1989 to 1991. From 1981 to 1983, he was a contributor to the periodical, New Symposium (Új Szimpózium). From 1991 to 1994, he was Caretaker of the Social Missionary Center of the Reformed Church Synod. Between 1993 and 1998, he was Office Manager of the Hungarian Rainbow Journal Book Publishing Co. (Magyar Szivárvány Folyóirat Könyvkiadó). Since 1998, he has been Editor of the New Mandate Publishers (Új Mandátum Könyvkiadó). His works include Loudly and Silently (Hangosan és csendesen) (1977); Heaven and Earth (Ég és föld) (1980); Between Two Shores are Two Rivers (Két part között két folyó) (1982); Forest and Other Poems (Erdő és más versek) (1985); Evil-gate (Ördögkapu), infant-poems (1989); Life and Soul (Élet és lélek) (1993), and There is no Way Back. In the State of Poem-Scent (Nincs visszaút. Versillat állapotában) (1998). – B: 0874, T: 7103.

Szuhány, Márton (Martin) (Rochfalva, now Rohovec, near Rozsnyó, now Roznava, Slovakia, 2 August 1792 - Pest, 24 September 1841) – Physician, publicist, translator of literary works. After completing his studies at Rozsnyó and Eperjes (now Prešov, Slovakia), he worked as a teacher in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). From 1815 he studied Medicine at the University of Vienna, where he obtained his Medical Degree in 1821, and began his medical career in Bercel, northeast of Budapest; meanwhile, he was elected County Court Judge of Nógrád County. In 1824, he settled in Pest and pursued private practice. He became one of the leaders and organizers of the awakening Slovakian language movement, inspector of the Slovakian-German Lutheran community of Pest, and founder of the Association of the “Lovers of the Slovak Language and Literature” of Pest, whose almanac Zora he edited until his death. He translated into Czech the best of the contemporary Hungarian literature. In 1834, he became the custodian of the First Provident Society of Pest. He regularly published articles in the Scientific Collection (Tudományos Gyűjtemény), and the Medical Cabinet (Orvosi Tár), and published a book on his observations about the cholera epidemic of 1831. In 1835 he expressed his views on women’s education and school hygiene in a published work. In 1837 he initiated the foundation of the Royal Medical Association of Budapest, whose first president he became, though he had to resign this post in 1839 due to illness. His works include Dissertatio inauguralis medicina de odontologia (1821), and Ideen der Bildung der maennlichen Schuljugend (Ideas on the education of male schoolchildren) (1845). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Szuhay, Balázs (Blaise) (Budapest, 20 October 1935 - Budapest, 11 May 1991) – Actor, parodist, cabaret-writer, politician. He studied acting at the school of Kálmán (Coloman) Rózsahegyi, graduating in 1955. Until 1960, he was a member of the Jókai Theater (Jókai Színház), Békéscsaba, then at the József Katona Theater (Katona József Színház), Kecskemét. From 1960, he was a member of the Gaiety Stage (Vidám Színpad), Budapest. He was a talented parodist who wrote many of his own play-scripts and took his profession seriously. For a while he was Editor-in-Chief of a popular humorous weekly, Crafty Matt, the Goose-herd (Ludas Matyi). He also wrote two books: I Open Up (Kiadom magam), and My System-changes (Az én rendszerválásom). His feature film roles include Lope de Vega’s The Gardener’s Dog (El Perro del Hortelano; A kertész kutyája); F. Lehár’s The Land of Smiles (A mosoly országa); J. Huszka’s Prince Bob (Bob Herceg); P. Ábrahám’s Ball in the Savoy (Bál a Savoyban), and Praxy’s Ladies, That Was Enough (Hölgyeim, elég volt). He participated in synchronizing foreign cartoons, such as The Simpson Family (A Simpson család), and Next Please (Kérem a következőt). He also participated in the political life around the change of political system in Hungary. – B: 1031, 1439, 1445, T: 7103.→
Rózsahegyi, Kálmán.

Szűr mantle – A characteristic outer garment of Hungarian herdsmen and peasants; it belongs to the ancient nomadic traditions of Eurasia. In antiquity, a full-length, heavy coat with long sleeves, worn over the shoulders, first appears in Persia, as a characteristic garment of the Medes. It was called kandÿs – most probably the origin of the Hungarian word köntös (garment). The Avars wore a similar garment, called gunia – gúnya (another word for garment) in Hungarian. The Khazars had a similar mantle, called qaba – hence the Hungarian word kabát, or coat.

The typical Hungarian szűr mantle or szűr kabát is a long, coat-like outer garment made of heavy, fulled woollen twill, usually white in colour – although in some regions black were also worn. The front is slit down in the centre, and has turned-back, in most cases embroidered or appliquéd panels. Although the szűr has sleeves, they were seldom used; were often sewn together at the wrist, forming a pocket in which small objects, at times money, were carried.

While the garment was generally worn with a hood, the immediate prototype of the szűr very likely evolved somewhere north of the Black Sea, on the Eurasian steppes, in the middle of the first millennium A.D. It was almost certainly in this area that the Hungarians adopted the garment and from there, in the late 9th century, they introduced it to the Carpathian Basin.

The geographic distribution of the szűr corresponds in general to the territory of the Carpathian Basin, the area, which from AD 896 to 1920, represented Historic Hungary. There were several versions of the garment, especially that of the so-called cifraszűr: a szűr-mantle richly decorated with either monochrome or polychrome embroidery or appliquéd work. The cifraszűr came into fashion only in the late 18th or early 19th century, although earlier versions were also decorated, as evidenced in a letter by Gábor Bethlen, Prince of Transylvania, dated 1627, in which he acknowledges the receipt of “...a great coat made of felt, decorated with an embroidered collar”.

Some of the most famous and richly decorated cifraszűrs were worn in the city of Debrecen. Other areas with cifraszűrs were: the general region of the Great Hungarian Plain (Alföldi and Hajdúsági), Trans-Danubia (Dunántúli), Upper Hungary (Upland, Felföldi), and Transylvania (Erdélyi). The embroidery was an admixture of ancient Oriental motifs, such as the tulip that already appeared as decoration in Hungary in the 12th and 13th centuries; and that of the Baroque and Biedermeier styles, such as the carnation and the rose.

With the defeat of the 1848-1849 Hungarian War of Independence, the cifraszűr was worn in defiance of authority as an expression of Hungarian patriotism. As a result, the police in Transdanubia often forcibly removed the wide applied edgings of the cifraszűrs, leaving only the outline of the trimming. The szűr remained a popular garment among the herdsmen and the peasants until the early 20th century. – B: 1031, T: 7617. → Racka sheep.

Szűrös, Mátyás (Matthew) (Püspökladány, 11 September 1933 - ) – Politician and diplomat. He completed his tertiary studies at the Institute of International Relations, Moscow (1953-1959), at the University of Economics, Budapest (1964), and at the Miklós Zrinyi Military Academy, Budapest (1973). He worked at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs as a lecturer (1962-1965), and during the same years he was Third Secretary of the Hungarian Embassy at East Berlin. From 1965 to 1974, he was a political correspondent of the Central Committee of the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party (Magyar Szocialist Munkáspárt – MSZMP), later her Acting Head (1974-1975); Ambassador to Berlin (1975-1978), and Ambassador to Moscow (1978-1982). From 1982 to 1983, he was Head of the External Affairs Section of the Central Committee in the MSZMP; between 1983 and 1989 he was Secretary of the Central Committee. From 1985 to 2002, he was a Member of Parliament, also a member and president of a number of committees, and Vice-President of the Parliament. In 1989 and 1990, he was temporary President of the Republic, who from the window of the Parliament building, proclaimed the Hungarian Republic (no longer "Hungarian People's Republic") on 23 October 1989. From 1989 he was President of several civil committees. His works include Our Country and the World (Hazánk és a nagyvilág) (1985); A Republic Was Born "With Bells Tolling at Noon" (Köztársaság született, „harangszóval délben") (1999), and National Politics and Joining (Nemzetpolitika és csatlakozás) (2001). He is a recipient of the Bocskai Prize (1995), and Honorary Freeman of the towns of Püspökladány and Beregszász (now Berehove, Ukraine). – B: 0874, 1030, T: 7456.

Szűr-Szabó, József (Joseph) (Gorazda, Bosnia, 4 March 1902 - Budapest, 1993) – Graphic artist and caricaturist. He completed his course at the Academy of Applied Arts of Budapest in 1927. He appeared in a number of exhibitions in Hungary and abroad. He was the caricaturist of Pest News (Pesti Hírlap) and the Evening News (Esti Hírlap) prior to 1945, at the satirical weekly Crafty Matt, the Goose-herd (Ludas Matyi), and the paper Evening News, after 1945. Until 1958, he worked as the designer of the State Puppet Show (Állami Bábszínház). His designs appeared, e.g. in Sz. Darvas - B. Gádor's Gods in Love (Szerelmes istenek); Sz. Darvas & B. Gádor's Stories from Pest (Pesti mesék), and J. Babay's Miraculous Mirror (Csodatükör). His caricatures, entitled Szűr, were published in 1964. In the 1970s he made a 8x3 m. caricature on the wall of the editorial office of the daily Evening News (Esti Hírlap) at the L. Blaha Square, Budapest. His paintings include Girl with Hat (Lány kalappal); Girl on a City Terrace (Lány belvárosi teraszon), and Model with Goldfish Aquarium (Modell aranyhalas akváriummal). He was a recipient of the Munkácsy Prize in 1954 and 1968. – B: 1445, T: 7456.→Darvas, Szilárd; Gádor, Béla.

Szusza, Ferenc (Francis) (Budapest, 1 December 1923 - Budapest, 1 August 2006) – Soccer player and coach. Between 1935 and 1961 he played soccer at the Újpest Gymnastic Club (Újpesti Torna Egyesület – UTE), which changed its name to Budapest Dózsa, and Újpest Dózsa. He participated 463 occasions in the National League's top division matches, and he scored 393 goals. His team became National Champion in 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1960. He was on the Hungarian national team 24 times and scored 18. Szusza was a top division player of Újpest FC from 1941 to 1960. From 1959, after his soccer career, Szusza became a manager. He coached Győri ETO, Újpesti Dózsa, Górnik Zabrze, Real Betis and Atlético Madrid. At the time of his death, Szusza was the all-time top scorer in Hungary's top division, and the twelfth highest among all top division players in the world. Also, according to the statistics of IFFHS, Szusza scored the most league goals in football history while with one club. Szusza was one of Hungary's greatest soccer players. Újpest

FC's stadium was named after Szusza, and now it is the Szusza Ferenc Stadium. – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7103.

Szutrély, Gyula (Julius) (Budapest, 31 March 1915 - Budapest, 8 December 1960) – Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1939, after which he worked at the Biological Institute of Vienna, and in the Herzstation Welfare Center (1940-1941). From 1942, he worked as a demonstrator, later as an assistant lecturer at No. 1 Pediatric Clinic, Budapest; and from 1957, as a senior physician of the National Cardiological Institute Budapest. Szutrély was the organizer of child cardiology in Hungary and he dealt with their congenital diseases. His works include Heart and Circulatory Illnesses (Szív- és vérkeringési betegségek), with P. Gegesi Kiss (1953), and Cardiac Sounds and Murmurs (Szívhangok és zörejek), with E. Tomory (1955). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Szvatopluk (Centapolk, Zentapolk, aka Sentepolug) (? – 894) – Moravian prince, ruler. He captured and delivered his Uncle Rostislav to the Holy Roman Emperor Louis the Pious, who blinded him and confined him to Szvatopluk. As a vassal to the Germans, he became known as The Ruler of the Moravians, and launched a surprise attack to defeat the Bavarian army and gained his independence. In 881, aligned with the Magyars (Hungarians) and the Khabars, he fought against the Franks. In 883 and 844, during two campaigns, he ravaged Pannonia, defeated the troops of Prince Arnulf of Carinthia, and returned home, where the German Emperor Charles forged a peace in 884. Reluctantly tolerating his presence at Nyitra (now Nitra, Slovakia) and surroundings, Prince Arnulf did likewise. After Arnulf, Duke of Carinthia, Holy Roman Emperor became King of Germany, Szvatopluk aligned with the Bohemians and the Hungarians in July 892, and again in 893, invaded Moravia and overthrew the reign of the ex-vassal. He then disappeared from his army and, according to sources, spent his life as a hermit on Mount Zobor near Nyitra. During the strife-filled rule of his sons, Mojmir and Zentapoluk II, between 902 and 906, the Magyars occupied the northwestern mountainous regions of the Carpathians. Szvatopluk's name first appeared in the Hungarian chronicles in the 13th century. Since 1993, in the independent Slovakia, Szvatopluk's importance and role increased in stature in their history. – B: 1078, 1230, 1138, T: 7103.

T

Tabányi, Mihály (Michael) (Pilis, 1 February, 1921 - ) – Accordion virtuoso, jazz musician. In his early age he did not like the instrument. However, he soon changed his view and started play it under the direction of Lajos (Louis) Bobula, who taught him masterly handling the instrument. Since the 1940s, he became the most popular accordionist in Budapest and the country. Before 1945, he mainly played in trios. He played among others, with György (George) Cziffra in the Bristol Hall, Orchestra of Budapest. He formed his own band in 1945. From 1949 they worked in the Emke Coffee House, Budapest. He accompanied some famous singers of the time including: Violetta Ferrari, Kató (Catherine) Fényes, Katalin (Catherine) Karádi, and later, János (John) Vámosi and Márta Záray. With his orchestra he toured half of the world. Nowadays, he appears in concerts and accordion festivals. He is regarded as the “Accordion-King” in Hungary Many of his performances were recorded live, and in new editions they are still quite popular. – B: 1031, 1999, T: 7103.→Cziffra, György; Karády, Katalin; Vámosi, János; Záray, Márta.

Tabéry, Géza (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 17 July 1890 - Nagyvárad, 6 January 1958) – Writer, journalist. He completed his legal studies at the University of Geneva, where he became acquainted with Russian revolutionaries. On his return to Hungary, he worked in the administrative field. From 1909 he became a correspondent for the paper The Week (A Hét). In 1912 he obtained a Ph.D. in Law from the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, in Romania). He served on the Russian front in World War I, and joined the Aster Revolution (Őszirózsás Forradalom) of 31 October 1918, in Budapest. During the time of the Károlyi Government, he was the Lord Lieutenant’s Secretary and, during the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic in 1919, he was a Commissary’s Secretary at Nagyvárad. After the Romanian occupation of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) at the end of 1918, he was responsible for the development of the first Hungarian literary movement in Transylvania. After the fall of the Council (Soviet) Republic, he was imprisoned for a short time. Soon he became editor of the paper Hungarian Word (Magyar Szó), then of the literary paper Spring (Tavas), and later became a correspondent for the papers Nagyvárad Journal (Nagyvárad Napló) and Freedom (Szabadság). He was one of the founders of the literary society, Transylvanian Helicon (Erdélyi Helikon). In his last years, he was in charge of the Ady Museum of Nagyvárad. He drew Ady’s attention to Csinszka, his later love. His works include Silent Fight (Néma harc), story (1917); Across the Golgota (Át a Golgotán) novel (1917); Revolutionary Verses (Forradalmi versek) (1918); The Firebird (A tűzmadár) novel (1926); Stag (Szarvasbika) novel (1926); Blood Tower, vols. i,ii (Vértorony I-II) novel, (1929); Men of October (Októberi emberek) novel (1934); The Young Lady of Csucs Castle (A csucsai kastély kisasszonya) novel (1939), and Bear Dance (Medvetánc) (1958). – B: 0877, 0883, T: 7456.→Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary; Kecskeméthy, István; Koós, Károly.

Tabi, László (Ladislav) (Budapest, 7 October 1910 - Budapest, 28 April 1989) – Journalist, writer and editor. From 1945 he was editor for the humorous weekly, Crafty Matt, the Goose-herd (Ludas Matyi) until his retirement in 1976. He wrote short stories, some of them, after 1945, republished in second editions in Israel. He found his forte after 1945 in his short, humorous writings, in which he showed the absurdities and perversities of life in Budapest. His humorous plays were also successful, as was his work as a radio-announcer and master of ceremonies. He wrote an autobiography as well (1977). He was awarded the Attila József Prize twice (1954, 1962). – B: 0877, 1257, T: 7456.

Tabódy, Klára (Clara) (Thurmayer) (Rákospalota, 12 January 1915 - Milan, 25 June 1986) – Actress, painter, younger sister of Ida Turai. She completed the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, and a course in dancing. She began her career at the King Theater (Király Színház), Budapest in 1934, where she played soubrette roles in operettas and musical plays; thereafter, she was engaged in a Revue at The Hague, where she appeared with Árpád and Kálmán Latabár. This was followed by appearances in Vienna and Berlin. In Berlin she played with great success at the Metropol Theater. Early in World War II, she toured Italy with her own company. From 1953 she studied painting and hence she did not appear on stage. She had successful exhibitions in Munich and Milan. – B: 0883, 1439, T: 7456. → Turai, Ida; Latabár, Árpád Jr.; Latabár, Kálmán Sr.

Tábori, György (George Tabori) (Budapest, 24 May 1914 - Berlin, 23 July 2007) – Writer, journalist, translator of literary works and director. As a translator, he also used the name György Tábori. After completing his secondary education in 1932, he spent a year in Vienna, after returning to Hungary he worked in the catering trade. Later, he also worked in the same trade in Berlin until the end of 1935, when he had to leave Germany because of his Jewish ancestry. He moved to London, where he lived on and off from 1936 to 1947. He worked for the BBC, and acquired British citizenship. He began writing novels in the early 1940s. When World War II broke out in 1939, he returned briefly to Budapest as a reporter for the paper Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet). He moved to Sofia, later to Istanbul. He joined the British army and, as a journalist, he traveled to Jerusalem and later to Cairo. Thereafter, he resumed his life in London (1943-1947), but later he emigrated to the USA, where he settled in Hollywood in 1947. Here he wrote film scripts (e.g. Alfred Hitchcock's film I Confess, shot in 1953), and translated works of Bertolt Brecht, Thomas Mann and Max Frisch until 1949. His plays (e.g. Flight to Egypt) appeared on stage with varying success. From 1966, together with his wife, Viveca Lindfors, he led a five-member theatrical group, the Strolling Players. In 1970 he returned to Europe and worked as a playwright, director and leader of avant-garde theatrical groups in various towns in Germany. In 1975, he founded and led the Bremer Theater Labor, and also directed the Münchner Kammerspiele until 1979. In Vienna, he appeared in a number of theaters as director and author from 1986. He founded and led the Viennese theatrical troupe Der Kreis in 1987, and led it until 1990. From 1989, he was a guest director at the Burgtheater of Vienna, the State Theaters of Berlin, and the Opera House of Leipzig. From 1992 he was artistic director of Cividale, a Summer Festival of Central European Countries. In his last years, he was the in-house author of the Berliner Ensemble, founded by Berthold Brecht, where a number of his plays appeared on stage. His stage productions include Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice, King Lear, Hamlet, Othello; also R. Hagan's Nigger lovers (1962); Talk Show (1976);

My Mother's Courage (1979), and Mein Kampf (1987). His novels include Original Sin (1947); The Journey (1959), and Leicester (1961). He received the Berliner Artistic Grand Prix and the Mannheim Film Festival Grand Prix in 1981, the Berliner Theaterpreis in 1988, and the Büchner Prize in 1992. – B: 1031, 1445, 1672, T: 7456.

Tábori, Kornél (Cornelius) (Szolnok, 25 June 1879 - Auschwitz, July 1944) – Writer and journalist. He was a correspondent for the Pester Journal (Pesti Napló), later deputy editor there, and an initiator of the modern Hungarian reportage. At first, he acted as a police reporter during the Russo-Japanese War (1904-1905), and in the First World War, he was a war correspondent. After the war, he was among the first to bring to light secret police reports on the 19th century Hungarian political movements, e.g. confiscated Kossuth letters from the Viennese archives locked up until then. He published volumes of reports and criminological works, and wrote the history of the Police of Budapest. For years, he edited the journal Detective Review (Detektiv Szemle). With his journalistic work he used every effort to promote tourism and edited the series Tourist Library. He became a victim of anti-Semitism in National-Socialist Germany toward the end of World War II. His works include The Country of Horror (A borzalom országa) (1907); The Guilty Budapest (A bűnös Budapest) with V. Székely, (1908); Gentleman Criminals (Úri gonosztevők) criminal novel (1909); Hungarians Abroad (Magyarok külföldön) (1911), and Secret Police of the Imperial Camarilla (Titkos rendőrség és kamarilla) (1921). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Tábori, Nóra (Temesvár, now Timișoara, Romania, 15 June 1928 - Budapest, 23 November 2005) – Actress. In 1938, she emigrated from Romania to Hungary with her mother. In 1942, she began her career as a dancer in Szeged. She studied at Béla Both's School of Dramatic Art, which she completed in 1943; then she settled at Szombathely, where she played smaller roles. From 1945, she was contracted first in Pécs, and later in Győr. From 1951 she was a member of the Hungarian People's Army Theater. Her acting is characterized by a strong capacity for identification and accurate, well-elaborated characterization. She was a collected artist with an excellent sense of humor. Her roles included Anitra in Ibsen's Peer Gynt; Nyina in Chekhov's Sea Gull; Eve in Maugham's Theater; Mrs. Pearce in Shaw's Pygmalion; Mrs. Hollunder in Molnár's Liliom, best known today as the basis for the Rodgers and Hammerstein musical Carousel. She played in at least 31 feature films, including Colony Underground (1951); Attempt (1959); Zoltán Kárpáthy (1966); Abigail (1978); Lovers (1983), and Gáspár (2004). Tábori received numerous distinctions, among them the Mari Jászai Prize (1957, 1961), the Merited Artist title (1975), the Outstanding Artist title (1981), the Kossuth Prize (1994), and the Éva Ruttkai Ring (1994). - B: 1031, 1445, T: 7456.

Tábori, Pál (Paul) (a.k.a. Christopher Stevens, Peter Stafford, Paul Tabor) (Budapest, 8 May 1908 - London, 9 November 1974) – Writer, journalist and translator of literary works. He read English and German Philology in Berlin. He obtained a Ph.D. in Law and Political Science from the University of Budapest. Instead of following a career in law, he became a journalist, working as a correspondent for the publications Hungarian News (Magyar Hírlap) and Literature, later Hungary (Magyarország) and Theatrical Life (Színházi Élet). In 1937 he moved to London, where he worked as a film critic and scriptwriter. During World War II, he was an associate in the Hungarian Section of the BBC. From 1943 to 1948, he worked at the London film studios of Sándor (Alexander) Korda. He wrote novels, short stories and cultural-historical studies in English, sometimes under assumed names like Paul Tabor and Peter Stafford; later he wrote TV plays. He wrote several volumes of literary translations, and translated from Hungarian into English and from English into Hungarian. He played an active part in the PEN; between 1954 and 1957, he was President of the PEN Center of Writers; from 1957 to 1963 he was its Permanent Delegate. In the early 1960s he was Editor of its journal Aréna and, from 1962, he was also Secretary of its International Writers' Fund. Tábori's short stories, articles and literary translations appeared in the journals Horizon (Látóhatár), New Horizon (Új Látóhatár), Literary News (Irodalmi Újság) and other western Hungarian papers and journals. He briefly edited the Hungarian Word (Magyar Szó) of London. Together with Tamás (Thomas) Kabdebó and Ádám Makkai, he worked on the English anthology of Hungarian Poetry, but this work remained incomplete. He taught novel writing as a professor at the Farleigh Dickinson University at Rutherford in New Jersey, USA. His works include New Buda (Új Buda) (1928); The Limping Dervish (A sánta dervis) (1934); London Diary (Londoni napló) (1946); Two Forests – Uneasy Giant – Heritage of Mery, novel trilogy (1944-1950); Twenty Tremendous Years, World War 2 and after (1961); Palestine (Palesztina) (1947); Alexander Korda (1959); The Survivors (1965); Maria Theresa, biography (1969), and Crime and the Occult, study (1974). – B: 0883, 1257, 1672, T: 7667, 7456. → Korda, Sir Alexander; Kabdebó, Tamás; Makkai, Ádám.

Tábori, Piroska Z. (Mrs. Z. Závodszy) (Budapest, 20 November 1892 - Budapest, 2 May 1947) – Poetess and youth writer. She obtained a Certificate in Education for Junior High School. Thereafter she worked as a teacher; from 1916 to 1922 she was an associate at the Metropolitan Pedagogy Library. She chiefly wrote youth works and prepared literary translations. The youth-novel series Dani Dugó and Peti Csavár had great popularity. She was the wife of opera singer Zoltán Závodszy. She committed suicide. Her works include Message from Erdély (Üzenet Erdélyből); Soft Music (Halk muzsika), poems (1918); Suzanna in Paris (Zsuzsa Párisban), novel (1930); Weekdays (Hétköznapok), novel (1936); Model Class (A mintaosztály), novel (1936); The Organist Sent a Message (Üzent az orgonás), novel (1941), and From Sowing to Harvest (Vetéstől aratásig), novel (1947). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Závodszy, Zoltán.

Tafner, Vidor (Bátaszék, 2 November 1881 - Budapest, 1 October 1966) – Zoologist, goldsmith. He obtained a Ph.D. in Zoology from the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) in 1905, where he became a lecturer; he specialized in insects and mites. From 1906 he taught at Besztercebánya (now Banská Bystrica, Slovakia), where he experimented with the production of a new type of glass. After World War I (when, as a result of the Trianon Peace Treaty in 1920, Northern Hungary, Felvidék was ceded to Czechoslovakia), he moved to Székesfehérvár, went into retirement, and restricted himself to the goldsmith trade. In 1927, he was put in charge of a ceramics workshop but, after its closure in 1936, he returned to goldsmith work. He moved to Budapest in 1964. Besides his research on glass, he experimented with enamels and glazing, and also prepared objects of hammer-hardened copper. His jewelry, prepared with a filigree technique, is an original aspect of the secessionist goldsmith's art in Hungary. His largest-scale work was the Silver Ciborium in Sümeg. In 1965, the István Csók Gallery organized a one-man-show of his works. His published works include Grown-together Butterflies (Összenövesztett pillangók) also in German (1901); On the Tactile Apparatus of the Rhynolophuses (A Rhynolophusok tapintó készülékéről) (1904); Kinds of Mites (Az atkafélék) (1904), and The Geographic Distribution of the Mites (Az atkafélék földrajzi elterjedése) (1905). – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Trianon Peace Treaty.

Tahi Tóth, László (Ladislav) (Budapest 23 January 1944 - ) – Actor. After completing his studies at the School of Dramatic Art, Budapest, he was engaged with the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház), Budapest in 1966, and he has been its member ever since. With his precise, meticulous interpretation and deep empathy, he successfully presents a great variety of characterizations on the stage, in film, and TV-plays. He shows strong feeling for the solution of grotesque situations. His main roles include His Highness Hagyma in R. Weingarten's Summer; Trofimov in Chekhov's Cherry Orchard; Edmund in O'Neill's Long Day's Journey Into Night (Utazás az éjszakába); Viktor in Ivanov's The Wild Duck (Vadkaesavadászat), and István in T. Déry's Mirror (Tükör). He played in more than 15 feature films, among them the Gold Dragon (Aranysárkány) (1966); Overhasty Marriage (Elsietett házasság) (1968); Bridegroom (Vőlegény) (1982); Suitors (Kérők) (1986), and more than 20 TV films, such as Scientific Women (Tudós nők) (1975); The Black Cloister (A feketet kolostor) (1986); Barbarians (Barbárok) (1989); The Fiftieth Reunion (Ötvenéves találkozó) (2002), and Capricious (Szeszélyes), TV series (2006-2007). He is a recipient of the Mari Jászai Prize (1974), the Merited Artist title (1985) and the Pro Comedia Prize (1995). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Tahy Clan and Family – The first member of the clan known by this name was Palatine Acsa (1063-1108). His sibling, Miklós (Nicholas), was a leading man of King Kálmán (Coloman) in 1066. His great-grandson, the first certified descendant, was Count Miklós (Nicholas) Rosd of the clan, who was captain of Pilis, and Lord Lieutenant of County Verőce, in Slavonia in 1235. The name Tahy (de Toch) was first used by his sons Herbord and János (John) in 1305. The descendants of Herbord were the families Halápi Tahy and Tahi Botos, which died out around 1700. The descendants of János possessed considerable landed property in Croatia, and were high national dignitaries, using the title gorbolnoki of nobility. In 1566, Emperor Maximilian granted a fiefdom for the use of Ferenc (Francis) Tahy, Lord Lieutenant of County Pozsega and Master of the Horse in the Stettenberg Castle and Estate of Steiermark, and raised him to the rank of Baron, but his branch died out. On 23 April 1558 in Vienna, King Ferdinand I granted him the estate of György (George) Tárczay, who went over to the side of János Zsigmond (John Sigismund), forming the castle and estate of Tarkeő in County Sáros, 20 km north of Kisszeben (now Kamenica, Slovakia), to János (John) Dessewffy and his nephews György (George) and István (Stephen) Tahy, from whom the family takes its second title of nobility. On 20 September 1857 in Vienna, Emperor Ferenc József (Francis Joseph) conferred an Austrian baronetcy to József (Joseph) Tahy, Royal Lay Assessor of the Court of Appeals; however, his branch died out with him. – B: 2075, T: 7456.

Takács, Károly (Charles) (Budapest, 21 January 1910 - Budapest, 5 January 1976) – Olympic pistol-shooting champion and army officer. He was a professional soldier prior to World War II and he participated in the competitions of the Honvéd Officers' Sports Club. In 1940 he was National Champion with small-bore sports-pistol. In the army, he reached the rank of lieutenant colonel. Due to an accident, his right-hand was mutilated; however, he brought himself up to international front-rank, shooting with his left hand. After 1945, as a member of the Partisan Sports Club of Budapest, and later, as a member of the Honvéd Sports Association of Budapest, he won National Championships with the automatic sports pistol in five different years, with small-bore sports-pistol in 1949, and with full-bore sports-pistol four-times in the 1950s. In the Helsinki Summer Olympic Games (1952) he was champion with the five-shape rapid-fire pistol (from among 53 starters), with 579 rounds. He was a participant in the Lucerne World Championships (1939), where he was a winner in the sports-pistol team. In the Moscow World Championships (1958) he was placed third in the automatic sports-pistol shooting team. He also took part in the European Championships in Bucharest (1955). After the end of his active career, he became a teacher of young sport-shooters at the Honvéd Officers' Sports Club of Budapest. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Takács, Katalin (Kati) (Budapest, 15 January 1951 - ) – Actress. After completing her studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art in Budapest in 1975, she became a member of the Petőfi Theater in Veszprém (Veszprémi Petőfi Színház). From 1981 to 1985 she was a member of the Szigligeti Theater (Szigligeti Színház) in Szolnok; thereafter she played at the Miklós Radnóti Theater (Radnóti Miklós Színház) in Budapest and, since 1994, she has been a member of the New Theater (Új Színház) in Budapest. With her sensitive personality and individual tone of voice, she is able to mold memorable female figures. Her roles include Nyina in Chekhov's Sea Gull; Catherina in Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew (A makrancos hölgy); Cecil in Herczeg's The Blue Fox (A kék róka); title role in Ibsen's Nora, and Anna in S. Márai's Adventure (Kaland). There are more than 42 feature and TV films to her credit, including A Little Place under the Sun (Egy kis hely a Nap alatt) (1973); Reflections (Tükörképek) (1976); The Horváths (Horváték) (1981); Somebody is Watching (Valaki figyel) (1985); The New Landlord (Az új földesúr) (1988); Devictus Vincit (1994); Lora (2007), and Variations (Variációk) (2009). She is recipient of the Veszprém Festival Prize (1985), the Mari Jászai Prize (1989), the Critics' Prize (1990), the Déryné Prize (1993), the Merited Artist title (2008), and the Pro Urbe Prize (2008). – B: 1445, 1905, T: 7456.

Takács, Klára (Clara) (Lengyeltóti, 24 April 1945 - ) – Singer (mezzo-soprano). She completed her studies at the Franz (Ferenc) Liszt Academy of Music. Since 1973 she has been a soloist of the Opera House, Budapest, where she made her debut in the title role in Gluck's Orpheus and Euridice. She participated in a number of oratorios and opera recordings. She was a guest artist in a number of opera houses all over the world. She appeared in the Metropolitan Opera and at Carnegie Hall in New York, in the Staatsoper of Vienna, at the Salzburg Festival, in Cologne, Berlin, Rome, Milan, Zurich, London, Paris, as well as in Japan. Her roles include Cherubino in Mozart's Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága); Dorabella in Mozart's Così fan tutte (Women are like that – Mindenki így csinálja); Judit in Bartók's Bluebeard's Castle (A kékszakállú herceg vára), Marina in Mussorgsky's Boris Godunov; Adalgisa in Bellini's Norma; Julia in Gounod's Romeo and Juliet; Erda in Wagner's Das Rheingold, and Zaira in Rossini's L'Italiana in Algeri (Italian Girl in Algiers – Olasz nő Algirban). She has recorded more than 20 record albums. She has achieved international recognition with six of her records. She is a recipient the Franz Liszt Prize (1979), the Mihály Székely Memorial Plate (1980), the French Academy's Grand Prix (1982), and the Officer's Cross of Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2007). – B: 1445, 1906, T: 7456.

Takács, Lajos (1) (Louis) (Fiume, now Rijeka, Croatia, 26 October 1909 - Budapest, 16 May 1983) – Meteorologist. In 1934 he obtained his Degree in Education (majoring in Mathematics and Physics) from the University of Budapest. In 1935 he joined the National Meteorological Institute as a volunteer associate. Later on, he carried out studies on radiation measurement at the Collegium Hungaricum in Berlin. In 1951 he was appointed Head of the Climate Division of the National Meteorological Institute. In 1962 he obtained a Masters Degree in Physics (meteorology). The modern, complex exposé of Hungary's radiation-climate is linked to his name. He participated in the work of the International Geophysical Year (1957), in the Lake Balaton research program (1958), and in the studies on the heat-economy of the town of Szarvas in the Transtibiscan (eastern) region of the Great Hungarian Plain (1963). The Climatic Atlas of Hungary comprises his summarized observations from over 50 years on area distribution of his solar radiation maps and tabulations. He wrote the history of the instrumental and observational methods used in the service of radiation research. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Takács, Lajos (2) (Louis) (Várong, south of Lake Balaton, 10 November 1921 - Budapest, 7 February 1985) – Ethnographer. He was the son of peasant parents. His extraordinary talents were evident to his teachers in High School, and it was owing to this that he was admitted to the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest, to complete his studies between 1941 and 1946. He obtained a Degree in Education, majoring in Hungarian and Latin, and thereafter, he obtained a Ph.D. in Folklore. He became a correspondent for the Ethnographic Museum (1950-1973). His main research field was material culture. In 1964 he completed his Masters Degree with a thesis on tobacco cultivation and, in 1976, he completed his Ph.D. in History. From 1973 until his death he worked for the Ethnographic Research Group of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences at first, as a scientific advisor and later, as the Head of the Scientific Division. By this time, the archaic forms of agriculture became the main center of his research interest, particularly the clearing of land for farming. During his last years, seriously ill, he continued his work on his earlier folklore research, publishing his results in journals in Hungary and abroad. He edited the journal Ethnographical Proceedings (Néprajzi Közlemények). He left behind a vast amount of material in manuscript form. His works include Historians and Histories (Históriások, históriák) (1958); Tobacco Cultivation in Hungary (A dohánytermesztés Magyarországon) (1964); The Farming of a Cleared Village (Egy irtásfalu földművelése) (1976); The Little Lake Balaton and its Environs (A Kis-Balaton és környéke) (1978), and Memories of Our Clearing-way of Farming. Cleared Land, Clearing Methods (Irtásgazdálkodásunk emlékei. Irtásföldek, irtásmódok) (1980). He was awarded the István Györfly Memorial Medal in 1978. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Takács, Margit (Margaret) (Budapest, 30 March 1927 - ) – Actress. After completing the drama course at the National Actor's Association in 1939, she began her career at the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház) in Budapest. She played in theaters in country towns, as well and at the Podium Cabaret (Pódium Kabaré) in Budapest. From 1952 until her retirement, she was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Pécs. She played heroines in operas, and prima donna roles of classic operettas, as well as dramatic figures, with equally deep insight and with great success. She was the public's favorite. Her roles included Leila in Huszka's Gül Baba; Saffi in J. Strauss Jr's Gypsy Baron (Cigánybáró); Hanna Glavari in Lehár's The Merry Widow (A víg özvegy); Mimi in Puccini's La Bohème (Bohémélet); Olga in Chekhov's Three Sisters (A három nővér), and Mrs. Muskát in Molnár's Liliom. She received the title of Merited Artist in 1965. – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Takács, Mária (Marika) (Resicabánya, now Reșița, Romania, 25 November 1938 - Budapest, 9 May 1997) – Announcer and programmer. She obtained a Bachelor of Arts Degree from the University of Budapest, and she joined the College of Cinematic and Dramatic Art while she was studying voice. She proved to be ideal as a program announcer, and was invited to join the Hungarian TV where, from its inception, she worked from 1957 until her death. She was one of the legendary and popular personalities of Hungarian Television. She appeared in numerous entertainment TV programs and in eight films, among them: Love Thursday (Szerelem csütörtök) (1959); Mirage In Any Amount (Délibáb minden mennyiségben) (1961); Cambric Action (Patyolat akció) (1965); Julius the Hero Winter and Summer (Gyula vitéz télen nyáron) (1970), and Hallo there, Chum! (Halló Öcsi) (1971). She was posthumously made a Life Member of Hungarian TV – B: 1907, 1031, T: 7456.

Takács, Paula (Palermo, 10 December 1913 - Budapest, 27 August 2003) – Opera singer (soprano). She obtained her voice training from Bianka Maleczky and Erzsébet (Elizabeth) Hoór-Tempis at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest, from 1931 to 1936. From 1941 (when Northern Transylvania was returned to Hungary by the Second Vienna Award in 1940) until 1947, she was a solo singer at the National Theater of Kolozsvár (now again Cluj- Napoca in Transylvania, Romania). After moving to Hungary in 1948, she made her debut in the title role of Puccini's Turandot at the Opera House of Budapest; thereafter she was a soloist and leading dramatic soprano from 1948 to 1969. She sang, with equally outstanding interpretation, in the operas of Mozart, Verdi, Wagner and Puccini, and she was also a recognized singer in oratorios. She won the Second Prize at the International Vienna Singing Competition. She appeared as a guest artist in a number of European countries, such as Switzerland, Italy and Czechoslovakia. Her roles included Melinda in F. Erkel's Bánk bán; Leonora in Beethoven's Fidelio; title role in Verdi's Aida; Amelia in Verdi's Masked Ball (Álarcos bál); Senta in Wagner's Flying Dutchman (A bolygó hollandi); Santuzza in Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana (Parasztbecsület), and Elizabeth in Wagner's Tannhäuser. She was a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1956), the Franz Liszt Prize (1953) and the Merited Artist title (1959). – B: 1031, 1445, T: 7456.→Erkel, Ferenc.

Takács, Sándor (Alexander) (Balatonboglár, 12 December 1886 - Budapest, 13 October 1912) – Pilot, the first victim of the Hungarian pioneers of flying. He began his career as a telephone technician with the Royal Hungarian Post. He spent his military service with the airship division. In 1911 he became a pilot for the engineer and airplane designer Géza Kolbányi. At the national air-race on 20 August 1912, he won first prize. He decided to fly to Vienna with the new, 100 hp engine of Kolbányi, in order to show and sell it to the High Command; on its last trial run he crashed and was killed, aged 26. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Pioneers of Hungarian Aviation; Kolbányi, Géza.

Takács, Tamara (Kaposvár, 27 April 1950 - ) – Opera singer (alto). She studied voice under Mária Balla at the Academy of Music of Pécs, and under József (Joseph) Réti and Mrs. Ferenc (Francis) Révhegyi at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest, qualifying for her diploma in 1978. In the same year the Opera House engaged her, where she appeared in the first season, singing the important role of Dorabella in Mozart's Così fan tutte (Women are like that – Mindenki így csinálja). Her rich, unusually beautiful voice and cultured way of singing, with well-shaded tonal qualities, coupled with her refined acting and attractive appearance on stage made her one of the leading mezzo-singers of the company. Her glowing interpretative ability is particularly evident in the passionate mezzo-heroines of Verdi operas, in addition to all the other mezzo-roles of the repertoire. She also appeared as an oratorio and solo singer at international concerts. Her roles include Azucena in Verdi's Il Trovatore (A trubadur); title role in Bizet's Carmen; Judit in Bartók's Bluebeard's Castle (A kékszakállú herceg vára); Ulrica in Verdi's Masked Ball (Álarcos bál), and Charlotte in Massenet's Werther. She appeared in many Opera Houses of Europe, and worked with such conductors as Lovro von Matačić, János Ferencsik, Antal Doráti and Jurij Simonov. She made numerous recordings with Hungarian Radio, Hungarian Television and Hungaroton Record Co. She was awarded the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Prize in 1990, and the Béla Bartók - Ditta Pásztor Prize in 1992. – B: 1439, 1445, T: 7456.

Takaró, Mihály (Michael) (Budapest, 29 December 1954 - ) – Literary historian, poet and writer. He is a descendant of a family of parsons of the Reformed Church. After his secondary schooling and military service, he first received his Degree in Education, majoring in Hungarian and voice, from the University of Pécs. In 1982 he qualified as a High School teacher, majoring in Hungarian from the University of Debrecen. From 1978 until 1995 he taught at the Lajos Kossuth High School of Budapest. From 1993 to 2004 he worked as a correspondent of the National Research and Consulting Institution (Országos Kutatási és Szaktanácsadó Intézet – OKSZI), and was the National Administrator for the subjects of Hungarian Language and Literature. Between 1993 and 2005 he was President of the Committee for determining the thesis in matriculation examinations in Hungarian Language and Literature. In 1996, with three assistants, he completed a four-volume text collection for the examination, based on a new concept.

From 1995 to 2002, he was a member of the Editorial Committee of the paper Hungarian (Magyar). He has reviewed more than a hundred school curricula and more than thirty local curricula since 1995. He has been publishing papers for the past ten years. Since 1995, he has been a specialist in education. From 1999 to 2004 he was a teacher at the Lónyai Street Reformed High School of Budapest, and since 2004, Leader of the Working Party at the Lutheran High School of Budapest-Fasor. From September 2000 until June 2005, he worked as an assistant lecturer at the Gáspár Károli Reformed University in Budapest. In June 2005 he completed the course of Leader and Manager of Education at the Budapest Polytechnic. Lately, he has been an outside consultant for the National Educational Assessment and Examination Center (Országos Közoktatási Hivatal – OKEV). He is the author of studies and gives public lectures. His works include The Non-Western Literature of the First Half of the 20th Century – Curriculum for Correspondence Education (A XX. század első felének nem nyugatos irodalma, távoktatási tananyag); (2003); Toward Canaan (Kánaán felé) poems (2004); The World of the Novels of Albert Wass (Wass Albert regényeinek világa) (2004), and the Secrets of Albert Wass (Wass Albert titkai) (2006). – B: 1979, T: 7456. → Wass, Albert.

Takáts, Gyula (Julius) (Tab, 4 February 1911 - Kaposvár, 20 November 2008) – Poet, writer and literary translator. He completed his high school studies in Kaposvár; then in 1923, he obtained a B.A. Degree in Education, majoring in Geography, Geology and Philosophy. From 1939 he taught in High Schools in Munkács (now Mukacheve, Ukraine), and in Kaposvár. In 1948, he was in Rome on a scholarship at the Hungarian Institute. Between 1948 and 1971, he was Director of the Rippl-Rónai József Museum in Kaposvár, and that of the Somogy County Museum. Takáts belonged to the third generation of writers of the literary journal Nyugat (the West), and lived most of his life in southern Transdanubia (Dunántúl). His poetry, novels and essays were connected to the countryside around Kaposvár and of Lake Balaton. In his novels and short stories he introduced the life of Transdanubia and the history of the citizens of the area. His novels, written for youth, have been very popular, for example Sailboat in the Grove (Vitorlás a berken) (1971). He was forced into silence in the 1950s by the Communist regime. He returned to literary life with a selection of poetry called To the People (Az emberekhez) (1955). His studies and essays give a personal picture of the classical heritage of Hungarian literature and art, primarily the intellectual heritage of Dániel Berzsenyi and Mihály (Michael) Csokonai Vitéz, as well as poets of the West. He was in touch with such poets and writers as Attila József, Mihály (Michael) Babits, Miklós (Nicholas) Radnóti and András (Andrew) Fodor. From 1985 he was President of the Berzsenyi Literary and Art Society. In 1991, he was elected an honorary member of the Society of Hungarian Literary History (Magyar Irodalomtörténeti Társaság). From 1992, he was a member of the Széchenyi Literary and Art Academy (Széchenyi Irodalmi és Művészeti Akadémia). From 1994, he even filled the position of Vice-President of the Hungarian Pen Club. Among his works are: The Well (Kút) poems (1935); Neither Sky nor Land (Se ég, se föld) poems (1947); A Garden Remembered (Egy kertre emlékezve) essays; Shadow of Nothing (A semmi arnyéka) poems (1980); Sonnets for Over the Styx (Szonettek a Styxen túlrá), poems (1990), and Csu and Drangalag (Csu és Drangalag) poems (1996). Among his awards are the Baumgarten Prize (1941), the József Attila Prize (1960, 1971), the Artists' Foundation's Prize (1983), the Tibor Déry Prize (1985), and the Kossuth Prize (1991). He was an Honorary Citizen of Tab (1971), Kaposvár (1973), and Balatongyörök (2002). – B: 1257, T: 7684. → József, Attila; Babits, Mihály; Radnóti, Miklós; Fodor, András; Berzsenyi, Dániel; Csokonai Vitéz, Mihály.

Takáts, László (Ladislav) (Budapest, 1 August 1910 - Budapest, 9 December 1987) – Physician. He obtained his Bachelor Degree in Medicine from the University of Szeged in 1935, followed by a special course in Pathological Anatomy and Histology. In 1936 he joined the army, first as physician, while he also passed an examination specializing in army surgery. He served on the front the entire length of World War II. He felt responsible for the health of the soldiers under his care, and for saving their lives. During the war, he developed into one of the most decorated medical officers, the honors coming from Hungarian, German and Italian sources. After 1945, as a colonel, he took upon himself to shoulder partly the restructuring of the Hungarian army, strongly believing that both the professional army officers and the Honvéd physicians have to work at the peak of their capacity. He finally reached the position of Deputy Commander of the Central Military Hospital (Központi Katonai Kórház) and Head of one of the surgical departments. He was also the organizer of the intensive care unit. From the 1950s, he devoted his free time to classical studies, publishing papers on the history of military medical results. In 1966 he obtained his Masters Degree in Medicine on the elucidation of the history of military medicine during the Freedom Fight of Prince Francis Rákóczi II. Between 1978 and 1988 he was Vice President of the Hungarian Medical Historical Society (Magyar Orvostörténelmi Társaság), and later its Honorary President. He was editor of the medical-historical column of the journal Honvéd Physician (Honvédorvos). His main published work was Military Medical Provision in the Freedom Fight Led by Ferenc Rákóczi II (A II. Rákóczi Ferenc vezette szabadságharc katonai orvosi ellátása) (2002). He received the István Wesszprémi Medal (1980). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Takáts, Mihály (Michael) (Nagybánya, now Baia Mare, Transylvania, Romania, 13 September 1861 - Keszthely, 20 August 1913) – Singer (baritone). First he studied Theology; then he was recommended to the actor and theater manager Ede (Edward) Újházi. On a scholarship from the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) in Budapest, he became a student of Richárd Pauli and Adél Passy-Cornet. He made his debut in 1883, and thereafter remained the leading baritone of the Opera House of Budapest until his death. His warm, precise voice of great range, and his multi-faceted performing artistry rendered him capable of developing an extraordinarily wide repertoire, singing more than a hundred roles. He could perform equally well the leading baritone roles of Mozart, Verdi, Wagner and Puccini. He was an outstanding Wagnerian singer, also sang in Bayreuth as a guest artist. In 1894, he appeared as a Lieder singer. His roles included Valentin in Gounod's Faust; title role in Verdi's Rigoletto; title role in Mozart's Don Giovanni; Wolfram and Biterolf in Wagner's Tannhäuser; Scarpia in Puccini's Tosca; Count Almaviva in Mozart's Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága), and Tiborc in F. Erkel's Bánk bán. – B: 0903, 1445, T: 7456. → Újházi, Ede.

Takáts, Sándor S.P. (Alexander) (Komárom, 6 December 1860 - Budapest, 21 December 1932) – Cultural historian and Piarist teacher. He obtained his B.A. Degree in Education from the University of Budapest, majoring in History and Latin. In 1881, he joined the Piarist Order and was ordained in 1886. At first he taught at the Piarist High School of Nyitra (now Nitra, Slovakia), and from 1889, taught at the Piarist High School of Budapest. Between 1898 and 1903, on behalf of the Hungarian Government, he worked at the archives of the Viennese Court (Hofkammer) to select the Hungarian writings. From 1903 until his passing, he was Archivist of the Parliament. From 1917, he was a member of the Kisfaludy Society. He was primarily engaged in the history of the 16th and 17th centuries; later in life he dealt mainly with the history of the Reform Era. He uncovered a vast amount of source material. His discovered data on cultural history are of permanent value, even though his view of past periods, and especially his own period were outdated. His works include The Development of the Hungarian Infantry (A magyar gyalogság megalakulása) (1908); The Hungarian-language Correspondence of the Turkish Pashas of Buda (A budai basák magyar nyelvű levelezése) with Ferenc Eckhart and Gyula Székfü (1915); Impoverished Hungarians (Szegény magyarok) (1927), and Studies in Cultural History (Művelődéstörténeti tanulmányok), edited by Kálmán Benda (1961). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Takátsy, Gyula (Julius) (Magyaratád, south of Lake Balaton, 1914 - Budapest, 12 March 1980) – Physician, microbiologist. He received his Medical Degree from the University of Pécs in 1938, and thereafter he worked in the Institute of Public Hygiene of the Faculty of Medicine. Later, he worked at the National Institute of Public Hygiene. From 1948 to 1957, he carried out research on viruses, while from 1957 to 1977, he was an Associate of the Influenza Laboratory; later became its Head. He began his virological investigations by participating in the production of vaccines against typhus and other diseases. From the 1950s, he carried out research on the changes in biological and antigen-structural characteristics of influenza viruses, and also the pathological and epidemiological importance of the various influenza stocks, as well as researching the manufacturing technology of the vaccines against influenza. The results of his research were utilized by the practical virus-diagnostics and the production of vaccines for inoculation. In his laboratory, half a million doses of world standard vaccines were produced annually in the 1960s. He was a recipient of the Rezső Manninger Memorial Medal. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Taksony (Székesfehérvár, 931 - 972) – Son of Solt, grandson of Reigning Prince Árpád. He succeeded Fajsz (ruling 947-972), and was followed by his son, Géza-István, the last reigning prince of the Royal House of Árpád. He was a strong-willed ruler and an excellent commander who, in 947, as the Prince of Nyitra (now Trnava, Slovakia), led a successful military campaign into Italy as far as Otranto, where King Berengár II managed to turn him back only by paying him ten bushels of gold in ransom. Under his reign, the Magyars swept into France in 951, up to the western banks of the River Loire. His captains waged war against Germany until they were defeated in the pivotal Battle of Lechfeld at Augsburg in 955. In 958, he waged war against the Byzantines; but gradually decreased these sorties into the south and the west because of the increasing centralized power of German Emperor Otto I, and the Byzantine Emperor. Furthermore, there was a need to develop and stabilize the Hungarian state, which he succeeded to accomplish. During his 25 year reign, there was peace in the country which was favorable for commerce. He initiated the ancient system of legacy by designating his son to the highest position of authority. Following the accepted practice of marriage contracts, he developed alliances with the neighboring states. Through the marriage of his son to Saroldu, the daughter of the powerful Gyula of Transylvania, he gained an important ally. He was buried in County Pest in accordance with ancient rituals. – B: 1078, 1666, 1020, 1153, T: 7658.→Lechfeld (Augsburg), Battle of.

Taky, Ferenc (Francis) (Kaposvár, 5 March 1905 - 29 September 1968) – Mechanical engineer. He studied engineering at the Budapest Polytechnic (Budapesti Műszaki Egyetem), received his diploma in 1927, and a Ph.D. in Mechanical Engineering in 1965. From 1927 to 1929, he was a teaching assistant at the Department of Mechanical Engineering of the Budapest Polytechnic. Between 1929 and 1945, he was Chief Engineer at the Testing Department of the Electrical Works of Budapest (Budapest Főváros Elektromos Művei). From 1945 he was Adjunct Professor at the Electrical Department of the Polytechnic and from 1952 Professor and Department Head there. In 1957 he was employed at the Power Plant's Design Co., (Erőmű Tervező Vállalat), later at the Work Safety Scientific Research Institute (Munkavédelmi Tudományos Kutató Intézet) until 1964. From 1964 he worked as a lecturer at the mechanical department of the Veszprém Chemical University (Veszprémi Vegyipari Egyetem). From 1966 he worked at the Electrical Works of Budapest (Bp. Főváros Elektromos Művei) and, from 1967 he was a consultant for the Chemical and Explosives Technology Research Institute (Vegy- és Robbanástechnikai Kutató Intézet). His scientific and work-related activities primarily involved problems related to lighting technologies and the electrical control system of elevators. At the Polytechnic of Budapest he was responsible for reorganizing the department of electrical technology. His works include The Installation of Lighting Equipment (Világítási berendezések szerelése) (1943); Electrical Equipment of Buildings (Épületek villamos berendezései) published lecture notes (1951); Certain Issues Related to the Energy Supply of Factories (Gyárüzemek villamos energiaellátásának néhány kérdése) (Bp. 1954), and The Basics of Lighting Technology (A világítástechnika alapjai) (Bp. 1967). – B: 0883, T: 7665.

Tálasi, István (Stephen) (Laskó, now Lug, Croatia, County Baranya, 12 July 1910 - Budapest, 17 April 1984) – Ethnographer. He completed his high school studies in Kunszentmiklós; studied at the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest, where he obtained a B.A. Degree in Education in 1933, majoring in Hungarian and German Literature. During his student years, he also spent time with great interest in Turkology and Ethnography. In 1936, he obtained a Ph.D. in Ethnography under Professor István (Stephen) Györfly, with a thesis entitled The Shepherding in Kiskunság (A kiskunsági pásztorkodás). Thereafter, he taught first at Hódmezővásárhely (1935-1939), then at the András Fáy High School of Budapest (1940-1942). During the summer vacations, he was collecting ethnographic material. In 1938 and 1939, he was on a scholarship at the Collegium Hungaricum of Vienna. Beside his teaching commitments, Tálasi carried out historical and comparative ethnographic research. In 1942, at the University of Szeged, he became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) in “Material Ethnography of the Great Plain and Historical Ethnography” (Az Alföld tárgyi néprajza és magyar történelmi néprajz), and was appointed as an associate at the Pál Teleki Scientific Institute (Teleki Pál Tudományos Intézet) of Budapest. In 1949 he became Professor at the Ethnographic Institute of the University of Budapest. From 1951 until his retirement in 1980, he was Professor and Head of the Department of Material Ethnography (Tárgyi Néprajzi Tanszék). From 1957 to 1963 he was Dean of the Faculty of Arts. From 1967 until his passing, he was President of the Ethnographic Committee of the Academy of Sciences (Magyar Tudományos Akadémia Néprajzi Bizottságának elnöke), and President of the Hungarian Ethnographic Society (Magyar Néprajzi Társaság) (1978-1982). He took part in editing several scientific journals, e.g. Acta Ethnographica and Ethnographia. His research was characterized by an interdisciplinary approach. His work was particularly significant in the field of peasant animal husbandry and farming traditions. As a teacher, he trained and guided several generations. For his work, he received a number of awards both from Hungary and abroad. His works include The Peasant Animal Husbandry of the Kiskunság Area (A Kiskunság népi állattartása) (1936); Kiskunság area (Kiskunság) (1977), and The Place of Vásárhely in the Development of Hungarian Peasant Culture (Vásárhely helye a magyar népi kultúra fejlődésében) (1983). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456. →Györffy, István (1).

Tallián, Ferenc (Francis) (Pécel, 5 January 1901 - Budapest, 18 July 1978) – Geographer and cartographer. He completed his high school studies in Lőcse (now Levoča, Slovakia) in 1919. First, he studied Economics at the University of Budapest, and obtained his B.A. Degree in 1926; then, for two years, he worked as an assistant to Count Pál Teleki, the great geographer, in the Department of Geography, specializing in methods of geographic illustrations, and the development of illustrati technique, thus gaining high standard qualification in science and map plotting. From 1927 until his retirement in 1973 he worked at the Hungarian Geographical Institute (Magyar Földrajzi Társaság); from 1951 with the Offset Printing Works (Offset Nyomda), and later as a leading scientific and technical engineer. After 1945, he played a leading role in developing new map illustration and designing methods for schools. He carried out the thematic maps series of the Danube Valley by means of novel technical methods. Linked to his name are also the General School Atlas, a series of wall maps, and the first independent Hungarian World Atlas. He was a member of the Geographical Society for more than half a century; in 1967 he became an honorary member. – B: 0883 T: 7456. →Teleki, Count Pál.

Tallósi, Jim (Dunakeszi, 1947 - ) – Poet. He moved to Canada in 1956. A graduate of the University of Winnipeg, he wrote two books of poetry: The Trapper and the Fur-faced Spirits (1981), and Talking Water, Talking Fire (1985). His poems have appeared in the Mandala, Poetry of Manitoba, Prairie Fire and New West Review. In his later poems, he has refined his style to create timeless and exquisite landscapes. – B: 0892, T: 4342.

Talmácsi, Gábor (Talma) (Budapest, 28 May 1981 - ) – Motor cycle racer. He started competing at the age of 4, with a mini-motorbike made by his father. At 14, he was among adult competitors. In 1999 he won both the Hungarian Championship and the Alpe-Adria Cup. In 2000 he finished in 5th place in the European Championships. His first season in the World Championships was 2001; he drove a Honda at the time and collected 34 points by the end of the year, and the Racing Service offered him a contract. In 2002, he made a contract with the Italjet group; but during the year he went over to the PEV ADAC Sachsen group. He achieved considerable success with them: at the Brazilian Race he won 4th place. He also worked on the Exalt Cycle and the Malaguti teams. 2005 was a successful year; as a member of the Red Bull KTM team, he won in three competitions in Mugello, Assen and Qatar. In 2007, he was a member of the Aspar Aprilia team and won the World Championships in the Motor GP 125 cm<sup>3</sup> category. He won a victory in the Dutch 125 cm<sup>3</sup> motor category: the Grand Prize in 2008. With this he stepped up to 4th place in the points competition. In 2009 he started the season in the 250 cm<sup>3</sup> motor category. However, he left the Balatonring Team in May. In 2007 he was elected Male Sportsman of the Year in Hungary. In the same year he received the Knight's Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary. – B: 1031, 1105, T: 7684, 7103.

Táltos – In the Hungarian folk belief, the táltos – also known as shaman – a person of supernatural power, ordained by supernatural beings. This was already apparent at his birth, because he was born with a sign. This manifested itself in his extra bones: he was born with teeth and with more than ten fingers. Already as a child, his behavior differed from the average: he suckled for a long time; he was a person of few words, quiet behavior, withdrawn, retiring, at times even melancholic, but very strong for his age. The seventh year of his life was significant, for if a tooth of his was stolen, he could not become a táltos; or he would disappear from the home of his parents, because another táltos would carry him away, and thereby himself becoming a táltos. He had to take a test of one kind or another: in the Hajdu-Bihar region of Eastern Hungary, he would have to climb a tree; in Nagyszalonta (now Salonta, Romania), he had to climb a ladder. His nutrition was also specific: he lived on milk and eggs. He was omniscient, could foretell the future, and locate buried treasure in the soil. He could also cause hail, storm, or stop the same; bullets didn't penetrate his body. His typical activity was fighting: a táltos fought in the form of wheels (metal and fire wheels), in different-colored flames (blue and purple), in different forms of stallions (gray and bay), but mostly as bulls (black, smoky and light blond). The purpose of the struggle was to set the weather right, to change it for better or for worse. He knew ahead of time where, when and in what form he had to fight. In tales, the táltos' clever horse – it could often fly – was also called a táltos (táltos paripa). The exact origin of the word is not known. The two most important points of verbal traditions relating to the táltos are the struggle of the half-bull half-man, and also the winged horse. It was the ancient shamanism that was preserved in the form of the táltos. His figure is related to the necromancer and to the wizard. It is almost certain that he appears only in the Hungarian belief system. – B: 1031, 1990, T: 7684.→Shaman.

Tamás, Gáspár Miklós (Gasper Nicholas) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 28 November 1948 - ) – Political economist, publicist. Son of the writer Gáspár Tamás and Erzsébet Krausz, daughter of the Orthodox Jewish cantor of Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania). He obtained a Ph.D. from the University of Kolozsvár in 1972, after which he worked as a journalist until 1978, when he settled in Hungary. Until 1980, he was a research worker at the Faculty of Philosophy of the University of Budapest but, because of his “oppositional attitude”, he lost his position. He moved briefly to Romania in 1980, but he was expelled from there. He moved to the USA, where he taught as a visiting professor at Yale University, and later on in Universities of England and France. He became one of the best-known opposition leaders of the Kádár era. When a member of the one-party Parliament resigned, he won the vacant seat for the Free Democrats' Association (SZDSZ). From 1988 to 1990, he was an agent of the SZDSZ. From 1992 to 1994, he was President of the National Council of the SZDSZ. From 1989 on he was an assistant professor at the Department of Jurisprudence at the University of Budapest. From 1990 to 1994, he was a Member of Parliament and Director of the Institute of Philosophy of the Academy; also a visiting professor at the University of Chicago. In 2000, he left the SZDSZ. From 1991, Tamás was Vice President of the Hungarian Philosophical Society; and from 1993, he was a researcher at the Woodrow Wilson Institute in Washington. From 2007, he was a visiting professor at the Central European University (CEU), Budapest; from May 2010, President of the Green Left in the European Parliament (EP). During his career, he has changed his standpoint from liberal to conservative-liberal and to leftist. A famous article of his was from this late phase: Farewell to the Left (Búcsú a baloldaltól). During the first decade of the 2000s, he began to exhibit a peculiar version of Marxism. Politically, he condemned the Ceausescu system of government in Romania and he also condemned the Hungarian rightist organizations. His works include The Chances of Theory (A teória esélyei) essays and critiques (1975); The Eye and the Hand (A szem és a kéz), samizdat (1983, in French 1985); Idola Tribus (1989, in French 1991, in English 1995); Other World (Másvilág), political essays (1994), and The Situation (A helyzet), satirical pamphlet (2002). He has received several prizes, such as the Creativeness Prize of the Soros Foundation (1995), Middle Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2005). – B: 0874, 1031, 1257, T: 7456.

Tamás, Lajos (Louis) (Tremł) (Temesvár, now Timișoara, 23 March 1904 - Budapest, 19 September 1984) – Linguist. His father was János Tremł of Swabian extraction from the Banate region of Historic Hungary; his mother, Julianna Tamás, whose maiden name he adopted in 1933, was the daughter of a Szekler master blacksmith. He grew up in a trilingual environment, finished high school in Arad (now in Romania). From 1922, he studied at the Mathematics and Physics Department of the University of Budapest for two years; then, as a member of the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest, he studied German, French and Romanian Literature. On a scholarship, he furthered his studies at the Universities of Vienna, Berlin and Paris for several years, finishing with a Ph.D. From 1930 to 1936 Tamás was an associate at the National Széchényi Library and, at the same time, he was an honorary lecturer at the University of Budapest from 1933, and finally, in the Department of Romanian Studies and Romanian Philology. From 1940 to the summer of 1944 (when Northern Transylvania was returned to Hungary by the Second Vienna Award), he was Director of the Transylvanian Scientific Institute in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and lectured at the University there. Returning to the University of Budapest after World War II, besides his work as Head of Department, he was also Dean of the Faculty of Arts (1949-1951), and Vice-Chancellor from 1951 to 1961; in addition, he was Director of the Institute of Linguistics of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He retired in 1973. Central to his research work was the study of Hungarian-Romanian linguistic, and historical and cultural connections. He was active in editing several scientific journals, and was a member of a number of societies in Hungary and abroad. His works include Etymologisch-historisches Wörterbuch der ungarischen Elemente im Rumänischen (1966); Introduction to the Comparative Neo-

Latin Linguistics (Bevezetés az összehasonlító neolatin nyelvtudományba) (1969), and Einführung in die historisch-vergleichende romanische Sprachwissenschaft (Introduction to the historical-comparative Romance linguistics) (1983). He was a recipient of the Samuel Kölber Prize (1934), the Corvin Wreath (1941), and the Miklós Révai Memorial Medal (1979). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Tamás, Menyhért (Melchior) (Hadikfalva, Bukovina, Romania, 24 July 1940 - ) – Writer, poet, literary translator. He is of Szekler (Transylvanian Hungarian) origin from Bukovina. He completed a journalism course at the College of Hungarian Journalists in Budapest (1961-1973). He studied Philosophy and Esthetics in evening sessions at the University of Economics of Budapest (1967-1973). He worked as a laborer and was a freelance reporter at factory newspapers (1961-1968). From 1968 to 1991, he worked for the daily, Voice of the People (Népszava) first as a literary editor, then as Head of the Cultural Section, and finally as Assistant Editor-in-Chief. From 1986, he was a leading member of the Hungarian Writers' Association. From 1996, he was a member of the Executive Committee of the Association of Hungarian Creative Artists and, in 1993 and 1994, he was also a member of the Supervising Committee of the National Hungarian Radio. His works include In Alliance With the Trees (Szövetségben a fákkal), poems (1974); Backwater (Holtág), short story (1984); Calm Before the Storm (Előcsend), short story (1986); The Legend of Saint Anne Lake (A Szent Anna-tó regéje), novel (1989); The Valley of Skulls (Koponyák völgye), poems (1992); The Miracle Sheep (A csodabárány) novel (2000), and The Stone Roller (A kőgörgető), as well as three dramas (2001). He translated poems of German, Austrian and Swiss poets into Hungarian. He was a recipient the Attila József Prize (1984). – B: 0874, 1257, T: 7665.

Tamás, Mihály (Michael) (Beregszász, now Berehove, Ukraine, 1 March 1897 - Melbourne, Australia, 1 August 1967) – Writer, editor. He began his schooling at his town of birth, where he passed his maturity examination in 1914; afterwards he earned a Degree in Architecture at the Budapest Polytechnic in 1921, and a Civil Engineering Degree at the University of Brünn in 1928. From 1934 he was in charge of an English asphalt-paving company at Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia); in 1939, it transferred with him to Budapest. In 1949 he emigrated to London, from where he moved to Australia in 1951, giving lectures at the University of Melbourne and completely giving up his literary work. During the years between the two World Wars, he was one of the leading figures of Hungarian literature in Slovakia. From the 1920s he was the correspondent of the Kassa Journal (Kassai Napló) and Hungarian News (Magyar Újság), and in 1937 editor of the paper Tátra. His works include Novelette Book (Novelláskönyv), short stories (1923); Beautiful Angéla's House (Szép Angéla háza), novelette (1927, 1984); Miracle (Mirákulum), three novelettes (1932); The water runs between two shore (Két part közt fut a víz), novel (1936, 1970); Shrub on the Rock (Sziklán cserje), short story (1937); Maris, novel (1944). Mihály Tamás was one of the most significant writers of the Hungarian literature in Upper Hungary (Felvidék, Upland of Historic Hungary). – B: 1890, T: 7456. → Trianon Peace Treaty; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Tamási, Áron (Aaron) (Farkaslaka, now Lupeni, Transylvania, Romania, 20 September, 1897 - Budapest, 26 May 1966) – Szekler Hungarian novelist, writer, playwright. Upon graduating in 1917 from secondary school in Székelyudvarhely (now Odorheiu Secuiesc, Romania), he was conscripted and sent to the Italian front during World War I. From 1919, his studies continued at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and at the Business Academy. While living in the United States between 1923 and 1926, he gathered the material for the subject of his most successful book, entitled: Abel in America (Ábel Amerikában). Other volumes of the Abel trilogy are: Abel in the Vast Forest (Ábel a rengetegben) and Abel in the Country (Ábel vidéken). After returning home in 1926, he settled in Kolozsvár, and kept in contact with all the Transylvanian-Hungarian literary and intellectual movements. The organization of the Vásárhely Meeting is also connected to his name (1937). In August 1944, he advised a withdrawal from the War. In the same year, he moved to Budapest and lived and worked there. Tamási became a Member of Parliament for Budapest (1945-1947). From 1949 to 1953 he was eased out of the literary life for political reasons. However, in 1954, he became a council-member of the Patriotic Front (Hazaifias Népfront), and was allowed to publish again. His dramas included Ancient Consolation (Ősvígasztalás) (1924); Singing Bird (Énekes madár) (1933); Gleaming Jeremy (Tündöklő Jeromos) (1936); Heroic Spirit (Hősi lélek) (1941); Deceptive Rainbow (Csalóka szivárvány) (1942); The Wavering Groom (Hullámzó vőlegény) (1946); Devil Slayer Josiah (Ördögölő Józsiás) (1956); Mountain Brook (Hegyi patak) (1959), and the Happy Aspen Leaf (Boldog nyárfalevél) (1961). His descriptions of the world of the Szekler villages, his literary style and his view of the world, his vocabulary and turn of mind are all rooted there. He raised the Hungarian Szekler dialect to new literary heights, and expressed his thoughts in the highest form. Several of his works, especially the short stories, also appeared in foreign publications. He was a recipient the Baumgarten Prize (1929, 1930, 1933, 1943), the Corvin Wreath (1940) and the Kossuth Prize (1954). Schools and a theater bear his name. – B: 1031, 1883, 1136, 1257, T: 7617, 7103.

Tamási, Miklós (Nicholas) (Hungary, 24 December 1936 - Vancouver, 1994) – Poet, playwright and journalist. After receiving his formal education in Hungary, he moved to Canada in 1956, and settled in Vancouver. He was an active member of the Hungarian community until his death (at 58). He was the founding editor of the monthly periodical Tárogató, and contributed articles, plays and poems to various newspapers and journals. His poems were published in three collections, including Eskimo Love (Eszkimó szerelem) (1977) and Totem Poles (Totemfák) (1994). – B: 0892, T: 4342.

Tamássy, Zdenkó (Vezensy, 6 September 1921 - Budapest, 9 June 1987) - Composer. He trained to be a performing artist. He studied piano between 1940 and 1946 at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, as a student of Béla Böszörményi-

Nagy. He studied composition with Rezső (Rudolph) Kókai. Upon earning his Degree, he joined the Hungarian Radio. In 1953 and 1954, he was in charge of music broadcasting. Later he was a popular music program editor, then President of the Song and Dance Music Council. Tamássy was a talented creator of harmonious, lyrical tunes, creating expressive moods in his compositions for radio operettas, and musicals, such as Daisy (Százszorszép) (1956), Dream Castle (Álomkastély) (1962), etc. From 1961 on, he composed the soundtrack for the series of popular science films by Ágoston (Augustine) Kollányi. He made his debut in the feature film genre with the soundtrack for Hannibal, the Teacher (Hannibál tanár úr) by Zoltán Fábri. In the 1980s, István (Stephen) Szabó commissioned him to write music for the feature films Colonel Redl (Redl ezredes) and the Oscar winning Mephisto. He worked for Hungarian Television from 1958, which aired his comic opera Singing Lesson (Énekóra), and the pop-opera Italian Restaurant (Olasz vendéglő). He also composed several popular songs. He was a recipient of the Ferenc Erkel Prize (1966). – B: 0883, T: 7667.→Kollányi, Ágoston; Fábri, Zoltán; Szabó, István; Böszörményi-Nagy, Béla.

Tamkó Sirató, Károly (Charles) (Újvidék, now Novi-Sad, Voivodina, Serbia. 26 January 1905 - Budapest, 1 January 1980) – Poet and writer. His first collection of poems, In the Spring of Life (Az élet tavaszán), influenced by Endre (Andrew) Ady, was published in 1921. Between 1922 and 1927, he studied Law in Budapest. The Paper Man (A papírember), his second collection of poems published in 1928, failed to win acclaim from critics. In 1930, he traveled to Paris, where he suffered from existential and health problems. As a member of the Cercle François Villon, he met several avant-garde artists. With support from Wassily Wassilyevich Kandinsky and Jean (a.k.a Hans) Arp, he published the Dimensionist Manifesto (Dimenzionista Manifesztum). He fell ill and returned home to recuperate. In 1942 he published The Cry (Kiáltás), which reflected a sense of impending mortality. With the help of yoga, he managed to recover from his seemingly terminal illness. He had a Yoga Studio in Budapest. Between 1948 and 1960, he concentrated exclusively on developing a system for strengthening the respiratory system and summarized his medical experiences in the publication Do not be Ill Anymore (Ne légy többé beteg). He returned to poetry and theoretical activities in the New-Wave of the Avant Garde; but it was his poetry for children that found success primarily. His other works include Lepiansime (1936); The Three Space-Islands (A három úrsziget) (1969); At the Dawn of the Age of Aquarius (A vízöntő-kor hajnalán) (1969); Paul Tengereczki (Tengereczki Pál) (1970); Pinty and Ponty (Pinty és Ponty) (1972), and Future Divers (Jövöbúvárok) (1980). He was a recipient of the Attila József Prize (1976). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7667.

Tanárky, Gedeon (Gideon) (Nagykőrös, 26 October 1815 - Budapest, 23 November 1887) – Cultural politician. He studied Art and Law, and became Secretary at the Court Chancellery to János (John) Lónyay. He was present at the Diet of Pozsony in 1840, representing absent magnates. From 1842, he was Notary of Nagykőrös, and represented Nagykőrös at the first representative National Assembly of 1848-1849. He followed the Government to Debrecen. As a result of his political activity during the War of Independence of 1848-1849 against the Habsburg rule, he had to face court-martial in 1850; but received a pardon in 1851. He withdrew from public life and was only active in the life of the Reformed Church, and studied History and Finance. He played a part in reviving the Reformed College of Nagykőrös. He belonged to the circle of János (John) Arany, Károly (Charles) Szász, and Sándor (Alexander) Szilágyi. In the National Assembly of 1861, he voted for the Deák Party. In the period of József Eötvös and Ágoston Trefort, he was Under-Secretary of Education and Religion. He resigned from his position shortly before his death. His works include Position of Hungary in the European State System (Magyarország helyzete az európai államrendszerben) (1866), and From the Financial History of Austria... (Ausztria pénzügyi történetéből...) (1867). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Arany, János; Szász, Károly; Eötvös, Baron József; Trefort, Ágoston.

Táncsics, Mihály (Michael) (originally Stancsics, Mihajlo) (Ácsteszer, 21 April 1799 - Budapest, 28 June 1884) – Writer and politician. He was descended from a serf family, from which he advanced as a weaver in Szombathely. After finishing the preparatory school in Buda, he taught as an itinerant teacher at the High Schools of Kecskemét, at Nyitra (now Nitra, Slovakia) and in Pest. He studied Law, but did not complete it; instead, he became interested in literature and Hungarian linguistics. He worked as a tutor for noble families, e.g. from 1835 for Count Sándor (Alexander) Teleki at Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). His linguistic works received some criticism, but his textbooks proved popular. More than once, he clashed with the censorial bureau. Later, his attention was turned to politics; he became acquainted with progressive writers and poets, such as Péter Vajda and János (John) Garay, also with the literature of the Reform Age and the Reform Diets. He fought for the acceptance of the program of the Reform opposition. Though he had some utopian, leftist views, he only put the civic changes and the abolishment of serfdom on his agenda. Táncsics fought equally against the construction of railway lines, the founding of an Academy, and against Széchenyi's plan for a two-penny taxation. After returning from his European trip in 1846, he went into hiding and, in his pamphlets, he demanded determined action from the Estates. In March 1847, he was arrested and criminal proceedings were brought against him for libel against the press laws. As a martyr of the freedom of the press, the people of Pest freed him from the garrison prison of Buda on 15 March 1848. In the 1848 Diet, he represented the district of Siklós, and edited the weekly Workers' Paper (Munkások Lapja). After the fall of the 1848-1849 Revolution and Freedom Fight against Habsburg oppression, he was executed in effigie and had to go into hiding. In 1860, he was sentenced to 15 years of imprisonment for high treason; he was freed, half blind, at the 1867 Compromise with Austria. In the Diet of 1869-1872, he became a Member of Parliament. In 1869, he joined the General Workers' Association, became its president, and edited its paper, the Golden Trumpet (Arany Trombita). In 1870, he resigned from the presidency because of the internationalist policy of the workers' movement. After the termination of his parliamentary mandate, he withdrew from public life. He was occupied with linguistic problems and plans for the Hungarization of the nationalities in the Carpathian Basin. He opposed the dualism with Habsburg Austria until his death. His works were published in 12 volumes between 1873 and 1885. His memory is cherished in school-buildings, houses of culture, streets, plazas, and even a passenger ship was named after him. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Vajda, János.

Tánczos, Vilmos (William) (Csíkszentkirály, now Mihăileni, Romania, 21 October 1959 - ) – Ethnographer. He studied Hungarian and Russian Literature at the Faculty of Art of the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), and graduated in 1983. He was a schoolteacher first in Gyergyóditró, (now Ditrău, Romania) (1983-1984), then in Tusnádfürdő (now Tuşnad, Romania) (1984-1990). In 1990 he was Director of the Teachers' School-house of County Harghita (now in Romania). In 1991 and 1992 he was Editor of the periodical European Time (Európai Idő). From 1992 he was a lecturer in Hungarian Language and Culture at the University of Kolozsvár and, from 1997, he became senior lecturer. He obtained a Ph.D. from the same University in 1999. He was Vice-Rector of the Sapientia University in Kolozsvár. His specialties are: peasant religiosity and Csángó-Hungarian culture in Moldova, Romania. His works include History of the Csíksomlyó Pilgrimage Shrine (A csíksomlyói kegyhely története), co-author (1990); In Pearls You Took Root. Archaic Prayers from Ghymes and Moldova (Gyöngyökkel Gyökereztél. Gyimesi és moldvai archaikus imádságok), co-author (1995), and the Fluttering Angel. Archaic Prayers from Moldova and their Area of Usage (Csapdosó angyal. Moldvai archaikus imádságok és életterük), co-author (1999). – B: 1036, T: 7456.→Csángó.

Tandori, Dezső (Desider) (Budapest, 8 December 1938 - ) – Poet, writer, essayist, translator of literary works, and designer. After completing his high school studies in Budapest in 1957, he received a teacher's Certificate in Hungarian and German Literature from the University of Budapest. From 1964 he worked as a teacher, and from 1969, as a freelance writer. His writings were published from 1968. In his works, the facts of life appeared in such concreteness, not experienced before. A selection of his writings: Cleansing a Found Object (Egy talált tárgy megtisztítása), postmodern poems (1973, 1995); Why Should You Live Forever? (Miért élnél örökké?), novel (1977); Complete and Semi-Complete Catastrophes (Kész és félkész katasztrófák), essays (1977); Mud, Blood and Play (Sár és vér és játék), novel (1983); The Long Casket (Hosszú Koporsó), novel (1994); Name Written On Water (A vízre írt név), drawings (1996); Back from the Grave (Vissza a sírból), novel (1999); Selected Poems (Válogatott versek) (2001); In the Ocean (Az Océánban) poems (2002); Zombi, novel (2007), and the Non-recuperated Death (Ki nem feküdt halál), novel (2009). In English: Birds and Other Relations (Princeton, USA, 1986), and selected essays in German: Langer Sorg in aller Kürze (Zürich, Switzerland 1997). Tandori wrote fables, dramas, radio plays, stories and essays under the pen name Red Rod, and even crime stories under the name Nat Roid. He translated as many as 170 works into Hungarian from English, German, Russian and Scandinavian authors, some of them with his wife Ágnes Tandori. Among his awards are the International PEN Club Prize (1966), the Graves Prize (1972), the Attila József Prize (1978), the Sándor Weöres Prize (1990), the Laurel Wreath of the Republic of Hungary (1996), the Kossuth Prize (1998), the Prima Primissima Prize (2007), and the Middle Cross with Star of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2009). – B: 0874, 0878, 0877, 1031, 1257, T: 7103.

Tangl, Ferenc (Francis) (Pest, 26 January 1866 - Budapest, 19 December 1917) – Physician and physiologist, brother of Károly (Charles) Tangl. He received his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1888. He went on a study trip on a Schordann scholarship to the University of Tübingen, to the institute of Robert Koch at the University of Berlin, and finally to the College of Veterinary Science in Leipzig. In 1891 he was a demonstrator at the Institute of Pathological Anatomy; from 1892 a Lecturer in Biology at the University of Budapest and, from 1903, an Associate Professor at the College of Veterinary Science. From 1906 to 1914 he was Professor of General Pathology. From 1914 to 1917 he was Professor of Biology at the University of Budapest. He was the founder and first Director of the Experimental Station of Animal Biology and Foraging Science (Állatélettani és Takarmányozástani Kísérleti Állomás). He dealt mainly with general physiology, insect metamorphosis and energetics, as well as metabolism. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1902, ordinary 1910). His works include Guide in Bacteriology (Útmutató a bakteriológiában) (1894) and On the Physical Chemistry of the White Blood Cells and Pus (A fehérvérsejtek és a genny fizikális chemiájáról) (1917). A memorial plaque was installed on the building at No. 2 István Street, Budapest in 1996. – B: 1730, 1897, T: 7456. → Tangl, Károly.

Tangl, Harald (Budapest, 2 September 1900 - Budapest, 31 December 1971) – Animal physiologist and physician. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1924. In the years from 1925 to 1935, he was a demonstrator in the Biological Institute there; from 1935 to 1960, he was an assistant lecturer at the Institute of Zoological and Foraging Science (Állatélettani és Takarmányozási Intézet), and from 1946 its Director. From 1960 he was Director of the Research Institute of Animal Husbandry (Állattenyésztési Kutató Intézet). He was Editor of the journal Researcher (Búvár), and ordinary or honorary member of a number of scientific societies. Initially, he investigated the functioning of the endocrine glands; later, he studied the biological problems associated with foraging; he also dealt with the effect of vitamins and the problems of hormones. With his research team he developed an appliance that prepares green hay by means of a cold draft that preserves its vitamin and mineral content. His works include The Vitamins (1935); Nutrition (Táplálkozás) (1941, new edition 1962), and Vitamins and the Animal (Vitaminok és az állat) (1968). He received the Kossuth Prize in 1957. – B: 1730, 0883, T: 7456.

Tangl, Károly (Charles) (Pest, 14 October 1869 - Budapest, 10 January 1940) – Physicist. Brother of Ferenc (Francis) Tangl. From 1887 to 1891 he did his undergraduate studies at the University of Budapest and obtained his Ph.D. in 1895. As a teaching assistant for the renowned physicist, Loránd Eötvös, he conducted research in potential theory, magnetism, the dielectric constant of liquids and gases and capillarity. From 1903, he was a Professor at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and in 1915 he became its Rector. From 1917 to 1921 he was Professor of Experimental Physics at the Budapest Polytechnic and then, from 1921, at the University of Budapest, taking over the chair vacated by Loránd Eötvös. This is where the study of cosmic radiation began in Hungary. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1908, ordinary 1920 and Director 1935). From 1935 he was Chairman of the Mathematics and Natural Science Department of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and an assistant chairman of the Loránd Eötvös Mathematics and Physics Society. His major works include Introduction to Physics (Bevezetés a fizikába) (Bp.

1921) and Experimental Physics (Kísérleti fizika) (Bp., 1924). – B: 0883, T: 7665.→Tangl, Ferenc; Loránd, Baron Eötvös.

Tankó, Béla (1) (Ilyefalvi) (Borberek, 1 October 1876 - Debrecen, 26 January 1946) – Philosophical writer. He studied Reformed Theology in Nagyenyed (now Aiud, Romania), and at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) in 1898, and spent a year at the University of Edinburgh. From 1900 he was a teacher of religion at the High School of Szászváros (now Oraştie, Romania). In 1909 he obtained a Ph.D. from the University of Kolozsvár. In 1914 he became an associate professor at the Department of Philosophy, University of Debrecen, and full professor there in 1916. In 1936 and 1937, he was the University's Vice-Chancellor. In philosophy he was the follower of Károly (Charles) Böhm, who was featured in several of his papers. He regarded Böhm's value judgment as an important factor from the point of view of renewal of Christian thinking. In his works he criticized and, from a Christian point of view, evaluated some of the major tendencies in Philosophy. Tankó's works include Moral Evaluation of Nietzsche and the Christian Moral Principles (Nietzsche erkölcsi értékelése és a keresztyénség erkölcsi elvei) (1909); The Ethical Crisis of the 19th Century (A 19. század etikai válsága) (1912); Böhm and Kant (Böhm és Kant) (1913); The Pedagogical Importance of Böhm's Philosophy (Böhm filozófiájának pedagógiai jelentősége) (1913); The Religious Philosophy of Kant (Kant vallásfilozófiája) (1916); Kant's Teaching on Religion (Kant vallástana) (1925); The Question of World View... (A világnézet kérdése...) (1932); Existentialist Thinking (Existenciális gondolkodás) (1934); The Problem of Freedom (A szabadság problematikája) (1936); Question of World View and the Reformed Principles (A világnézet kérdése és a református elvek) (1939); Science and Religion (Tudomány és vallás) (1940), and Kant's Metaphysical Reform (Kant metafizikai reformja) (1943). He was awarded the Gorove Prize of the Academy of Sciences in 1912. – B: 0883, 1908, T: 7456.→Böhm, Károly.

Tankó, Béla (2) (Szászváros, now Orastie, Romania, 5 November 1905 - Debrecen, 16 October 1974) – Biochemist. His higher studies were completed at the Arts Faculty of the University of Debrecen, where he obtained a Bachelor of Arts Degree and a Dip.Ed. Earlier he also studied Experimental Physics and Mathematics, with chemistry as a major, at the Institute of Chemistry at the Faculty of Medicine, University of Debrecen, where he became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) in biochemistry in 1937. He was active as a lecturer and researcher in the biological application of organic chemistry. In February 1947 he became Professor of the reorganized Department of Organic Chemistry at the same University. In 1950, he was appointed Professor of Biochemistry at the Faculty of Medicine and Director of the Institute of Biochemistry in Debrecen. He received a Masters Degree in Chemistry in 1952. He carried out research at the University of Berlin (1931-1932) and the University of London (1933). As a result of the years spent at these Universities, he described numerous products of the carbohydrate metabolism. The discovery of the fructose-1-phosphate and the Tankó-Robinson Ester is linked to his name. Later he continued his research on metabolism and, in the 1950s he joined in the research on the nucleic acids, which formed as a base for the research on tumors in Hungary. In the handbook Study Methods of Experimental Medicine, he wrote the chapter on the study of nucleic acids. He was Founder and President of the Hungarian Biochemical Society. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Tar, István (Stephen) (Újpest, 24 August 1910 - Budapest, 3 October 1971) – Sculptor. Early in his career he studied Law at the University of Budapest, but he transferred to the Academy of Applied Art in 1932, to attend Jenő (Eugene) Bory's class. He exhibited his first works in 1938, which were characterized by his master's classicistic style e.g. My Father (Apám) (1936). In 1941 he won a scholarship to Rome, and in 1942, he organized an exhibition at the Collegium Hungaricum of Rome, while, back in Hungary, he held a one-man-show at the National Salon. During World War II, he was a prisoner of war. His statue entitled Fisherman (Halász) was prepared in 1947. In 1949, he sculpted a monumental relief work on the frontage of the head office of the Hungarian Construction Workers' National Association (Magyar Építőmunkások Országos Szövetsége – MÉMOSZ). In the 1950s, Tar prepared the statuette Ball-player and Comber (Labdázó és fészülőködő). Besides small-size sculptures, he created more and more monumental works for public places. His portrait of Zrínyi stands in front of the Comedy Theater (Vígyszínház) in Budapest. He completed a large relief work Defenders of Eger Castle (Eger vár védői), set up next to the main gate of the castle in 1953. Berzsenyi's bust stands outside the high school of Celldömölk. At Salgótarján, his 1919 Memorial (1958) was set up; and in the same place, his group-composition Small-talkers (Tereferélők) (1963). The statue of the poet Attila József stands in Makó. The Singers (Éneklők) (1965) stands in Keszthely. The female figure of the River Tisza (1964) is on the riverbank in Szeged. The statue of Ignác Semmelweis (1971) stands in Miskolc. He regularly took part in exhibitions and, from 1967, as a member of the Nine's Group. For a while, he was Professor and Head of the Goldsmith Section of the Academy of Applied Art, Budapest. He was killed in a car accident. His memorial exhibition was held at the National Gallery, Budapest in 1972. He was a recipient of the Munkácsy Prize (1950, 1958), the title of Merited Artist, and the Council of Trade Unions Prize. – B: 0883, 1654, T: 7456.→Zrínyi, Miklós (2); Berzsenyi, Dániel; József, Attila; Semmelweis, Ignác Fülöp.

Tar, Lőrinc (Lawrence) (Tar, northwest of the Mátra Mountain, ca 1371 - after 1426) – Courtier of King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxembourg) (1387-1437), an adventure-loving knight, who, with drawn sword, defended the King against the uprising nobles and became wounded in action in 1401. From 1405, he was Bailiff of Counties Hont and Nógrád, and in 1405-1406 was King Zsigmond's chief cellarer. From 1407, he was Cupbearer to the King and, from 1409, Chief Warden of the Queen. In 1415 he took part in the Council of Constance. As a pilgrim, he visited what was called the purgatory of Saint Patrick during 1409 and 1411 – a sulphurous cave that was considered to be the limbo of Hell. The experiences he gained there form a separate chapter of medieval visionary literature. The story (first traveling from mouth to mouth) of Tar's descent to Hell was put into words by Jacobus Yongs, the town clerk of Dublin, on the basis of Tar's personal communication and correspondence. The 1464-copy of the Codex is held by the British Museum. The Hungarian memory of this pilgrim's trip was prepared around 1520 in form of a verse, consisting of 13 Latin hexameters: the Peregrinatio Laurentii Tar, which lists the main stations, possibly the short extract of a longer poem.

The portion of Tar's vision, referring to King Zsigmond, is contained in The Chronicle of Emperor and King Sigismund (Zsigmond császár és királynak krónikája), written by Sebestyén Tinódi Lantos. – B: 1257, T: 7456.→ Zsigmond, King; Tinódy Lantos, Sebestyén.

Tar, Sándor (Alexander) (Hajdúsámson, 5 April 1941 - Debrecen, 30 January 2005) – Writer, sociologist. He was a descendant of a poor peasant family. From his childhood he read a great deal, composed poems, and wrote stories. He completed his secondary education at the Machine Industry College of Debrecen (Gépipari és Informatikai Szakközépiskola), majoring as a technician of weapons, ammunition, and explosives. Until 1992, he worked at the Medical Instrument Manufactures (Orvosi Műszergyár), Debrecen, after his dismissal he was unemployed. From 1991 to 1999, he was a member of the Editorial Committee of the paper Holmi (Things). He authored dozens of short stories and novelettes, and he wrote novels and sociological works as well. His theme was the fate of people forced to the periphery, who were crushed by hopelessness and privation, the losers in the change of the political system: the unemployed, the defenseless, and the sick. His works also appeared in Finnish, French and German translations. In 1999, Tar made it public for the first time that, from 1978 on, he was an informer for the III/III branch of the Secret Police. About his agent past he wrote a biographically inspired novel: The Traitor (Az áruló) (2003). His other works include Why does the Spider do Well? (Mért jó a póknak?), short stories (1989); Gray Pigeon (Szürke galamb), novel (1996); On the Edge of the Map (A térkép szélén), short stories (2003), and It Is Your Turn (Te következel) short stories (2008). His oeuvre is a realistic description of life in Hungary during the Communist Kádár regime (1956-1988). Tar's work was recognized by a number of prizes: the Attila József Prize (1997), the Sándor Márai Prize (1998), the Déry Award (1985), the Soros scholarship (1986, 1994), the Artisjus Literary Prize (1990), and the Krúdy Prize (1995). – B: 0874, 0878, 1031, T: 7456.→State Security Police; Kádár Era.

Tarcsay, Vilmos (William) (Tartsay) (Érsekújvár, now Nové Zámky, Slovakia, 22 July 1901 - Budapest, 8 December 1944) – Army officer. He was a descendant of a military family; volunteered in the No. 1 Hussar regiment; then he completed the military training at the Ludovika Military Academy of Budapest. After a long troop service, he completed his military training at the Academy and he also obtained a Ph.D. from the Economics Department of the University of Budapest. Thereafter, he served as a Captain on the General Staff at various corps: at Debrecen and at the Örkény camp. Late in 1940 (after Northern Transylvania was returned to Hungary by the Second Vienna Award), he became the Commander of the Independent Hussar Regiment. Seeing that Hungary was increasingly coming under National Socialist influence, he retired from service and found employment in commercial life. In the fall of 1944, after the right-wing Arrow Cross political takeover, aided by Colonel Jenő (Eugen) Nagy, he joined the work of the Military General Staff in the National Uprising Liberating Committee. On 22 November 1944, he was arrested at his home, together with a group of officers discussing details of the uprising against National Socialism. He was tried by court-martial, sentenced to death and executed. His memory is cherished by streets named after him in several settlements in Hungary. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy; Vienna Award II.

Tárczy-Hornoch, Antal (Anthony) (Oroszvég, now Roszvigova, Ukraine, 13 October 1900 - Sopron, 16 January 1986) – Geophysicist, geodetic surveyor. He obtained a Mining Engineering Degree from the Mining Academy of Leuven in 1923, after which he earned a diploma in Mine Surveying in 1924. He also obtained a Ph.D. in Engineering in the same year. From 1926 to 1959 he was Professor and Head of the Department of Geodesy and Mine Surveying at the Mining Engineering and Forestry Academy (Bánya-és Erdőmérnöki Főiskola Geodéziai és Bányaméréstani Tanszéke), Sopron. It was on his initiative that independent training began in Sopron for land surveying engineers in 1949, and geophysical engineers in 1951. He established a geodesic and geophysical research laboratory, which later developed into the Academy of Sciences' Geodesic and Geophysical Research Institute of Sopron (A Magyar Tudományos Akadémia Soproni Geodéziai és Geofizikai Kutató Intézete), whose director he was until 1972. He was a corresponding member of a number of Academies abroad, and was ordinary member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. Honorary Doctorates were conferred on him by the Universities of Sopron, Miskolc, Freiberg, Vienna, Graz and Leuven. His scientific work covered geodesy, geophysics, mine surveying and the history of technology. Tárczy-Hornoch published six books and more than 300 papers and articles in over 50 journals of 15 countries. His works include Das Verwerfenproblem im Lichte des Markscheiders (1927); Geophysical Measurements (Geofizikai mérések) (1950), and Calculation of the Gauss-Krüger Coordinates (A Gauss-Krüger koordináták számítása) (1951). He was a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1949), and the State Prize (1966). He received memorial medals and was elected Honorary Freeman of the town of Sopron. His bust is in Sopron, and a street bears his name in Sopron. – B: 0883, 1105, T: 7456.

Tarczy, Lajos (Louis) (Hetény, 6 December 1807 - Vienna, 20 March 1881) – Philosopher and natural scientist. He carried out his theological and philosophical studies at the Reformed College of Pápa and, from 1831 to 1833, completed his studies in Physics and Mathematics at the Universities of Vienna and Berlin. From 1833 he was Professor of Philosophy, Physics and Mathematics at the Reformed College of Pápa. He played an important role in the re-organization and modernization of the College, namely in the reform of its teaching, and established a Printing Office at the College (1838). Early in his career, as the first representative of Hegelianism in Hungary, he taught a type of philosophy based on Hegel, because of which he received considerable criticism, and had to resign from lecturing on philosophy. He was one of the most important scholars of the period in natural science and popular educational literature. His work in the field of esthetics was also noteworthy. During his student years at Pápa, he helped the great poet Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi considerably. His works include Natural Science, vols. i,ii (Természettan I-II) (1838), earning him the grand prix of the Academy of Sciences in 1843; Popular Natural Science (Népszerű természettan) (1843), and The Influence of Drama and the Poverty of Hungarian Literature in Drama (A dráma hatása és literatúránk drámaszegénysége) (1843). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1838, ordinary 1840). A high school and a Primary School in Pápa bear his name. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Petőfi, Sándor.

Tardos, Gábor (Gabriel) (Budapest, 11 July 1964 - ) – Mathematician. He completed his undergraduate degree course in mathematics in 1987, and his Ph.D. in mathematics in 1988, under the supervision of Professor László (Ladislás) Babai and Professor Péter Pálffy, at the University of Budapest. In the period from 1990 to 2005, he was a Research Fellow at the prestigious Alfréd Rényi Institute of Mathematics at the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. Between 1992 and 2003, he was professor in the Department of Computer Science of the University of Budapest. In the meantime he was a visiting professor at the Computer Science Department of Rutgers State University in New Jersey, USA (1990-1992), and the University of Toronto (1995-1996); was also a member of the Institute for Advanced Studies. In 2005 he joined Simon Fraser University, British Columbia, Canada, as a professor at the School of Computing Science and as a Canada Tier 1 Research Chair in Computational Complexity and Geometric Arrangements. Tardos has written more than 1200 scientific papers with topics in combinatorics, discrete and computational geometry and complexity theory, and has greatly contributed to each of these fields. With his student, Adam Marcus, he proved a combinatorial conjecture of Füredi-Hajnal, which was known to imply the Stanley-Wilf conjecture. In his scientific career, he has been the recipient of numerous grants, awards, and honors, including the Széchenyi Professorial Scholarship (Széchenyi Professzori Ösztöndíj), the Corvin Chain, the Prize of the European Congress of Mathematics, and the Erdős Prize of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. – 1031, 1817, T: 7103.→Rényi, Alfréd.

Tardos, Tibor (Berettyóújfalu, 21 January 1918 - Paris, 7 January 2004) – Writer. In his youth he obtained a B.Sc. Degree in Chemistry from the University of Budapest, followed by further studies in Paris. During the German occupation in World War II, he participated in the French Resistance. After the war, he returned to Hungary and made his name well known with his writings. With patriotic enthusiasm, he took part in the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight. During the subsequent period of reprisals under Soviet military occupation, he was imprisoned for eighteen months. In 1963, he went back to France; in 1965, he asked for political asylum from the French government and, until 1989, he only published his writings in French. The French translations of the works of István (Stephen) Örkény, Magda Szabó, Katalin Ladik are linked to his name. Since the change of government in Hungary, ending the Communist era and the Soviet military occupation in 1989, his books appeared again in Hungary. His works include It was Narrated by Mihály Huda (Elmondta Huda Mihály) (1951); Reise im Regenbogen (1965); Lévrier afghan (1982), and Briefly (Röviden) (2002). His film scripts include Sign of Life (Életjel) (1954) and Cricket (Tücsök). The prizes he received include the Attila József Prize (1953, 1955), and Knight of the French Legion of Honor (1997). – B: 1031, 1257, T: 7456.→Örkény, István; Szabó, Magda; Ladik Katalin.

Tardy, Lajos (Louis) (Tardy Kallós, Lajos) (Budapest, 28 July 1914 - Budapest, 10 January 1990) – Cultural historian, writer and translator of literary works. He obtained a Doctorate in Law from the University of Budapest. In World War II he served in the army, was taken prisoner of war, and transported to Georgia. After his return, he worked as a lawyer in the Ministry of Justice. In 1950 he started the National Translator and Translation-Verification Bureau (Országos Fordító és Fordítás Hitelesítő Iroda – OFFI), of which he was Director until the spring of 1955, when he was dismissed from his position; later, on trumped-up charges he was sentenced to several years' imprisonment. After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, in December of that year, he was cleared of the charges and rehabilitated. He wrote a history of the fabricated lawsuit in the journal Criticism (Kritika) (1984. 8.). However, he continued to be neglected; he worked in supermarkets and as a bookshop assistant. In 1960 he was made a scientific correspondent for the National Széchényi Library and, from 1969 until his retirement he was Section-Head in the National Museum in Budapest. He obtained a Ph.D. in history in 1973. For several decades, he studied the past of Hungarians and unveiled numerous aspects of Hungarian cultural history, which were connected with the culture of the Georgians of the Caucasus area. He wrote novels and translated literary masterpieces from English, Italian and Russian. His studies and papers were published in the Philological Gazette (Filológiai Közlöny); Centuries (Századok); Literary Historical Proceedings (Irodalomtörténeti Közlemények); Antique Studies (Antik Tanulmányok), and in dailies. His works include Jakub bey (Jakub bej) novel (1963); Old Hungarian Envoy Trips In the East (Régi magyar követjárások Keleten), study (1971); Our Old Reputation in the World (Régi hírünk a világban) historical essay (1979); Old Extant Records About Hungary (Régi feljegyzések Magyarországról) a study with Kálmán Benda's postscript (1982), and Caucasian Hungarian Mirror (Kaukázusi magyar tükör), study (1988). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Tarhos (Tarkas) – According to Byzantine Emperor Constantine VII, Porphyrogenetos (913–920), he was the firstborn son of Árpád; he died during the lifetime of his father. Consequently, Reigning Prince Árpád's successor became his youngest son, Zsolt. There is a Tarhos village in County Békés. – B: 1078, 0942, T: 7658.

Tari, István (Stephen) (Zenta, now Senta, Serbia, 16 May 1957 - ) – Poet, writer and journalist. His higher studies were at the University of Újvidék (now Novi Sad, Serbia), where he read Hungarian Literature; now he lives in Óbecse (now Becse, Serbia). He has been an associate for the Magazine, Youth in Pictures (Képes Ifjúság) since 1976. In his works he deals with the questions of life, and the fate of individuals and the community. His works include Promenade Concert at the Isle of Apes (Térzene a majomszigeten) poems (1979); In Backlight (Ellenfényben) prosaic writings (1982); The Squandered Future (Az elmulatott jövő) poems (1990); Sword-dance (Fegyvertánc) poems (1994); Sunwind (Napszél) poems (1998); I Befriend Wasps (Darazsakkal barátkozom) (2000); Do You Want To Buy Yugoslavia? (Akarsz Jugoszláviát venni?) (2002), and They Are Covering up the Sky (Betakarják az eget) poems, picture-poems, graphics (2009). He received the Csokonai Prize (1997), and the Balassa Memorial Sword (2009). – B: 1257, T: 7103.

Tarics, Sándor (Alexander) (Budapest, 23 September 1913 - ) – Engineer, geodesist, architect and waterpolo player. He obtained his engineering qualifications from the Budapest Polytechnic, and then worked in this profession at various places. He was active in sports, particularly in water polo. From 1929, he played water polo, first, as a member of the National Center for High School Sport Clubs (Középiskolai Sportkörök Országos Központja – KISOK) and then, from 1932 to 1945, as a member of the Hungarian Athletic Club (Magyar Atlétikai Club – MAC). Between 1933 and 1940 he was in the national select team six times. He was a member of the winning representative team of Hungary at the College Championships and the World Championships. He was a member of the 1936 Olympic team at the Summer Olympics in Berlin, winning 4 gold medals.

He left for the West in 1949, and settled in the United States. He was a professor at Fort Wayne University (1949-1951), and at the California Institute of Technology from 1951. He was President of the Reid and Tarics Association, San Francisco. He designed the first building with spring-loaded foundation (for earthquake damage prevention) in the USA, which passed the test excellently during a major earthquake. Californian building code and by-laws enforce application of his methods. He was a consulting engineer to the earthquake ad hoc committee of the United Nations, and also a professor at the University of the City of Fort Wayne. More than 500 of his designs were used in the construction of medical research facilities, churches, dwellings, factories and subways to assure safety in earthquakes. He was a member of the Society of American Engineers, and the Earthquake Committee of the UNO. On his 97th birthday, Pál (Paul) Smitt, NBO President greeted him in Budapest (2009). – B: 1031, T: 7675.→Schmitt, Pál.

Tarih-i Üngürüşz (History of the Hungarians) (Mahmud Tarcüman, Madzsar Tárihi) – Originally, it was an Ottoman-Turkish historical work, written in 1543 by Mahmud Tarcüman (1510-1575), a Turk of Bavarian-German descent, former diplomat and interpreter at the Sultan’s Court. The book is based on an early Hungarian chronicle written in Latin. He rescued it from the burning of the 500-year old Royal Library of Székesfehérvár. The Codex is both an important early Hungarian historical source and a valuable 16th century, so-called “Middle-Ottoman” language relic.

The Codex was discovered and a copy brought back from Istanbul, Turkey by the famous orientalist Ármín Vámbéry (1832-1913) in 1860, who donated it to the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, where the 209-leaf manuscript, written in the so-called szülüş script, was filed under the number “Török T.57”. In 1861, Joseph Budenz – in a 55-page treatise – declared the work to be a primitive historical fiction. In the next 100 years nobody undertook the evaluation of the chronicle, until József (Joseph) Blaskovics, professor of Turkic Studies at the Carol University in Prague, translated it between 1971 and 1979, and it was published in Hungarian in 1982. The original manuscript is in the Topkapi Museum in Istanbul.

According to several researchers, the Tarih-i Üngürüşz is based on an original ancient Hungarian chronicle or Gesta that was, in all probability, kept in the private royal archives, its contents unknown even to medieval chroniclers. The work describes events not mentioned in other Gestas. The Tarih-i gives two different versions of the “Miraculous Stag” legend, and also suggests that the people of Hunor occupied Pannonia (Hungary), prior to Attila’s Huns (434-453), during a Persian-Scythian war against Constantinople. After the Avars, relatives of the Huns (550- 800) came a new wave of the Üngürüşz (Magyar or Hungarian) people into Pannonia. These were the people of Álmos and Árpád (AD 896), who found that the local population spoke their language: “having returned home they found people speaking the same language”. The author also made it known that the Magyars had lived in Pannonia for more than a thousand years, and, from time to time, they migrated out and returned to their ancient land. In the discussion of medieval times the author touches not only on Árpád, his son and grandson, but enumerates all the kings after the Tartar invasion of 1241. From then on, he abbreviates events, but gives a detailed account of the last kings of the Árpád dynasty. He relates that the Sultan was infuriated by the conduct of Hungarian King Lajos II (Louis) (1616-1626), when the King twice rejected the Turkish offer of peace, first in 1520, then in 1524. He concludes the chronicle with the Battle of Mohács in 1526. – B: 0619, 1031, 1104, 4031, T: 7617.→Vámbéry, Ármin; Budenz, József; Blaskovics, József.

Tariska, István (Stephen) (Kölcse, 28 June 1915 - Budapest, 5 February 1989) – Physician, psychiatrist, neurologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Debrecen in 1939, following of which he was an associate in the neurological clinic. During World War II, he served as a medical officer, and was taken prisoner on the Soviet front. When he returned in 1945, he became Editor of the People's Paper (Néplap) of Debrecen; from 1946 was Head of the Department of Sanitary Regulations in the Ministry of Public Welfare (Népjóléti Minisztérium Egészségvédelmi Főosztály). In 1948 he was on a World Health Organization (WHO) scholarship and studied mental hygiene methods in Western Europe. From 1950 he was Deputy Director of the Mental Hospital of Angyalföld (Angyalföldi Elmegyógyintézet) (a suburb of Budapest). He was sentenced to imprisonment in a mock trial in 1951-1954. From 1954, he was Head Physician in the National Neurological and Mental Hospital (Országos Ideg- és Elmegyógyintézet), from 1969 its Director and professor, and Head of the Neurological School of the National Medical Continuous Education Institute (Országos Orvostovábbképző Intézet – OTKI). He did important research in clinical neuropathology, conducted research on illnesses caused by viruses and also on senility and the results of alcoholism. He studied the diffused inflammatory, degenerative and circulatory pathology of the brain. He was Editor of the medical journal Neurological Review (Ideggyógyászati Szemle). His works include Neurological and Psychiatric Pathology in Old Age, editor (1967); The Psychiatric Results of Alcoholism (1969); Clinical Psychology (1976); The Effects of Slow Viral Infections on the Nervous System (1978), and Life Events, Reaction and Illnesses (Életesemények, reakciók, betegségek) (1989). – B: 1730, 0883, T: 7456.

Tarján Clan – According to the historical works of Byzantine Emperor Constantine VII, Porphyrogennetos (913–920), Tarján was the fourth clan of the Magyars, who settled in the Carpathian Basin in 896. The name is preserved in personal names, and in place-names in the counties of Bihar, Heves, Győr, Komárom and Nógrád. – B: 1078, T: 7103.

Tarján, Ferenc (Francis) (Budapest, 4 November 1895 - Budapest, 28 November 1956) – High School teacher in mathematics and physics, inventor. His patented invention is the electric pick-up of record players. He also patented a stereoscopic viewing apparatus, his receiver-transmitter unit for three-dimensional television and his light-sensitive gramophone for the optically rendering of sound. His true-to-life talking film “Clorophon” was prepared in collaboration with his colleague, Győző (Victor) Czákó. In the early 1930s he prepared his robot “Dr. Motor”, which did work at the Corvin warehouse of Budapest for a while, giving out information. As Dr. Motor, Ferenc Tarján's design, he presented himself at the Corvin warehouse in January 1929; his operation as such, was directed in a miniature studio from a distant, acoustically completely isolated room, from where not only the speech but also the various physical movements were directed. His works included How an Invention Is Born (Hogyan születik a találmány); Atomic Rocket to Mars (Atomrakéta a Marsba); Trade Secrets of Inventors (Feltalálók műhelyitkai), and Encyclopedia of New Inventions and Discoveries (Új találmányok és felfedezések lexikona) (Ervin Szabó Library, Budapest). – B: 2067, T: 7456. → Gramophone Pickup.

Tarján, Imre (Emeric) (Szabadka, now Subotica, Serbia, 1912 - Budapest, 19 January 2000) – Bio and crystal physicist and mathematician. As a member of the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest, he studied Mathematics and Physics at the University. He received his Ph.D. in Physics from the University of Debrecen in 1939. After teaching physics in a leading High School, he headed the Biophysical Institute of the Medical University of Budapest from 1950 until his retirement in 1982. In the early 1950s, together with Professor Zoltán Gyulai, he grew synthetic quartz crystals, and with his co-workers produced NaI(Tl), and other single crystals for the detection of nuclear radiation. In the mid-1960s, he extended his activity and applied solid-state physical methods to the investigation of biological macromolecular systems. He and his team developed a method for the fast quantitative characterization of the mutagenic activity of chemicals and automatic equipment for its measurement. He arranged for Hungary to join the International Union of Crystallography – IUCr in 1963. First, he was Secretary of the Hungarian National Committee of IUCr, and later President (1966-1973). Imre Tarján excelled in teaching, research, and scientific administration. He was a founding member of the Editorial Board of the Journal of Crystal Growth (1967-1971) and the Crystal Research and Technology (1966-1989). He was active in the Physics Section of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He was Dean (1959- 1963) and Vice-Rector (1970-1973) at the Medical University of Budapest, Head of the Research Laboratory for Crystal Physics of HAS (1961-1976), Honorary President of the Crystal Physical Section of the Hungarian Loránd Eötvös Physical Society, and a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. His works include The Laboratory Manual on Crystal Growth, co-author (1972); An Introduction to Biophysics with Medical Orientation, textbook, which had 9 editions in Hungarian and was translated into Russian, Polish, English, and German; Remembrance (Emlékezés) (1994); My Youth: 1912-1950 (Ifjúságom: 1912–1950) (1996), and Notes (Jegyzetek) (1996). His numerous awards included the Kossuth Prize (1961), the Hungarian State Award (1985), and the Middle Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1993). – B: 1406, 2097, T: 7103.

Tarján, Rezső (Rudolph) (Budapest, 8 January 1908 - Budapest, 21 December 1978) – Mathematician and cybernetician. His higher education was completed in Vienna. During the worst years of Communism under Rákosi, he was imprisoned on false charges. After his release, he became one of the pioneers of cybernetics which, at that time, was in its infancy in Hungary and in the world as well. He became the first professional leader of the Hungarian Scientific Academy's Cybernetics Research Group, and thus, he had an important role in the creation and adaptation of the first Hungarian computer, the M3, and the introduction of its use in the various fields of science. He inspired a group of talented young people, who later became the leaders of cybernetics in Hungary. Due to the stress and discrimination he had endured during the worst days of Communism, he retired from the field and became a special consultant of the OMFB until his death. He was the founder and first chairman of the János (John) Neumann Computer Science Society. – B: 1406, T: 7665.→Rákosi, Mátyás; Neumann, von John.

Tarlós, István (Stephen) (Budapest, 26 May 1948 - ) – Engineer, politician, mayor of Budapest. He graduated from the Árpád High School, Budapest, worked as an unskilled laborer, and was conscripted to the army. He studied at the Budapest Polytechnic and earned a Civil Engineering Degree. He then completed a postgraduate course in Finance and Organization at the Ybl Miklós Technical College, Budapest. Tarlós worked for 15 years in the Building Industry, mostly in investing and contracting tasks. In his civil engineer career Tarlós worked in many positions. In the early 90s he launched his own architect studio with wife, Cecilia Nagy. He first entered politics by becoming a member of the anti-communist Alliance of Free Democrats (Szabad Demokraták Szövetsége – SZDSZ) in 1989. He then became Mayor of Budapest District III (Óbuda) in 1990. He established a functioning nexus with the liberal and socialist fraction within the Municipality of his district. Tarlós left the SZDSZ, and has been an independent politician since then. He had been continually re-elected in his District in 1994, 1998 and 2002. Tarlós, supported by FIDESZ Alliance of Viktor Orbán, entered the local election in 2006 as Budapest's mayoral candidate, and lost by a mere 1 per cent against Gábor (Gabriel) Demszky, Budapest's incumbent Mayor. Since 2006 he has been Chairman of the General Assembly of the Municipality of Budapest, and served as political leader of the initiative, "Social Referendum 2008". He visited the Institutions of the EU in Brussels on several occasions. He has been elected Mayor of Budapest in 2010. His program includes bringing the companies in local government ownership under direct local government control, and under the supervision of the Assembly. He pledged to divert more funds to material and salary expenditures of neglected municipal services. He wants to drive the macro-economic curves of the City into a long-term self-sustaining one. Tarlós acted as Vice-Chairman of the Council of Regional Development between 1999 and 2003, led the Commission for Strategic Planning of the Central-Hungarian Region, and co-founded the Hungarian Society of Law-Enforcement-Science, the Baross Gábor Society, and became member of the Széchenyi Society. In addition, he was appointed Honorary Chairman of the Disaster-Recovery and Civil Protection Council, as well as that of the Braunhaxler Association of District III of Budapest. He is Member of the Board of the Christian Intellectual Alliance. Among his numerous distinctions are: Minor Cross of Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary, Officer's Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Poland, Golden Degree of Szent Gellért Award, Grand Cross of Allegiance for Fatherland, Golden Seal-Ring Award of Mayors, Silver Medal of the Municipality of Székelyudvarhely, Palatinus Medal of the Municipality of Révkomárom, and Honored Citizen, Budapest District III, from 2007. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Óbuda; Orbán Viktor; Demszky, Gábor; Political Parties in Hungary.

Tarnaszentmária, Árpáadian Age Church – One of the oldest and smallest churches still in use. It is located on a hill by the Tarna Creek in County Heves in north-eastern Hungary. It was built around 950, but written documents regarding the church were not found. The original small church with undercroft was enlarged in 1872-1873. On the frontal façade there is a braided cross with a so-called “magic knot”. This decoration can be found on Georgian churches in the southern Caucasian Mountains. Later researchers have found some broken dishes dating from the Árpáadian Age, the Middle Ages, and from later centuries. Worth mentioning is the burial place behind the sanctuary, and a grave in the middle of the aisle, on which the altar stands. Supposedly, a very important person with some family members was laid to rest in that grave. They found more graves in the undercroft showing signs of repeated disturbances. There are stone sitting ledges with braided vine decoration on the three sides of the aisle. There is one seat decorated with a lion figure, which must have been the place of an important person. This little church ranks with other royal buildings of that age. The neighboring villages and the surrounding lands belonged to the powerful Aba tribe of the early Árpáadian age. Some historians suggest that the church was a family hall of the Aba clan before it became a church. It was possibly changed in the 12th century by adding to the hall a round sanctuary. Others think the whole building was built at the same time, just like the one in Feldebrő. The builders moved to Hungary probably from Byzantium and applied the decorative eastern designs of their homeland.

The results of the archeological research suggest that the church was intended as a royal burial site. At the same time, it served as one of the first baptismal parishes on the royal landholding. It is a unique architectural artwork, which has belonged to the Hungarian kings for centuries. Perhaps the people honored those who were buried in the church as saints, since they may have been family members of King Géza-István. The development of royal seats, cities, such as Esztergom and Székesfehérvár, then became the burial places for the kings. Only the lesser royals were perhaps still buried in this small church, thus, with its significance waning, it was forgotten. – B: 1020, 1031, 1340, T: 7663.

Taróczy, Balázs (Blaise) (Budapest 9 May 1954 - ) – Professional tennis player. He has been a commentator for Sport TV since 2000, i.e. since its inception. As a sportsman, he was a tennis player for the Engineering Consultants Ltd. – UVATERV Club (1961-1968), then for the Vasas Club (1969-1980), as well as for the German TC Fürth (1981-1986). For ten years, he was among the first fifty on the individual tennis world list; between 1978 and 1982 he was among the first twenty. Balázs Taróczy won thirteen individual ATP World Tour competitions and twenty-seven doubles. In the doubles, he was twice a Grand Slam winner together with Heinz Günthardt: they were the winners of the 1981 Roland Garros, and in 1985 the Wimbledon tennis championships. He won 26 doubles tournaments. In the singles, he won 13 competitions, all of them on clay. He was the most successful male tennis player of the open era. – B: 1031, T: 7684.

Tárogató (Shawm) – A Hungarian double-reed woodwind instrument of ancient Asian origin. Mention of the tárogató in Hungarian writings dates at least as far back as the 15th century. It is not clear whether it was first brought into Europe by the Magyars when they first entered the Carpathian Basin from the east in the 9th century. It is certain, however, that instruments of this type, a descendant of the Middle-Eastern zurna, were introduced into Eastern Europe by the Turks in the Middle Ages. Data from 1544 supports its role in the Hungarian military, for during the 16-18th centuries it was known in Hungarian camps and lordly courts as the “Turkish pipe” (török síp), which was used as a synonym for tárogató. Its size, length and fullness of sound have varied over the centuries. The instrument was also a form of entertainment at festivities, such as weddings and funerals. Before and after the turn of the 17-18th century, the Kuruc soldiers of the insurrectionist armies of Count Imre (Emeric) Thököly and Count Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II against the Habsburgs, also employed the instrument. In course of time, as other woodwind instruments were refined, the tárogató appeared more as a historical piece. After the fall of the Freedom Fight of Rákóczi (1711), the tárogató was banned, and only after 1896 was it allowed to be used again. In shape, its closest relatives are the oboe, clarinet and bassoon; as an orchestral instrument, it was modified and used only from the 1860s. Because of its unusual sound quality, sometimes it is heard in operas, e.g. in Wagner's Tristan and Isolde, and in Erkel's Bánk bán. Between the two World Wars, the Tárogató was still taught at the Music Academy of Budapest. The post-World War II Communist regime wanted to destroy them as "reactionary, fascist instruments", "a symbol of national resistance"; but Zoltán Kodály managed to prevent it.

Tárogató players are still found in Hungary. To celebrate the 1100 years anniversary of the settlement of Hungarians in the Carpathian Basin, a world meeting of Tárogató players was organized in Vaja between June 30 and 7 July 1996, where the rebirth of the instrument was celebrated. As part of the programming, concerts were held in various historic locations: in Esztergom, Eger, Vajdahunyad Castle, Pásztó and Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), in the castle of Krasznahorka (now Krásna Hôrka, Slovakia), and Rozsnyó (now Rožňava, Slovakia). – B: 1197, 0942, 1020, 1031, T: 7617, 7658. → Freedom Fight of Thököly, Count Imre; Freedom Fight of Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Erkel, Ferenc; Kodály, Zoltán; Music of the Hungarians; Kuruc; Kuruc Age.

Tarr, Béla (Pécs, 21 July 1955 - ) – Film-director, screenwriter and former actor. He started as an amateur film-maker. Later, he studied at the Béla Balázs Studios, Budapest (1977-1981). He worked as an unskilled laborer at the shipyard of Budapest (1973-1975). In 1976 he was a caretaker. After his first major documentary and fiction film, the Family Hornet's Nest (Családi tűzfészek) (1977), Tarr began his studies at the Hungarian School of Theatrical and Cinematic Arts. From 1981 to 1990 he was Director of the MAFILM (Hungarian Film Studio). He was on scholarship in West Berlin from 1989 to 1990. From 1990 he was a guest professor at the Berlin Film Academy, and from 1996, a member of the European Film Academy. His successive films, such as the Hotel Magnezit (1978); Macbeth (1982); The Prefab People (Panelkapcsolat) (1982); Damnation (Kárhozat) (1988); Satan-Tango (Sátántangó) (1994); Traveling on the Great Plain (Utazás az Alföldön) (1995), and the Werckmeister Harmonies (2000), with their provocative message about alienation and moral decay of modern man, created for him international fame and secured for him a distinguished place among the European filmmakers. A film adaptation of Georges Simenon's novel The Man from London was released at the Cannes Film Festival in 2005. Béla Tarr is a recipient of the Béla Balázs Prize in 1983. – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7103.

Tarsoly, Elemér (Elmer) (Berekböszörmény, 5 February 1928 - Budapest, 10 April 1986) – Actor. He obtained his diploma from the Academy of Dramatic Art in 1952. He was engaged by the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, and he was a member until his death. For some time, he played juvenile roles, as his face and build rendered him eminently suitable for such roles. He could play the part of peasant and worker, youngsters and youths in a realistic way. He appeared in films as well. His roles included Balga in M. Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde; Béla Bencsik in F. Karinthy's Thousand Years (Ezer év), and Waiter Gyuri in E. Szigligeti's Liliomfi. His roles in films included Crafty Matt, the Goose-herd (Ludas Matyi) (1949); Spring in Budapest (Budapesti tavasz) (1955); Frost in May (Májusi fagy) (1961); Carpathian Conquest (Honfoglalás) (TV, 1963); The Knights of the Golden Glove (Az aranykesztyű lovagjai) (TV, 1-5, 1968), and Clear-Blue Love (Kéktiszta szerelem) (TV, 1970). He was a recipient of the Mari Jászai Prize in 1957. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Tartar-Mongol Invasion→Mongol-Tartar Invasion.

Tas (? - after 948) – He was son of Jutas and grandson of Reigning Prince Árpád. Turkish meaning of the name is “stone”. – B: 0883, 1020, T: 7658.

Tasnádi Kubacska, András (Andrew) (Budapest, 28 April 1902 - Budapest, 30 March 1977) – Geologist and paleontologist. He studied Natural Sciences at the University of Budapest and received his Ph.D. in 1924. His first job was at the Paleontology Department of the Hungarian National Museum, Budapest. Then he received a scholarship from the Collegium Hungaricum in Vienna, where he studied and worked with the world-famous paleontologist, Othenio Abel (1875-1946). Upon returning home he worked for the Geodesic Institute as a consultant, in Budapest. From 1945 to 1949 he was Chief Director of the Museum of Natural Sciences in Budapest, then he served as Vice-President of the Hungarian National Museum, and later, he worked as a special expert in earth sciences and paleontology for the National Center for Museums and Architectural Heritage. From 1951 until his retirement, he was the director of the Museum of the Geodesic Institute. During World War II, he was Secretary of the Hungarian Geodesic Society and Editor of the Society's Journal. His primary interests were paleobiology and paleontology. He was the author of a wide variety of books dealing with many different topics, among them, stories for children. His main works are: Paleobiological Studies from Hungary (Paleobiológiai vizsgálatok Magyarországból) (Budapest, 1932); The Adventurous Life of Baron Ferenc Nopcsa (Báró Nopcsa Ferenc kalandos élete) (Budapest, 1945); Famous Hungarian Natural Scientists (Nagy Magyar Természettudósok) (Budapest, 1958); Paleopathology I. The Pathology of Prehistoric Life Forms (Paleopathológia I. Az ősszállatok pathológiája) (Bp., 1960); Colorful Mineral World (Színes ásványvilág) with László Tildy (Bp., 1973); Lajos Lóczy (Bp.1974), and Time Travel (Expedíció az időben) (Bp., 1977). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7665.→Nopcsa, Baron Ferenc; Lóczy, Lajos.

Tasnády Fekete, Mária (Lónyatelep, now Petrilla, Transylvania in Romania, 16 November 1911 - Munich, 16 March 2001) – Actress, beauty queen (Miss Hungary). She wanted to complement her scholarship by entering the Miss Hungary competition in 1931, which she won. In Berlin she became acquainted with the film producer Brúnó Duday, who soon married her. After she gave birth to an infant, she met film producer Géza Radványi, who proposed to her husband asking for her hand. At first, her husband considered it just as a film idea. However, she married Radványi in 1937. In her films she appeared with the leading actors of the age: with Pál (Paul) Jávör, Piri Vaszary, Antal (Antony) Páger, Gyula (Julius) Gózon, and others. She acted in more than ten feature films, including Two Girls on the Street (Két lány az utcán) (1939); Castle in Transylvania (Erdélyi kastély) (1940); A Woman Looks Back (Egy asszony visszanéz) (1941-1942); Europe Does Not Reply (Európa nem válaszol) (1941), and Somewhere in Europe (Valahol Európában) (1947). After World War II, Mária and her husband fled from the Communist regime of Hungary, settling in Italy, where Mária appeared in the film White People (Fehér emberek). She also worked for Radio Free Europe for 21 years. She died in an old people's home and was buried next to her husband. – B: 1031, T: 7456. → Radványi, Géza; Jávör Pál; Vaszary, Piroska; Páger, Antal; Gózon, Gyula.

Tasnády, Ilona (Helen) (Tasnádi-Nagy) (Budapest, 26 September 1893 - Budapest, 17 December 1971) – Actress. After she completed her course at the Academy of Dramatic Arts, Budapest in 1912, the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) engaged her. She worked there until her retirement in 1945. In 1932, she was granted life-membership. Initially, she played sentimental young women; later, the heroines of classical dramas, Hungarian noble ladies and the women in comedies. Her attractive voice, fine appearance and deeply felt presentation of her roles characterized her art. Her roles included the title role in Schiller's Maria Stuart; Katherina in Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew (Makrancos hölgy); Titania in Shakespeare's A Midsummer-Night's Dream (Szentiványéji álom); Portia in Shakespeare's The Merchant of Venice (A velencei kalmár); Éva in I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája); Melinda in J. Katona's Bánk bán, and title role in G.B. Shaw's Candida. She also played in feature films including Captives of God (Isten rabjai) (1942), and Bikers in Love (Szerelmes biciklisták) (1965). In 1923, her talent was recognized with the Farkas-Ratkó Prize. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Tasner, Antal (Antony) (Öskü, 5 May 1808 - Pest, 25 August 1861) – Lawyer. Private Secretary to Count Stephen (István) Széchenyi and his closest associate. He studied Philosophy in Budapest, and Law in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). In 1831 he passed his Bar exam in Pest. As a private tutor at the house of Count Pál (Paul) Széchenyi, he met Count István Széchenyi who, on 1 November 1833, employed him as his private secretary. He remained in this position until 5 September 1848, when Count István (Stephen) Széchenyi – dubbed the “greatest Hungarian” by Lajos (Louis) Kossuth – retired from public affairs. As secretary and lecturer, he participated in the foundation and organization of various associations and companies initiated by Count Széchenyi. From 1840 to 1861, he was the Secretary of the Lánchíd-Bridge Society (Lánchíd – Chain-Bridge was the first permanent bridge over the Danube in Budapest and one of the most advanced engineering works of the times). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1833). Though not a major author, he was a prolific publicist in the areas relating to Count Széchenyi's various projects. Count Széchenyi asked him to edit and possibly publish his journals and notes. His work is entitled Correspondence with István Széchenyi (Levelezése Széchenyi Istvánnal) (Pesti Hírlap, 1880, 150, No. 176). A high school in Öskü bears his name. – B: 0883, 1105, T: 7665. → Széchenyi, Count István; Kossuth, Lajos

Tass, Olga (Oga Tass-Lemhéyi) (Pécs, 29 March 1929 - Budapest, 3 December 2003) – Gymnast. From 1941 she was a gymnast in Pécs; from 1947, at the Academy of Physical Education's Sports Association (Testnevelési Főiskola Sport Egylet – TFSE); from 1951 at the Budapest Honvéd; from 1957 at the Budapest Spartacus, and from 1959 at the Budapest Vasas. Between 1958 and 1960, she competed in the Hungarian select team. In 1954 she obtained a gold medal at the World Championships in Rome, and she also won a silver medal. At the 1954 University World Championships in Budapest, she won in nine events – among them six individual ones. She participated in four Summer Olympic Games, where she won six medals in total: one gold, three silver and two bronze. At the 1956 Summer Olympic Games, she was a member of the Hungarian team, winning the title of Champion. She retired from active sports after the 1960 Rome Summer Olympic Games. She played a significant role in getting the Hungarian female team to the front line of the world in the fifties. – B: 1031, T: 7684.

Tatai, Tibor (Pöse, August, 1944 - ) – Canoeist. He started canoeing in the Transport Services of Budapest (Budapesti Közlekedési Vállalat – BKV) team at the age of sixteen. He continued his competitive career after completing his military service, under the training of Lajos (Louis) Molnár, coach. He participated in the first international competition of his life hardly three months prior to the Mexican Summer Olympics in 1968. It was decided only at the site of the Olympics to have him start, and he was victorious as a competitor. He then competed in three more world competitions. In 1969 he won a bronze medal at the European Championships. In 1970 he won a gold medal at the World Championships in Copenhagen and, in 1971 a silver medal in Belgrade, as a single canoeist on 1000 m. He stopped competing at the age of 27. He won at three Hungarian competitions. He started his work as a coach at the BKV Előre Club. He worked in China for a short time and, following that, he prepared the select Spanish canoe team for the 1992 Barcelona Olympic Games. Later, he returned to Hungary and worked as a coach again at the BKV until he retired. – B: 1031, T: 7684.

Tatay, Sándor (Alexander) (Bakonytamási, 6 May 1910 - Budapest, 2 December 1991) – Writer. He was born into a Lutheran pastor's family. He spent his childhood years with his six siblings in his village of his birth, while his high school years were spent in Tata, Pápa and Szarvas. Thereafter, he studied for two years at the Lutheran Theological Faculty of Sopron, followed by a Degree in Education, majoring in Hungarian and German literature at the Arts Faculty of the University of Pécs. He visited numerous famous European cities in his early years. On his return to Hungary, he undertook a number of positions. From the 1930s he began publishing his works. From 1944, he lived and worked at the foot of the extinct volcano, Badacsony, north of Lake Balaton, but he spent the winter months in Budapest. From 1954, he regarded writing as his main calling. He published more than 30 works, including The Plough (Az eke) (1931); Shower (Zápor) (1941); Bread and Flower (Kenyér és virág) (1959); Judgment Day (Az ítélet napja) (1964); The Period of Loafing (Lődörgések kora) (1977), and the Chronicle of Bakony (Bakonyi krónika) (1985). His works have been translated into nine languages: German, Russian, Czech, Esperanto, Polish, Lithuanian, Ukrainian, Georgian and Kirghiz. A High School in Székesfehérvár is named after him. – B: 0878, 1031, T: 7456.

Tátra Range, High (Hungarian: Magas Tátra; now Visoké Tatry in Slovakia) - The highest component mountain range of the Carpathian Mountain System, in Historic County Szepes; part of the crystalline belt, made up of granites, gneisses and schists; 65 km long, 10-15 km wide. West of it are the Liptó Alps and northeast are the Béla Tátra (Belanské Tatry) and Szepes (Spišská Magura) Ranges. North of it is the Nowy Targ (Podhale) Basin (north of Zakopane). Along the horse-shoe shaped main ridge are arranged the highest peaks: Tátra Peak (2565 m), Lomnic Peak (2634 m), Berlachovský Štit (2655 m), Kriván (Krivah) Peak (2494 m) and Gerlachovka (Francis Joseph) Peak (2663 m) (the highest peak of the Carpathian Mountain System; in the 1950s it was called Stalin Peak); on this peak Teréz Eggenhofer placed a war memorial for the fallen soldiers of World War I, but the occupying Czechs of the newly created state of Czechoslovakia razed it in 1920. As a result of the Pleistocene glaciations, the bottoms of the glacier valleys created attractive tarns, very deep mountain lakes, 115 of them, e.g. Five (Öt) Lake, Green (Zöld) Lake, Tarn (Tengerszem) Lake, Poprád Lake and Fish (Halas) Lake. Since these tarns were carved out from the glacier at different levels, this created some waterfalls, as well. The end-moraine lakes include the Csorba Lake. Its development for tourism was begun by the Hungarian Carpathian Union in the 19th century. There are a number of tourist hostels, such as the one at the Poprád Lake, also health resorts, spas, and sanatoria before World War I (Új-Tátrafüred, Tátraháza, Matlárháza, Tátralomnic, Tátraszéplak, Barlangliget). To facilitate transport, roads were built, railway lines established, e.g. the rack railway and the electric railway at Csorba Lake – Poprádfelka, also before World War I (prior to the Czechoslovak takeover). There are about 300 km of scenic hiking trails. A number of museums were established as well. Climate is cool; the annual average temperature is 5.5° C and the average annual precipitation on the southern side is 800-900 mm, on the northern side a little more: 1000 mm. The flora is the copybook example of the alpine flora; up to 900 m, agriculturally cultivated fields, growing oats and potato. From there as far as 1500 m the belt of the pine forests, farther up the mountain pine (Pinus mugo) to 1900 m. Between this altitude and the highest peaks is the alpine region with grasses, mosses and lichens; famous examples include the edelweiss (Leontopodium alpinum), the dwarf carnation (Dianthus glacialis), the spring gentian (Gentiana verna), and many alpine flowers, also the famous cembra pine (Pinus cembra). The fauna includes mammal chamois (Rupicapra rupicapra) and the marmot (Marmota monax). The bird-fauna is rich; above the pine region is the alpine hedge sparrow (Prunella modularis). The medieval chronicler Anonymus mentioned the Tátra, calling it the Turtur Range. Later, it became Tortol, then Tartal Mountain. The major resort development on the High Tátra began in the 19th century, mainly at the foot of the Nagyszalók Peak. The oldest resort, at Alsó-Tátrafüred, developed by Count Csáky at the end of the 18th century, began flourishing after the development of the Kassa (now Košice)–Oderberg railway line from 1870. – B: 1153, 1304, 1020, 1068, T: 7456. → Eggenhoffer, Teréz; Anonymus.

Tátra Range, Low (Hungarian: Alacsony Tátra; Slovak: Nízke Tatry) – Part of the inner crystalline belt of the Northern Carpathian Mountain Arc and forming its most extensive crystalline massif, tectonically an uplifted block. Its highest peak is Gyömbér (Ďumbier) 2043 m. It extends west to east from the Sturec Pass (Panský diel) (1100 m) to the Popova Saddle, with a length of 75 km, width 20-30 km. Numerous creeks, which run down the slopes northward and southward, break up its ridge; these slopes are covered by dense forests; on its southern slopes deciduous forests, on the northern slopes pine forests. The highest section, only slightly affected by the Pleistocene glaciation, forms extensive Alpine grazing land. The only passable road leads through the Csertovica Saddle (1236 m). The eastern corner-bastion of the mountain range is the King Mount (Királyhegy, 1943 m), acting as the most important watershed center of the Carpathian Mountain Chain. – B: 1068, T: 7456.

Tátrai Tibor (nickname: Tibusz) (Budapest, 5 April 1952 - ) – Guitarist, a world-renowned musician. He was a youth champion in boxing (1968), and worked as a technician at a private business. First, he played in school orchestras. He was a member of numerous ensembles, including Sak Matt (Checkmate); Szivárvány (Rainbow); Juventus; Syrius; Olympia; General; Új Skorpió (New Skorpion); Homo Blues Band; Mini; Magyar Atom (Hungarian Atom); Tátrai-Török Tandem; East; a member of the Tátrai Band (1987); Boom Boom; Latin Duo; and Tátrai Trend. His rich discography include: Zenegép (Music Machine) (1977); Heart of Rock (1978); Vadászat (Hunting) (1984); Tábortűz mellett (Beside the Campfire) (1990); Maxicana (1999); Intergalactic Megahello (2001), and Latin 4 (2007). – B: 0878, 1031, T: 7103. → Kárpátia Band.

Tátrai, Vilmos (William) (Kispest, 7 October 1912 - Budapest, 2 February 1999) – Violin virtuoso and orchestra leader. He received his musical training at the National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede), Budapest. As a music student, he organized a string quartet already in 1928. He was first violinist of the Budapest Symphony Orchestra in 1933; from 1940 he was concertmaster of the Budapest Concert Orchestra; from 1946 he was concertmaster of the State Concert Orchestra. Between 1946 and 1953, he was also an instructor at the National Music School. In 1946, he established the Tátrai String Quartet, which soon gained reputation in Europe, as representative of Hungary. During the course of their European concert engagements, they gained unparalleled fame. The ensemble brought success to a series of “ancient” performances of chamber music works of Hungarian and foreign composers. In 1957, under his leadership, he founded the Hungarian Chamber Orchestra with 21 members, functioning without a conductor; it also became famous throughout Europe, “advertising” the high level of Hungarian music culture. Numerous recordings have been made of the performance of both the Quartet and the Chamber Orchestra. – B: 1197, 1031, T: 7684.

Tatros, Bible of (or Hussite Bible; Hungarian: Tatrosi Biblia) – In the township of Tatros (in Moldova, on the outer, northeastern slopes of the Carpathians) the first Hungarian-language Bible was printed in 1466. Only an incomplete extant copy survives. It contains 18 books of the Old Testament, together with the four Gospels. This first significant and originally complete translation was prepared by two priests from the Szerémség region (County Szerém, now the easternmost part of Croatia): Tamás Pécsi and Bálint (Valentine) Újlaki, who studied in Prague under John Huss during the years 1399 to 1411 (four years later, in 1415, Huss was burnt at the stake for rejecting the Pope’s authority.) Translating the Holy Scripture into the vernacular was a basic idea of the followers of Huss. This they carried out after their return to Hungary and completed the task by 1416. However, persecution was awaiting them as Hussites. As a result they settled in Moldova in 1439. György (George) Németh copied the translation and, in 1466, the 50-year-old translation was printed in the township of Tatros in Moldova. From there it fell into the hands of Johannes Albert Widmanstetter in the middle of the 16th century, from whom György (George) Seld, royal councilor of King Sigismund obtained it, who handed it over to the Bavarian prince Albrecht V. In 1557, it was held in the Bavarian Royal Library. Miklós (Nicholas) Fehérváry discovered it in 1834. In the following year, through the good offices of the President of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, Count József (Joseph) Teleki, the Codex of Tatros was copied by Pál (Paul) Jászay, which took six months. He even compiled a dictionary for it. Finally, Gábor (Gabriel) Döbrentei provided it with his own notes and in 1842; it was again printed, this time as the third volume of the Academy's Language Memorial Collection. It has copies among the codices of Vienna and Munich and in the Apor Collection. – B: 0945, 1031, 2024, T: 7456.→Hussite Bible; Döbrentei, Gábor; Teleki, Count József (2).

Tatros Valley Hungarians, Moldova – There are more than a hundred villages by or along the River Tatros and its tributaries, the Aszó, Csügés, Karasló, Kászon, Kucur, Ojtoz, Sós-Tázló, Talumba, Szalanc, Tázló and Uz. The names of these villages were originally almost entirely Hungarian. This was the territory of the Csángós, the Hungarian population of Moldova. While among the 260 Hungarian village names, 37 are called Magyarfalva (Ungureni), none is named Csángófalva (Csángó village). The Hungarians of Moldova call themselves Hungarian and even Romanians designate them as such. The Csángós of the Tázló region settled between the River Szeret's ancient Hungarian villages and Szekler (Transylvanian Hungarian) land, west of the Carpathian Mountains. This is an indication that the Csángó people – similarly to the Pechenegs (Besenyők) and Uz (Uzbeks) – are a fragment of one of the original Hungarian tribes.

The names of the region's high mountains around the Tatros and its tributaries are also almost exclusively Hungarian. These names were even adopted by the Vlachs (now Romanians), who settled later in this region. This also indicates that the Csángós were native settlers, although all the Hungarians of Moldova never used this version of their name. Geographically and regionally the Csángós joined the Moldovan Hungarians living within Szeklerland, forming a homogenous ethnic unit.

By the 15th century, the City of Tatros developed into a Hungarian cultural center. In 1518, for a short period of time, it was even the seat of a bishop. Mihály (Michael) Thabuk, parish priest of Tatros led back 2000 pagan 'szittyá' (Scythian) Hungarians into the Catholic fold in 1570. Lately, the Romanian government has tried to hide the names of the Tatros valley's Hungarian villages by attaching them administratively to far away places with Romanian population. But Tatros was too large to make it disappear this way. The majority of its inhabitants, mostly the older generation, are still Hungarian; the younger women and school age children often speak only Hungarian, although there are no official Hungarian schools. – B: 1031, 1020, 1133, T: 3240.→Csángó.

Taubner, Károly (Charles) (Velegh, 15 October 1809 - Verona, about 1860) – Parson and mathematician. His philosophical and theological studies were completed at the Lutheran College of Sopron. Between 1834 and 1837 he worked as a coach. In 1837, a Doctorate of Philosophy and Fine Arts was conferred on him at the University of Berlin. Thereafter, he traveled in the northern European states. From 1837, he was Principal of the Lutheran High School of Pest. During 1840, he traveled through France and Southern Germany. In 1844, he became a Lutheran army chaplain in the Kingdom of Lombard-Venice, living in Milan. He became a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1840. His works include Review Study on the Philosophy of Hegel (Bírálati vizsgálat Hegel bölcselkedése felett) (1838); Pure Arithmetics (Tiszta mennyiségtan)(1843), and Primary and Secondary Curves (Az első és másodrendű görbék), a competition essay with a Prize from the Academy (1844). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Tavasi, Lajos (Louis), (Tavassy, Teichengräber) (Igló, now Spišska Nová Ves, Slovakia, 2 August 1814 - Igló, 28 January 1877) – Pedagogue. His secondary studies were at Sárospatak and Lőcse (now Levoča, Slovakia), then, from 1839, at the Universities of Jena, Göttingen, Halle and Berlin. He obtained a Ph.D. in Art from the University of Jena. Returning to Hungary in 1842, he worked as a tutor and traveled all over the countryside, endeavoring to acquaint himself with the social, economic and cultural conditions of the people of the different regions. From 1843, he taught at the Lutheran high school of Pest; later, he was the Principal there. Because of his participation in the 1848-1849 War of Independence from Habsburg rule, he was drafted into the Austrian Army and sent to Italy, from where he returned in 1851. He resumed his work as a tutor and, from 1855 until his death he was a teacher at the High School of Igló. He was a pioneer of progressive Hungarian education. He published the first pedagogical journal in Hungarian, entitled: Educational Memorial Papers (Nevelési Emléklapok) (1846-1848). He rendered great educational service by disseminating the educational ideas of Pestalozzi, and also building the educational climate of opinion. Thanks to his organizing work, the first Progressive Universal Teachers' Meeting assembled in 1848. His main work is School and Church (Tanoda és egyház) (1848). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Tavaszy, Sándor (Alexander) (Marossárpatak, now Glodeni, Transylvania, Romania, 25 February 1888 – Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 8 December 1951) – Minister of the Reformed Church, theologian, philosopher and writer. He completed his high school studies at the Reformed College of Marosvásárhely, (now Târgu Mureș, Romania), then studied Theology at Kolozsvár and at the Universities of Jena and Berlin in Germany. From 1913, he served as an Episcopal secretary. He earned a Doctoral Degree in Philosophy at Kolozsvár in 1915, and was Professor of Church History from 1921 to 1926, then Professor of Systematic Theology at the Protestant Theological Faculty of the University of Kolozsvár. He wrote many articles and studies for periodicals, such as the Reformed Review (Református Szemle); Shepherd's Fire (Pásztortűz); Transylvanian Review (Erdélyi Szemle); Transylvanian Museum (Erdélyi Múzeum), etc. He was chief contributor for the Transylvanian Helicon (Erdélyi Helikon), and he edited The Way's Library (Az Út Könyvtára) series from 1923. He wrote 30 books, among them his first major work, The Epistemology and Psychology of Knowledge (Az ismeretelmélet és a megismerés pszichológiája) (1914); Philosophy of Schleiermacher (Schleiermacher filozofiája) (1918); Spiritual Crisis of the Present Age (A jelenkor szellemi válsága) (1923); Western European Culture in the Mirror of Spengler's Philosophy (A Nyugat Európai kultúra Spengler filozofiájának tükrében) (1924); The Problem and Problems of the Dialectical Theology (A dialektikus teológia problémája és problémái) (1929); Reformed Christian Dogmatism (Református keresztyén dogmatika) (1932), and Existence and Reality (Lét és valóság) (1933). He was the first representative of the Barthian dialectic theology in Hungarian Reformed theological literature of the second quarter of the 20th century. He received the Corvin Wreath, an award of the Hungarian State, in 1940. – B: 0910, 1031, 1257, T: 7103.→Tonk, Sándor.

Teghze-Gerber, Miklós (Nicholas) (Margitfalva, 11 June 1906 - Detroit, MI, USA, 5 November 1969) – Composer and conductor. He started his high school studies in Zsolna (now Žilina, Slovakia) and completed them in Budapest. In 1927 he obtained a Degree in Agronomy from University of Budapest. Concurrently to his university studies he also obtained a Degree in Composition from the Academy of Music, Budapest. In 1937 he established a state music school in Gödöllő, and became its leader. He left for the West in 1945. In 1949, he emigrated to the USA, and settled in Detroit. In 1951, he established the Globe Record Company and, at the same time, he served as a church organist and music instructor and traveled in America and Europe on concert tours.

His musical talents were evident at an early age. At the age of six, he composed 174 Hungarian songs, 76 of them were published, and the others remained in manuscript form. He also composed music for two films, as well as four dance pieces. Among his classical compositions the Hungarian Overture (Magyar nyitány) and Dance of the Huns (Hunok tánca) are best known. He composed 14 Hungarian and 7 “outlaw” songs while he lived in Bavaria. In the last period of his life, he composed 22 Hungarian, 3 nationalistic, 4 religious and 14 classical, as well as 5 more recent Hungarian songs in 1968. – B: 0906, 1020, T: 7684.

Teheran Conference (28 November - 1 December 1943) – The first top-level conference of the leaders of the Allied Big Powers of World War II: Winston Churchill, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and Joseph Stalin. They discussed the continuation of World War II, and the question of setting things in order thereafter. W. Churchill (1874-1965), British Prime Minister’s idea was to draw Poland to the West; J.V. Stalin (1879-1953), suggested extending Poland to the River Oder in the West, and in the East leaving the 1939 Soviet border, as decided by the agreement between Molotov and Ribbentrop in August 1939; the Soviet Union should be given part of Prussia, that included Königsberg later named Kalinyingrad. They agreed regarding the opening of the second front in northwest France; they ruled out the plan of the British landing in the Balkans. That thwarted the earlier plan of Hungary to pull out of the war. There was word of inviting Turkey into the war. Stalin promised the counter attack on the Eastern Front when the landing in France takes place, and that they would attack Japan at the end of the European war. Churchill announced the support of J. N. Tito (1892-1980), the Yugoslav Communist Partisan Leader, instead of the Chetnik Leader D. D. Mihaylovic (1892-1946), supporter of the King, whom they had backed until then. They talked about the division of Germany after the war; Stalin ruled out Churchill’s suggestion of a Southern Confederation of Bavaria, Austria and Hungary. They signed three documents: (1) a statement regarding the questions of war and peace; (2) a statement regarding the maintenance of the independence and territorial integrity of Iran; and (3) a record book regarding the various questions of the continuation of military operations. They discussed the establishment of the Organization of the United Nations. The Conference came about on the insistence of Roosevelt in order to foster a closer relationship between the three Powers. Actually, he made significant concessions to Stalin. – B: 0945, T: 7684.→Churchill, Sir Winston; Roosevelt, Franklin Delano; Stalin, Joseph; Yalta Conference.

Teichmann, Vilmos (William) (Usti, Bohemia, 29 October 1898 - Debrecen, 20 July 1967) – Potato-improver. In 1920 he studied at the Hochschule für Bodenkultur of Vienna. In 1922, due to financial difficulties, he broke off his studies and accepted a job on Eszényi's Plant, dealing with the genetic engineering of potatoes in Tornyospálca (northeast of Kisvárdá). In 1924, he resumed his higher studies and, by 1926, he qualified to become an Agrarian Engineer. In 1927, he worked for the editorial office of the economic journal Der Pionier. In 1928, he was engaged to be the Head of the Genetic Plant Engineering Station of Lontó (now Lontov, Slovakia); he had to deal with the genetic engineering of potato, rye and alfalfa. In 1929, he returned to Tornyospálca to be the Head of the Plant until 1939. Thereafter, he worked at the Farm of Újberek, County Tolna. In 1943 he established a plant, dealing with the improvement of the potato and became its head until 1947. Then he was Director of the Genetic Improvement of Plants at Kisvárdá for 20 years until his death. Teichmann was a member of the Committee of Genetic Plant Improvement of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He was an expert at genetic plant improvement, e.g. the potato strains (varieties) Gülbaba, Áldás, Aranyalma, Krieger-Gyöngye, Őszirózsa, Margit, all the result of his genetic engineering. In addition, the rye (Fehérvirágú édes csillagfürt) of Kisvárdá, the sunflower (napraforgó) of Kisvárdá, the alfalfa and rye of Homok, and many other genetic strains are hallmarks of his expertise. He described his work and methods of genetic improvement in numerous scientific studies and educational articles. His works include The Main Rules of Potato-protection (A burgonyavédelem legfőbb szabályai), with others (1953), and Potato Cultivation (Burgonyatermesztés), with others (1954). He was a recipient of the State Prize (1966). A high school in Kisvárdá, an Education Foundation and a Prize in Biology bear his name. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Telcs, Ede (Edward) (Teltsch) (Baja, 12 May 1872 - Budapest, 18 July 1948) – Sculptor. After completing his studies in Vienna, he returned to Hungary. He initially participated in art shows with genre works, showing typical Hungarian characters. His later, architectural creations included decorative sculptures and mausoleums. Among his works, the Kossuth Statue in Kecskemét is outstanding, also the Vörösmarty Statue in Budapest, as well as the St László Statue, which was placed among the figures of the Budapest Millennium Monument. He also made numerous medallions. A collective exhibit of his works was arranged in the Ernst Museum, Budapest, in 1928, and a memorial exhibition in the Hungarian National Gallery in 1963, where many of his works are held. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7675.

Telegdi, Bálint (Valentine) (Budapest, 11 January 1922 - Pasadena, California, 8 April 2006) – Physicist. He lived in Hungary only until his second year in elementary school; but he spoke excellent Hungarian. Due to his father's work and World War II, his family moved and lived in France, Bulgaria, Romania, Hungary, and Austria, Italy and Switzerland. He studied chemical engineering at the University of Lausanne, where he earned a Master's Degree. However, his interest turned toward quantum phenomena, and he began graduate studies in physics at the Eidgenössische Technische Hochschule (ETH), Zürich, where he obtained his Ph.D. Between 1951 and 1976, he taught at the University of Chicago as an Enrico Fermi Distinguished Service Professor, before working with Enrico Fermi. His main interest was the müon research; in his experiments he researched the dissolution of müons. From 1978 to 1992, he taught at the California Institute of Technology – CALTEC. From 1976 till his retirement in 1989, he was Professor at the Polytechnic of Zürich (ETH). In his retirement he worked for the European Organization for Nuclear Research – CERN, and was Chair of its Scientific Police Committee from 1981 to 1983. He wrote more than 150 studies. He was a foreign member of the Royal Society. He received a shared Wolf Prize in 1991. – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Telegdi, János (John) (Érsekújvár, now Nové Zámky, Slovakia, 1575 - 1647) – Archbishop. He studied Theology in Vienna, and was ordained in 1594; the same year he became Canon of Esztergom, and Archdean of Zólyom (now Zvolen, Slovakia). Later, he was Rector of Érsekújvár, Bishop of Várad (later Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania), and in 1619, Bishop of Nyitra (now Nitra, Slovakia), which post he relinquished in 1647. When Prince Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen, Reigning Prince of Transylvania (Erdély) attacked Nyitra, he fled to Vienna. Later, in 1623, he became Archbishop of Kalocsa. He studied runic writing, the ancient form of Hungarian writing. In his work, entitled Rudimenta Priscaë Hunnorum Lingvæ... (Leyden, 1598), he made an accurate summation of his findings. It is to Telegdi's merit that runic writing became widespread. The first preachers of the Reformed Church used runic in correspondence to hide its meaning from the Austrian censors. – B: 0883, 0945, T: 7103. → Bethlen, Prince Gábor; Rudimenta; Hungarian Runic Script; Forrai, Sándor; Sebestyén, Gyula; Linear Writing; New Trends in the Research of Hungarian Ancient History.

Telegdi, Kata (Catherine) (16th century - Kisvárd, 1601) – The first Hungarian poetess. Her husband was the country squire, Miklós (Nicholas) Zokoly. She wrote her letters from Kisvárd in 1599 to her relative, the wife of Lord Lieutenant István (Stephen) Ecsedi Báthori, living in the castle of Ecsed in County Szatmár. In one of her five extant letters she attached her only existing incidental poem. Secondary Schools in Kisvárd, Nyíregyháza and Debrecen bear his name. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Telegdi, Miklós (Nicholas) (Telegd, 1535 - Nagyszombat, now Trnava, Slovakia, 22 April 1586) – Roman Catholic Prelate, religious writer. He was a descendant of a serf family. He studied in Krakow and Vienna. He was ordained in 1558, and thereafter he taught at the Seminary of Nagyszombat. From 1561 he served as Canon of Esztergom, and from 1570 as Grand Provost; in 1579 he became Bishop of Pécs, but he could not take the Chair because of the Turkish occupation. From 1582 until his death, he was Archiepiscopal Vicar. He played an important part in developing the Counter-Reformation cultural center at Nagyszombat, and led its school. In 1577, he organized a print-shop in Nagyszombat. In his works, he partly annotated the articles of his faith and partly engaged in polemic with the Protestant ones. In 1584, together with Zakariás Mossóczi, he published the first edition of Corpus Juris Hungarici, based on the collection of István (Stephen) Ilosvai. His humanistic cultural literary activity paved the way for the appearance of Bishop Péter Pázmány, and the development of the Hungarian Baroque literature. His works include Basic Principles of Christians (Az keresztények fundamentumiról) (Vienna, 1562) and Explanation of the Gospels... (Az evangéliumoknak – magyarázatja...vols. i.ii.iii) (1577-1580). – B: 0883, 0945 T: 7456. → Pázmány, Péter.

Telegdi-Róth, Károly (Charles) (Budapest, 14 November 1886 - Budapest, 28 September 1955) – Geologist and paleontologist. He studied at the University of Budapest, and started work at the Budapest Polytechnic as a demonstrator under Ferenc (Francis) Schafarzik. From 1909, he worked as a geologist at the Geological Institute in Budapest. In 1926 he became Professor of Mineralogy and Geology at the University of Debrecen, while from 1936 he was Head of the Department of Mining Research of the Ministry of Industry. From 1947 he was Professor of Paleontology at the University of Budapest, and Head of the Paleontological Institute. He obtained his Master's Degree in Geology and Mineralogy in 1952. Telegdi-Róth's research on bituminous coal is significant, in particular the coal basins of Esztergom, Dorog, Tokod and Tatabánya; also the geological development of the Komló coal deposit during the years 1946 to 1949. He rendered great service to the scientific research and practical implementation of the petroleum production, also in the modernization of the ore exploration of Gyöngyösoroszi, and the development of the bauxite deposits in Hungary: in the discovery of the bauxite deposits of Gánt, Alsóperepuszta and Nyírad and in the commencement of the mining operations. He was corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1931-1949). His works include The Northern Slope of the Réz Mountain (A Rézhegység északi oldala) (1911); The Mining-geological Situation of the Coal Area of the Environs of Esztergom (Az esztergomvidéki szénterület bányaföldtani viszonyai), with others (1922); The Bauxite Deposits of Transdanubia (A Dunántúl bauxittelepei) (1923); Geology of Hungary (Magyarország geológiája) (Part I, 1929), a controversial, but brilliant synthesis, in form of a 164-page debate with real or imaginary opponents; Earth Gas and Petroleum in Hungary (Földgáz és petróleum Magyarországon) (1937); Formation of the Carpathians (A Kárpátok kialakulása) (1938), and Paleontology (Ősállattan), University textbook (1953). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Telegdi-Róth, Lajos (Louis) (Brassó, now Braşov, Romania, 10 September 1841 - Budapest, 16 April 1928) – Geologist. He obtained his higher qualification from the Mining and Metallurgical Academies of Freiberg and Leuven. Afterwards, he worked at the Rothschild Works of Witkovitz, at the Geologische Reichsanstalt of Vienna, and at the mining directorate of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). In 1867, he entered the service of the mining section of the Finance Ministry. From 1870, he worked as a geologist for the Geological Institute in Budapest, and from 1883 as its Senior Geologist until his retirement in 1913. From 1901 to 1904, he was President of the Geological Society. Central in his specialization was geological mapping. He was also successful in the research for oil and bituminous coal up to 1894. The development of the coal mine of Kosd and the oil areas of Zsibó (now Jibou, Romania) and Reck is to his credit. His numerous scientific papers appeared in the journals Geological Gazette (Földtani Közlöny) and the Annual Reports of the Geological Institute (Földtani Intézet Évi Jelentése). His works include The Kismarton Area (Kismarton vidéke) (1883); The Eastern Edge of the Transylvanian Ore Mountains (Erdélyrészi Érchegység Keleti széle) (1903-1906), and the Geological Structure of the Transylvanian Basin (Az erdélyrészi medence földtani alkotása) (1907-1910). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Telegdy-Kováts, László (Ladislav) (Galgóc, now Hlohovec, Slovakia, 5 December 1902 - Budapest, 11 May 1987) – Chemical engineer. He completed his primary and secondary schooling in Nyitra (now Nitra, Slovakia) with the maturity examination at Balassagyarmat in 1920. Then he studied at the Budapest Polytechnic, where he obtained a Degree in Chemical Engineering in 1925. From 1925 to 1927, in the Department of Agricultural Chemical Technology of the Budapest Polytechnic, he worked as an auxiliary demonstrator, then as an assistant. In 1927 he earned a Ph.D. in Chemical Technology, after which he worked as an assistant chemist at the National Chemical Institute, soon becoming its Director. With two scholarships (1928 and 1930) he furthered his studies in England. From 1942, he was again in the service of the National Chemical Institute. In the same year he was invited to become the Technical Director of the Hungarian Sugar Industry Co., where he worked until 1948. From 1951 till his retirement in 1972, he was Professor of Food Chemistry at the Budapest Polytechnic; he was also Assistant Dean of the Chemical Engineering Faculty (1952-1955), and from 1957, Dean. He developed and organized practical methods for modern analytical food procedures, and developed a modern nutrition science with a dynamic outlook for teaching purposes. He was President of a number of committees and societies, and also did editorial work for related periodicals. His works include Food Chemistry and Nutrition Industries (Élelmiszerkémia és élelmezési iparok) (1952); Sugar-industrial Microbiology (Cukoripari mikrobiológia) (1954), and Vitamins and other Active Ingredients (Vitaminok és egyéb hatóanyagok) (1966). He was a recipient of some distinctions, such as the Communauté Internationale Agricola Gold-medal (1961), the Tamás Kossutány Memorial Medal (1964), and the Pál Bugát Memorial Medal (1964). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Telekessy, István (Stephen) (Telekesi) (Csöméte, 20 August 1633 - Eger, 3 March 1715) – Roman Catholic Bishop. He was raised by Katalin (Catharine) Batthyány in Sopron, and studied Theology at the Seminary of Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia). He was sent to Rome, where he was ordained in 1660. After serving as a parish priest, he became Canon in 1675, Provost of Pápóc in 1677, and Bishop of Eger in 1699, while at the same time he was Lord Lieutenant of the County of Heves. After 1699, when the Turks were expelled from Hungary, he found in 12 counties only 119 Catholic priests, and 200 Protestant preachers. He ordained 200 priests. On 31 October 1703, when Miklós (Nicholas) Bercsényi, with his Kuruc liberation army took the city of Eger, Telekessy pledged an oath of allegiance to Reigning Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczy II, the leader of the independence movement, and he even participated in it. He was the only Catholic bishop to do so. He signed the Declaration of Ónod, for which the Archbishop of Esztergom, referring to the Breve of the Pope, suspended him in 1709, though Telekessy remained loyal to the independence movement, and sheltered priests who participated in Rákóczy's War. Finally, in 1711, the Pope restored him to his previous position. After that he began the construction of the Cathedral of Eger. His work is: Flores Precum Devotioni Piarum Mentium (Tyrnaviae, 1738). – B: 1230, 0883, 0945, T: 7103.→Bercsényi, Count Miklós; Kuruc; Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc.

Teleki Codex – A 16th century Hungarian language relic; a Franciscan manuscript of mixed content, it has 191 leaves. The following dates are listed in it: 1525, 1526, 1530, and 1531. The Codex is by four different hands. The first three parts are probably the work of one of the Clarissa nuns of Marosvásárhely (now Târgu Mureș, Romania). Their names are not known. The fourth scribe was a Franciscan monk, Ferenc (Francis) Sepsiszentgyörgyi, who lived in Buda after 1533. The Codex contains legends, parables, contemplations and monastic rules. The work is the earliest creation of Franciscan Codex Literature. Of the legends, the most prominent are the Anna Legend, the Legend of Adam and Eve, and the Life of St Macarius. The Codex is held in the Teleki Library in Marosvásárhely. – B: 1150, 1078, T: 7617.→Codex Literature.

Teleki, Countess Blanka (Blanche) (Hosszúfalva, now Sâcele, Transylvania, Romania, 5 July 1806 - Paris, France, 23 October 1862) – Pioneer of the Hungarian women's education. At a young age, she aspired to become an artist and studied painting in Munich and Paris, and sculpture in Buda. However, the influence of her aunt, Countess Teréz Brunszvik, persuaded her to choose women's education as her lifelong objective. To initiate her nationalistic girls' educational plans, she established in 1846 the first ever girls' high school in Pest, where the language of instruction was Hungarian. Specially trained teachers delivered the curriculum using modern methodology. János (John) Hanák, Klára (Clara) Leövey and Pál (Paul) Vasvári taught in her school. The school closed at the end of 1848, when she escaped with Klára (Clara) Leövey first to Debrecen, then to Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania), and finally to Szeged. She was an enthusiastic supporter of the 1848-1849 War of Independence and, after the surrender at Világos, she helped to hide exiles, and maintained contact with Hungarian emigrants in Paris. She was arrested on 13 May 1850, and sentenced by the military court to ten years prison term in 1852 for her activities during and after the war. She spent six years in the castles of Brünn, Olmütz, and Kufstein. On account of her illness, she was released on 11 May 1857, and subsequently lived mostly in Paris. – B: 1150, 1230, 0883, T: 7684.→Leövey, Klára; Vasvári, Pál; Brunszvik, Countess Teréz.

Teleki, Count Géza (Budapest, 27 November 1911 - Mathias, West Virginia, USA, 9 January 1983) – Geographer and geologist. He earned his Ph.D. in Geology at the University of Vienna in 1936. From 1936 to 1940, he worked as a geologist at the Geological Institute in Budapest. From 1940 to 1944, when northern Transylvania was returned to Hungary by the Second Vienna Award (1940), he was Professor of Geology at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and Head of the Institute of Economic Geography and Geology. In the fall of 1944, when Hungary was officially at war with the Soviet Union, he traveled to Moscow as a member of the leftist armistice commission and had talks with Soviet governmental commissioners between October and December 1944. From December 1944 until November 1945, he was Minister of Education in the eastern part of Hungary, in the city of Debrecen, already under Soviet military occupation. He was also President of the Bourgeois Democratic Party (Polgári Demokrata Párt), and Professor at the Faculty of Economics at the Budapest Polytechnic until the end of 1948. He emigrated to the USA in 1949. From 1950 to 1955, he was an assistant professor of Foreign Affairs Studies at the University of Virginia and from 1955 Professor of Geology at the University of Washington. Due to an incurable illness both he and his wife committed suicide. – B: 1672, T: 7456.→Vienna Award II.

Teleki, Count József (1) (Joseph) (Huszt, now Khust, Ukraine, 21 December 1738 - Szirák, 1 September 1796) – High state official. He was raised by Péter Bod, and later he studied at the Universities of Basel and Leyden, and visited Rousseau. In 1781, he was Judge of the Court of Appeals in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) and, from 1782, Lord Lieutenant of County Ugocsa. During the reign of King Joseph II (József) (1780-1790), he worked as Director of the School District of Pécs and, from 1795 he was Keeper of the Holy Crown. During the 1790 Diet, he was still siding with the anti-Habsburg opposition, but the influence of the French Revolution made him lean increasingly toward the Court. In a conservative Protestant spirit, he attacked the ideas of the Enlightenment represented by Voltaire, greeted the policy of religious tolerance introduced by King Joseph II, defending religion and the church, and he was one of the leaders of the Protestants. He was President of the Reformed Council of Buda in 1791. He purchased and complemented the library of Daniel Cornides, and also his valuable animal collection; he also built a mathematical and physics laboratory and wrote occasional poems. His hand-written and detailed diary, dealing with his travels abroad, is considered a valuable source of cultural history. His works include Essai sur la faiblesse des esprits-forts (1760), and Pillar of Friendship in Terms of Brotherly Love (Atyafüüi barátságának oszlopa), poem (1779). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Bod, Péter; József II, King.

Teleki, Count József (2) (Joseph) (Pest, 24 October 1790 - Pest, 15 February 1855) – Official, historian. After studying Law at the Universities of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and Pest, he served on the Council of the Lord Lieutenant of County Pest and, in 1810, that of Buda. In 1812, he went on a trip abroad and, for 2 years he studied at the University of Göttingen. Thereafter, he traveled in Germany, the Netherlands, Switzerland and Northern Italy. He returned to Hungary in 1815. In 1824 he became a Judge of the Royal Court of Appeals and General Superintendent of the Transilban Reformed Church District and the Reformed College of Sárospatak. In 1827 he became Lord Lieutenant of County Csanád, in 1830 that of County Szabolcs. In 1832, he was Counselor of the Viennese Hungarian Court Chancellery. Count Teleki participated in the organizing work for the establishment of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and from 1830 until his death, he was its first President. In 1840 he became Keeper of the Holy Crown and, in 1842, Governor of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). After the 1848-1849 Revolution and War of Independence, he withdrew from public life and devoted his time to science. At first he was engaged in linguistic problems, later he came out with publications on literature and history. Even after 25 years of intensive research, his great work, entitled: The Hunyady's Era in Hungary, vols. i-iv (Hunyadiak kora Magyarországon, I-IV) (1852-1854), remained unfinished. He donated his 25,000-volume library to the Academy of Sciences, thereby founding the Academy's Library. He ordered that, after his death, the interest on his foundations, the Teleki Prize, be used for rewarding dramatic works, developing the Academy's Library, especially its section on history. He was a member of the Academy of Sciences (director 1830, honorary 1838). His works also include Origin of János Hunyadi (Hunyadi János eredete) (1851), Archives (Okmánytár), altogether in 12 volumes, some published posthumously. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Teleki, Count László (2).

Teleki, Count László (1) (Ladislav) (Sziráki, 2 September 1764 - Pest, 21 March 1821) – Writer and poet. He studied at the Universities of Vienna and Göttingen. From his study trip in Western Europe he returned to Hungary in 1787. From 1789, he worked as an officer with a Seat of the Transylvanian Government. From 1792, he was a Judge of the Royal Transylvanian Court of Appeals; from 1819, a Judge of the Seven-member Court of Appeals. From 1803, he worked as Chief Curator of the Danubian Reformed Church District. He was President of the Preparatory Committee of the Scholars' Society. His book collection, in the form of a gift from his wife and son, József (1790-1855), formed the basis for the Library of the Academy of Sciences. He was also engaged with belles-letters and he pressed the importance of cultivating the use of the Hungarian language. One of his works is: Fervent Entreaties for the Promotion of the Hungarian Language (A magyar nyelv előmozdításáról buzgó esdeklései) (1806). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Teleki, Count József (2).

Teleki, Count László (2) (Ladislav) (Pest, 11 January 1811 - Pest, 8 May 1861) – Politician and writer. After his studies in Sárospatak, he attended University in Pest and Berlin, and started his career as a playwright during his younger years. His one significant work, the Favorite (Kegyenc), a historical drama, was staged in 1841. The Hungarian Academy of Sciences invited him to be a member in 1836. Soon he turned to political activities and became the most determined and outstanding member of the opposition in the Upper House in 1843 and 1844. In 1848, he became an independent Member of Parliament for the County of Pest. On September of 1848, the Hungarian Government appointed him Ambassador to Paris.

After the defeat of the 1848-1849 Revolution and War of Independence, he stayed in Paris to utilize his good connections in the interest of the Hungarian cause; with regards to the minority problem, his progressive opinion was beyond that of his government's, and he worked out a plan for confederation. He sought the help of the French Government for Hungary. The Austrian courts sentenced him to death in absentia and hanged him in effigy.

In the spring of 1859, Count Teleki established the Hungarian National Council with Lajos (Louis) Kossuth and György (George) Klapka in Genoa. In 1860, during his visit to Dresden, the Saxon police captured him and handed him over to Austria. Without a trial, he was jailed in Josephstadt. After eight months and in ill health, he was taken to the Royal Court, where the October Diploma was issued on 20 October 1860. Emperor Franz Joseph declared his freedom subject to three conditions: (1) He would refrain from traveling abroad; (2) He would sever his "hostile" connections; and (3) He would temporarily retire from politics. Teleki agreed to the terms. Soon after, he – being a nobleman – received a royal invitation to Parliament, where he was elected as a representative. In Parliament, he became leader of the Radical Resolution Party. The nobility – the leading political force – did not share his view concerning the minority problem and leaned toward conciliation with the Habsburgs. The realization of this situation may have led to his suicide one day before the opening parliamentary session. – B: 0883, 1136, 1020, T: 7644.→Kossuth, Lajos; Klapka, György; October Diploma.

Teleki, Count Mihály (Michael) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 1634 - Zernyest, now Zarnesti, Romania, 21 August 1690) – Political leader. As the son of a noble landowner family, he grew up in the court of the princes of Transylvania. In 1657 he participated in the military campaign in Poland as Captain of the Guard, and returned to Transylvania with Prince György (George) Rákóczi II (1648-1660); he later joined János (John) Kemény (1661-1662), who sent Count Teleki to Montecuccoli and to Vienna regarding the alliance with the Emperor. In 1662, he participated in the battle of Nagyszöllös (now Vynohradiv, Ukraine), his properties were confiscated, but after he joined Mihály (Michael) Apafi I (1662-1690), he was granted amnesty, and was appointed Captain of Kővár. After the Peace of Vasvár (1664), the Parliament sent him as the Emperor's representative to protest about the deleterious points of the Peace Treaty. He supported the covert organizing activity of Count Wesselényi and, after it was discovered, he demanded the help of the exiles in Transylvania. In this matter, he even conferred with French King Louis XIV. In 1672, the exiles elected him as their leader, confirmed by Mihály Apafi I. However, after the unsuccessful siege of Eperjes (now Presov, Slovakia), he retired and the exiles elected Count Imre Thököly as their leader. The offended Teleki then started to bargain with Emperor Lipót I. The weak Mihály Apafi I was Prince in name only; the authority was slowly assumed by Mihály Teleki, assisted by his relative, the wife of the prince. In 1665, he made a secret agreement with the Emperor, and committed himself to transfer the authority over Transylvania to the Emperor. In 1667, the armed forces of the Emperor occupied Transylvania and General Count Antonio Caraffa ruled the principality. Count Mihály Teleki, as the Chancellor of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), signed a declaration of homage on 9 May 1688, and swore allegiance to the Emperor. For this, the Emperor awarded him and his descendants the title of Count. The declaration of homage caused a public outcry in Transylvania, and he was accused of the annulment of the Principality's Constitution. Soon after the death of Mihály Apafi I, who also signed the declaration of homage, Count Imre Thököly entered Transylvania with an army with Turkish support, and attempted to topple the rule of the Emperor. Count Mihály Teleki, the Major General of the Field Armies, died in the battle of Zernyest. Teleki established the wealth of the family through huge estates that he bequeathed to his offspring. – B: 1078, 0883, 1138, T: 7644.→Vasvár Peace Treaty; Wesselényi Conspiracy; Thököly, Count Imre;

Teleki, Count Pál (Paul) (Budapest, 1 November 1879 - Budapest, 3 April 1941) – Geographer, politician and leading scout. After completion of his university studies in Budapest, he received a Ph.D. in Political Science in 1903; in 1904, he became a magistrate of the County of Szatmár, and later a Member of Parliament. Between 1909 and 1913, he was Director of the Geographic Institute, General Secretary, and Vice-President of the Hungarian Geographic Society. Before World War I, he took an extended study trip through Europe, North Africa and America. His scientific work was noticed abroad in 1909. Between 1909 and 1913, he was President of the Turán Society and of other organizations. He was the first Hungarian scientist to study society and economics in a geographic framework. Count Paul Teleki was a significant individual blessed with a wide intellectual horizon and progressive thinking in the science of geography. During the critical period in the history of his nation, he suspended his scientific work and entered the political arena.

At the time of the declaration of the Council (Soviet) Republic in Hungary in 1919, he was in Switzerland. First, he conducted organizational work in Vienna, and became a Minister in the nationalist government established by Admiral Miklós (Nicholas) Horthy in Szeged. He became a leader of the scientific office of the Bureau of Peace Preparations, and was a member of the Hungarian delegation at the Versailles-Trianon Dictated Peace Conference in 1920. In the same year, he was Minister of Foreign Affairs and, later, Prime Minister. In 1922 and 1923, as Commander-in-Chief of the Hungarian Scouts, he continued directing the Hungarian Scout movement. In 1926, he established the Political Science Institute, and in 1927, the Hungarian Revisionist League. His speeches at home and in European countries continued to press for the revision of the 1920 unjust Peace Treaty – within the context of a general European revision – which took away 2/3rd of the territory of Historic Hungary with it 3.3 million ethnic Hungarians. He was first to recognize the dangers posed by Germany, and struggled against its increasing influence. He organized international conferences in Hungary and invited well-known foreign experts to obtain their support for the Hungarian revision. In 1938, he was one of the leaders of the Hungarian delegation to the Czechoslovak-Hungarian conference in Komárom, and was an architect for the first revisionist agreement, spelled out in the First Vienna Award. Between 1939 and 1941, he served as Prime Minister for the second time.

At the outbreak of World War II – pursuing the policy of neutrality of Italy – Count Teleki refused the German request for a military passage through Hungary to Poland, maintained an “armed neutrality”, and allowed Polish refugees into the country. He protected lawful order against the attacks by the extreme right, and against attempts of German interference. He tried to reach an agreement with the Western powers to organize a united anti-Soviet front. However, German military successes in Western Europe and Italy’s entry into the war weakened his resistance. He signed a permanent Hungarian-Yugoslavian friendship agreement to neutralize Yugoslavia. After the 1941 anti-German events in Belgrade, Hitler demanded Hungary’s cooperation against Yugoslavia and offered possibilities for revision. Unable to find a solution, he committed suicide. Although his grandson confirmed that it indeed was a suicide, there are still doubts about its circumstances, and his death continues to be under investigation.

The world press reported on the event that seriously impacted upon the European political situation. Churchill made his famous comment on the radio: “At the Peace Conference, we have to leave an empty chair for Count Pál Teleki. This empty chair should caution the world that the Prime Minister of the Hungarian nation sacrificed himself for justice”. However, at the Paris Peace Conference in 1947, the promised chair was not there, just the reinstatement of the Trianon Peace Dictate of 1920. – B: 0883, 1123, 1020, T: 7644.→World War I, Hungary in; Council (Soviet) Republic of

Hungary; Trianon Peace Treaty; Revisionist Movement in Hungary; Vienna Award I; World War II, Hungary in; Paris Peace Treaty 1947.

Teleki, Count Sámuel (1) (? 17 November 1739 - Vienna, 7 August 1822) – Political leader – He dedicated the foreign travels of his youth to the collection of books. During the rule of Empress and Queen Maria Theresa (1740-1780), he served as Royal Chamblain, Lord Lieutenant of County Küküllő, and Government Councilor for Transylvania. During the rule of Emperor József II (Joseph) (1780-1790) – among other positions – he was Lord-Lieutenant of County Máramaros. During the rule of Emperor Lipót II (Leopold) (1747-1792), he was Chancellor of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) and Lord-Lieutenant of County Bihar. He became an honorary member of several foreign academies. He established – at considerable personal expense – the Teleki Library of Marosvásárhely (now Târgu Mureș, Romania) the Teleki Téka, housing 40,000 volumes, which he had personally collected since 1753. He published the catalogue of the library and collected the writings of Janus Pannonius in two volumes. – B: 1150, 0883, T: 7644.→Mária Terézia, Empress and Queen; József II, King; Janus Pannonius; Teleki Téka; Falka, Sámuel.

Teleki, Count Sámuel (2) (Sáromberke, 1 November 1845 - Budapest, 10 March 1916) – Geographical explorer. His secondary schooling was carried out privately, matriculating with distinction in the Reformed College of Debrecen. He studied Natural Science at the universities of Göttingen and Berlin, and then, following the customs of the times, he enlisted in the army and, within a few years, he reached the rank of Cavalry Major. In 1881, he resigned his military position and became a Member of Parliament. In Budapest, in this capacity, he became acquainted with Crown Prince Rudolf and his wife, Princess Stephanie, whom he invited bear-hunting in Transylvania (Erdély, now Romania), in the same year. Their common passion for the sport developed into a close friendship, the Crown Prince visiting Teleki's Transylvanian property annually thereafter.

In 1886, Count Teleki started out on his African expedition from Pangani, involving 300 men. On the suggestion of Crown Prince Rudolf, he took with him Ludwig Höhnel of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) (1857-1942) as the cartographer of the expedition. In the spring of the following year, they reached Mt. Meru (4,567 m) and Mt. Kilimanjaro (5,895 m), where he succeeded, for the first time, in climbing as high as 5,310 m altitude, reaching the snow line. In the fall of 1887, he studied Mt. Kenya (a group of peaks, such as Batian, 5,199 m, Nelion, 5,188 m, and Lenana, 4,985 m, the first among Africa explorers, where he reached the height of 4,680 m. In this region, he discovered a valley and a lake, which were named Teleki Valley and Lake Teleki. On 6 March 1888, he went as far as Mt. Nagira Mwaiten – as verified by the Turkana people –, then reached the lake known locally as Basso Marok (Black Lake), to which Teleki gave the name Lake Rudolf (now known as Lake Turkana). He also discovered a volcano, which was named Teleki Volcano. Shortly thereafter, he reached a smaller lake further northeast, which he named Lake Stephanie. They returned home to Transylvania in the spring of 1889 with a rich store of material collected in the field. The detailed history of the expedition was recorded by L. Höhnel in two volumes, and the expenses of the expedition were defrayed by Count Teleki from his private estate.

Teleki's expedition is of considerable importance in the history of the discovery of Africa. In a mainly unknown territory, he covered a distance of 3,000 km, thereby removing a sizeable blank area from the map of Africa. They collected a large amount of material, ethnographic objects obtained from 16 different native tribes, which formed the basis of the African collection of the Hungarian Ethnographic Museum. The discovery of the two large saline lakes, Lake Rudolf and Lake Stephanie, as well as the volcano Mt. Teleki, served eminently as a starting-point for the establishment of the new plate tectonic theory for the evolution of the Earth, which could explain how the Rift Valley system developed. The Teleki collection contributed numerous new zoological and botanical species to the natural sciences, especially some new chameleon species, as well as many new species of ferns, mosses and lichens in the international herbarium. Six flowering-plant species and one hepatic moss species are named after him, among them the best-known being Lobelia telekii found at 4,000 m altitude, and Senecio telekii from the slopes of Mt. Kilimanjaro.

In 1893, Teleki traveled to India, from there to the Indonesian Archipelago and to the Sunda Islands. At the turn of the century, he again joined public life, several times standing as Member of Parliament and taking an active role in its work. Having become known worldwide through his African discoveries, a number of scientific institutions and societies awarded him with honorary degrees. To his memory, a statue was erected at Érd (SW of Budapest) in the park of the Hungarian Geographical Museum. – B: 1134, 0883, 1614, 1153, T: 7456.→Teleki Lake; Teleki Valley; Teleki Volcano; Magyar, László; Kittenberger, Kálmán; Almásy, László Ede.

Teleki, Count Sándor (Alexander) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 27 January 1821 - Nagybánya, now Baia Mare, Romania, 18 April 1892) – Freedom fighter and army colonel. He attended school in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) in 1835, under the tutelage of Mihály (Michael) Táncsics. After he obtained his Law Degree, he took a study trip to Germany. He went to Spain, became involved in fighting with the followers of Don Carlos, and was captured and released after Ferdinand Lesseps interceded on his behalf. He returned to Germany, and later traveled throughout Italy with Franz Liszt.

Upon his return to Hungary, he became an admirer and friend of the poet, Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi, who spent his honeymoon with Júlia Szendrey at Teleki's mansion in Koltó. In 1848, he was Chief of Police of Kővárvidék, and participated in the 1848-1849 Revolution and War of Independence, first in the battles of South Hungary (Délvidék); then Lajos (Louis) Kossuth sent him to Transylvania, where he participated beside General József (József) Bem in several battles as a Major, and later as a Colonel. After the defeat, Count Teleki was sentenced to death, but escaped from the Arad prison, and went to Belgrade and then to Istanbul. The despotic Habsburg regime hanged him in effigy. Between 1853 and 1856, he participated in the Crimean War, and then went to Paris. Because of his republican sentiments, Napoleon III exiled him to the Island of Jersey, and later to the island of Guernsey, where he lived with Victor Hugo. In 1859, as a member of the Hungarian Legion, he fought in the army of Guiseppe Garibaldi, and distinguished himself in the battles of Naples and Sicily. After the Compromise with Austria in 1867, he returned to Hungary and lived on his regained estates; he published numerous memoirs of varied lengths and was a founding member of the Hungarian Historical Society. – B: 0883, 1031, 1614, T: 7644.→Kossuth, Lajos; Táncsics, Mihály; Liszt, Ferenc; Petőfi, Sándor; Szendrey, Júlia; Bem, József; Italy, Hungarian Legion in.

Teleki Family (Teleki család) – One of the most prominent aristocratic families of Hungary, including Transylvania. The family enjoys the rank of Count of the Holy Roman Empire. Among its members, there are a great variety of different titles and ranks. The best-known include Mihály (Michael) Teleki (1634-1690) as chancellor and founder of the family's wealth; Sámuel Teleki (1739-1822) chancellor of Transylvania; Ádám Teleki (1740-1792) poet, translator of literary works, Lord Lieutenant of County Doboka, governmental councilor of Transylvania; József (Joseph) Teleki (1790-1855) writer of history, regent of Transylvania; Blanka (Blanche) Teleki (1806-1862) one of the pioneers of women's education and believer in the equal cultural rights of women; Sámuel Teleki (1845-1916) well-known traveler and discoverer, Africa explorer, his name being enshrined in the Teleki volcano of East Africa; Pál (Paul) Teleki (1879-1941) researcher in geography and politician, also Prime Minister of Hungary. The Teleki estate included, among others, the Teleki Collection (Téka) of 40,000 volumes of Marosvásárhely (now Târgu Mureș, Romania), which was bestowed on the town by the Transylvanian Chancellor Sámuel Teleki. A significant donation of the family was its offer of the family's library for founding the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1825. – B: 1031, 1078, T: 7456. → Teleki, Count Mihály; Teleki, Count Sámuel (1)(2); Teleki, Count József; Teleki, Countess Blanka; Teleki, Count Pál; Teleki Téka.

Teleki Lake, Kenya – A mountain lake of glacial origin, south of the central peak region of Mount Kenya, in a valley surrounded by the Shipton, Tilma and Sommerfelt peaks, at about 4,360 m altitude. Its diameter is 300-350 m. The flow-off, after tumbling over a moraine-bar, spills down into the Teleki Valley and flows into the Northern Naro Moru Creek. It received its name from its discoverer, Count Sámuel Teleki, who first caught sight of it in 1887 after reaching the high point called Höhnel Peak. The appellation originates from English cartographers. – B: 1614, T: 7456.→Teleki, Count Sámuel.

Teleki Songbook – A 17th century songbook containing predominantly love songs, which included works composed between 1655 and 1660. It is actually made up of five individual books that were bound into one volume only in the 19th century. Ferenc (Francis) Barakonyi composed one of the songs; the rest are by anonymous composers. The part containing the majority of the songs was copied around 1655. It was found in the collection of Teleki Téka. It is in the collection of the University Library of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca in Romania) – B: 1136, T: 7617.→Teleki Téka.

Teleki Téka -- Famous Library at Marosvásárhely Transylvania, now Târgu Mureș, Romania) – Originally it was the private collection of Count Sámuel Teleki (1739-1822), containing some 40,000 volumes, and it was donated by him to the city of Marosvásárhely, his birthplace, together with a suitable building to house this collection. Later, the large book collection of the Protestant Bólyai High School was also added to it. Today, it includes about 200,000 books and gives a representative survey of the sciences between the 15th and the 19th centuries. It is one of the richest treasures of European culture in Transylvania. The renowned English writer Patrick Leigh Fermor, who traveled in Transylvania in 1933, wrote the following lines about the Library: “It is full of princeps editions, incunabula and manuscripts of the classics, all beautifully displayed in a small palace. It has the atmosphere of the Bodleian or Florence or Coimbra, a sudden marvelous draft of civilization. The place is scrupulously looked after by scholarly librarians and totally unaltered” (The Daily Telegraph, 12 May 1990). Today, the building needs urgent repairs. In 1993, the “Teleki-Téka-Foundation” was established in Basel, Switzerland, for the purpose of restoring and giving support to the Teleki Library. – B: 1092, T: 7103.→Teleki, Count Sámuel (1).

Teleki Valley, Kenya – A valley of glacial origin on the western side of Mt. Kenya, which was named after Count Sámuel Teleki, who passed through it. The appellation originates from English cartographers, on the grounds that it was Teleki, who was the first among the European explorers to investigate the area in 1887. The upper (above 4,600 m) reaches of the valley are occupied by the Lewis Glacier, the melted water of which forms the Northern Naro Moru Creek, which flows along the bottom of the valley, finally discharging onto the African savannah. Halfway along the valley, at an altitude of 4,300 m, a hospice (Teleki Lodge) was established, which was also named after Samuel Teleki as an expression of appreciation by the Kenyan people. – B: 1020, 1614, T: 7456.→Teleki, Count Sámuel (2).

Teleki Volcano, Kenya – In the Turkana language Nagira Mwaiten (Split Twain Mountain), south of Lake Rudolf (Lake Turkana), along the East African Rift Valley; an active volcano, 646 m high, discovered and entered on a map by Count Sámuel Teleki (1845-1916) on 6 March 1888. The volcano was given the name ‘Teleki’ by Höhnel the cartographer and it still bears that name on maps. – B: 1020, 1614, T: 7456.→Teleki, Count Sámuel (2).

Telepi, György (George) (Kisléta, 1797 - Tard, 12 August 1885) – Actor, scenery painter, theater technician, translator and playwright. He joined the actors’ company of Károly (Charles) Megyeri in Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, Romania) in 1818. From 1820, he was employed as a painter and theater technician. In 1825, he was a member of the Parliamentary Company of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). He was a leading actor in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) during the years 1829 to 1833, and was the University’s Chief Scenery Technician at the Castle Theater of Buda (Várszínház) between 1833 and 1839. He became a founding member of the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház), Pest, and also its overseer of actors and stage decoration from 1837 to 1839. During the years of the “opera-war”, he played in the countryside. Finally, he became a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) in Pest from 1841 to 1855. After his retirement, Telepi worked as a village magistrate in Diósgyőr, later in Tibolddaróc. He was one of the handymen of strolling players; he designed and developed stages. In 1834 he prepared a design for the Hungarian Theater of Pest; in 1847 he rebuilt the stage of the theater of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). In 1854 he constructed a stage in Szabadka (now Subotica, Serbia), and also decorated the auditorium there. He planned and painted stage props for the Theater of Arad (now in Romania) in 1847, and the Theater of Miskolc in 1857. He also prepared technical spectacles (misty scenes). He was the author of six original works and 21 adaptations. On stage, he was a popular comic actor. His roles included Szokol in Birch-Pfeiffer's The Forest of Szeben (A szebeni erdő); Miklós in Topfer's Fashion of the World (Világ divatja); town crier in K. Kisfaludy's Rebels (Pártütők); Ugróczi in I. Jakab's Village Marriage Feast (Falusi lakodalom), and Limit in Goldoni's Servant of Two Masters (Két úr szolgája). – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Telkes, Mária (Budapest, 12 December 1900 - Budapest, 2 December 1995) – Physical chemist and solar engineer. Her higher studies were at University of Budapest, from where she obtained a Degree in Chemistry in 1920, and her Ph.D. in physical chemistry in 1924. She emigrated to and settled in the United States in 1925. After working as a biophysicist for the Cleveland Clinic Foundation for twelve years, she went to the research laboratories of Westinghouse Electric Corporation. Between 1939 and 1953, she was at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) as a research associate in metallurgy. In 1939, she took a position in solar energy research and development there and became an Associate Research Professor in 1945 in the field of metallurgy. It was at MIT that she became widely known for her research in solar energy. In 1948, Telkes designed the heating system for an experimental solar-heated house in Dover, Massachusetts, which is still in use today. The heating system captured and stored solar energy chemically through the crystallization of a sodium sulfate solution, then distributed the heat by fans. In 1953, Telkes developed a solar oven. In the same year, she moved to the New York University College of Engineering where she established a laboratory for solar energy research. From there she joined the Curtiss-Wright Company as Director of the firm's solar energy laboratory. She moved on to Cryo-Therm, working on space- and sea-proof materials from 1961 to 1963, before moving on to Melpar, Inc., where she served as Director of the Company's solar energy laboratory until 1969. At that time, Telkes returned to Academia as a researcher at the University of Delaware's Institute of Energy Conversion. During World War II, she designed a distilling system, which used solar heat to convert seawater into drinking water. When interest in solar energy grew in the 1970s, she participated in constructing her second house, the Carlisle Solar House in Massachusetts, in 1980. Telkes is regarded as one of the founders of solar thermal storage systems. She became known as the "Sun Queen". She received the Achievement Award of the Society of Women Engineers in 1952, and the Charles Greeley Abbot Award in 1977. – B: 1081, 0969, 1031, T: 7103, 7456.

Teller, Edward (Ede) (Budapest, 15 January 1908 - Stanford, California, 9 September 2003) – Physicist. After completing his high school studies at the Trefort Street Model High School in Budapest, he first studied chemistry at the Polytechnic of Budapest. From 1926, he continued his studies first at the Technical University of Karlsruhe (1926-1928), then at the University of Munich (1928). He then went to Leipzig and worked with Heisenberg and obtained his Ph.D. in Physics. Teller worked as a research associate at the University of Göttingen from 1931 to 1933. In 1934, he was on a Rockefeller fellowship at the University of Copenhagen, after which he became a lecturer at the University of London during 1934 and 1935. In 1935 he emigrated to the USA, where he first worked as Professor of Physics at George Washington University in Washington, DC (1935-1941), later at Columbia University (1941-1942). During World War II, he was involved as a physicist in the research and development of the first atomic bomb, while working at the Metallurgical Laboratory of the University of Chicago, later at the Argonne National Laboratory, then at the Los Alamos Science Laboratory. After the war, he was Professor of Physics at the Universities of Chicago (1946-1952) and California (1953-1960). He served as an assistant director of the Los Alamos Laboratory (1949-1952); as an Associate Director, then Director of the Lawrence Livermore Radiation Laboratory (1954-1975) and as Chairman of the Department of Applied Science at the Davis and Livermore Campus (1965-1966). After his retirement in 1975, he continued his association with the University and the laboratory as professor emeritus, and became a senior research fellow at Stanford's Hoover Institute. Teller made significant contributions in chemistry, in molecular and nuclear physics, and in the practical applications of thermonuclear principles and the development of thermonuclear weapons. He took part in the development of the first atomic bomb and was a member of the research quartet led by Enrico Fermi, which included three other Hungarian physicists, John von Neumann, Leo Szilárd and Eugene Wigner, known for establishing the first nuclear chain reaction. He was also instrumental in making possible the first successful US hydrogen bomb explosion on 1 November 1952. He is referred to as the "father of the hydrogen bomb". He is the author and co-author of a number of books and monographs, including The Structure of Matter (with F. Owen Rice, 1949); The Reluctant Revolutionary (1964); Energy: A Plan for Action (1975), and Better a Shield than a Sword (1987). He received numerous awards and distinctions, including over twenty medals, the Albert Einstein Prize (1958), the Enrico Fermi Prize (1962), the Nobel Peace Prize (1991), the Hungarian Corvin-Chain (1991), the Middle Cross with Star of Merit of Republic of Hungary (1994), the U.S. Presidential Medal of Freedom (2003), and received honorary doctorates from 21 universities, and was elected to academies of science, including the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1990. – B: 1138, 1153, 1672, T: 7456.→Szilárd, Leo; Neumann, John von; Wigner, Eugene Paul.

Tellurium (Te) – A semi-metallic element with metallic luster. It is very brittle and pulverizes easily. When heated in air, it burns with a bluish-green flame into tellurium dioxide. It is rare in native form. It forms grey-whitish crystals and occurs chiefly in gold and silver ores. Its compounds are used in glass and ceramic coloring. It was discovered by Baron Francis Joseph (Ferrenc József) Müller at Nagyszeben (Sibiu, Transylvania, now in Romania) in 1784. It is the only chemical element discovered in Hungary. – B: 1138, 0726, T: 7674.

Telmányi, Emil (Arad, now in Romania, 22 June 1892 - Holte, Denmark, 13 June 1988) – Violinist. From 1905 to 1911, he studied under Jenő (Eugene) Hubay (violin), János (John) Koessler (composition) and Viktor Herzfeld (chamber music), and obtained an Artist's Diploma from the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. As a violinist, he began his career in Berlin in 1911; from 1912, he was already giving concerts Europe-wide as soloist and as chamber musician. He established his reputation on various European and American concert tours. From 1919, he was active abroad as an opera and concert conductor, and it was in such capacity that he introduced himself to the Budapest public in 1927. After 1929, he headed his own itinerant Chamber Orchestra. From 1919 he lived in Copenhagen, but for many years he appeared in Hungary almost yearly. From 1940 to 1969, he was a lecturer at the Århus Conservatory of Music. In a 1949 concert, while performing J.S. Bach's solo-violin works, he played with an arched bow (the Bach-bow) to execute the chord playing more easily. He was an outstanding representative of modern Hungarian violin playing, with extraordinary imagination and performing with deep feeling. He always served the popularization of Hungarian music. In Béla Bartók's works for violin, Telmányi was an interpreter of convincing force and a successful propagator of Hungarian national music until his death. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456. → Hubay, Jenő; Koessler, János; Bartók, Béla.

Temes, Judit (Tuider, Dr. Gyuláné Gorácz) (Sopron, 20 October 1930 - ) – Swimmer and physician. She pursued her medical studies at the Budapest University of Medical Sciences, obtaining a Doctorate in 1955. In 1999, she also completed her legal studies and became a lawyer. She worked at the Institute of Pathological Anatomy and Cancer Research (Kórbonctani és Rákkutató Intézet), and the Scientific Institute of Neurosurgery (Országos Idegsebészeti Tudományos Intézet), and later at the László Hospital (László Kórház) in Budapest. From 1980 she was Chief Physician at the Korányi Hospital (Korányi Kórház). She started swimming at the age of seven. From 1945, she competed in clubs in Budapest. She was Hungarian Champion twelve times. From 1947, she was a member of the national select team. In 1952, at the Helsinki Olympic Games, she was a member of the victorious fast relay at 100 m, with a world record. In 1954 in Turin, she became European Champion in the relay. She also participated at the 1956 Summer Olympic Games in Melbourne, and she achieved a high placing in the fast relay. Between 1976 and 1995, she was a member of the Technical Committee of the European Swimming Association. After retiring in 1994, she became a professional consultant. She is a legal representative of the sick in Újpest and Rákospalota (suburbs of Budapest). She is a life-long Honorary Member of the Presidency of the Hungarian Swimming Association. – B: 2111, T: 7684.

Temesi, Ferenc (Francis) (Szeged, 30 November 1949 - ) – Writer, dramatist, translator of literary works and scenarist. His higher education is from the University of Szeged, where he majored in Hungarian and English Literature (1968-1974). In 1971, he pursued further studies at the University of London. From 1975, he was a freelance writer. From 1975, he was on a Zsigmond (Sigismund) Móricz scholarship. In 1983, he took part in the Poetry World Festival. In 1988, he went on a study trip to China and, in 1991, he participated in the work of the International Prose Writers World Symposium in Mexico. His works include Dust, vols. i,ii (Por, I, II) novel (1986-1987); Pejote, novelette (1992); Híd (Bridge) novel (1993); Pest, novel (1996); Royal Sacrifice (Királyáldozat) novel (2000), and Loan Time, vols. i,ii (Kölcsön Idő, I-II), novel (2005-2006). He has been Vice President of the Magyar Pen Club (2001), a member of the Committee of the Hungarian Writers' Association, and a member of the Hungarian Artists' Academy since 2004. Temesi is regarded as one of the outstanding figures of contemporary Hungarian literature. Among his awards are the Attila József Prize (1988), the Lajos Nagy Prize (1992), the Book of the Year Prize (1993), and the Pro Literatura Prize (2002). – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7456.

Temessy, Hédi (Temesi Hedvig) (Budapest, 6 May 1925 - Budapest, 29 May 2001) – Actress. After completing the State Teachers' Institute, she completed the drama studies at the School of the National Actors' Association in 1948. Until 1958, she was an actress of the Artist Theater (Művész Színház), the Inner City Theater, the Petőfi and Attila József Theaters (Belvárosi, Petőfi, József Attila Színházak) and a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. From 1958 to 1977 she played at the Jókai, National, and later at the Thália Theaters (Jókai, Nemzeti, Thália Színházak). From 1977 she was a member of the Hungarian Film Studio Company. She retired in 1985. Early in her career she played mainly ingénue roles; later she became an outstanding character actress. Her roles included Timea in M. Jókai's The Golden Man (Az aranyember); Márta in G. Csiky's The Grandma (A nagymama), and Clara Zachanassian in Dürrenmatt's The Visit (Der Besuch der alten Dame – Az öreg hölgy látogatása). Temessy appeared in more than 50 feature films, including A Peculiar Marriage (Különös házasság) (1951); Bitter Truth (Keserű igazság) (1956); One And a Half Million (Másfél millió) (1964); 74 Bastion Promenade (Bástyasétány 74) (1974); Mirror Reflections (Tükörképek) (1976); Perhaps Tomorrow (Majd holnap) (1979); Without a Trace (Nyom nélkül) (1981); Job's Rebellion (Jób lázadása) (1983), and Miss Arizona (1988). She was awarded the Merited Artist title (1982), the Best Female Performer (1985), and the Officer's Cross of the Order of Merit of the Hungarian Republic. (1995). – B: 1445, 1504, T: 7456.

Temesvár (Timișoara, now in Romania) – One-time royal free-town, seat of former County (Județ) Temes, in the Banat area of former Southern Hungary (Southland) of Historic Hungary of the Carpathian Basin. It is the cultural and economic center of the Banat, situated on the Bega Canal in a swampy environment. Its population was 53,033 in 1901 (27,051 of whom were Swabian Germans and 18,624 Magyars; largely Roman Catholics); 91,866 in 1930 (35% Germans, 31 % Magyars, 19% Romanians); 146,988 in the 1970s; 332,277 in 1997 and 303,200 in 2006. It is an industrial center producing textiles, machinery, electrical appliances and chemicals. It is also a busy railway junction. The town has lively commercial life and trade, especially in grain crops. The town is a Roman Catholic and a Greek Orthodox Episcopal see, and has a University, founded in 1945, as well as other institutions of higher education. There is also a forestry college. The city has boulevards, replacing former ramparts; the Parish Church of the town center dates from 1755. The Roman Catholic cathedral (1736-1773), the Greek Orthodox cathedral (1748), the Town Hall (built 1731-1734), the Baroque County Hall (1754) and other important buildings date from the 18th century; there are four monasteries, a theater (combined with a hotel, built in 1869), a museum (with valuable collections), a hunting museum, and several hospitals. In the southern suburb, there is the central railway station and the Maria statue (by Zsigmond Kisfaludi Stróbl), erected on the site of the execution of György Dózsa (the leader of the peasant uprising of 1514). A neighboring suburb has a very old Romanian church, built in 1727, and the Polytechnic of Temesvár, founded by Romanians. The industrial suburb is in the north, which also housed the church of the Hungarian Millennium (work of Miklós Ybl), the waterworks, and the riverside baths.

By means of the navigable Béga Canal, the town is connected with the River Danube. The site of the town was an ancient Roman settlement. It was soon settled by the Magyars after the Carpathian settlement led by Khagan (Leader) Árpád (896-907). It became an important southern frontier fortress from 1010. The name of the town is first mentioned in a letter as Castrum Temesiense, dated 1212. Kings Károly (Charles) Robert and Lajos I (Louis the Great) often sojourned here, and King Sigismund held his diet in 1397. György (George) Dózsa was executed here in 1514. The fortress of the town was heroically defended by István (Stephen) Losonczy in 1552; but the attacking Turkish forces took it eventually and held it from 1552 until Prince Eugen von Savoy expelled the Turks from Hungary with his great victory on the fields of Zenta (Bácska area) near the Tisza River, on 11 September 1697, thereby freeing Hungary from the Ottoman Turkish occupation, though the Turks hung on to the town until 1716. During these 264 years, the town was the seat of the Vilajet of Temesvár. The Treaty of Pošarevac (Passarowitz), 21 July 1718 formally restored it to Austria-Hungary. The Austrian government had the fort of Temesvár extensively strengthened into a powerful fortress. In 1751, Empress and Queen Maria Theresa placed it under civil authority, and Joseph II made it a royal free town in 1781. Throughout the Hungarian War of Independence of 1848-1849, the Austrians held it. Hungarian forces, led by the great General Count Károly (Charles) Vécsey, besieged the fortress from 25 April 1849 until the Imperial General Haynau's victory over the forces of Generals Bem and Dembinski relieved the siege on 9 August 1849. During the Serbian campaign of World War I in the autumn of 1915, Temesvár was the headquarters of German General Mackensen. In the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920) it passed to Romania in 1921 and, since then, it has been continuously under Romanian rule (it was not returned to Hungary in 1940, when northern Transylvania was returned by the Second Vienna Award until 1945). The Romanian Revolution on 18 December 1989, which toppled the Communist Ceausescu regime, began in Temesvár. – B: 1031, 1068, 1582, 1789, 1816, 7456; T: 7456.→Most of the persons have their own entry; Savoyenor, Eugen von; Tőkés, László.

Temesvári, István (Stephen) (16th century) – Composer of verse-chronicles. He was a schoolmaster in Telegd. He wrote a lengthy verse-chronicle in 1569 about the 1479 Battle of Kenyérmező, based on the work of Bonfini. The song first appeared in Gáspár Heltai's Cancionalé in 1574. Temesvári published it independently in 1579 in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). – B: 1150, T: 7617.→Kenyérmező, Battle of; Bonfini, Antonio; Heltai, Gáspár.

Temesvári, Pelbárt O.F.M. (Pál) (Oszvárd) (Pelbartus de Themesvar) (? , around 1435 - Buda, 22 January 1504) - Franciscan monk, church writer and orator. In 1458, he studied at the University of Krakow. Around 1464, he joined the Franciscan Order. In 1483, he taught Theology at the Franciscan Monastery of Buda. Between 1789 and 1790, he suffered the plague epidemic several times, but he miraculously recovered. On the last occasion, he wrote a series of sermons entitled Stellarium coronae Beatae Mariae Virginis (Boldogságos Szűz Mária csillagkoronája; The Starry Crown of the Blessed Virgin Mary;) (1483). In 1496, he was Prior at the Monastery of Esztergom; later he went to Buda. His collection of speeches was prepared for the monks, who were working among the simple folk. He became a figure known everywhere in the medieval literature of Europe. His works appeared in published form till the end of the 16th century, and were known all over Europe. His other works include Pomerium (Sermones Pomerii; Gyümölcsös kert), the source of many legends (1499); Expositio libri Psalmorum, vols. i,ii,iii (Explanations of the Psalms, I,II,III) (1504), and Aureum Rosarium Theologiae (Theological Encyclopedia) (1503-1508). He was a follower of Scholasticism in the age of the Renaissance. – B: 0883, 0945, T: 7456.

Temesváry, Lajos (Louis) (Érpele, 1841, ? - Debrecen, 9 June 1909) – Actor and theater manager. He first entered the stage in the Theater of György (George) Molnár in 1860. He was the popular lyric actor, heroic lover and dramatic drawing-room actor at the theaters of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) and Debrecen. From the late 1860s, he also worked as a manager. After the staging of his comedy, he was engaged by the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Pest, but he only stayed one year. From 1873 till 1879, he was a theater manager. During 1879–1884, he was engaged again as an actor, playing at the Theater of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). In 1881 he fought a duel with his actor partner, Béla Szombathelyi, who was fatally injured; Temesváry was sentenced to eighteen months imprisonment and he never returned to his theatrical career. His roles included Miklós Zrinyi in M. Jókai's Martyrs of Szigetvár (Szigetvári vértanúk); André in M. Sardou's Fernande; Nyárai in E. Szigligeti's Shadows of Light (A fény árnyai); Ádám in I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája); Vazul in Dobsa's Stephen I (I. István), and Károly Moor in F. Schiller's The Robbers (Haramiák). His wife, Irma Farkas, was a comic and dramatic actress, who entered the theater in 1877; her best-known roles were Mrs. Mákony in G. Csiky's Proletarians (Proletárok), and Katherina in Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew (A makrancos hölgy) – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Tempfli, József (Joseph) (Csanálos, Transylvania, 9 April 1931 - ) – Roman Catholic Bishop. He completed his high school education in Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, Romania) in 1950. He obtained a Degree in Education, majoring in Russian at the Maxim Gorkij Institute, Bucharest. He taught Russian in Tenke in County Bihar, Transylvania. From 1956 he studied at the Seminary of Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia, Romania), where Bishop Áron Márton ordained him on 31 May 1962. Thereafter, he worked as a parish priest in Tasnád (1979) and Nagyvárad-Olaszi (1981). In 1982 he became a titular abbot. Pope John Paul II appointed him Bishop of Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania) on 14 March 1990, and he was consecrated and enthroned on 26 April. He retired in 2008. He chaired the Ethical Board of the World Federation of Hungarians (1994-2000). For his steadfast work for ethnic Hungarians in Romania, as well as for his outspokenness in the spirit of freedom, he received numerous recognitions, including the Hungarian Freedom Day Prize in 2009, and the Life Prize in 2010. He received Hungarian citizenship in 2011. – B: 0896, 0945, T: 7456. → Márton, Áron; Várad Bishopric.

Templars, Knights of (milites, templi, fratres templi, templarii) – A religious military order, founded by Hugo of Payns in 1119 from a handful of knights in Jerusalem, in order to provide protection to the pilgrims on their way to the Holy City of Jerusalem. Balduin II, King of Jerusalem, donated a part of his palace to them, adjacent to the old temple, hence their name – Templars. They wore a white robe with a red cross on the front and on the back. Pope Honorius II acknowledged the Order in 1127, and the Synod of Troyes I, imposed upon them the rules of St. Bernard. In the beginning, the Order was poor – sometimes two knights rode on one horse. For the services rendered in the protection of the Holy Land, they received gifts from the pilgrims and the Order became rich, even very rich. The Order grew in members and in influence, especially in the Near East. They established themselves in many European countries. The center of the Order was first in Jerusalem, then in Cyprus, finally in France. Philip IV, King of France, indicted the Order in 1305, accusing them with blasphemy, heresy and immorality. Pope Clemens V suppressed the Order in 1311-1312 and many of its members suffered martyrdom. Their property was taken over by the sister order, the Johannites.

In Hungary, the Order settled early; in 1169, they established a Monastery in Vrana, in the vicinity of Zára (now Zadar, Dalmatia, Croatia). They also had a monastery in Székesfehérvár. Later, they had 8-10 monasteries in Hungary, and even kings were among their guests. King Béla IV of Hungary spent the Easter festivals with them in 1245. Kings Béla II, András II, Béla IV, and László IV helped them to set roots in the country. They accompanied King András II on the 5th Crusade (1217-1218). In the battle of Muhi in 1241 against the invading Mongol-Tartars, most of the knights died; only a handful accompanied King Béla IV to the Dalmatian coast; the Order became suppressed.

More recently, the Order of the Templars became reorganized. In 1944, the Hungarian Chapter escaped to the West, and Sándor (Alexander) Széll, who lived in Mexico, led them until 1982. In 1982 Pál Tomori, Anglican Archbishop of Simoto, took over the leadership of the Order. In 1994, he repatriated the Order to Hungary. On his initiative the Grand Master of the Order established a Hungarian Priory for the Hungarian members of the Order living abroad, mainly in North America, and Attila Egyed of Calgary was appointed its prior. – B: 1153, 1020, 1095, T: 7103.→Knights Hospitaller.

Temple Ring Prehistoric People – Excavations reveal that in the burial pits of the 5th to 13th centuries AD, on the temples of human skulls are present bronze, silver and sometimes gold rings, usually in pairs. One of the ends is flattened and curled. It is not known for certain whether the many jewelry pieces were sewn onto fur caps or onto ribbons and braided into the hair. The earliest of these occurrences was noted in the Carpathian Basin with the appearance of the Huns. Abroad, the earliest of these occurrences originates from the 7th century AD. – B: 0942, 1078, T: 7676.

Térey-Smith, Mary (Budapest, 4 December 1933 - ) – Conductor and musicologist. Trained at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest, she studied orchestral conducting and composition with János (John) Ferencsik, János Viski, folk music with Zoltán Kodály, orchestration with Ferenc (Francis) Farkas, piano with István (Stephen) Antal, and music history with Bence Szabolcsi. After graduation at 19, she was engaged as resident conductor of the Tatabánya Symphony Orchestra (1953-1956). Forced to leave the country following the 1956 Revolution, she emigrated to Canada, where she divided her time between teaching in Montreal and coaching at the Opera School in Toronto (1957-1964). She undertook graduate studies at the University of Vermont, MA. (1964), and Rochester, NY, and was awarded her Ph.D. in Musicology in 1971 by the Eastman School of Music, University of Rochester, New York. Between 1967 and 2001, Térey-Smith was a member of the Music Faculty of Western Washington University in Bellingham, WA, as head of the music history/musicology programs, as well as directing the Opera Workshop (1967-75). In 1970, she founded the Collegium Musicum, an early-music group. The Ensemble quickly developed as the leading University Ensemble in Washington State. In addition to performances in the North-West US, and in Canada, the Collegium toured in Europe six times between 1990 and 2000, giving concerts in Hungary, Italy, Austria, Switzerland, Lichtenstein, Slovakia and Romania. She was (and still is) active as a musicologist, focusing on Baroque and Early Classical operas, orchestral works, and various vocal repertoires. She has published in various periodicals, edited music scores, written book reviews, and contributed a large number of essays for the New Revised Grove Dictionary of Music (2001). Since 1995, she has a regular association with the Hungarian early music orchestra, the Capella Savaria of Szombathely, Hungary. With them she recorded several CDs for Naxos, Dorian Records and Centaur (US) labels. She also took the Capella to a number of successful international tours, among these appearances were a concert in Köthen, Germany, at the Bach Hall (2001), and a special premier in Zerbst, Germany, at the restored Lutheran Church, where they presented the 20th century premier of an 18th century work by Johann Friedrich Fasch, as part of the Festival celebrating the composer. Although now retired from her university position, Mary Térey-Smith continues her activities both as a conductor and as a musicologist. – B&T: 7617.→Capella Savaria; Ferencsik, János; Viski, János; Kodály, Zoltán; Farkas, Ferenc; Szabolcsi, Bence; Kalló, Zsolt.

Terényi, Ede (Edward) (Marosvásárhely, now Târgu Mureș, Romania, 12 March 1935 -) – Musicologist, composer. He studied at the Gh. Dima Music Academy of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), graduating in 1958. From 1958 he was a lecturer at the Academy of Music in composition, counterpoint, music theory, music dramaturgy and opera production. He obtained a Ph.D. in Music in 1983. His works include Will Music Remain Music? (Zene marad-e a zene?) (1978), and Flowers of Hajta (Hajta virágai), monograph (1995). His essays, critiques and studies appear in learned journals, mainly on topics of the theory of harmony in modern music, and on the developmental history of European music through generations. He composed 150 orchestral, choral and chamber-music works, 14 concertos, a number of church music works and an oratorio. His compositions have been performed by the symphony orchestras of Budapest, London, Moscow, Paris, Vienna, etc. He is a member of the Hungarian Art Academy. He was awarded the George Enescu Prize in 1980 and the Bartók-Pásztory Prize in 1994. – B: 1036, T: 7456.

Terkán, Lajos (Louis) (Székesfehérvár, 26 April 1877 - Budapest, 26 March 1940) – Astronomer. He graduated with a Dip. Ed. in Mathematics and Physics from the University of Budapest. He began to work at that University in 1900. At the same time, he became an associate, and from 1912 an observer of the astronomic observatory of Ógyalla. In that year, he acquired the qualification of an honorary lecturer (privatdozent). Between 1921 and 1935, he worked at the Astronomic Observatory of Svábhegy, Budapest, and retired as a chief observer. He was active in several areas of astronomy; studied the movement of the sun, and produced significant results regarding the measurement of the temperature of stars. During the last years of his activities, he also photographed asteroids. The principal area of his activities was astro-photometry, in which he published significant observational material. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7674. → Astronomy in Hungary.

Tersánszky, Józsi Jenő (Joe, Eugene) (Nagybánya, now Baia Mare, Romania, 12 September 1888 - Budapest, 12 June 1969) – Writer and recording artist; he completed his High School studies in Nagybánya, read Law in Eperjes (now Presov, Slovakia) and at the University of Budapest. Thereafter he worked as an unskilled laborer in Budapest. His first work appeared in the journal West (Nyugat). He served in World War I as a volunteer, was held prisoner of war in Italy, and returned to Hungary in 1919. As a writer, his main theme was people on the margin of society. He wrote in the language of folk-tales. He could not publish between 1950 and 1955 for political reasons. A selection from his writings includes Marci Kakuk (Kakuk Marci) novel-series (1923-1937); The Alpine Gigolo (A havasi selyemfiú) novel (1925); Legend about the Paprikash Rabbit (Legenda a nyúlpaprikásról) novel (1936); Story of a Hand Cart (Egy kézikocsi története) novel (1949); Confidentially about Great Shadows (Nagy árnyakról bizalmasan) reminiscences (1962), and Stories of My Life (Életem regényei), memoirs (1968). His collected works were published posthumously in 20 volumes. He is an outstanding example of 20th century Hungarian prose writing. He was the recipient of the Baumgarten Prize (1929, 1930, 1931, 1934) and the Kossuth Prize in 1949. – B: 0881, 0878, 0877, 1031, T: 7103.

Tertiary Period – During this period, which began 65 million years ago and lasted more than 63 million years, the volcanoes erupted in the Carpathian Basin, forming all the andesitic and basaltic mountains. The first eruption occurred in the Eocene epoch and continued in the Oligocene. The volcanism produced ash first, followed by the extrusion of the basaltic tuff and lava, ending in post-volcanic geysers and fumaroles. The basalts north of Lake Balaton (e.g. Mt. Badacsony) show spectacular columnar jointing. Terrestrial-limnic-fluviatile sediments are characteristic of the Carpathian Tertiary, e.g. the Pannonian and Levantian beds. They are overlain by the extensive Quaternary deposits, with loess and other Pleistocene beds. – B: 1078, T: 7676, 7456, T: 7456.

Téry, Ödön (Edmund) (Óbéba, now Beba Veche, Romania, 4 July 1856 - Budapest, 11 November 1917) – Physician, naturalist and a leading personality of the Hungarian tourist movement. He was granted a Medical Degree in Budapest in 1879. Initially, he was a surgeon; later, in early 1884, a doctor at the Selmecebánya mines (now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia) and he also obtained a position in the directorate of public health management. Being an accomplished hiker, he scaled several times the Tátra Mountain peaks (now in Slovakia). During the summer of 1888, he climbed from the Five Lake Basin (Öt Tó Katlan) up to the Green Lake (Zöld Tó) cleft. After this, it was called the Téry “horhos” (narrow cleft carved out by water). Its name today is Baranie Sedlo. He was the founder of the Hungarian tourist movement and its leader for many long years. He established, together with Gusztáv (Gustavus) Thirring, the Budapest Division of the Hungarian Carpathian Association in 1888, and in 1891 he founded the Hungarian Tourist Association. He expanded its network all over the country. It is operating today under the name of Hungarian Nature Lovers Association. He started the illustrated magazine of the association in February of 1889, entitled Tourists' Paper (Túristák Lapja) and was its editor for 21 years. The first tourist hostel at Dobogókő, which owes its existence to him, was opened on 5 June 1898. A memorial plaque is mounted there. He established Hungary's highest located tourist hostel at the Five Lakes Basin of the High Tatra Mountains in 1899, which is still named after him. – B: 1078, 0883, 1020, T: 7675. → Tátra Range, High.

Tessedik, Sámuel (Teschedik) (Alberti, 20 April 1742 - Szarvas, 27 December 1820) – Lutheran pastor, writer and educator. He studied in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), Sárospatak, Debrecen, and at German Universities. Upon his return to Hungary he served as a pastor in Surány and, from 1767 until his death, in Szarvas. As an educator, his progressive opinions improved the lot of the peasantry. In 1780 he established an agricultural school utilizing new educational strategies for young peasants, by combining practical work with the teaching of intensive farming methods. He set up a library and organized workshops and work farms and also trained teachers and farm managers within the school. However, financial difficulties forced closure to his school in 1806. Besides his work as educator, his activities extended to all aspects of life on the Great Hungarian Plain, and the town of Szarvas in particular. He domesticated clover and alfalfa in Hungary, and was a pioneer in fruit growing, bee keeping, and silkworm breeding. He employed experts to teach silk weaving, wool spinning and weaving. A steady supply of good drinking water was ensured through his proposal of drilling wells. He participated in the establishment of the Georgikon Institute at Keszthely, and was its President from 1817, but refused a permanent invitation. He wrote his economic studies in German and Latin. His works include Peasant Men in Hungary... (A paraszt ember Magyarországon...) translation (Pest, 1786); Autobiography (Önéletrírása), translation (Pest 1873), and Selected Pedagogical Writings of Sámuel Tessedik (Tessedik Sámuel válogatott pedagógiai művei), edited by L. Vincze (Bp. 1956). A School in Szarvas, a High School in Békéscsaba, a Museum in Szarvas, and a Street in Budapest bear his name; there is also his statue at Szarvas and in Budapest. In his memory, the Hungarian Society of Agricultural Science established the annual Sámuel Tessedik commemorative medal in 1961. – B: 1078, 0883, 1078, 1257, T: 7644.

Tessényi, János (John) (Budapest, 2 July 1931 - Washington, DC, USA, 19 August 1987) – Opera singer (bass-baritone). He began his musical studies at the Béla Bartók Music School of Budapest with Mrs. Pál (Paul) C. Molnár. Thereafter, he completed two years at the Academy of Dramatic Art in Budapest. From 1954 to 1962, he was a member of the Opera Company of the Csokonai Theater (Csokonai Színház) in Debrecen. His first appearance was in the role of Collin in Puccini's La Bohème (Bohémélet). From 1964 he was a soloist at the Theater of Oberhausen (West Germany); then he was engaged the Theater of Mainz until 1968. Later, he became soloist at the Staatsoper of Munich. In 1976, he settled in Toronto, Canada, and appeared in a number of towns as a member of the Canadian Opera Company. He was also a noted specialist of oratorios and folksong literature. Apart from Hungary and Germany, he appeared in towns in Switzerland, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Italy and Bulgaria. His roles included Mephisto in Gounod's Faust; Amonasro in Verdi's Aida; Leporello in Mozart's Don Giovanni; Figaro in Mozart's Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága); Papageno in Mozart's Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola), and King Philip in Verdi's Don Carlo. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Tessitori, Nóra (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 1883 - Marosvásárhely, now Targu Mureş, Romania, 26 June 1969) – Reciting artist. Her first independent evening recital was held in 1920, and after that, for two decades, she appeared not only in Kolozsvár, but in many towns of Transylvania, occasionally also in Budapest. She was a pioneer of the genre and its outstanding representative. The essential part of her programs consisted of poems by Endre (Andrew) Ady, Árpád Tóth, Mihály (Michael) Babits, Gyula (Julius) Juhász and Dezső (Desider) Kosztolányi and, from among the Transylvanian poets, mainly the works of Lajos (Louis) Áprily, László (Ladislás) Tompa, later Jenő (Eugen) Dsida, as well as Szekler folk ballads and contemporary poets. The extraordinary effect of her recitations was due to the fact that she lived her recited poems, coupled with a natural interpretational style, bringing out in a moving way the musicality and rhythm of the poems. After 1939, she no longer appeared in solo evenings. From 1948 to 1954, she taught speech technique at the Hungarian Art Institute of Kolozsvár; later she moved to Marosvásárhely to the István Szentgyörgyi Dramatic Art Institute. Her person and art inspired outstanding artists, among others the Ferenczy brothers (sons Béni and Valér, of the painter Károly Ferenczy) and János Thorma. – B: 1445, T: 7456. → Ady, Endre; Tóth, Árpád; Babits, Mihály; Juhász, Gyula; Kosztolányi, Dezső; Áprily, Lajos; Tompa, László; Dsida, Jenő; Ferenczy, Károly; Ferenczy, Béni.

Tétény (Töhötöm, Tühütüm) – (1) According to Anonymus, the chronicler, Töhötöm was one of the seven leaders of the Magyars of the conquest period (896). He was an ancestor of the Gyula-Zsombor (Maglód) Clan that settled in County Pest. According to the Hungarian chronicles, he was father of the tribal leader Horka, one of the leaders during the Carpathian conquest. (2) Nagytétény was a village on the right bank of the Danube, mentioned for the first time in a document in 1228. (3) Kistétény is a resort place, annexed to Budapest (Budafok-Tétény). Now Nagytétény and Kistétény with Budafok constitute District XXII of Budapest, under the name Budafok-Tétény. (4) There was a Tétény village east of Lake Fertő in County Moson, which is now Tatten, Austria. – B: 0883, 1031, 0942, T: 7456, 7103. → Anonymus.

Tetmajer, Alfréd (Salgótarján, 10 November 1889 - Budapest, 18 August 1960) – Metallurgical engineer. He completed his studies at the Mining and Forestry Academy of Selmecbánya (now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia). He began his engineering career at the Skoda Works of Pilsen. From 1921 he was Head of the Open-hearth Steelworks of Ózd, later of the roughing-mill of Ózd. In the 1930s, as the director of the entire plant, he had the new rolling mill built, which at that time was the most up-to-date rolling train in the country. He also expanded the electricity and water supply of the plant, and established the setting up of the first Ore Dressing and Enrichment Plant. He played an important role in re-starting the work of the Plant after World War II. From 1949 he worked at the construction of the Danube Ironworks and took part in the work of the main organs of iron metallurgy. In 1955 he went into retirement. – B: 0883, 1408, T: 7456.

Tevan, Andor (Andrew) (Békéscsaba, 15 August 1889 - Budapest, 5 October 1955) – Book publisher and printshop owner. He obtained his specialized technical trade at the College of Graphic Art (Graphische Lehr und Versuchsanstalt) Vienna, between 1907 and 1910. Returning to Hungary, he took over the small printing shop of his father, Adolf Tevan, in Békéscsaba, and developed it into a modern workshop. Its attractive published works made the printshop well known. In 1911, he started the 1-filler Tevan-Library and, within its framework, he published many outstanding products of progressive Hungarian and foreign literature. He also published the bibliophile Tevan-amateur series, from which especially The Merrie Tales of Jaques Tournebroche (Les contes de Jaques Tournebroche; Nyársforgató Jakab meséi) of Anatole France, and the illustrated edition of Esopus of G. Heltai stand out. In 1944 he was deported, but he returned during 1945. In 1949 he offered his printshop to the state. From 1950 he worked with the Educated Peoples' Publishers (Művelt Nép Könyvkiadó) and, until his death in 1955, he was an illustration editor of the Youth Book Publisher (Ifjusági Könyvkiadó). He is the author of the work The Thousand-year Path of the Book (A könyv évezredes útja) (1956). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Tevan, Margit; Heltai, Gáspár.

Tevan, Margit (Margaret) (Békéscsaba, 18 January 1901 - Budapest, 3 November 1978) – Goldsmith. She was the sister of the printing-press owner, Andor Tevan, and the mother of graphic artist István Engel Tevan. She studied at the Academy of Applied Art, Budapest, for a year; thereafter, from 1920 she received further advanced training from the famous goldsmiths of the era, Richard Zutt and Ferenc (Francis) Kiss for four years. For two years, she worked at the goldsmith workshop of Árpád Vértes, called Stúdió (1927-1928). Apart from vases and chalices, she was the first to prepare boxes and plates. The influence of Bauhaus can be perceived in her early works, while her later works are characterized with archaic romanticism. Her boxes, plates, vases etc. were favorite souvenirs of her time. Her first independent exhibition was held in the Museum of Arts and Crafts, Budapest in 1981. A collective memorial exhibition was organized in her memory at Békéscsaba in 1988. She received the Diploma of Merit from Budapest in 1933, and the Diploma of the Society of Industrial Art in 1936. At the Paris World Fair of 1937, she received the Diplôme d'Honneur of the International Religious Art Review and, in the same year, she was given the Silver Medal at the Triennale of Milan. She also received the Diploma of Appreciation at the New York World Fair in 1939. She was a recipient of the Munkácsy Prize (1957), the Golden Degree of the Order of Work (1971, 1976), the titles of Merited Artist (1962) and Outstanding Artist (1977). – B: 0883, 1654, T: 7456→Tevan, Andor.

Thallóczy, Lajos (Louis) (Strommer) (Buda, 8 December 1856 - Herceghalom, 1 December 1916) – Historian. He studied at the University of Budapest, after which he became a clerk at the National Archives, and an assistant editor of the journals Centuries (Századok) and Archaeological Gazette (Archaeológiai Értesítő). In 1884, he became Director of the Archives in Vienna of the jointly run Ministry of Finances during the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy. He gave lectures on Hungarian Common Law and Hungarian History. In 1908, he became Head of Department in the Ministry of Finances and, in 1912, he was made Internal Privy Councilor. In 1915, he was appointed Civic Governor of occupied Serbia. On returning home from the funeral of Emperor Francis Joseph in Vienna, he died as a result of a railway accident. In his literary work, he was occupied a great deal with the historic past and present of Eastern Europe, Croatia, Serbia, Bosnia and Albania. Together with Samu (Sam) Barabás, he published the archives of the Blagay Family (1897) and the Frangepan Family (1910-1913), and the four volumes of the series entitled Archives of the Subsidiary Territories of Hungary: vol. i: Archive of the Outer Areas of Croatia, with Antal Hodinka (1903); vol. ii: Archive of the Connections between Hungary and Serbia, with Antal Áldásy (1907); vol. iii: Archive of Lower Slavonia, with Sándor (Alexander) Horváth (1912) and vol. iv: History of the Bosnian Township of Jajcza (1915). He received the Grand Prix of the Academy of Sciences. At the request of Benjámín Kállay, he published The History of the Serbian Uprising, vols. i,ii (A szerb felkelés története, I-II (1908-1909). His other works include Travel in the Levant (Utazás Levanteban) (1882); Russia and our Country (Oroszország és hazánk) (1884); Marchland, from this Side and from that Side (Gyepűn innen, gyepűn túl) pseudonymous (1898), and King Béla III and the Hungarian Empire (III Béla és a magyar birodalom) (1906). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (correspondent 1883, ordinary 1895), and President of the Hungarian Historical Society (1913-1916). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Thaly, Kálmán (Coloman) (Csép, 3 January 1839 - Zablát, now Záblatie, Slovakia, 26 September 1909) – Politician and historian. He obtained Degrees in Law and Philosophy at the University of Pest. He first published his poems in 1850. His historical research and poems, which recalled the memories of the struggle against despotism, especially the era of the Rákóczi Insurrection (1703-1711), created a sensation among the population. Later, it was found he had included his own poems in the authentic poetry of the Rákóczi insurrection era. He was a contributor to the journal Pest Diary (Pesti Napló) from 1860, and was a teacher at the Calvinist High School in Pest. The Hungarian Academy of Sciences elected him a member in 1864. From 1875, he lived in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) studying history. After two years of extensive search, he discovered the tomb of Reigning Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II in the Galata section of Istanbul, Turkey, in the old church of the Lazarist Order. On 7 October 1889, he had the burial site excavated in the presence of the Turkish Principal of the Lazarist Order. He authenticated and wrote a detailed study of the remains. He read his study at the 25th anniversary ceremonial meeting of the Hungarian Historical Society, and also presented relics from the coffin of Rákóczi. He played a principal role in the return of the Prince's remains to Hungary in 1906. – B: 1150, 0942, 0883, 1141, T: 7644. → Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc.

Than, Károly (Charles) (Óbecse, now Bečež, Serbia, 20 December 1834 - Budapest, 5 July 1908) – Pharmacological and scientific chemist. He was the younger brother of Mór (Maurice) Than. At the age of 15 he joined the Honvéd army during the 1848-1849 War of Independence against the Habsburg rule, fought in General Bem's army as an artillery sergeant and was wounded at Vizakna in Transylvania (now Ocna Sibiului, Romania). From 1850 to 1853 he was a research student in Pharmacology; in 1853 he obtained his Pharmaceutical Degree. Between 1855 and 1856, he was a medical student at the University of Vienna. From 1857, he studied chemistry as his major subject, and obtained his Ph.D. in Chemistry in 1858. Thereafter, during 1859 and 1860, he was a lecturer in the Chemistry Department of the University of Vienna, later an honorary lecturer. In 1860, he worked as a lecturer in chemistry at the University of Pest, and in 1862, became Professor of the Department of Chemistry. In 1872, he founded the No. 1 Institute of Chemistry. During 1875 and 1876, he was Vice-Chancellor of the University of Budapest. Later he served as Vice President of the Natural Scientific Society between 1862 and 1872, and was its President from 1872 to 1881. He founded the Hungarian Chemical Journal (Magyar Chemiai Folyóirat), and was Editor of the No. 1 and No. 2 Hungarian Pharmacopoeia (Magyar Gyógyszerkönyv). He was engaged in writing textbooks and researching organic and general chemistry. He was the creator of the modern Hungarian scientific teaching of chemistry; discoverer of carbonyl sulfide, and developed a new method for the determination of the composition of mineral waters. He was a member of the Upper House of Parliament in 1892, and a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1860, ordinary 1870, director 1876, second-president 1907-1908). His works include On the Task and Present Condition of Theoretical Chemistry (Az elméleti vegytan föladatáról és jelen állapotáról) (1860); On the Assembling of the Chemical Analysis of Mineral Waters (Az ásványvizek vegyelemzésének összeállításáról) (1865); The Chemical Analysis of the Sulfurous Thermal Water of Harkány (A harkányi kénes hévvíz vegyelemzése) (1869); The Elements of Experimental Chemistry, vols. i,ii (A kísérleti kémia elemei I–II) (1897-1906), and Theoretical Chemistry (Az elméleti chemia) (1904). He received the Iron Crown of Merit III. Order (1873), the Pro litteris et artibus medal (1890), and was made life-member of the Upper House of Parliament (1895). He was made a Freeman of Óbecse. A High School in Budapest and a Football Club bear his name. – B: 1730, 1031, T: 7456. → Than, Mór; Bem, József.

Than, Mór (Maurice) (Óbecse, now Bečej, Serbia, 19 June 1828 - Trieste, 11 March 1899) – Painter. Brother of Károly (Charles) Than. He studied Law at the University of Pest and also learned the art of painting as a student of the famous painter Miklós (Nicholas) Barabás. During the 1848 and 1849 War of Independence from Habsburg oppression, he was an army painter under General Görgey. From 1851, he was a student of C. Rahl in Vienna. In 1855, he studied in Paris. Upon his return to Hungary, he tackled almost every branch of painting with success. From 1857, he spent three years in Rome. His first significant work was Arrest of Nyáry and Pekry (Nyáry és Pekry elfogatása), now the property of the National Gallery (1853), followed by a whole series of historical compositions as a reaction to the oppression, including The Battle of Mohács (A mohácsi csata) (1855); King Imre Captures His Rebellious Brother (Imre király elfogja pártütő öccsét) (1857); Recruiting from the pre-1848 Times (Újoncozás az 1848 előtti időből) (1861); János Vitéz Teaches Latin to János Hunyadi (Vitéz János a latin nyelvre tanítja Hunyadi Jánost) (1882), and Cardinal Péter Pázmány Dictates his Works (Pázmány Péter tollba mondja műveit) (1885). In 1860 he settled in Pest. From 1864 on, at Károly (Charles) Lotz's side, he worked on the murals of the Pest Vigadó (Municipal Concert Hall of Budapest) and from this time on, he became one of the best-known fresco-painters. Than's paintings include Fata Morgana, which scored success in the Paris Salon in 1867. In 1873, he won first prize in a historic painting competition. In the 1880s, he lived in Italy. From 1890, he was Curator of the Art Gallery in the Hungarian National Museum. In 1896, he was appointed Director of the National Gallery (Országos Képtár) for a short time. In addition to his historical paintings, he painted portraits (Ferenc Liszt, Ferenc Deák, Mrs. Hampel, Polyxena Pulszky; Self-portrait); The Love of the Sun with Fata Morgana (1866), a scene from The Tragedy of Man, all in the National Gallery; paintings on religious themes, like Mater Dolorosa, Saint Cecilia (1868); life scenes: Italian Life Scene (1860); The Fortune Teller (1861); Stella (1863); Bathing Girl (1880), etc., and murals, e.g. in the Stairway of the Vigadó, and the foyer of the Opera House. His memorial exhibition was held at the Metropolitan Gallery in 1953. – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Than, Károly; Barabás, Miklós; Lotz, Károly; Görgey, Artur.

Thanhoffer, Lajos (Louis) (Nyírbátor, 23 November 1843 - Budapest, 22 March 1909) – Physician. He earned his Medical Degree from the University of Pest in 1868, and became a lecturer at the Biological Institute from 1868, as well as a lecturer in Biology at the Veterinary College. In 1872 he became an honorary lecturer in histology; in 1881 he was promoted to Associate Professor; from 1890 to 1909 he was Professor at the No. 2 Institute of Anatomy. He was engaged in the research on histology and the anatomy of the nervous system. He was an outstanding illustrator. He investigated the structure of the inter-vertebral ganglion cells; the nerve endings of the striped-striated muscles, and the absorption of fats. He was among the first in Hungary to press for microscopic examinations and micro-technical procedures. Thanhoffer was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding, 1880, ordinary 1891). His works include On the Pulsation (Az érverésről) (1879); The Microscope and Its Use (A mikroszkóp és alkalmazása) (1880); Histology and Histological Technique, vols. i,ii (Szövettan és szövettani technika I-II) (1894); Lectures From the Field of Anatomy (Előadások az anatómia köréből) (1896); The Structure of Tissues and Organs and the Method of their Study (A szövetek és szervek szerkezete és azok vizsgáló módszere) (1900), and Anatomy and Fashion (Anatomia és divat) (1902). He was the first to teach histology, and introduced the use of the microscope in the Veterinary College. He received the Iron Crown III Order of Merit (1896). – B: 1730, 0907, T: 7456.

Theatrical Art in Hungary – The memories of Hungarian theatrical art from pagan times remained in the minstrel-world. The Hungarian theatrical art from the Middle Ages – like everywhere in Europe – originated from two sources. One was the professional minstrels' worldly tradition; the other was the Latin ceremony of the Catholic Church. The aim of the two kinds of acting was contrasting. The minstrels had to support themselves, thus they made an effort to entertain the audience. The Church wanted to popularize the faith. The two views conflicted many times during the history of acting in the Middle Ages. The protestation of the Church reveals something about the minstrels. The memory of the religious acting was preserved in the ritual books of the Church. The 16th century play, Comedy on the Betrayal of Menyhért Balassa (Comedia Balassa Menyhért árultatásáról) was prepared for the stage, but no particulars survived about the performance itself.

The Hungarian theatrical arts in the 17th century took shape continuously with the so-called school dramas; first with limited means at the Reformed and the Franciscan Schools, then at the Jesuits' magnificently spectacular, mostly Latin performances. The Christian "miracle plays" in Hungary were also fashionable; the first written record dates from 1440, of a performance in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia).

The Jesuit theaters and some aristocratic private theaters had at their disposal up-to-date Baroque stages with modern machinery and glamorous wardrobes. Much poorer were the school theaters; but here, at least, the Hungarian language came into fashion, especially from the 18th century on. In the mystery plays of the Minorites, the important thing was the idealism and pious emotion, instead of amusement.

In the Reformed school theaters, frolicking voices and juvenile humor were the resounding themes; but the classical, ancient tragic theme also became popular.

The plays of Mihály (Michael) Csokonai-Vitéz originated from the Reformed school theater; however, the actors from the first theatrical company evolved from the school of the Piarists.

György (George) Felvinczi was the forerunner of secular professional actors. In 1696, he received a Royal Letter of Patent, which shows comedies and tragedies together with his well-qualified partners in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania).

From 1774, there was an active and permanent society in Pest and Buda at the Reischl's Hut, where performances were held since 1784 in Hungarian and later also at the Castle Theater (Várszínház). Following that, theatrical companies formed in Kolozsvár, Miskolc, Székesfehérvár, Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) and other provincial towns.

The many-times proclaimed noble cause of the theater attracted excellent intellectuals, but the middle class and the nobility generally stayed away from the theatrical career. The program was inferior in the beginning: mostly German plays were produced in mediocre translations by the artists.

The original drama, after Bessenyei and Szentjóbi, started with Károly (Charles) Kisfaludy's acting. The Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház) in Pest, built amid great difficulties, immediately attracted the most outstanding artists. On 22 August 1837, the performance of Mihály (Michael) Vörösmarty's The Awakening of Árpád (Árpád ébredése) was the Festival's opening play.

From 1840, it functioned under the name of National Theater (Nemzeti Színház). The creation of the original program progressed very slowly, though the success of the play The Notary of Peleske (Peleskei notárius) in 1838 indicated how the audience waited for a characteristic Hungarian subject. It was then that the introduction of a play about peasants began and, for a long time, it became the most popular style. Characteristic of this period was the success of the performance of J. Katona's Bánk bán in 1845; but absolutism took off the edge of this expression of patriotism, and for a while the "harmless" opera came to the forefront.

In 1873, opera and drama became split; the Golden Age of Hungarian theatrical acting started at this time, and its development was linked to the directorship of Ede (Edward) Paulay, who was the successor of Ede (Edward) Szigligeti. These two hired the members of the "great set", Árpád Gabányi, Mari Jászai, Emilia Márkus, Imre (Emeric) Nagy, Ede (Edward) Ujházi, Mariska (Mary) Vízvári, etc. Not only were they outstanding actors, but executors of the direction of the stage manager. In fact, modern stage-managing dates from this time; Paulay raised Hungarian acting to European level. This work became complete with the renewed presentation of Hungarian classical works: Csongor and Tünde and The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragediája). However, the operetta and the spectacular revue became the real assets of the theater.

When the Folk Theater (Népszínház) was built in 1875, the operetta and the play about the peasants moved in. However, the latter did not represent the reality of the people's life; false, eternally idyllic Sundays were presented to the spectators. The era of the plays about peasants ended with the retirement of Lujza (Louisa) Blaha, and the operetta replaced it. The National Theater and the Repertory Theater merged. From the members of the theatrical companies for the next half century the following actors became outstanding: Lajos (Louis) Básti, Gizi Bajor, Gyula (Julius) Csontos, Árpád Ódry, Imre (Emeric) Pethes and Arthur Somlay.

After 1945, Hungarian theatrical art established the rural theater, thus closely connected to the cultural policy. The intention was the creation of the communist-type man, and a socialistic society.

In 1951, the national Mme. Déry Village Theater (Déryné Faluszínház) was formed and, with its touring company, the rural community also participated. Naturally, many Soviet plays were shown; the political ideology entered the theater. The most important assignment of the contemporary Hungarian dramatic literature was to reveal “the sins of the past” to the public, and their duty at present. The prevalent period of self-interest resulted in the inferiority of acting. Schematism became widespread and many classical plays were not allowed to be shown. In 1960, the musical comedy became customary. Outstanding artists of this era were: Ferenc (Francis) Bessenyei, Iván Darvas, Miklós (Nicholas) Gábor, Sándor (Alexander) Pécsi, Éva Ruttkai and Imre (Emeric) Sinkovics. As the Communist system approached its end, and particularly after the regime change in 1989, the Hungarian theatrical art again reached world level. – B: 1078, 1136, T: 7685.→Most of the persons in the article have their own entry.

Thewrewk Codex (1531) – Hungarian manuscript, written by six hands. Its five authors are unknown; only one scribe is known, Márton (Martin) Sövényházi. The year of its preparation, 1531 is noted in two places. The style is bombastic in several places. It is a Hungarian language relic, containing mostly prayers. The more important pieces are the song to the Blessed Virgin Mary by András (Andrew) Vásárhelyi, also occurring in the Peer Codex, and the hymn of Saint Bernard, also occurring in the Czech Codex. It is named after József (Joseph) Thewrewk of Ponor, who first provided information about it. It is held in the library of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, Budapest, donated by the Franciscans of Érsekújvár (now Nové Zámky, Slovakia). The versified sections of the Codex include the song of András Vásárhelyi and the hymn of Saint Bernard, published with explanations by Áron (Aaron) Szilády. – B: 0942, 1078, 1136, T: 7617, 7456.→Szilády, Áron; Codex Literature.

Thienemann, Tivadar (Theodore) (Thass-Thienemann) (Budapest, 1 May 1890 - West Roxbury, USA, 29 March 1985) – Literary historian, German linguist and language psychologist. He studied at the Universities of Budapest and Leipzig. In 1912, he obtained his Degree in Education, majoring in German and French and, in 1913, he received a Ph.D. in German Philology from the University of Budapest. In 1912 and 1913, he was on a state scholarship for further studies at the University of Berlin. In 1913-1914, he taught at a high school in District VIII of Budapest. In World War I, from 1914, he fought as a lieutenant on various fronts. From 1918, he became Associate Professor in German Language and Literature at the University of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), and also Head of its French Department. In 1921, this University fled to Budapest, as a result of the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920), where he became a full Professor. The same University was transferred to Pécs in 1923, where he was Dean of the Faculty of Arts in 1925-1926. In 1922, he founded the Minerva Society, propagating the trend of history of ideas and editing the journal Minerva (1922-1940). He was also Editor of the series Scientific Collection, Pécs, from 1923. From 1934, he was Professor of German Literature at the University of Budapest. Thienemann was the leading representative of the movement of “Intellectual History” (Geistesgeschichte) in Hungary. He dealt with the theory of literature and problems of German history of literature. He was against the trends of National Socialism, and emigrated to the West in 1947. He lived in Belgium and the Netherlands and, in 1948, he moved to the USA. He became a professor at Gordon College in Massachusetts. From 1951, he was a visiting professor at Columbia University. During his years in the USA, he was mainly engaged in examining the psychological problems of speech and language. He lectured on German Literature, and later on Psychology. From 1960, he worked as a scientific research associate at the University of Boston. His works include Hungarian-German and German-Hungarian Dictionary; edited Die deutschen Lehnwörter der ungarischen Sprache (German Loanwords in the Hungarian Language) (1922); Basic Concepts of the History of Literature (Irodalomtörténeti alapfogalmak) (1930); History of Literature (Irodalomtörténet) (1931); Goethe und die Nachwelt (Goethe and Posterity) (1933); Comprehensive German-Hungarian Dictionary, vols. i, ii (Német-magyar nagyszótár, I-II) (1941); The Subconscious Language (1967); Symbolic Behavior (1968); The Interpretation of Language, vol. i, Understanding the Symbolic Meaning of Language, vol. ii, and Understanding the Unconscious Meaning of Language (1973). His autobiography has not yet been published. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1923), and he was awarded the Corvin Wreath (Corvin Koszorú). – B: 1672, 0883, T: 7456. → Corvin Chain, Wreath and Badge.

Thiery, Árpád (Budapest, 21 June 1928 - Budapest, 9 May 1995) – Writer. For a long time he worked as a journalist, first for the paper Free Word (Szabad Szó), later with various organs in Counties Veszprém and Baranya. He developed a special feeling for unusual stories and exciting happenings. In 1961, his play Water up to the Ankle (Bokáig érő víz) was put on stage at the National Theater of Pécs. Soon afterwards, his first volume was published, entitled So long, War (Isten veled, háború) (1962); its hero deserts from the front in World War II and goes home. This was followed by Babel Existed. Véménd (Bábel volt. Véménd). It deals with the history of the little village at the eastern foot of the Mecsek Mountains, proved to be an outstanding document of rejuvenating Hungarian sociology. In the prize-winning novel entitled: the Seasons (Évszakok) (1970), put out by the Szépirodalmi Publisher, he dreams back the past, embedded in five seasons, which turns out to be his own fate, filled with struggles. His other novels include The Era of the Gladiators (Gladiátorok kora) (1971); Long Desertion (Hosszú szökés) (1974); The Orderliness (A rend) reports (1976); The Ragged Ones of Freedom (A szabadság rongyosai) novel (1989), and The Legend of Inheritance (Az örökség legendája), novel (1997). Some of his works were also published in German, Bulgarian and Russian. Thiery is a masterly portrayer of the fate of man of everyday life. He received the Attila József Prize (1971), For the Service of the Country Award (1977) and the Lajos Nagy Foundation Prize (1994). – B: 1257, 1552, T: 7456.

Thinsz, Géza (Budapest, 9 June 1934 - Stockholm, 14 July 1990) – Poet, translator of literary works. He completed his high school studies in Budapest. After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he left Hungary and settled in Sweden. In 1961, he obtained a Bachelor of Arts Degree, majoring in Philosophy at the University of Uppsala, after which he became a correspondent to publishers, working as Editor for Bonniers, GLA, Almqvistand Wiksell, and Norstedts. He also wrote literary articles for Swedish papers, such as Dagens Nyheter, Svenska Dagbladet, Expressen, Aftonbladet, Bonniers Litterära Magasin. His poems in Hungarian appeared mainly in the Horizon (Látóhatár), New Horizon (Új Látóhatár), Literary News (Irodalmi Újság), Hungarian Workshop (Magyar Műhely), and Rainbow (Szivárvány). He pursued considerable translating activity, translating poems of Petőfi, Weöres, Illyés, and Pilinszky, among others, and published them in one volume. He succeeded in winning over eminent Swedish poets to translate Hungarian poems. He wrote in Swedish not only informative articles and critiques, but also novels and radio plays. His works include Moderna ungerska berättelser, short story (1966); Eleven Swedish Poets (1974); Besök utariför ordningen (1982), and The Mystique of Repetition (Az ismétlődés misztikája) (1989). – B: 1672, T: 7456. → Petőfi, Sándor; Wöeres, Sándor; Illyés, Gyula; Pilinszky, János.

Thirring, Gusztáv (Gustavus) (Sopron, 25 December 1861 - Budapest, 31 March 1941) – Geographer, statistician. He obtained his Dip. Ed. from the University of Budapest, majoring in Geography and Natural Science. From 1884 to 1888, he was a demonstrator at the Department of Anthropology. From 1888, he worked at the Metropolitan Statistical Bureau where, in 1894, he became an Assistant Director; and from 1906 to 1926 he was its Director. In 1897, he became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) in Demography, and from 1906, Associate Professor at the University of Budapest. He was Vice-President of the Hungarian Geographical Society, and took part in the formation of the Hungarian Tourist Association (1888), of which he was Secretary, and later its President. He became the leading writer of Hungarian travel guides. In 1889, he launched and edited for seven years the Tourists' Paper (Turisták Lapja). Thirring was a member of the International Statistical Institute from 1903, and an honorary member from 1937. Between 1925 and 1931, he was President of the Hungarian Statistical Society. In 1908 he launched, and with Ferenc (Francis) Harrer, edited until 1918, the Municipal Review (Városi Szemle), and wrote the international statistical yearbooks of numerous cities in the world. With his demographical works, he laid the foundation for Hungarian Historical Statistical research. He published population and economic-historical studies of numerous towns. He was Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1902, ordinary 1926). His published works include Die Natalitäts- und Mortalitätsverhältnisse der ungarischen Städte (with József Körösy, 1897); Hungarian Emigration and Hungarians Abroad (A magyarországi kivándorlás és a külföldi magyarság) (1904), and Half a Century of Development of Budapest 1873-1923 (Budapest félszázados fejlődése 1873-1923) (1925 and 1938). – B: 0883, 1153, T: 7456.

Thirring, Viola (Budapest, 5 December 1941 - ) – Actress and stage-manager, educator. She spent her childhood in Érsekújvár (now Nové Zámky, Slovakia), in former Northern Hungary (Upland, Felvidék). In 1963, she completed the School of Dramatic Art in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) and thereafter she was engaged by the Hungarian Regional Theater (Magyar Területi Színház – MATESZ) in Komarno, what is now in Slovakia. Since 1969, she has lived in Budapest and, since 1976 she has been a member of the Miklós Radnóti Stage (Radnóti Színpad). In the early 1990s, she also worked at the Hungarian Branch of the School of Dramatic Art of Pozsony in the capacity of elocution lecturer, and was also involved in dealing with groups of children. She participates in the Slovakian language at the Vertigo Slovakian Theater of Szarvas, where there is a community of Slovakian settlers, established by Baron Haruckern in 1722. In Komárom, she played many roles of young leading ladies. In 1992, she played as a guest artist at the Thália Theater of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). She excels in stage presence, attractive naturalness and multi-faceted personality. Her roles include Eszter in E. Fejes' Rust Cemetery (Rozsdatemető); Juliet in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet; Borbála in Gy. Háy's God, Emperor and Peasant (Isten, császár, paraszt); Amália in F. Schiller's The Robbers (Die Räuber; Haramiák), and Éva in I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája). – B: 1445, 1890, T: 7456.

Thököly, Count Imre (Emeric) (Késmárk, now Kežmarok, Slovakia, 25 September 1657 - Ízmit (Nicodemia), Turkey, 13 September 1705) – Ruler of Upper Hungary and Transylvania (Erdély, now Romania). Aided by his father, he escaped to Transylvania from the Fortress of Likava, when it was besieged by the Imperial army in 1670. He was elected by the insurgents as their leader and he commenced a war of independence against the Habsburgs. He aligned with the Turkish Porta and the Sultan bestowed upon him the royal title in 1682, which he never used, but remained the Prince of Upper Hungary, which he ruled from 1682. He hosted a splendid court and through marriage to Ilona (Helen) Zrinyi, widow of Reigning Prince Ferenc Rákóczi I, gained considerable estates that served to finance his war of independence. He unsuccessfully sought an alliance with France and other western powers. Only the Sultan aligned with Thököly. The defeat of the Turks at Vienna in 1683 sealed the fate of the Thököly uprising as well. Pasha Ahmed, ruler of Várad, captured Thököly in hopes of arriving at a settlement with Vienna. He was soon released, but was unable to regain his lost territories. Thököly's principality soon collapsed; and after the surrender of the Fortress of Munkács (now Mukacheve, Ukraine), he continued to fight from Turkish territory. After the death of Prince Mihály (Michael) Apafi I (1662-1690) of Transylvania and the successful Battle of Zernyed, he was elected to assume Apafi's place. Within two months, he was forced out of the country by the Austrian Imperial troops. Thököly continued to fight in the Turkish army and participated in the Battle of Zenta (now Senta in Serbia). The Peace Treaty of Karlóca in 1699 sealed his exile. The Porta settled him, his wife and 1,500 troops on the banks of Asia Minor. His failing health prevented him from participating in the freedom fight of Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II in 1703. His ashes were returned in 1906 to be buried in the church of Késmárk on 6 November. His carefully written memoirs were intermittently published afterwards. – B: 1150, 1230, 0883, 1153, T: 7658.→Zrinyi, Ilona; Apafi I, Prince Mihály; Freedom Fight of Thököly, Count Imre; Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Karlóca, Peace of.

Thököly Family (késmárki) – The earliest known ancestor of the family was Sebestyén (Sebastian) from Késmárk (now Kežmarok in Slovakia) in the northwestern part of the Historic Kingdom of Hungary. He is known to have descended from a certain János (John) who, in 1446, was royal flag-bearer. A later Sebestyén became rich and acquired nobility as a baron in 1572, together with his son and brother, and was given the nobility forename of tekelházi. In 1578 he purchased Vöröskő from the Fuggers for a hundred thousand Thalers, ever increasing his prestige. He attended three Diets as a member of some notable committees. He participated in the siege of Győr on the side of Schwarzenberg, and this led to his baronetcy. At a later stage, he appeared in Prince István (Stephen) Bocskai's camp, and his name is mentioned among the high-rankings. He also took part in the preparations for the Treaty of Vienna (1606) as Bocskai's envoy. The male line of the Thököly family died out with Count Imre (Emeric) Thököly. – B: 1153, 1078, T: 7456.→Thököly, Count Imre; Bocskai, Prince István.

Thomán, István (Stephan) (Homonna, now Humenné, Slovakia, 4 November 1864 - Budapest, 22 September 1940) – Piano virtuoso and piano instructor. Ferenc Erkel, Sándor (Alexander) Nikolits, Róbert Volkmann, and Ferenc (Franz) Liszt were his teachers. He accompanied Liszt on travels to Weimar and Rome. From 1886 until his retirement in 1906, he was an instructor at the Academy of Music, Budapest, where numerous outstanding pianists were among his students, such as Béla Bartók and Ernst von Dohnányi. He was one of the greatest Hungarian piano instructors, following the Liszt tradition. He held concert performances abroad and was noted also as a chamber musician. The Musical Review (Zenei Szemle), and Music (Muzsika) magazines published articles and studies by him. His works include piano works, songs, and technical studies: The Piano Technique (A zongorázás technikája). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7667.→Erkel, Ferenc; Liszt, Ferenc; Bartók, Béla; Dohnányi, Ernő.

Thorma, János (John) (Kiskunhalas, 24 April 1870 - Nagybánya, now Baia Mare Romania, 5 December 1937) – Painter. He began his studies at the School of Decorative Art, Budapest, as a student of the renowned painter Bertalan (Bartholomew) Székely, continued under Simon Hollósy in Munich, and finally attended the Julian Academy in Paris. It was in 1891 that he painted his first larger picture, Sufferers (Szenvedők) (Hungarian National Gallery), painted under the influence of Zola's naturalism; it was soon followed by the composition Awakening (Ébredés). In 1896, he completed one of his most significant artistic creations, one of the largest Hungarian historical paintings, Martyrs of Arad (Aradi vértanúk), which earned extraordinary popularity. Because of its political subject, it had to be shown at a separate exhibition; in 1931 it was moved to the Historic Picture Gallery, and finally to the Museum of Kiskunhalas. In 1899, he visited Spain and the Netherlands. Rembrandt's influence is reflected in his Christ-picture, Peace Be With You (Béke veletek). In 1898, he set out to work on his life's main achievement, on which he had been working for 20 years, the composition Rise Up Hungarians! (Talpra magyar!), held in the Museum of Kiskunhalas. It was followed by the paintings Among Coachmen (Kocsisok közt) (1901); At the End of September (Szeptember végén) (1903); Card-players (Kártyázók) (1904); Gypsies (Cigányok) (1905); Picking Violets (Ibolyaszedés) (1920), and May Picnic (Majális) (1921). One of his best-known works is October First (Október elseje) (1903), which won a gold prize in Munich and at the World Fair of Saint Louis. The style of his art is rather complex: he tried to reconcile the principles of romanticism and naturalism. From the 1920s he was the representative of the typical Nagybánya style. He was one of the founders of the Nagybánya Artist Colony (1896). From 1902, he was also active as a teacher at the Colony, and was an educator of artists. After 1919, he was the leader of the Colony, and prevented it from breaking up completely (Nagybánya was cut off from Hungary, came under Romanian rule with the whole of Transylvania, as a result of the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon in 1920). A number of his works, including his self-portrait, is held at the Hungarian National Gallery. There is a János Thorma Museum in Kiskunhalas. – B: 0883, 0934, 1031, T: 7456.→Székely, Bertalan; Hollósy, Simon; Nagybánya Artist Colony.

Thoroczkay Family (torockó-szentgyörgyi) (Thorochoi, Thoroezkeni) – One of the oldest noble families in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). The original seat of the family was Torockószentgyörgy (now Coltești, Romania.); this name came from the Fort of Torockó, which was the ancient property of the family. The family's oldest document dates from 1249, according to the record of Count Troszki Eheleus Vencel who, with his wealth, found protection against the Mongol-Tartars (1241) in Fort Turuskou (Torockó), built on Kengekürt (Székelykő). The Tartars laid siege to Torockó, but the Szeklers (Transylvanian Hungarians) defeated them, and Troszki captured 1000 Tartars along with their booty. For their heroic rescue Troszki settled the Szeklers at Aranyosszék (now Scaunul Arieșului, Romania), and gave them Fort Torockó. During the subsequent centuries, the family split into 3 branches. Illyés rebelled against King Mátyás (Matthias Corvinus) (1458-1490), but was defeated; he escaped to Poland, and his estate was lost, but later recovered. In 1773, János (John) was made a baron. In 1757, Zsigmond (Sigismund) was made a count. – B: 0942, 1821, T: 7103.

Thot, László (Ladislás) (? , 1878 - Buenos Aires, Argentina, 1935) – Legal writer. After completing his studies in Law in Hungary, and studying on scholarships abroad, he worked as an attorney, later as a judge; then served in the International Law Section of the Ministry of Justice. In 1924 he emigrated to South America, where he became a professor at the University of La Plata, Argentina, and was a member of the Spanish Academy of Sciences. His work, entitled Encyclopedia of the Universal Criminal Law was published in Spanish at La Plata. His other works include Studies in Criminal Law (Büntetőjogi tanulmányok) (1904); On Trials by Combat, with Special Reference to Hungary (Az Istenítéletekről, különös tekintettel hazánkra) (1908); Historia de las antiguas instituciones del derecho penal (Buenos Aires, 1927), and Il diritto penale anglo-amnicano (Città di Castello, 1929). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Three Nations, Union of (Unio Trium Natorum) – Representatives of the Hungarians, Szekler-Hungarians and Saxons of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) met in September 1437 at Kápolna in Transylvania (now Capalnas, Romania), and agreed to jointly administer and conduct their affairs. At that time, the Vlachs (now Romanians), were slowly infiltrating into Transylvania, though their number was insignificant, therefore were not considered as a constituent part of Transylvania. From 1437 on, the legislatures consisted of the delegates of the three nations until 1848; thereafter, as a result of the Compromise with Austria in 1867, Transylvania was again reunited with Historic Hungary of the Carpathian Basin. – B: 1230, T: 7103.

Threshold Gate – The lower part of the door, made of wood or stone that people step over or pass through on entering or exit. Symbolically, gate means transition between space or time, either at the moment of birth or death, therefore according to an ancient custom, the ashes of the dead of the house were placed in the earth below the threshold. Hence, to step on the threshold was forbidden by Hungarians. – B: 0942, 1136, T: 7682.

Thuróczy Chronicle – Work of the royal chronicler, János (John) Thuróczy. Utilizing earlier chronicle texts, documents and oral traditions, he continued the chronicle from the reign of King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxembourg) (1387-1437) to his own time, i.e. to the capture of Wiener Neustadt, Austria, by the Turks in 1487. The work appeared under the title Chronica Hungarorum (The Chronicle of the Hungarians) and was published simultaneously in Augsburg and Brünn (now Brno, Czech Republic), illustrated with numerous woodcuts, financed by two Buda booksellers. The period covering the reign of Queen Maria to that of King Mátyás I, (Matthias Corvinus) (1458-1490), was based solely upon the results of his own research. The Chronicle also contains the biography of King Lajos (Louis) I by János Tótsomlyói-Apród, Archdeacon of Küküllő, which was completed in 1382. It also preserved the Carmen Miserabile by Rogerius. This Latin language work is an important source material. Especially notable is the part dealing with the Hunyadi family. Although the romantic illustrations are the work of an artist unfamiliar with Hungarian folk costumes and customs, its novel elements nevertheless render it an important literary source about the Hungarian Renaissance. – B: 1150, 1078, 1141, T: 7617. → Thuróczy, János; Codex Literature.

Thuróczy, Gizi (Giselle) (Miskolc, 18 March 1928 - ) – Singer (soprano). After completing her theatrical and musical studies in 1952, she was engaged by the National Philharmonic Orchestra in Budapest. She is a singer-actress with an impressive appearance and a pleasant soprano voice. With her husband, concert manager Imre (Emeric) Kovács, she emigrated after the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight. For a while she worked under a scholarship of the Zürich Opera House, and also made some radio, television and concert appearances. Early in the 1960s, she settled in Los Angeles, California, where her husband initiated Hungarian-language lectures on dramatic art. She appeared mainly in prima donna roles. In 1966, she celebrated the 15th anniversary of her artistic career. Her roles include Student Gábor in J. Huszka's Gül Baba; Ella in F. Molnár's The Doctor (A Doktor úr); Marianna in F. Molnár's Delila; Sylvia in I. Kálmán's The Gypsy Princess (Csárdáskirálynő); Cilike in K. Komjáthy's Wedding Feast of Ipafai (Ipafai lakodalom), and Countess Rolla in A. Szirmay's Miska the Grandee (Mágnás Miska). – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Thuróczy, Gyula (Julius) (Hídvég, now Hăghig, Romania, 24 January 1885 - Debrecen, 28 February 1959) – Actor and manager. In 1906, after completing the School of Dramatic Art, he was engaged by the Theater of Szabadka (now Subotica, Serbia) as a heroic and character actor for three years. Between 1908 and 1911, he was a member of the Hungarian and King Theaters (Magyar és Király Színházak); in 1911 and 1912 he was engaged by the Theater in Pécs and, during 1912-1913, by the theater in Szabadka. After 1921 he played mainly at the Theater of Debrecen where, from 1926 to 1937, he did managing work as well. In 1937-1938 he was a member of the Artist Theater (Művész Színház), Budapest. In 1939, he obtained permission from the theater director to appear with selected actor partners mainly in the towns of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). He was a secretary, first at the Operetta Theater (Operettszínház), Budapest, and then, in 1941-1942, at the New Hungarian Theater (Új Magyar Színház). From 1945 to 1949 he was again a member of the theater in Debrecen, where he worked also during 1955 to 1957. He was a bright, calm and well-trained actor, a lover of the classics. His roles included the title role in Shakespeare's Hamlet; Caliban in Shakespeare's The Tempest (A vihar); title role in Ibsen's Peer Gynt; Biberach in J. Katona's Bánk bán, and Ádám in I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája). In 1958, he received the Merited Artist title. – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Thuróczy, János (John) (Thuróczi) (? , around 1435 - ? around 1490) – Proto-notary, chronicler and outstanding orator of the times of Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus) (1458-1490). His ancestors are traced back to a family in County Turóc (now in Slovakia). He began his career at the office of the Lord Chief Justice László (Ladislav) Pálóci; later, he was Proto-Notary of Prince István (Stephen) Báthory, continuing in the same capacity with István (Stephen) Hássányi and, finally, he became Proto-Notary of Tamás Drágfi. During the years 1467-1470, he was Lord Chief Justice Notary; from 1470, Notary of the Convent of Ság; from 1475, Notary of the Lord Chief Justice; from 1486 to 1488, he was the King's Chief Justice. He independently wrote the history of Hungary, using old chronicle texts, documents and oral traditions from the time of Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxemburg) (1387- 1437) up to his own age. The Chronica Hungarorum (1488), with numerous woodcuts, was published in two places, in Augsburg and in Brünn (now Brno, Czech Republic), financed by two booksellers of Buda, Tibold Feger and György (George) Ruem. In his work, Turóczy relates the history of the Hungarians from the oldest times right up to his own age. He takes his data from the old chronicles up to time of Károly I (Charles Robert) (1307-1342) inclusively; the section on King Lajos I (Louis the Great) (1342-1380) was written by Archdeacon and Royal Vice-chancellor János (John) of County Küküllő; the part from the times of Queen Maria up to King Matthias Corvinus is the most valuable, for it was written based entirely on his own research and notes. Thuróczy was an admirer of the House of Hunyadi and his own social class, as a secular historian and civil servant, writing on the aspirations and historical outlook of the socially rising gentry class. – B: 0883, 1153, 1257, T: 7456.→Thuróczy Chronicle; Zsigmond, King; Hunyadi Family; Mátyás I, King; Bonfini, Antonio; Báthory, Prince István.

Thury, György (George) (? - Orosztony, 2 April 1571) – Captain of a fortified castle, Turk-defeating hero and troop commander of the castle-forts of the border regions. Already at a quite young age he was in the military; in 1544, he was Hussar Batman in the fortress of Ság. In 1558, he was Captain of Léva (now Levice, Slovakia), and Lord-Lieutenant of County Bars, later Captain of Palota. In 1566, with 500 men, he successfully defended the Castle of Palota and repelled the forces of Arslan, Pasha of Buda. In the same year he took part with László (Ladislás) Gyulaffy in the recapture of Veszprém and Tata. For his heroism, Archduke Maximilian (Miksa) created him a knight and honored him with a gold-chain. From 1567, he was Captain of Kanizsa and, at the same time, Vice-Captain of Transdanubia (Dunántúl). On one occasion, the Turks ambushed him and he was killed in the fight. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Thury, Ilona (Helen) (? , 1876 - New York, 28 March 1953) – Actress and singer. In 1897 she began her acting studies in Fülöp's Drama School under the direction of Szidi Rákosi and Elek (Alec) Solymossy. At the request of her family, she declined an offer for a contract with the Folk Theater (Népszínház), Budapest. She was engaged with Balogh's Company, where she was Kálmán (Coloman) Rózsahegyi's partner. Soon she was invited to the Orpheum in the Capital City. The young singer captivated the audience with the songs of Károly (Charles) Eperjessy and the world opened up for her. She soon appeared in Italy, Bohemia and Serbia. In Pest, she was engaged by the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház); but Ilona Thury decided to emigrate to the USA. In 1905, she became a member of István (Stephen) Rédey's Theater Company. In Palm Garden, her first role was the witch and stepmother in the musical comedy (Singspiel) John the Brave (János vitéz) by Pongrác Kacsóh but, after a few appearances in those roles, she was given the leading role. With István (Stephen) Rédey and Árpád Heltai, she organized the first Hungarian tour. On their program, they had John the Brave; The Rouge of the Village (A falu rossza) by Ede (Edward) Tóth, and The Yellow Colt (A sárga csikó) by Ferenc (Francis) Csepreghy. Called the “matriarch of the American Hungarian Theater” and “the eternal prima donna”, the exceptionally talented actress decided to settle in New York again, where, besides her leading roles, she also liked to sing in vaudevilles to the emigré Hungarians. In addition to her roles mentioned above, her other roles included Hanna Glavari in F. Lehár's The Merry Widow (A víg özvegy); Suska in F. Lehár' The Tinker (Der Rastelbinder – Drótostót); Mrs. Muskát in F. Molnár' Liliom, and the Matriarch in I. Kálmán's The Soldier on Leave (Az obsitos) with Pál (Paul) Jávor. – B: 1445, T: 7456. → Rákosi, Szidi; Rózsahegyi, Kálmán; Jávor, Pál; Varga, László; Cserey, Erzs; Kacsóh, Pongrác.

Thury, Zoltán (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 7 March 1870 - Budapest, 27 August 1906) – Writer and journalist. He was the son of a military officer. At first, he wandered around in the countryside as a strolling player, without much success; at the same time, he worked as a journalist, first with the paper Kolozsvár, run by István (Stephen) Petelei. In the summer of 1891, he was in Budapest, in the autumn at Szeged, and finally, toward the end of 1892, he was at Pécs; from Pécs he moved to Budapest. As a correspondent, he spent two years in Germany, mainly in Munich (1893-1895). He became acquainted with Russian and Polish émigrés, and joined the group of painters gathered around Simon Hollósy. Returning to Budapest, he worked for the rest of his life as a journalist. First, he worked with the editorial staff of Pester Journal (Pesti Napló) (1895), then Budapest Diary (Budapesti Napló) (1896-1904), and finally, for the editorial of the paper Nap (Sun). Thury was one of the important representatives of the Hungarian critical realism; in his writings, the bitter voice of the lower classes starts to speak. As a playwright he became well known with his play entitled Soldiers (Katonák) (1898), featuring the real life of the officers. The army command protested against staging it. His other works include Novel Fables (Regénymesék) (1894); Women (Asszonyok) play (1900); Provisions (Útravaló) novel (1901), and His Complete Works, vols. i-vi (Összes művei, I-VI) (1908). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Petelei, István; Hollósy, Simon.

Thury, Zsuzsa (Susanna) (Budapest, 22 April 1901 - Budapest, 14 October 1989) – Writer. She completed her high school studies in Debrecen in 1918. From 1921, her short stories appeared in the Pest Journal (Pesti Napló). Her first independent volume of short stories was published in Debrecen, in 1927. For two years (1927-1929) she lived in Paris, working as a press correspondent for the Pest Journal and, for a short time, she studied at the University of Paris (Sorbonne). After returning to Hungary, she was Associate Editor for the paper Opposition (Ellenzék) of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Transylvania in Romania) from 1930 to 1936. In her reminiscences entitled Friends and Enemies (Barátok és ellenségek) (1979), she wrote on the literary and social life of these years. From 1936 on, she continued as a writer in Budapest. Until 1945, most of her novels appeared in literary serials: Hungarian Novels, Book of Hundred-Thousands, Budapest Novels, and Interesting Books. (Magyar regények, Százazrek könyve, Budapesti regények, Érdekes könyvek). In her novel, No. 20-22 Rigó Street (Rigó utca 20-22) (1941), the critics found her narrative style and her deep psychological description noteworthy. Her novels and youth-novels published after 1945, are interwoven with autobiographical motives. In her novel Devil's Dance (Ördögtánc) (1961), she brought to life her own father's figure. The hero of her novel, The Brother (A fivér) (1988) was modeled on Lajos (Louis) Thury. Her short story collection of Zoltán Thury was published in her selection and with a preface entitled First, One Has to Die (Előbb meg kell halni) (1959). Her other works include Julia Bányai, (Bányai Júlia) novel (1951); The French Girl (A francia kislány) (1953); Stepbrothers and Sisters (Mostoha testvérek) novel (1956); The Viennese Road (A bécsi országút) novel (1973), and I Came from America (Amerikából jöttem) novel (1983). She was awarded the Attila József Prize twice (1954, 1957). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Thury, Zoltán.

Thurzó, Gábor (Gabriel) (Rutterschmied, Károly) (Budapest, 26 March 1912 - Budapest, 5 February 1979) – Writer and translator of literary works. He completed the Piarist High School of Budapest, where the eminent literary historian and poet Sándor (Alexander) Sík was his teacher in History of Literature. He began his higher studies at the University of Budapest, studying Hungarian and German literature. He was one of the founders of the journal, Perspective (Perspektiva) (1931-1932). He interrupted his studies to go to Germany in 1933. On his return to Hungary, he worked in his mother's bakery, and his first short stories and feuilletons started to appear. He joined the activity of the Service and Writing Workers' Society (Szolgálat és Írás Munkatársaság). From 1935 he joined the journal Vigilia, as a leading figure of the neo-Catholic literature. Thurzó's views were influenced by famous French philosophers, especially Jacques Maritain. In his prose writings, he became increasingly influenced by Sándor (Alexander) Márai. He wrote his novels and short stories about the breaking up of the traditional civil way of life, e.g. The Debt (Az adósság) (1939). In 1938, he became editor of the Catholic literary paper, Life (Élet), where he discovered the talented young János (John) Pilinszky. In 1942 he founded, with others, the journal Silver Age (Ezüstkor). In the years after World War II, he was drama critic of the Artist Theater (Művész Színház) of Zoltán Várkonyi. In 1948 he became a member of the Editorial Board of Vigilia. From 1951 he worked as a drama critic for a film studio; from 1961, as a drama critic for Hungarian Television. As author or co-author, he took part in the preparation of a number of very successful feature films, e.g. Erkel (1952); Budapest Spring (Budapesti tavasz) (1954), and Attempt (Merénylet) (1960). After years of silence, Thurzó's creative work underwent a radical change, as shown by his next novel Counterfeit Money (Hamis pénz) (1956). A volume of short stories of similar approach, entitled Amen, Amen (1959) became very popular. His most important work is the novel The Saint (A szent) (1966), at the center of which is also a moral problem, featuring the life history of István (Stephen) Kaszap; in reality it shows the collision between individual and social moralities. His works also include Prelude (Előjáték) novel (1938); In the Valley of Shadows (Árnyak völgyében) novel (1942); A Man's End (Egy ember vége) novel (1968), and The Play of Seven Colors (Hétszínjáték) (1974). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Sík, Sándor; Márai, Sándor; Várkonyi, Zoltán; Kaszap, István; Pilinszky, János.

Tibetan Healing – The general name of the so-called basic book is “rGyud bzhi” (Gyüsi). This essay, otherwise called Four Tantras, expounds in detail all branches of traditional Tibetan healing; medical ethics, proper nourishment and behavior, important questions of the indivisible togetherness of the mind, soul and body, and details of healing and death. Alexander Csoma de Kőrös prepared the first abbreviated English language review of it, published in 1835. According to the most recent Tibetan research, certain tenets of traditional healing are not derived from Buddhism but from the earlier native ‘bön’. – B: 3240, T: 7669.→Kőrösi Csoma, Sándor.

Tibetan Language and Literature – Monosyllabic language with traces of agglutination belonging to the Tibeto-Burmese language family. Its main dialect is the Mid-Tibetan. Alexander Csoma de Kőrös made its first scientific survey and compiled the first Tibetan grammar and Tibetan-English dictionary, published in Calcutta in 1843. The Tibetan literature has primarily religious features; it consists of translations mainly from the Sanskrit and later from the Chinese language. A collection of more than 300 volumes, entitled Kangyur and Tangyur, is a whole series of scientific and philosophical works. The Tibetan secular literature is insignificant; it consists mainly of songs and fables. – B: 1078, 3240, T: 7669.→Kőrösi Csoma, Sándor (Csoma de Kőrös, Alexander).

Tiboldi, Mária (Szolnok, 20 April 1939 - ) – Actress and singer. After completing her studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, she was engaged by the Theater in Szolnok, where she played in operettas, operas and prose. From 1963 she was a member of the Operetta Theater (Operettszínház) in Budapest. In 1966 she obtained a contract abroad, first at the Theater des Westens of Berlin; from 1968 at the Landestheater of Salzburg; from 1972 as the Prima donna of the Raimund Theater of Vienna. From 1976 she was again an artist of the Operetta Theater in Budapest. She is a born Prima donna; her charm, appearance and personality are complemented with well-developed singing and acting refinement. She has often appeared abroad as a guest artist on stage and in TV plays. Her roles include Sylvia in I. Kálmán's The Gypsy Princess (Csárdáskirálynő); Olga in J. Heltai's The Girls of Fairy Cottage (A tündérlaki lányok); Ilona Kőrösházy in F. Lehár's Gypsy Love (Cigányszerelem); Rosalinda in J. Strauss Jr.'s Die Fledermaus (A denevér); Fedora in I. Kálmán's The Circus Princess (A Cirkuszhercegnő); Countess Ceprano in Verdi's Rigoletto, and Liza in F. Lehár's The Land of Smiles (A mosoly országga). Her evenings as diseuse include The Sweetest Singer of the Land (A nemzet csalogánya) (on Lujza Blaha) and Lady in Pink (on Gitta Alpár). Her foreign films and TV films include Die Ungarische Hochzeit (1969), Guiditta (1970), and Der Opernball (1973). She received the Maritim Prize (1975), and the Mari Jászai Prize in 1986. – B: 1445, T: 7456.→Blaha, Lujza; Alpár, Gitta.

Tichy, Kálmán (Coloman) (Nyíresi Tichy) (Rozsnyó, now Rožňava, Slovakia, 31 October 1888 - Budapest, 23 October 1968) – Painter, graphic artist and writer. He studied at the free school of Simon Hollósy in Munich (1906), and from 1907 to 1911 at the Academy of Applied Art of Budapest; his graphics teacher was Viktor Olgyai. During his student years, some of his graphics appeared at exhibitions; his first writings appeared in the Rozsnyó News (Rozsnyói Híradó) (Rozsnyó, now Rožňava, Slovakia). From 1915 his novel Erinnis was serialized in the daily, Budapest. From 1923 to 1927, he was Editor of the paper, Sajó Region (Sajó Vidék); then became a correspondent for the Hungarian News of Prague (Prágai Magyar Hírlap). His first independent volume The Four Seasons (A négy évszak) with his own illustrations appeared in 1927. In 1930, he was the Head of the Municipal Museum of Rozsnyó (Rozsnyói Városi Múzeum) and, from 1934, Secretary of the Gömör District of the Slovak-Magyar Cultural Association (CSEMADOK). His writings also appeared in the Hungarian People's Daily (Magyar Néplap) and Hungarian Minerva (Magyar Minerva), both of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). In 1935 he published his monograph entitled From Philiceum to Pelsőc (Philiceumtól Pelsőcig). He was also engaged in ethnographical research and collecting. His material is held in the Ethnographic Museum of Budapest. Albert Pákh processed his archival legacy. From 1938 to 1945 his writings appeared in the periodicals Sunrise (Napkelet); Shepherd's Fire (Pásztortűz); Mirror (Tükör); Researcher (Búvár); Source (Forrás), and the New Hungarian Museum (Új Magyar Múzeum). During the period from 1910 to 1945, a long list of his works on fine art appeared as well. After 1945, he was deported to Hungary and lived in Budapest. His graphic works of secessionist nature are noteworthy; he also published a series of linoleum-engravings. His painting Siege of the Rooster-legged Castle (A kakaslábú vár ostroma) is now held by the Museum of Pozsony. From 1948 he lived in Budapest. – B: 0883, 1257, 1878, T: 7456.→Hollósy, Simon; Nagybánya Artist Colony.

Tichy, Lajos (Louis) (Budapest, 21 March 1935 - Budapest, 6 January 1999) – Soccer-player and coach. He played for the Budapest Honvéd FC, and scored 247 goals in 320 league games. He played for that Club between 1953 and 1971, and was the League's top scorer five times. He also scored 51 goals in 72 international matches for the Hungarian National Football Team, including four in the 1958 World Cup Finals, and three in the 1962 World Cup Finals. He later became trainer of the Honvéd Youth Team. The "Nation's Bomber" was the fourth in the line of the best ever Hungarian footballers, following Ferenc (Francis) Puskás, Sándor (Alexander) Kocsis, and Imre (Emeric) Schlosser. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Puskás, Ferenc; Kocsis, Sándor; Schlosser, Imre.

Tihany Abbey Foundation Document – This Latin language foundation document, preserved in the original, contains one of the earliest continuous Hungarian sentence:

Feheruvaru rea meneh hodu utu rea (i.e. Fehérvárra menő hadiútra – Unto the military road leading to Fehérvár). The document of King András I (Andrew) (1046-1060), written on parchment and granted in 1055, founded the monastery at Tihany, on the northern shore of Lake Balaton, and it also provided real and personal property along with servants. To the donated estate belong arable lands, pastures, vineyards and orchards, altogether 18 properties. In the Latin text, 58 Hungarian words appear either scattered or as continuous text. Ancient Hungarian words, numerous geographical names, certain trees and bushes were supposedly inserted in the Latin language document in order to avoid the possibility of later arguments about certain border areas. The archives of the Pannonhalma Monastery guard this document. – B: 1230, 1038, 1022, T: 7669.→Tihany Benedictine Abbey; Pannonhalma, Archabbey.

Tihany Benedictine Abbey – The Abbey was established by King András I (Andrew) (1046-1060) in 1055. The Monastery's foundation deed is the oldest Hungarian linguistic record. In the Romanesque undercroft is the only royal grave in Hungary to have remained at its original site. The new church of the Abbey is one of the most attractive examples of Baroque architecture. The medieval church and monastery were erected in honor of St Anianus and the Virgin Mary. Apart from 16th and 17th century pictures, a few stone carvings and the 11th century undercroft are the only reminders of the original buildings. Built in 1055, the Romanesque three-aisle crypt hall is illuminated by tiny lancet-arch windows. This is where the sarcophagus of King András I is kept. The grave of the founder of the church is covered by a tombstone ornamented with a carved spiral-notched, long-stemmed cross. Crosses of this kind were reserved solely for royal graves. The monastery's deed of foundation is the oldest Hungarian document preserved in its original form. Though mainly written in Latin, some Hungarian words and expressions are also included and it is thus considered to be the oldest written linguistic record of the Hungarian language. The original is kept in the Pannonhalma Monastery, but an identical copy is displayed and can be read in Tihany. The renovation of the Abbey was started in the 1720s, and the building complex was given its present form during that process. Although the Abbey still has a religious function, some parts of the building complex host a Museum. Built between 1719 and 1754, the two-steeple Abbey Church is a masterpiece of Hungarian Baroque architecture. Outstanding artists created the frescoes and the furnishings. Though the organ chest is nearly 250 years old, the organ itself is new and excellent for organ concerts. The complex was made into a Museum during the Communist era (1948-1989), and only on 9 July 1994 was the ownership restored to the Benedictine Order. – B&T: 2076.→Pannonhalma, Arch Abbey of the Benedictine Order; Tihany Abbey Foundation Document; András I, King.

Tihany Codex – A Hungarian manuscript of Franciscan origin by an unknown author, dating from between 1530 and 1532. It was presumably made for the use of the Clarissa nuns, and contains sermons, parables and legends taken from the Stellarium by Pelbárt Temesvári. It contains 200 leaves, and is a Hungarian language relic. Originally it was in the possession of the Abbey of Tihany, hence its name. Today it is in the National Széchényi Library in Budapest. – B: 1150, 1078, T: 7617.→Temesvári, Pelbárt; Codex Literature.

Tihanyi, Éva (Budapest, 1956 - ) – Poetess. She moved to Canada with her parents at the tender age of six. She attended the University of Windsor, taught English for seven years at the Humber, George Brown, and Seneca Colleges in Toronto, and at the University of Windsor. She lectures as Professor of English at Niagara College, Ontario. She has published four books of poetry: A Sequence of Blood (1982) prophesies; Near the Speed of Light (1984); Saved by the Telling (1995), and Restoring the Wickedness, (2000). – B: 0892, T: 4342.

Tihanyi, Kálmán (Coloman) (Üzbég, now Zbehy in Slovakia, in former County Nyitra, 28 April 1897 - Budapest, 26 February 1947) – Physicist, electrical engineer and inventor. His higher qualification was obtained from the Universities of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) and Budapest. His most important invention is the cathode ray tube for television (iconoscope); he patented his fully electronic television system in 1926. This and the improved version he patented in 1928 embodied a new concept in design and operation, building upon a phenomenon that would become known as the “storage principle”. This was bought and developed by RCA, Loewe, and Fernseh AG. RCA approached Tihanyi in 1930, and negotiations continued until 1934, when RCA purchased his patents, and manufactured its new television system based on Tihanyi's design. This firm built a new television system on the basis of his inventions and, to make it public, it purchased his licenses. It became obvious that in the development of television, he created an invention of decisive significance. His charge-storage invention has remained the basic principle of modern television. In 1939, he submitted a patent application in England for the flat TV tube. In England he worked on an air defense system directed by television; he worked there on the prototype of a robot plane as well, which was adapted for the purposes of the Italian navy. Between 1935 and 1940, he worked out his ultrasound radiating apparatus, planned for a range of 5 - 8 km; in 1940 he returned to Hungary, where he prepared the prototype of this apparatus. He is regarded as the father of modern television. – B: 1160, 1081, 1912, 0883, 1031, T: 7456, 7103.

Tihanyi, Lajos (Louis) (Budapest, 29 October 1885 - Paris, 11 June 1938) – Painter. For a year, he was a student at the Academy of Applied Art, Budapest; later, he attended a private school. He visited the Nagybánya (now Baia Mare, Transylvania in Romania) Artist Colony several times. He first exhibited in 1908 and appeared as a member of the Eights (Nyolcak) in their 1911 and 1912 exhibitions. It was in 1918 that he organized his first collective exhibition in the foyer of the paper Today (Ma). In his art, he follows the Cezanne traditions; he also dabbled in Cubism, and concurrently he was influenced by Expressionism. His portraits, painted with psychological feeling (e.g. Self-portrait, 1920), reflect the paintings of Oszkár. Kokoschka. He painted, with expressive portrayal of character, a number of famous figures of the Hungarian intellectual life, such as Endre (Andrew) Ady, Mihály (Michael) Babits, Dezső (Desider) Kosztolányi, Lajos (Louis) Kassák, Lajos Fülep, and others. In his scenes and still-life pictures, by means of his form analysis, he sought the rules of picture composition, such as Bridge (Híd) (1922) and Still Life with Cacti (1922). After the fall of the Council (Soviet) Republic in 1919, he moved to Vienna and, from 1924, he lived in Paris until his death. In Paris he painted non-figurative pictures. He held exhibitions in Vienna, Berlin and Paris. – B: 0883, 1031, T:

7456.→Most of the names mentioned above have their own entry; Nagybánya Artist Colony; Eight, The Group of.

Tihanyi, László (Ladislav) (Budapest, 21 March 1956 - ) – Conductor. He completed his high school studies at the Bartók Béla Specialized Music High School in the composer program; his teachers were Elek (Alec) Huzella, Béla C. Nagy and István (Stephen) Fekete Győr (1970-1974). From 1974 to 1979, he was a student of Rezső Sugár in the composition program at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. Between 1977 and 1982, he studied at the Conductor Training Program with András (Andrew) Kórodi. From 1978 to 1993, he was a teacher of solfège and music theory at the Béla Bartók Music Specialized High School; between 1979 and 1997, he was a lecturer at the Department of Music Theory at the Music Academy, Budapest. Between 1980 and 1988 he was the Conductor of the Symphonic Orchestra of the Budapest Polytechnic. In 1985, he was founder and Artistic Director of the Intermoduláció Chamber Ensemble. Since 1984, Tihanyi has been Exclusive Editor for the Editio Musica, Budapest. From 1997 to 2004, he was a lecturer at the Department of Music Theory of the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Music Academy. Between 2000 and 2004 he was Deputy Rector of the Music Department, University of Budapest. Since 2004, he has been Professor of Music Theory at the same University. Since 2007, he has been a member of the Széchenyi Art Academy. He worked as a composer and conductor in France, Great Britain, Germany, Italy, Austria, Switzerland, Finland, Czech Republic, Croatia, the USA, Australia and Korea. Among his works are Shadow Play (Árnyjáték) (Genitrix) a mixed trio; Villon and His Times (Villon és kora) song poetry, and 20 Meditations for the Night (20 éjszakai meditáció). His opera, Heavenly Father (Atyaisten), was first performed in Budapest in 2008. His distinctions include the Erkel and Bartók-Pásztory Awards, the Albert Szirmai Award (1981), the Special Prize of the Hungarian Music Association (1988), the ARTISJUS Prize (1986, 1988, 1989, 1992, 1993 and 1998), the Erkel Prize (1997), the Merite Culturel Prize, Poland (1999), the Bartók-Pásztory Prize (2001), and the Hans Martin Ziegler Prize, Kassel (2002). – B: 1991, T: 7684.→Sugár, Rezső; Kórodi, András.

Tildy, Zoltán (Losonc, now Lucenec, Slovakia, 18 November 1889 - Budapest, 3 August 1961) – Minister of the Reformed Church, politician, political leader. He attended High School in Léva (now Levice, Slovakia) and Besztercebánya (now Bankska Bistrica, Slovakia), and studied Theology in Pápa and Belfast. During World War I, he returned to Hungary and became a teacher in Pápa, then a parish minister in Szenna (1916), Orci (1919), Tahitótfalu (1919-1929) and Szeghalom, (1932-1946). With Rev. Albert Bereczky, he founded the Sylvester Literary and Publishing Institute in 1924. He edited the papers: Christian Family (Keresztyén család), the Winter Journal (Téli Újság), the Reformed Minister (Református Lelkipásztor) and the Prairie (Mezőföld). Tildy was involved in politics, was one of the founders of the Smallholders' Party, and became its acting Vice-President in 1930. He was elected Member of Parliament and served from 1936 to 1944, and joined the anti-fascist Hungarian Front in 1944. He served as President of the Smallholders' Party, was Member of Parliament till 1944, and Prime Minister for a year, and then served as President of the Republic of Hungary until 1948. A false accusation against his son-in-law prompted his resignation and he was placed under house arrest. During the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he was appointed a Minister in Imre Nagy's Cabinet and was later sentenced to six years in prison, but was released in 1959. Some of his literary works include The Resurrection of Jesus (Jézus feltámadása) (1916); The Way of a Happy and True Life (A boldog és igaz élet útja) (1920), and We Will Have a More Glorious Future (Lesz még dicsőbb jövőnk nekünk) (1924). – B: 0932, 0883, 1105, T: 7103.→Bereczky, Albert.

Tilli, Endre (Andrew) (Budapest, 15 August 1922 - Shannon area, Ireland, 14 August 1958) – Fencer, specialist writer and trainer. He was a designer at a construction company in Budapest. As a fencer of the Vasas Sports Club, he won the National Championship four times (1951-1954), was in the dagger team for five years, and in the sword team in 1950. He was a member of the Hungarian Selected Team that placed 3rd in the Helsinki (1952) and Melbourne (1956) Summer Olympic Games. In the Paris World Championship (1955), he became champion in the dagger team. In the World Championship of Rome (1957), he took 2nd place. He took part in the Brussels (1953) and Luxemburg (1954) World Championships. He was a member of the 12th College World Championship held in Budapest in 1949, and champion in the Hungarian sword team, and took second place in the dagger individual and team events. In the Polish International Championship (1948) he took 2nd place in individual dagger and 3rd place in individual sword. As the trainer of the Egyptian selected team, traveling to the World Championships in Philadelphia in 1958, he fell victim of a plane accident. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Tímár György (George) (Budapest, 23 June 1929 - Budapest, 24 September 2003) – Poet, critic and literary translator. After graduating from a High School in Budapest, he became an associate for the papers, People of Kossuth (Kossuth Népe), and Hungarian People (Magyar Nép). In 1950 and 1951, he was an unskilled worker at the Ganz Works in Budapest, and a free-lance writer. Between 1960 and 1981, he was Secretary of the PEN Club. In his poetry he mixed tradition and innovation, characterized by philosophical and grotesque features. He translated works from French, Spanish, Turkish and German authors. He translated poems of Gyula (Julius) Illyés into French, and he also wrote poems in French. His literary parodies were popular. His works include The Diary of Dread (Az iszonyat naptára) poems (1961); Laughing Lexicon (Nevető lexikon); (1974); I Didn't Write It (Nem én írtam) literary parodies (1979); The Secret of the Danube (A Duna titka) novel (1988), and Les platanes de la piscine Saint Luc, poems (Paris 1988). – B: 1257, T: 7103.→Illyés, Gyula.

Timár, József (Joseph) (Gerstner) (Budapest, 7 March 1902 - Budapest, 3 October 1960) – Actor. In 1923 he began studying at the Academy of Dramatic Art in Budapest and, already in 1924 he appeared in the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. In the fall of 1925, he was engaged there. After 1945 he appeared in other theaters in Budapest, including the Comedy Theater (Vígyszínház) and the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház). During the 1950s, he played in the countryside. From 1953 to 1958, he was a member of the Madách Theater (Madách Színház) and later he was again a member of the National Theater. One of his greatest roles was Willy Loman in the Miller drama Death of a Salesman (Az ügynök halála) in the National Theater (1959). In the National Theater he was the successor of Imre (Emeric) Pethes and Árpád Ódry. Timár was a character-portraying actor of outstanding evocative power. His stage roles included Herald in Sophocles' Antigone; in Shakespeare dramas: Cassius in Julius Caesar; Edgar in King Lear; Antony in Antony and Cleopatra; title role in Othello; Mercutio in Romeo and Juliet; Lucifer in Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az Ember Tragédiája); Otto and Biberach in Katona's Bánk bán; Gregers in Ibsen's The Wild Duck (A vadkacsa); Rank in Ibsen's Nora; Fegia in Tolstoy's The Living Corpse (Élő holttest); Versin in Chekhov's The Three Sisters (A három nővér); title role in Shaw's Man and Superman (Tanner John házassága), and District physician in László Németh's By Lightning (Villámfénynél). He appeared in films from 1936. His feature film roles included The Wild Flower of Gyimes (A gyimesi vadvirág) (1938); On the Slope (Lejtőn) (1943); The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája) (1944); Semmelweis (1952); Relatives (Rokonok) (1954); Two Confessions (Két vallomás) (1957), and Red Ink (Vörös tinta) (1959). He was a recipient the Farkas-Ratkó Prize (1934), the Merited Artist title (1956), the Kossuth Prize (1957), and the Outstanding Artist title (1960). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Timár, Sándor (Alexander) (Szolnok, 2 October 1930 - ) – Folk dance choreographer and instructor. From 1951 to 1955 he performed at the Trade Union Ensemble. Since 1958 he has been Director of the Béla Bartók Dance Ensemble. His research and collection of folk motifs, which he began early in his career, and the completion of a choreography course all influenced his early compositions, which reflect his awareness of the various dance elements of Hungary's different regions. He became one of the initiators and developers of the Folk Dance Movement, which encompasses folk dance centers throughout the country. He was also involved in the development of children's folk dancing. In 1971, Timár became an instructor at the Folk Dance Department of the State Ballet Institute in Budapest; and later, until 1990, he was its director. From 1981, he was the Artistic Director of the National State Folk Ensemble, where he was responsible for the renewal of its artistic character. Earlier in his career, he often toured the country as a guest director and was often invited abroad, for example to Japan, and thus significantly contributed to the dissemination of the new folklore philosophy. Today, with his wife, Böske (Bessy) Timár, he directs the popular Starry Eyed Dance Ensemble (Csillagszemű Táncgyűttes). His main choreographic works are White Lily (Fehér liliomszál); Dances of Méhkerék (Méhkeréki táncok); Dance of Five Young Men (Öt legény tánca); Dance of Slavonic Maidens (Szlavonik leánytánc); Words in Dance (Táncbéli táncszók); Pipes (Dudálás); Maiden Dance of Tardona (Tardonai leánytánc); Dance Order of Szék (Széki táncrend), and Wedding Dance (Lakodalmás). He is a recipient the State Prize (1985), the Honored Artist Title (1990), and was made a Freeman of Hegyvidék (2010). – B: 1445, T: 7665.

Timkó, Imre (Emeric) (Budapest, 13 August 1920 - Nyíregyháza, 30 March 1988). – Greek Catholic Bishop. In 1938 he joined the Order of St. Benedict. From 1940 until 1945 he studied Theology at St. Anselm College of Rome; then continued his education at the Department of Religious Studies of the University of Budapest. He was ordained in 1945. In 1948 he received his Doctorate in Theology. From 1945 until 1948, he was University Chaplain; from 1948 until 1952 he was a lecturer of Eastern Theology at the Department of Religious Studies. During 1952-1958 he was a lecturer, and from 1959 to 1975 was Head of the Department of Old Christian Dogmatic History at the Roman Catholic Theological Academy in Budapest. 1972-1975 he was Governor of the Greek Catholic Diocese of Hajdúdorog and, from 1975, Bishop and Apostolic Governor of Miskolc. He was the Vice-President of the Hungarian United Nations Society. He published numerous studies in Christian archeology and art history, as well as on Eastern Theology. He wrote lecture notes for his university students on dogmatic and liturgical history, as well as on Byzantine Christian Art. His works include Eastern Christianity, Eastern Churches (Keleti kereszténység, keleti egyházak), 1971. – B: 0883, T: 7667.

Tinódi Lantos, Sebestyén (Sebastian) (Tinód, between 1505 and 1510 - Sárvár, end of January, 1556) – Poet, songwriter and minstrel. At one time he was called Scribe Sebestyén, the Lutist. Until 1542, Tinódi lived at the court of Bálint (Valentine) Török. Following his lord's Turkish captivity he toured the country as a wandering minstrel. In 1554 he appeared at the Diet held at Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia). The year 1548 found him at the Court of Prince Báthory in Nyírbátor. Later, he lived in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), where he acquired a house and raised a large family. From there, he visited the sites of the more important battlefields. In 1553, Tinódi traveled to Debrecen, and from there to Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). In 1555 he visited Count Tamás Nádasdy at Sárvár, where he died in 1556.

Tinódi practiced all forms of epic literature of the 16th century. He was a famous chronicler of his time, reporting on contemporary events in verse form. He gave especially vivid and faithful descriptions of battles fought with the Turks, based on personal impressions and experiences. Thus his verse-chronicles are of historical value. He also wrote verse pamphlets against aggressive bailiffs and drunkards. He is the first representative of composed Hungarian popular music as opposed to folk music. We know of 23 original melodies written by him, which are preserved in his Cronica, published in Kolozsvár in 1554. He is a notable figure of Hungarian epic poetry, the principal minstrel of the 16th century, whose compositions combined the traditions of the court lutist and the folk bard. His writings often provided the subject matter and literary impulse for later Hungarian works. – B: 0942, 1078, 1153, T: 7617.→Török, Bálint; Nádasdy, Baron Tamás; Patriotic Songs.

Tisia Theory – Outlined in 1914 by the geologist Gyula (Julius) Prinz (1882-1973) in his first study of the Carpathian Basin. Later he published the theory in his work Geography of Hungary (1926), in which he considers the Carpathian Basin an exotic mass of Variscan Age embedded in its surroundings, a “median mass”, submerged and later covered up by younger sediments; Károly (Charles) Telegdi-Róth considers it much younger in age, a product of the Alpidic Orogeny, leading to a “Late Cretaceous emergent area”. During the Cainozoic Age, most of it sank into the depths, leaving only a few fragments on the surface. This theory became outdated a century later with the appearance of plate tectonics. – B: 7674, T: 7674.→Prinz Gyula; Telegdi Róth, Károly.

Tisza, Count István (Stephen) (szegei and borosjenői) (Geszt, 22 April 1861 - Budapest, 31 October 1918) – Statesman and politician. He was the eldest son of Count Kálmán Tisza. He studied Law and Economics at the Universities of Berlin, Heidelberg and Budapest. Thereafter, he spent five years on the family property in County Bihar to manage the estate. From 1886, he was a Member of Parliament with a liberal program, and President of the Hungarian Industrial and Commercial Bank (Magyar Kereskedelmi és Iparkamara). Early in his political career, he realized the dangers the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy was facing and urged suitable preparedness. During his first term as Prime Minister, from 3 November 1903 to 18 June 1905, he took steps against the obstructionist activities of the Opposition, and moved a Bill for strengthening the armed forces by increasing its recruit-strength. He also had the ashes of Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II (1705-1711) returned to Kassa, Hungary (now Košice, Slovakia). He suppressed the planned railway strike for April 1904 and, by force, put into effect the modification of the standing parliamentary orders; this led to the disintegration of his own party. In the elections of January 1905, the Coalition of the Opposition won. In 1906, Tisza dissolved the Liberal Party, and he himself retired from political activity; until 1910, he only retained his membership of the Upper House. After the fall of the Coalition, Tisza founded the National Work Party (Nemzeti Munkapárt), which won a great victory at the elections but, as a strongly conservative politician, he turned against most of the reform plans. In 1912, he was elected President of the House of Commons. He had the Defense Force Bill accepted by the House. After the fall of the Lukács Government, the King appointed the experienced Tisza as Prime Minister for the second time, on 10 June 1913. He worked for internal consolidation by easing the tension with the nationalities and he opposed the aggressive policy of Count Berchtold, the Austro-Hungarian Foreign Minister, at the outbreak of World War I. Even after the Sarajevo assassination of Archduke Ferenc (Franz) Ferdinand and his wife on 28 June 1914, Tisza was against war with Serbia, but he could not prevent its outbreak in the existing power relations of Europe. His political moves during the war were characterized by his attachment to the alliance with Germany. After the death of Francis Joseph on 21 November 1916, Tisza had disagreements with the new King, Károly IV (Charles) and resigned on 23 May 1917. On the 15th of June, he went to the Italian front as the Commander of the Hussar Regiment of Debrecen. His last political assignment was to have discussions in Sarajevo with the South-Slavic leaders bent on seceding from the Monarchy; but this did not lead to success. On 17 October 1918, Tisza announced to the Parliament that the war was lost. Two weeks later, on 31 October 1918, in the upheaval of the capital, a revolutionary mob of soldiers believing that he was mainly responsible for the outbreak of the war, burst into his home and killed him. He was an Honorary Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences since 1910. By the post-war agreement of the whole nation, Count István Tisza is honored as the greatest statesman of the pre-World War I period, the heroic example of a man of uncompromising conviction as a matter of principle, believing in strong personal government, who died with the Historic Hungary. He became immortal like other great tragic Hungarians such as M. Zrinyi, I. Széchenyi and L. Kossuth. His statue was erected in Budapest, removed by Communist regimes and re-erected in 2012. His works include Complete Works of István Tisza, vols. i-vi (Tisza István összes munkái, I – VI) (1923-1937) and Parliamentary Speeches of Count István Tisza, vols. i-iv Gróf Tisza István képviselőházi beszédei (I – IV) (1930 - 1937). – B: 0883, 1068, 1789, 1031, T: 7456.→Tisza, Count Kálmán; World War I, Hungary in.

Tisza, Count Kálmán (Coloman) (Geszt, 16 December 1830 - Budapest, 23 March 1902) – Statesman and politician. He was the Administrator of County Bihar, the descendant of a family of large estate owners, and father of István Tisza. During the 1848-1849 War of Independence against Habsburg oppression, he was an assistant clerk in the Ministry of Religion and Education of the Batthyány Government. Tisza followed the National Defense Committee even to Debrecen. After the defeat of the war, he went abroad for eighteen months. After he returned, he took a strong line against the Letter-Patent of 1 September 1859 with its measures endangering the autonomy of Protestants, and also against the October Diploma, which was to subordinate the Hungarian Legislation to the Austrian Imperial Council. With this action, as the defender of constitutionalism, he won great popularity. In the 1861 Diet he was the Vice-President of the Lower House. He joined the Resolution Party and, after the suicide of László Teleki, Tisza became its leader. From the 1865 Diet on, together with Kálmán Ghyczy, he was the leader of the so-called Left-Center for a decade. He was against the 1867 Compromise with Austria in the form realized by Deák, including the shared ministries with Austria. He was planning to set up an independent Hungarian Army, and create a separate financial and commercial system. These programs gave his party considerable significance. Fusing the “left-center” and the weakened government party, he created the Liberal Party (Szabadelvű Párt), which governed Hungary uninterruptedly for three decades. Tisza was Minister of the Interior from 1875 to 1887, and Prime Minister for 15 years, from October 1875 to March 1890. Tisza’s governing method through the Liberal Party and his parliamentary “art” almost bordered on a one-party dictatorship. Under his term as Prime Minister, he governed firmly with the basic principles of the dualism laid down in 1867. Under him, the governmental structure of the Dual Monarchy reached its highest level of consolidation. In foreign affairs he fully supported the Foreign Minister, Count Gyula Andrassy, in matters such as the occupation of Bosnia and the formation of the Triple Alliance. Tisza attempted to transform the autonomous municipal method of local government, inherited from the medieval feudal system, into a modern, uniform, centralized public service and state administration, including the Audit Office, Revenue Office, setting up the Gendarmerie and the State Police of Budapest, Criminal Law (penal code) (Csemegi-Codex), and the School Bills (Trefort). The county administration was modernized to form the basis for an up-to-date centralized civic administration system. Members of the numerous, but poor gentry class were diverted to work in county offices. Tisza’s Government achieved the development of the institutional legal framework for the economy, regulation of the credit system, and the development of an extensive network for the State Railway. In 1889, when he requested the passing of the recruit payment for 10 years, the opposition forced him to withdraw the proposal. In 1890, because of the statement he made concerning the Citizenship Bill (concerning the citizenship of the emigrant Lajos Kossuth), he was forced to resign. He remained a prominent member of his party until his death. – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456. → Tisza, Count István; October Diploma; Andrassy, Count Gyula (1); Trefort, Ágoston; Kossuth, Lajos.

Tiszaeszlár Affair (Tiszaeszlári per) – A trial in Hungary in 1882 and 1883, centered around a charge of ritual murder of a young girl of Tiszaeszlár, a village on the Tisza River that set off political and social debates and anti-Semitic agitation. On 1 April 1882, Eszter Solymosi, a 14-year-old Christian peasant girl, a servant in the home of a resident, was sent on an errand from which she did not return. After a long search, a rumor was spread that the girl had become a victim of Jewish religious murder. Parliamentarians debated the case in the Hungarian Parliament resulting in a number of violent acts and pogroms, and the case even became a European issue. After thirty sessions and bitter proceedings, the Court of Nyíregyháza finally acquitted the accused on 3 August 1883. This was the signal for an uprising in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), Budapest, and other parts of Hungary. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Istóczy, Győző; Jews in Hungary.

Tiszay, Magda (Békéscsaba, 4 April 1919 - Munich, Germany, 27 December 1989) – Opera singer (alto). She studied at the Academy of Music of Budapest, first singing, then opera; her teachers were Bianka Malecky, Jenő (Eugen) Ádám and Oszkár Malecky. She was a member of the Hungarian State Opera from 1944, initially on a scholarship. From 1946, following the death of Mária Basilides, she gradually assumed her repertory roles. Her first major success came in 1949, when she captivated the audience with her dark, smooth, emotive voice, performing Bizet's Carmen. She was the most popular soloist on the National Oratorio Evenings. She gave guest performances in the Opera Houses of Munich, Bonn, Cologne, Stuttgart, Moscow, Bratislava and Bucharest, and in numerous Concert Halls abroad. She made several recordings both at home and internationally. It was her warm, balanced voice that won her recognition. She moved to Germany in 1962. Her main roles were: Housewife in Kodály's The Szekler Spinning Room (Székelyfonó); Örzse in Kodály's Háry János; Ulrica in Verdi's A Masked Ball (Álarcosbál); Mnfa in Mussorgsky's Khovanshchina; Konchakovna in Borodin's Prince Igor; Azucena in Verdi's Il Trovatore, and Fricka in Wagner's Der Ring des Nibelungen (Ring Cycle). She was recipient of the Liszt Prize (1955) and the Kossuth Prize (1957). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7667.→Basilides, Mária; Ádám, Jenő; Kodály, Zoltán.

Titkos, Ilona (Helen) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 21 May 1898 - Budapest, 21 May 1963) – Actress. She completed the actors' training school of the State Performers' Association under difficult circumstances. Artur Bárdos signed her to a contract at the Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház). She was very successful in Zoltán Egged's play, Rouge et Noir. She played her next role in Béla Szenes' The Stupid Man (A buta ember) 150 times, suggesting she had finally achieved recognition. She was also under contract to the Theater on Andrásy Street, the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház), the Comedy Theater (Vígyszínház), and the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest in 1935. Later, she returned to the Comedy Theater. Ilona Titkos was one of the most popular actresses of her time. Her range of acting extended from the French roles of gaiety to the heavy, passionate dramatic roles. Her temperamental playing and specially feminine attractiveness showed an instinctive gift, with strength and simplicity. In 1944, the national socialist Arrow Cross party sent her to prison in Sopronkőhida. After World War II, she acted for a short while in Miskolc; then, in 1947, the National Theater again gave her a contract where she remained a member until her retirement in 1959. Her better known acting roles included Sadie Thompson in the play Rain (Eső), (based on Somerset Maugham's story, Miss Sadie Thompson); Henriette in Strindberg's comedy, There are Crimes and Crimes (Mámor); Anne Boleyn in Henry VIII, and, after 1945, Madame Burkevics in Visnyevsky's Unforgettable 1919 (Feledhetetlen 1919)

(1949); Mrs. Pearce in Shaw's Pygmalion; Mrs. Warren in Shaw's Mrs. Warren's Profession (Warrenné mestersége), and Halál (Death) in Garcia Lorca's Blood Wedding (Vérnász). She also starred in films including Europe Does Not Reply (Európa nem válaszol) (1941), Suburban Legend (Külvárosi legenda) (1957), Spiral Staircase (Csigalépcső) (1958), and A Poor Fellow's Love (Fapados szerelem) (1960). – B: 0871, 1719. T: 7684.→Egyed, Zoltán.

Titles of Authority in Hungary (When Hungary was ruled by a prince) – The evolution of their titles shows a certain parallel with the titles used by the ancestral Avars. In order of importance: (1) Kende: the sacred prince, due to his heavenly origin; the most important power. (2) Gyula: the ruler of the eastern part of the country; in time of war the Commander-in-Chief. Later he assumed the role of Chief Justice as well. (3) Harka: the ruler of the western part of the country; in times of war he was the second in command. (4) Jugur: the chief of justice; this title and position was later taken over by the Gyula. – B: 1020, T: 7665.

Tittel, Pál (Paul) (Pásztó, 28 June 1784 - Buda, 26 August 1831) – Astronomer and priest. He studied Philosophy and Theology in Eger in 1806. Then, he was a teacher of mathematics at the Lyceum in Eger. His bishop sent him to Vienna to study astronomy, and he obtained the qualification as astronomer in Vienna. From 1815 to 1818 he studied at the University in Göttingen, Germany with Johann Carl Friedrich Gauss, who spoke with high regard of the intellect of his student. During sojourns of various lengths, he studied at the astronomical observatories of Paris, London, and Greenwich, and made the acquaintance of the most renowned astronomers of Europe, with whom he kept corresponding until the end of his life. Upon his return to Hungary, he became Director of the Astronomical Observatory of the Teachers' College in Eger. Because the instruments became obsolete in the secondary school, which was meant originally as a university, it was downgraded by Emperor and King József II (Joseph) (1780-1790), he gladly accepted the director's position, which was offered to him at the University Observatory on Gellérthegy in Budapest. He began his activities there in 1825, and his university lectures in 1827. In his time, the observatory on Gellérthegy was a cultural center of the Capital, where politicians, authors, and poets enjoyed the company of the polyhistor priest-astronomer. He published primarily in foreign journals and was one of the first members of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He initiated the exact time service of Pest-Buda in 1830. An epidemic disease ended his promising career (at the age of 47). Mihály (Michael) Vörösmarty bade farewell to his 'midnight friend of the starry crowns' (Téged, egek s csillagkoronák éjféli barátját...), in the beautiful ode, Tittel halálkor (On the death of Tittel) – B: 0883, 1020, 1031, T: 7674.→Astronomy in Hungary; Vörösmarty, Mihály; József II, Emperor and King.

“Tobacco Land” Hungarians of the (Ontario, Canada) – For Hungarians of Eastern Canada, the tobacco area was a quite important one. Here, Hungarians arrived in groups during the 1930s. Much before them, there were the Belgians, who were the most recognized tobacco-growers of the region, and their majority already lived in very privileged circumstances, when the Hungarians, pressed by the unemployment in their homeland, arrived in the area. In the beginning, they worked as day laborers on the Belgians' tobacco fields; then they worked in a half-and-half arrangement, and in a few years they purchased their own land. There were about 1,000 Hungarian families living as tobacco growers. The villages, where Hungarians lived in larger numbers were Aylmer, Amherstburg, Courtland, Delhi, Galt, Langton, Leamington, Nixon, Norwich, Otterville, Silverhill, Simcoe, Tillsonburg, Vienna, Waterford and Windham Centre. The movement to organize the community only started about 10 years later; in this large, scattered area they did not know each other very well. Its center became Delhi, where they first built a church, then a Hungarian House. In time, they also built several churches, schools and homes for the aged, many of them becoming financially successful. The majority of the members of the second generation prosper in the surrounding areas, or more distant places; many of them pursued education and found employment with a professional qualification. In the late 20th century, because of the anti-smoking campaign, tobacco growing has receded. – B: 1020, T: 7668.

Tokaj Range (Eperjes-Tokaj Range, or Zemplén Mountain), an elongated, north-south-running volcanic range of gentle hills, 100 km long and maximum 30 km wide, stretching from Eperjes (now Prešov, Slovakia) in the north, to Tokaj in the south, where the Bodrog River flows into the Tisza River, the largest tributary of the Danube. It is divided into a northern and a southern half by the Dargó (Dargov) Pass. The mean altitude is between 400 and 500 m and its highest point is Nagy Milic/Velký Milič 895 m on the border between Hungary and Slovakia. The Tokaj Range is part of the Inner Northern Montaneland of the Carpathian Basin, a series of extinct volcanic cones of Sarmatian Age (late Middle Miocene age), some as young as the Pannonian (late Miocene to early Pliocene), composed of andesites and rhyolites with their tuffs. Opals were formed in the post-volcanic phase of the range; there is also a salt mine area at Sóvár, and there are numerous occurrences of mineral springs, rich in CO<sub>2</sub>. Mount Tokaj (516 m) at the southern end of the range is famous for its wines (Furmint, Szamorodni, Tokaji Puttonyos) cultivated on its loess-covered slopes. On its northern side there is mining for andesite. It is famous for its unique botany: plants, like Aster cinereus, Astragalus dasyanthus, Sisymbrium polymorphum. The opal is mined at Vörösvágás (now Červenica, Slovakia) in the northern end of the range, 22 km north-east of Kassa (now Košice, in Slovakia), at the southern foot of Mt. Simonka (1092 m); a famous piece of this opal (12.5 x 5.7 cm and 2-7 cm thick) was found in 1770 and presented to the Empress and Queen Maria Theresa (1740-1780), now held in the Natural History Museum of Vienna. – B: 1068, 7456, T: 7456.

Tokaji, Ferenc (Francis) (? - Vienna, 1709) – One of the leaders of the Hegyalja Uprising, at one-time infantry second lieutenant of Count Imre (Emeric) Thököly. He rose from serfdom and became a trader in 1686. Then in 1697, on behalf of the exiled Count Imre Thököly as his colonel, he organized the Hegyalja Uprising, part of the nationalist Kuruc independence movement against the Habsburg rule in the Kingdom of Hungary. On 1 July 1697, with the assistance of György (George) Szalontai, the village mayor of Végardó in County Zemplén, led the serfs, who took up arms against the Habsburg rule. With a 500-strong force, he took the castle of Tokaj by surprise, where they cut down the Austrian garrison. Thereupon he turned to the nobility of the region with a proclamation, to win them for the anti-Habsburg cause. However, his proclamation remained unsuccessful; he could not even persuade the young Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II to be the leader of the uprising. The insurgents left without support and were soon finished off by the imperial Habsburg military forces. By 5 August 1697, one section of the insurgent forces surrendered and the wounded Tokaji was betrayed and imprisoned. He was taken to Vienna, where he died in prison. A High School in Tokaj and a Street in Miskolc, Sárospatak and Sátoraljaújhely bear his name. – B: 1230, 1078, 1031, T: 7456.→Thököly, Prince Imre; Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc.

Tokay Area Runic Lines – Blackish in color, a cut slate with carved runic writing. Its dimensions are 3x2x1 cm with a borehole at its pointed end. It is a sealing slate, thus its carved side is to be read left to right. Considered to be a 14th century guild relic, its Hungarian inscription reads “takács” (Weaver) – B: 1020, T: 7669.→Hungarian Runic Script; New Trends in the Research of Hungarian Ancient History.

Tőkéczi, László (Ladislav) (Szikszó, 23 September 1951 - ) – Historian. He completed his high school education in Miskolc. Afterwards, he studied at the University of Debrecen (1970-1972) and the University of Budapest (1972-1975), obtaining a Dip. Ed. majoring in History and German language. From 1975 to 1978, he taught at the Landler High School of Kispeszt (suburb of Budapest). In 1978, he joined the Pedagogic Research Group of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, which was transferred to the University of Budapest in 1981. Since 1985, he has taught History of Education at the Department of Pedagogy of the University of Budapest and, since 1989, he has been Assistant Professor in the Department of Cultural History. Since 1991, he has been Editor of the paper, Credit (Hitel), and from 1994, Editor of the periodical, Reality (Valóság); he also participates in the editing work of the paper, Protestant Review (Protestáns Szemle). He has been Lay President of the Danubian Reformed Church District. Tőkéczi was a member of the founding board of trustees of the Danube TV (Duna TV); he was President of the Reformed Talent Center Foundation, established in 1998, as well as a founding member of the Protestant Study Foundation. He was Vice-President of the Natural-Scientific Society. His works include Lajos Prohászka, monograph (1987); History, Conceptions, Politics (Történelem, eszmék, politika) studies (1999); Tisza István (2000), and Historic Portraits (Történelmi arcképek) (2002). Some of his studies appeared in the Protestant Review, Historical Review (Történelmi Szemle), Reality (Valóság), Confessio, and other journals, some in foreign languages. In recent years he has regularly written political articles in the Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet); he often appears on News TV (Hír TV). He delivers annually some 100 lectures in Hungary and to Hungarians living in minority conditions in the surrounding countries (as a result of the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon, 1920) on scientific, religious and political topics, representing the conservative right. He was honored with the Contemporary (Kortárs) Prize in 1992. – B: 0874, 2064, T: 7456.

Tőkei, Ferenc (Francis) (Budapest, 3 October 1930 - Budapest, 13 August 2000) – Sinologist, historian of philosophy, translator of literary works. He completed his secondary education at the Piarist High School of Budapest, followed by studies in the Chinese and Tibetan section of the Oriental Faculty of the University of Budapest. Tőkei was strongly influenced by the works of the Marxist philosopher György (George) Lukács (1885-1971) so, beside sinology, he increasingly leaned toward philosophy, receiving his B.A. Degree in 1953, and his Ph.D. in Literature in 1965. In 1956, he worked under Ferenc (Francis) Hoó in the East-Asian Museum and, having taken patriotic part in the 1956 Revolution, he came before a disciplinary tribunal when the Communist regime regained power. He left the Museum and became referee at the Europa Publisher; it was here that he initiated the publication of Chinese and other oriental books, participated in their editing and translating, thereby providing employment for a large percentage of the banned poets of the era. Since his interest in Marxism continued, Tókei was admitted into the Hungarian Socialist Workers Party (MSZMP) in 1962. In 1988, he was elected a member of the Central Committee (KB) of the party. After spending one year there, he realized that active politics was not for him. From 1967, he was a Research Fellow of the Institute of Philosophy in the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, from 1969 to 1972 its director. From 1971 to 1990, he was a Professor at the Department of Philosophy of the University of Budapest and, from 1990 until his death, he was Professor in the Chair of Sinology. From 1972 to 1994, he was Head of the Oriental working team of the Academy; he was a member of the Academy of Sciences (corresponding from 1973, ordinary from 1985). A large part of his scientific works appeared in the journal Acta Orientalia Hungarica, except for those published abroad. Tókei's study of the history of philosophy (1965), entitled To the Problems of the Asian Mode of Production (Az ázsiai termelési mód kérdéseihez) evoked considerable international reaction, appearing in six languages. In 2005, the Kossuth Publisher started the Tókei life-work series. His works include Birth of the Chinese Elegy (A kínai elégia születése) (1959); The Short History of Chinese Literature (A kínai irodalom rövid története) with co-author Pál Miklós (1960); Chinese Philosophy. Antiquity, vols. i-iii (Kínai filozófia. Ókor I-III) (1962-1967); Chinese Buddhist Philosophy (Kínai buddhista filozófia) (1993); The Tibetan Buddhist Philosophy (A tibeti buddhista filozófia) (1994), and Chinese-Hungarian Books (Kínai-magyar könyvek) in 9 volumes, editing and translating (1994-1999). He is the author of numerous translations of Chinese literary works. In 2005, a memorial meeting was held in his honor in Beijing. He received the State Prize (1970), and the Trade Union Prize (1986). – B: 1031, 1752, T: 7456.

Tóké, Anna (Marosvásárhely, now Târgu Mureș, Transylvania, Romania, 5 February, 1889 - Budapest, 25 December 1966) – Actress. She attended Acting School in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and first appeared on stage in 1923 in Temesvár (now Timisoara, Romania) and in Arad. Artur Bárdos contracted her to the Renaissance Theater (Renaissance Színház) in Budapest, where she achieved great success in the role of the charming Stella in Crommelynck's The Magnanimous Cuckold (Le Cocu magnifique, A csodaszarvas). She became the center of artistic interest; theatre managers were almost competing for her. She appeared at the National, the Comedy, and the Hungarian Theaters, and accompanied the Beregi Ensemble to America for six months. In 1935, she became a permanent member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) in Budapest. She performed any role well. However, her truest successes and greatest artistic achievements were reached in tragic roles. She was an immediate proponent of Mari Jászai's art, enriched by the 20th century's modern psychological knowledge and experiences. Anna Tóké possessed a regal appearance on stage, as well as in life; her beauty succeeded along with her great interpreting ability. Her important roles included title role in Racine's Phaedra; Éva in I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája); Ophelia and Gertrud in Shakespeare's Hamlet; Jessica in Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice (A velencei kalmár); Elizabeth in Shakespeare's Richard III; Melinda in J. Katona's Bánk bán; Bernard Alba in Garcia Lorca's The House of Bernarda Alba (La casa de Bernarda Alba; Bernarda háza); Jocasta in Sophocles' Oedipus Rex; Hilda Wangel in Ibsen's The Master Builder (Solnész építőmester); Antigone in Sophocles' Electra; Irene in Herczeg's Bizánc; Margit in Goethe's Faust; Rebecca in Miller's The Crucible (Szálemi boszorkányok); Kabanova in Ostrovsky's The Storm (A Vihar), and the title role in Schiller's Maria Stuart. She was successful in feature films as well, including Smoke (Füst) (silent, 1929); Hungarian Resurrection (Magyar feltámadás) (1939); State Department Store (Állami áruház) (1952); Pillar of Stone (Sóbálvány) (1958), and Sunshine on Ice (Napfény a jégen) (1961). She was a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1952), and the title of Outstanding Artist (1956) – B: 0871, 1031, T: 6874.

Tőkés, István (Stephen) (Málnás, now Malnaș, Transylvania, in Romania, 8 August 1916 - ) – Minister of the Reformed Church, theologian, church writer and church leader. He is a descendant of a pastor's family. He completed his secondary education at the Mikó Székely College in Sepsiszentgyörgy (now Sfântu Gheorghe, Romania) in 1933. In the autumn he enrolled at the Reformed Theological Faculty of the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), where his interest was aroused by professors István (Stephen) Kecskeméthy and Albert Maksay in the study of biblical languages and New Testament research.

Soon various writings of his appeared in papers, such as Szekler Folk (Székely Nép); Reformed Youth (Református Ifjúság); Young Transylvania (Ifjú Erdély); The Way (Az Út); Reformed Family (Református Család); Calling Word (Kiáltó Szó), and Reformed Review (Református Szemle). On a scholarship, he studied at the University of Kassel, later in the Theological Faculty of the University of Tübingen, under the biblical scholar, Professor Gerhard Kittel, among others. During the summer semester of 1940, he attended the lectures of two outstanding professors at the University of Basel: Karl Barth and Oscar Cullmann, both exerting decisive influence on the theological development of the young Tőkés.

After his return to Hungary in August 1940, he was appointed Bishop's Secretary in Kolozsvár, besides being also College Pastor until the end of 1945. In the fall of 1945, he became Church Councilor, a position he fulfilled for 33 years, carrying out a number of voluntary services as well. In 1947, he was elected a Councilor-Judge of the Diocese; in 1948 he became a member of the Synod and a member of the Diocesan Council; in 1953 he was a member of the Theological Magistracy, in 1957 its General Director; in 1974, he became Diocesan Chief Notary, i.e., Deputy Bishop; he also was President of the Retirement Treasury and President of several diocesan and church-council committees.

In addition, Tőkés regarded as his most important task the cultivation of theological studies. In October 1973, at the invitation of the Reformed Theological Council, he became professor at the Department of Reformed New Testament Exegesis and Biblical Theology, Kolozsvár, a position he filled until his retirement in 1983. Together with the explanation of the New Testament Letter to the Philippians, he started in the Hungarian language the entire New Testament Commentary Series in Transylvania. With his life and work, István Tőkés provided an example and assistance to the young generation of theologians and pastors for the proper study of all aspects and disciplines of theology. His life and thought became firmly embedded in the Transylvanian Reformed soil. He is respected as an outstanding figure of the Transylvanian and European Protestant Theology. His main works include Explantion of the Second Helvetica Confession Based on the Works of Reformer Henrik Bullinger (Második Helvét Hitvallás Magyarázata Bullinger Henrik reformátor művei alapján); The History of the Biblical Hermeneutics (A bibliai hermeneutika története) monograph (1985); Commentary on The Epistle of the Apostle Paul to the Philippians (Pál apostolnak a Filippibeliekhez írott levelének kommentárja); the Commentaries on the 1st and 2nd Espistles of the Apostle Paul to the Corinthians (Pál apostolnak a Korinthusiakhoz írott I. és II. leveleinek kommentárjai), and Life of the Hungarian Reformed Church in Romania 1944-1989 (A Romániai Magyar Református Egyház élete, 1944-1989). In recognition of his work, an honorary doctorate was conferred upon him at the Theological Faculty of the Reformed University of Budapest in 1996. Among his distinctions are the Bocskai Prize and the Gáspár Károli Prize (2001). – B: 1246, T: 7456. → Maksay, Albert; Tőkés, László.

Tőkés, László (Ladislav) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 1 April 1952 - ) –

Politician, former Bishop of the Reformed Church in Romania, theologian and politician in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). His father, István (Stephen) Tőkés, is Professor Emeritus of the Protestant Theological Faculty of Kolozsvár. Both of his parents are from Hungarian Reformed ministerial families. Tőkés studied Theology in Kolozsvár (1971-1975), and as an ordained minister, he served in congregations first in Brassó (now Brasov, Romania), between 1975 and 1977, and later at Dés (now Dej, Romania) between 1977 and 1984.

Rev. L. Tőkés was active for the cause of the 2.5 million-strong Hungarian ethnic minority in Transylvania, (Erdély, ceded to Romania by the Trianon-Versailles Peace Dictate in 1920), being also active in his Church. Because of these activities, he was persecuted by the authorities of the Church and the Romanian Government. He protested against the village demolition policy of Ceausescu, which planned to destroy 8,000, mostly Hungarian villages in Transylvania. Consequently, he was discharged from the ministry for political reasons, and suspended from church service (1984-1986). At the same time, his father was also removed from the Theological Faculty of Kolozsvár. In Hungarian circles in Transylvania, it was the general opinion that the leaders of the Hungarian Reformed Church in Romania made a compromise with the Communist regime by persecuting László Tőkés and his father, in order to gain favor. László Tőkés was reinstated as an assistant minister, then as Parish Minister in Temesvár (now Timisoara, Romania) (1986-1989). In 1989, he was posted to a small parish, Menyó (now Mineu, Romania). He was adamant, and was threatened with eviction by the State Security Forces, but this attempt failed not only because of the resistance by the congregation, and Hungarians in general, but because he was also supported by the Romanian population. On 16 December 1989, a demonstration was organized in Temesvár in his defense, which turned into an uprising, then a full-scale revolt against the Ceausescu dictatorship that eventually led to the sudden overthrow of the Communist regime, and the dictatorship of Ceausescu, in Romania.

In 1990, in recognition of his heroic stand against Communist dictatorship, Tőkés became a member of the Provisional Romanian Parliament. He was elected Bishop of the Királyhágó-mellék Reformed Church District, and the Nagyvárad-Oradea district of the Hungarian Reformed Church in Romania. He has been Co-President of the Synod of the Reformed Church in Romania; President of the Reformed Hungarian World Federation; President of the Democratic Alliance of Hungarians in Romania (Romániai Magyar Demokratikus Szövetség – RMDSZ); Honorary President of the World Federation of Hungarians since 1996; Founder and President of the Partium Christian University, Nagyvárad, and President of the Hungarian National Council of Transylvanian (Erdélyi Magyar Nemzeti Tanács), since 2003. In 2008 and 2009 he was elected a Member of the European Parliament. Due to his new political responsibility, he resigned from his position as Bishop in 2009. In June 2010, Tőkés was elected Deputy President of the European Parliament. Since 1989, Tőkés has become one of the most important Hungarian politicians of Romania. His heroic stand against the dictatorship of the Communist Ceausescu, which triggered the Romanian Revolution, made him known worldwide. He was received by leading world personalities, including President George Bush (1990), Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney (1990), Pope John Paul II (1991), Otto von Habsburg (1991), Beatrix, Queen of Holland, and leading Hungarian politicians. László Tőkés has been a leading personality of the movement of democratization in Romania, and one of the acknowledged leaders of Hungarians in Transylvania, who fought for their basic human rights. His major publications include Where the Spirit of the Lord is Present, there is Freedom (Ahol az Úrnak Lelke, ott a szabadság) (1990); The Siege of Timisoara '89 (Temesvár ostroma '89) (1990), in Romanian translation (1999); With God for the People (Istennel a népért) (1990); There Is a Time to Speak, with David Porter (1993); A Phrase And What is Behind It (Egy kifejezés és ami mögötte van), in Hungarian and in English (1993) In the Spirit of Timisoara (Temesvár szellemében), in Hungarian, Romanian and English (1996); Memento of Timisoara (1999), and Hope and Reality (Remény és valóság) (2004). His sermons, articles and studies were also published (2003). He is Member of the Knightly Order of St John of Jerusalem since 1993; Honorary Member of the European Senate of since 1992; and Member of the National Salvation Front 1990. He has received a number of prizes, among them the Berzsenyi Prize (1989), the Gábor Bethlen Prize (1990), the Roosevelt Prize, Holland (1990), the Pro Fide Prize, Finland (1993), the Hungarian Heritage Prize (1996), the L. Kunschak Grand Prix, Austria (1998), the Grand Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1999), the Truman-Reagan Freedom Medal (2009), the Robert Schuman Prize of the European Union (2009), and the Star of Romania. He is an Honorary Doctor of a number of universities, including Regent University, Virginia Beach, USA, the Hope College, Holland, Michigan, USA, and the Reformed Theological Academy of Debrecen. He is a member of the European Senate and the Johannite Order. He was nominated for the Nobel Prize in 1991. There is the László Tőkés Foundation. – B: 1153, 0954, 1031, T: 7682, 7103. → Tőkés, István; Temesvár; Reformed Church in Romania.

Tokody, Ilona (Helen) (Szeged, 27 April 1953 - ) – Opera singer (soprano). From 1971 she studied at the Voice and Opera Sections of the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, under Jenő (Eugene) Sípos and Valéria (Valerie) Berdál. From 1972, she was the winner of a number of singing competitions: the Kodály Singing Competition, followed by those in Geneva, Ostend, Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), and the Erkel Song Competition of Budapest. Since 1976, she has been a soloist of the Budapest Opera House, and permanent guest artist of the Staatsoper of Vienna. She has appeared as a guest artist in numerous cities and opera houses of Europe and North America, amongst them the Metropolitan Opera House of New York, Covent Garden of London, Deutsche Oper of Berlin, Liceo of Barcelona, the Royal Theater of Madrid, Colón Theater of Buenos Aires, and in Japan. In 1998, she was the first to sing on record the title role of Mascagni's opera, Iris, as the partner of Plácido Domingo. In 1992, one of her successful appearances was the aria night held in common with Jose Carreras in the Népstadion of Budapest. In 1994, she had a successful concert in the company of baritone Juan Pons at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest, followed by a round-the-world concert tour of the two artists' Verdi-duet evening. Tokody is a recording artist with more than 50 discs to her credit. Her roles include Melinda in F. Erkel's Bánk bán; Pamina in Mozart's Magic Flute; Leona in Verdi's Il Trovatore; title role in Verdi's Aida; title roles in Puccini's Manon Lescaut and Tosca, as well as Tatiana in Tchaikovsky's Eugene Onegin. The prizes she won include the Gusztáv Oláh Memorial Plate (1979), the Franz Liszt Prize (1980), the Kossuth Prize (1985), the Merited Artist and Outstanding Artist titles (1983, 1990), and the Béla Bartók-Ditta Pásztory Prize (2010). She has been a life member of the Budapest Opera House since 1996. – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7456.

Tolcsvay Nagy, Béla (Budapest, 6 November 1946 - ) – Guitar player, pop singer, composer, and lyricist. Between 1964 and 1969, with his younger brother, László (Ladislav), he was a member of the Strangers, the Wanderers, and the Tolcsvay Ensemble, also known as the Trio. In 1968, at the Hungarian talent show, they received first prize. He writes songs for Zsuzsa (Susie) Koncz, the renowned Hungarian pop singer. Then in 1973, with Zsuzsa Koncz and the Illés Ensemble, they performed under the joint name of KITT. In 1973 he was the chief organizer-manager of the Pop Festival in Miskolc. In 1974 he went on a tour of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) to collect Hungarian folksongs. In 1976 he composed background music for the poetry recitalist Zoltán Latinovics. Between 1976 and 1978, he was Musical Director of the Musical Agria; then composed music to accompany Erzsébet (Elizabeth) Kútvölgyi's presentation of Ady's poems. Since the 1980s, he has been Director of the Tolcsvay-Cottage in Pomáz. Since 1988, he has been a composer for the Bojtorán Ensemble. In 1994 he opened an independent club in Budapest. He is an outstanding figure of Hungarian pop music. Among his recordings are All Is for Sale (Ez mind eladó) (1972); Hungarian Mass Oratory (Magyar mise oratorium), jointly with his brother László (1987); Giant Concert (Óriaskoncert), jointly with his brother László (1994). His film musics include Beautiful Girls, Don't Cry (Szép lányok ne sírjatok) (1970); The Concert (A Koncert) (1983); Christmas Doll Collection (Karácsonyi babatár) (1989), and Star Links (Lánc Lánc Csillaglánc) (2002). He also wrote background music to plays, e.g. A Fine Hungarian Comedy (Szép magyar komédia), by Bálint Balassi. – B: 1031 T: 7665.→Tolcsvay Nagy, László; Koncz, Zsuzsa; Latinovics, Zoltán; Illés Ensemble.

Tolcsvay Nagy, László (Ladislás) (Budapest, 24 June 1980 - ) – Musician, singer, composer and performer. During his childhood, he studied classical music. At the age of 13, he began playing in the Stranger amateur beat orchestra, and later he became a regular participant in the Wanderer Ensemble. From age 16 he composed his own songs. In 1968, with his older brother Béla, together with Gábor (Gabriel) Balázs, they formed the Tolcsvay Trio. In 1968, the Trio won first prize in the talent show of the Hungarian radio in the Folk Beat category. In 1973 he joined the Fonograf Ensemble, where he not only performed on keyboard, guitar, banjo and accordion, but also sang and composed songs for the Ensemble. He also composed music for the renowned pop singer, Zsuzsa (Susie) Koncz, for the successful actress, Judit Halász, and background music for numerous stage plays. Among his works are Ludas Matyi (Crafty Matt, the Goose-herd) with Mihály (Michael) Fazekas and János (John) Bródy (1984); Hungarian Mass Rock Oratory (Magyar mise rock oratorium), with his brother Béla (1987), and The Gospel of Maria (Maria evangéliuma), with József János Müller (1991). Among his recordings are Wait for It (Várd ki az időt) (1983); Switch Over (Kapcsolj át) (1993); Giant Concert (Oriás koncert), with his brother Béla (1994); White Noise (Fehér zaj) (1997), and The 12 Women (A 12 nő) (2002). All in all, László Tolcsvay Nagy is an outstanding figure of Hungarian beat music who to a large extent defined its character. – B: 1031, T: 7665.→Tolcsvay Nagy, Béla; Koncz, Zsuzsa; Halász, Judit.

Toldi Legend – A collection of legends that dates from the reign of King Lajos I (Louis the Great) (1342-1382), originating around, and surrounding the figure of Miklós (Nicholas) Toldi, who was a real person, the knight of the afore-mentioned king, and a military leader. The stories describe the heroic deeds and various exploits of this champion of Herculean strength. Although this is a disputed issue in Hungarian literature, many writers have since used the subject. Péter Ilosvai Selymes utilized it in his The History of the Outstanding Accomplishments of the Celebrated Illustrious Miklós Toldi (Az hires-neves Tholdi Miklósnak jeles cselekedeteiről és bajnokoskodásáról való historia), published in 1574 in Debrecen. The author refers to written sources and chronicles of which no sources have been found in earlier Hungarian literature. It can be taken for granted however, that there survived poetic or prosaic works in Latin about Miklós Toldi's Italian sojourn. Perhaps Ilosvai meant these in his reference. The stories lived on in folklore and numerous later poets, among them János (John) Arany, Károly (Charles) Kisfaludy, and Mihály (Michael) Vörösmarty used them as source materials. – B: 1138, 1136, T: 7617.→Ilosvai Selymes, Péter; Arany, János; Kisfaludy, Károly; Vörösmarty, Mihály; Toldi, Miklós.

Toldi, Miklós (Nicholas) (Around 1320 - 22 November 1390) – Folk-hero. He was a noble landowner in County Bihar in Eastern Hungary, whose name was preserved in folk traditions as a strong, valiant man (vitész). In folk traditions, the figure of Miklós Toldi remained the longest in memory in Counties Nógrád and Bihar, where they emphasize his physical strength. The Toldi figure was considered fictional for a long time as there was very little data left about his life. Based on documents, Áron Szilády pointed out that György (George) Toldi and Miklós Toldi actually existed in the time of Kings Charles Robert (Károly) (1307-1342), and Louis the Great (1342-1382). In 1350, Miklós Toldi was mentioned as Sub-Prefect and Commander of the Castle of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). In 1383 and 1385 he is mentioned as Lord-Lieutenant of County Szabolcs. As Mercenary Commander, he participated in the Italian campaign of King Louis the Great. In 1359, he was to bring two lion cubs from Florence, as instructed by his lord. The earliest and most detailed source about him is the work of Péter Ilosvai Selymes, The History of the Outstanding Accomplishments of the Celebrated Illustrious Miklós Toldi (Az híres nevezetes Toldi Miklósnak jeles cselekedeteieről és bajnokosodásáról való historia) (Debrecen, 1574). The best-known work on Miklós Toldi is the Toldi-trilogy of János (John) Arany: Toldi, Toldi's Love (Toldi szerelme), The Evening of Toldi (Toldi estéje). The poet was motivated to write this work, because near to his village of birth, Nagyszalonta, there is the Unfinished Tower (Csonka-torony) that belonged, according to tradition, to the Toldi family. János (John) Fadrusz, the renowned sculptor created his sculpture named Miklós Toldi with the Wolves (Toldi Miklós a farkasokkal). – B: 0942, 1134, 1153, 1031, T: 7684. → Lajos I, King; Károly (Charles) I, King; Mátyás I, King; Ilosvai Selymes, Péter; Szilády, Áron; Arany, János; Toldi Legend.

Toldi Verse – One of the remarkable verse lines in Hungarian poetry. It is a diameter verse of twelve measures in a descending quantitative verse (scansion) form. The designation originated with János (John) Arany's poem, Toldi. – B: 1153, T: 7617. → Arany, János.

Toldy, Ferenc (Francis) (Schedel) (Buda, 10 August 1805 - Budapest, 10 December 1875) – Literary historian, critic and physician. He came from a German bourgeois family. He received his education in Pest, Cegléd (where he learned Hungarian) and Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). He was in contact with the leading literary figures of his age. Between 1822 and 1827, he attended the Medical School at the University of Pest, and received his Medical Degree in 1829, after which he set out on an extended Western European study tour. After returning to Hungary, he practiced medicine for a short time. In 1830, he was elected a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. First, he was a University Lecturer, later became Associate Clerk and Secretary of the Academy. Between 1837 and 1843, Toldy edited the Athenaeum paper, together with József (Joseph) Bajza and Mihály (Michael) Vörösmarty. From 1833 until his death, he was professor at the University of Pest. In 1871 and 1872, he served as Rector of the University, and from 1846 until his death, was also Director of the University Library.

In 1836, Toldy initiated the founding of the Kisfaludy Society, of which he was Director between 1841 and 1860, from 1860 its Vice-President, and from 1873 President. He was Editor and Co-Founder of the periodicals, Magyar (Hungarian) Medical Magazine (Magyar Orvosi Tár), with Pál (Paul) Bugát, Science Magazine (Tudománytár), and Observer (Figyelmező) as well as of the periodical New Hungarian Museum (Új Magyar Múzeum), which he co-founded with Tivadar Pauler.

As a member of the Bajza-Vörösmarty-Toldy trio, he played a pivotal role in the intellectual life of the 1830s and 1840s. However, he did not follow the radical ideas of the opposition movement. During the 1848-1849 Revolution and War of Independence, he distanced himself from public life. After 1849, he limited himself to a more restricted scientific field. He set the standards for scientifically more demanding Hungarian literary history writing.

His major works include Handbuch der ungarischen Poesie, I-II. (1828); Dietetika (1836); Hungarian-Latin and Latin-Hungarian Medical Dictionary (Magyar-deák és deák-magyar orvosi szókönyv) (1833); History of Hungarian National Literature, vols. i,ii (A magyar nemzeti irodalom története, I-II) (1851); Hungarian Poesy to the Time of Sándor Kisfaludy (A magyar költészet Kisfaludy Sándorig) (Pest, 1854); Handbook of Hungarian Poetry, vols. i,ii (A magyar költészet kézikönyve I-II), (1855–1857); Ferenc Kazinczy and his Age (Kazinczy Ferenc és kora) (1859–1860), and The Collected Works of Ferenc Toldy vols. i-viii (Toldy Ferenc összegyűjtött munkái, I-VIII) (1868–1874). An exceptionally large number of his studies, articles, reviews, and commemorative addresses appeared in contemporary periodicals and other publications. He discovered and published numerous Hungarian language relics and historical source material, and edited the works of many of the classical authors for publication. – B: 0883, 1730, 1257, T: 7617.→Bajza, József; Vörösmarty, Mihály; Letters from Turkey; Mikes, Kelemen; Kisfaludy, Károly; Toldy, István; Szabó, Károly.

Toldy, István (Stephen) (Pest, 4 June 1844 - Budapest, 8 December 1879) – Journalist, novelist and playwright. He was the son of Ferenc (Francis) Toldy. Until 1877, he worked as a departmental official. He was one of the founders of the paper “1848” (1867). He read Law at the University of Pest. From 1873 to 1878, he was Editor of the paper National News (Nemzeti Hirlap). He was a member of the Kisfaludy Society from 1873. Toldy was a politician on the side of Ferenc (Francis) Deák, and was also anti-clerical. His works include Meditations on Church Reform (Elmélkedések az egyházi reformról) (1868); History of the Jesuits, vols. i-vi (A jezsuiták története I-VI) (1873-1874); Livia, play (1874); The New People (Az új emberek)(1874), and Kornélia (1874). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Toldy, Ferenc; Deák, Ferenc.

Tölgyesy, Victor (Miskolc, 22 August 1928 - Ottawa, ON, Canada, 6 January 1980) – Sculptor, writer. He arrived in Canada with his parents in 1951, and settled in the city of Ottawa. After six years of self-education, he went on a study tour to Europe in 1957. On his return, he became a teacher at the Ottawa School of Arts. He started to work in the metal medium for sculpture and, gradually leaving the European ornamental technique, turned his attention to the more forceful, more refined abstract style. He took part in several exhibitions, and organized his own one-man shows. At this stage in his career, he created the abstract decoration for the main entrance of “Expo '67”, the Montreal World Exposition, and also the monument to the Freedom Fighters in the Toronto-Budapest Park. He was chosen to be a member of the Royal Academy of Arts in 1973. He started on a new era of his art in 1974, when he began to use plywood and papier-maché in his work. A posthumous exhibit of his serial work, Circus of Life was arranged in 1985. At this time, his book entitled Acrobatics was published, summarizing his philosophy of art. His creations can be found in various institutes and private collections. – B: 1020, T: 7675.

Tollas, Tibor (kecskéssi) (Nagybarca, 21 December 1920 - Munich, 19 July 1997) – Writer, poet and military officer. His ancestors include a Reformer, and also a soldier in Kossuth's Honvéd army. From 1938 to 1941, he was a student at the Ludovika Military Academy in Budapest and, in 1941 he was made a Second Lieutenant. He fought in World War II, and was wounded in both hands. In April 1944, he became a Gendarme Lieutenant and a Platoon Commander. From 1945 on, he served in the post-war Democratic Army. In 1947, he was released and, when the Communists began to take over the country under Soviet Russian military occupation, he was arrested and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment. He was incarcerated in the Vác prison, north of Budapest, and later, in the forced labor camp of Tatabánya. In 1956, his sentence was annulled because it was contrary to law. While he was in the Vác prison, he edited several volumes of his poems. Later, he published them in the form of a lyric anthology under the title, Herbal Garden (Füveskert). Tollas participated in the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, and consequently escaped to the West, where he established, with his co-workers, the Füveskert Group, and the paper, National Guard (Nemzetőr), published in Munich and edited by him since 1957. He edited the Füveskert Anthology in Hungarian and in six other languages; the anthology entitled Gloria Victis (1956), and the yearbooks of the National Guard (Nemzetőr). Later, he published his collections of poems: That's All the Light that Remained (Csak ennyi fény maradt) (1959); On Footpath Island (Járdaszigeten) (1967); Ezsterlánc (1969); Merciful Trees (Irgalmas fák) (1974); Miners (Bányászok) (1976); Growth-rings (Évgyűrűk) (1979); In Whirlwind (Forgószelemben) (1983); Magic Circle (Varázskör) (1988), and Homeward Bound (Hazafelé) (1991). His poetry and prose-writing appeared alongside the paper, Nemzetőr in a number of western Hungarian papers and periodicals. Tollas was one of the leaders of the World Association of Freedom Fighters (Szabadságharcos Világszövetség), and of the World Association of Former Hungarian Political Prisoners (Volt Magyar Politikai Foglyok Világszövetsége). Together with his poetry, he became the symbol of the 1956 Revolution. With his personality he helped the continued emigration and survival of Hungarians; he was a fiery orator, who regularly visited the emigré centers; he was also a successful organizer. He lived to see the withdrawal of Soviet occupying forces from his homeland, and was able to return to Hungary. His grave is in the cemetery at Nagybarca, northwest of Miskolc. He was a recipient of a number of awards: the Gold Medal of the Árpád Academy (1963, 1988), the Attila József Prize (Cleveland) (1988), and he was made a life member of National Association of Hungarian Writers (Magyar Újságírók Országos Szövetsége – MUOSZ). – B: 1031, 1257, 1672, T: 7684, 7456.→Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy.

Tolnai Dali, János (John) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 1606 - Tarcál, west of Tokaj, 1660) – Minister of the Reformed Church, religious writer, Archdeacon. He studied in Nagyvárad and Gyulafehérvár (now Alba-Iulia, Romania), after which he studied Theology and Philosophy in the Netherlands and England. In England, he learned about the philosophy of Sir Francis Bacon, and the pedagogy of John Amos Comenius, and came into a closer relationship with the progressive aspirations of Puritanism. In 1638 he returned to Hungary, and Prince György (George) Rákóczi I (1630-1648) put the Reformed College of Sárospatak under his direction. Because of his daring ideas – e.g. he fought the feudal ceremonies of the Reformed Church –, he was always met with opposition, and finally, the 1646 Synod removed him from his position. He accepted the position of a parish minister in Miskolc. In 1649, Zsuzsanna Lorántffy, the wife of Prince György Rákóczi I, again placed him in his directorial position at the Sárospatak College. He advised the Consort to invite Comenius to Hungary to overhaul the school system. At the College of Sárospatak, he introduced, in the form of a textbook, the anti-scholastic logic of Ramus. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Lorántffy, Zsuzsanna; Comenius, Ámos János; Medgyesi, Péter; Rákóczi, Prince György I; Lorántffy, Zsuzsanna; Reformed College of Sárospatak.

Tolnai, Gábor (Gabriel) (Kunszentmiklós, 29 December 1910 - Budapest, 17 February 1990) – Literary historian, essayist. He completed his secondary school studies at the Reformed High School of Budapest. He did his higher studies at the University of Szeged, as a student of Sándor (Alexander) Sík and Gedeon Mészöly. He obtained his Dip. Ed. and B.A. Degree there in 1933. From 1934, he worked at the National Széchényi Library, Budapest, where he was Director from 1945 to 1948. Later, during 1948-1949, he worked as Head of the Scientific Division at the Ministry of Education and Religion. Afterwards, from 1949 to 1952, he was Ambassador to Italy. From 1953 until his retirement in 1980, Tolnai was Professor and Head of the Department of Old Hungarian Literature at the University of Budapest. Early in his career, for decades, he dealt with the cultural history of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania); later he recorded his Italian experiences, and published some cultural historical collections. The re-starting of the journal Literary Historical Proceedings (Irodalomtörténeti Közlemények) in 1935 is linked to his name. Together with József (Joseph) Darvas, he launched and edited the journal Contemporary (Kortárs) in 1957, and he edited the foreign language journal of the Academy of Sciences from 1965, where he was a corresponding member in 1948, and ordinary in 1962. His works include Hungarian Literary Life of Transylvania (Erdély magyar irodalmi élete) (1933); Sketches and Studies (Vázlatok és tanulmányok) (1955); Frederico Garcia Lorca, study (1968); Abide with Me, for Fast Approaches the Eventide (Maradj velem, mert beesteledett), essays, travel notes (1977); The Shadows are Growing (Nőnek az árnyak) memoirs (1981), and Transylvania in the Times of its Princes (Fejedelmi Erdély), studies (1984). He was awarded the Attila József Prize in 1960. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Sík, Sándor; Mészöly, Gedeon; Darvas, József.

Tolnai, Lajos (Louis) (Hagymássy) (Györköny, 31 January 1837 - Budapest, 19 March 1902) – Minister of the Reformed Church, poet and writer. He attended high school in Györköny and Nagykőrös, where he was a student of the great poet János (John) Arany. He studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy of Pest from 1859, before he started his teaching at the Reformed High School in Budapest. He was elected a member of the Kisfaludy Society in 1868. In 1876 he was one of the founders of the Zsigmond Kemény Society. He was also a member of the Petőfi Society in 1878. He earned a Ph.D at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) in 1879, before becoming Parish Minister in Marosvásárhely, (now Târgu Mureş, Transylvania, Romania). Due to growing differences between him and his congregation, he had to relinquish his office in 1884 and move to Budapest, where he taught at a school from 1865, and lived on his honorariums. In 1887, he founded a paper, entitled Literature (Irodalom), which he wrote, edited and published. Finally he became Editor of the Illustrated Family Papers (Képes Családi Lapok). He commenced writing his 31 novels in Marosvásárhely. His major works include The Gentlemen (Az urak); Mister Ádám Fényes Somogyváry (Somogyváry Fényes Ádám úr); The Honorable Baroness (A báróné ténsasszony); The Noble Blood (A nemes vér), and the Dark World (Sötét világ). He was the forerunner of the realistic novelists of the 20th century. He received an Honorary Doctorate from the University of Budapest. A high school in Inárcs, and a Secondary School in Gyöngyös bear his name. – B: 0913, 1257, T: 7103. → Arany, János.

Tolnai, Ottó (Magyarkanizsa, now Kanjiza, Serbia, 5 July 1940 - ) – Writer, poet and translator of literary works. His higher studies were completed at the Faculty of Arts of the University of Újvidék (now Novi-Sad, Serbia) (1959-1962), and at the University of Zágráb (now Zagreb, Croatia) (1963). He was Editor-in-Chief of the magazine, New Symposium (1969-1974), and from 1974 to 1992, he was a contributor to and editor for Radio Novi-Sad (Újvidéki Rádió). Since 1992, he has been Editor for the magazine, Ex Symposion. His best-known works are Concave Poems (Homorú versek) (1963); Gull Breast-bone (Sirály-mellcsont) poems (1967); Bug-house (Rovarház) novel (1969); Satan Head (Ördögfej) novel (1970); Death of Gogol (Gogol halála) short novels (1972); Let Me Be a Cauliflower (Legyek karfiol) poems (1973); World-dust (Világpor) poems (1980); Elephant-kiss. Poems for Prematurely Old Children (Elefántpuszi. Versek koravén gyerkeknek) (1982); No. 3 Flower Street (Virág utca 3) novel (1983); Rocococo (Rokokokó) poems (1986), Book of Prose (Prózák könyve) (1987), Wilhelm-songs (Wilhelm-dalok) poems (1992); June (Június) short stories (1994); Rotten Marble (Rohadt márvány) novel (1997), and Laurel of the Balkans (Balkáni babér) catalectic verses (2001). He compiled an anthology of Hungarian poets in Yugoslavia. Tolnai has been an outstanding representative of Hungarian Literature in Voivodina (Vajdaság), Serbia. His works were translated into German, French and Serbian. He is an honorary member of the Széchenyi Literary and Arts Academy (1988). He is a recipient of a number of prizes, among them the Attila József Prize (1991), Endre Ady Prize (1993), Milán Füst Prize (1997), Sándor Weöres Prize (1999), the Gold Medal of the President of the Republic of Hungary (2000), and the Kossuth Prize (2007). – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7103.

Tolnay, Károly (Charles de Tolnay) (Budapest, 27 May 1899 - Florence, 17 January 1981) – Art historian. He was already directly associated with members of the Sunday Circle (Vasárnapi Kör) as student of Lajos (Louis) Fülep. In 1918 he went to the University of Vienna to study Art History, continuing it at the Universities of Berlin and Paris (Sorbonne). He remained abroad and became an honorary lecturer at the University of Hamburg and, later at the University of Berlin. In 1933 he moved to Paris and gave lectures at the University (Sorbonne). His field of interest was the Italian Renaissance and Flemish painting. He wrote studies and books on Michelangelo, the older Bruegel, Hieronymus Bosch, and the van Eyck brothers. He also dealt with contemporary Hungarian painting. In 1939 he settled in the USA; became a researcher at the Institute for Advanced Studies at Princeton University, and a professor at Columbia University, where, between 1943 and 1960 his magnum opus was written, entitled: Michelangelo, vols. i-v, (Princeton, 1943-1960), in Hungarian: Michelangelo, mű és világgép Budapest, 1975-1977). In 1964 the Italian Government commissioned him to head the Casa Buonarroti in Florence. His other works include Werk und Weltbild Michelangelos (1949); The Drawings of P. Bruegel the Elder (1952), and Il riordinamento delle collezioni della Casa Buonarroti a Firenze (1970). – B: 1672, T: 7456. → Fülep, Lajos.

Tolnay, Klári (Clara) (Rózsi Tolnay) (Budapest, 27 July 1914 - 27 October 1998, Budapest) – Actress. She was raised and educated in Mohora, County Nógrád, and obtained a Commerce Diploma in Balassagyarmat before she moved to Budapest. She caught the attention of Tibor Hegedűs, who gave her the role of Emily in Lewis' Dodsworth (1934). Until 1946, she was a member of the Comedy Theatre (Vígszínház). At first, she played the ingénue roles in modern plays, usually charming, clean and sentimental young women. After playing attractive, sensitive and genteel young women, she achieved great success with the role of Françoise in Deval's Mademoiselle (Francia szobalány). Her dramatic strength first showed itself in the role of The Adopted Daughter (Mostohalány) in Pirandello's play Six Characters in Search of an Author (Hat szerep keres egy szerzőt). After World War II, she shared the directorship of the Comedy Theater for a short while. Later, guest appearances enabled her to become a member of the Artists' Theater (Művész Színház) in 1946. Here, she performed the title role in Anouilh's Eurydice. The roles of Sonya in Dostoyevsky-Ackland's Crime and Punishment (Bűn és bűnhődés) and Lizzie in Sartre's The Respectful Prostitute (La Putain respectueuse – A tisztességtudó utcalány) also emphasized her greatness. After the State nationalized the theaters, she joined the Madách Theater and played her last ingénue role as Mariska in Szigeti's Liliomfi. Klári Tolnay's first classical role as the heroine, Laurencia, in Lope de Vega's, Fuente Ovejuna (A hős falu) premiered in the form of poetry. Her fresh approach to the role of Juliet in Romeo and Juliet emphasized the inner turmoil of the maturing young woman. However, the witty and coquettish role of Celimene in Molière's The Misanthrope, the romantic Marie Neuburg in V. Hugo's Ruy Blas (A királyasszony lovagja), was closer to her nature. Her role of Ibsen's Nora was outstanding, and she also made the somewhat archaic role of Margaret Gauthier in Dumas' The Lady of the Camellias come alive. Her powerful interpretations made all her roles title roles. Beatrice in Miller's A View from the Bridge (Pillantás a hidról) was actually a secondary role. A significant moment in her constantly rising star was the role of Blanche in Williams' Streetcar Named Desire (A vágyak villamosa). Other important roles included Alexandra in Molnár's The Swan (A hattyú); Irina in Chekhov's The Three Sisters (A Három Nővér); Lyobov Andreevna in Chekhov's The Cherry Orchard (Cseresznyéskert); Gertrud in Shakespeare's Hamlet; Yelena in Gorky's Smug Citizen (Kispolgárok), and Martha in Albee's Who is Afraid of Virginia Wolff (Nem félünk a farkastól). There are more than 100 feature films to her credit, including Be Good Unto Death (Légy jó mindhalálig) (1936); Azurexpress (1938); Queen Elizabeth (Erzsébet királyné) (1940), At the Crossroads (Keresztúton) (1942), On a Strange Road (Idegen úton) (1944); Mrs. Déry (Déryné) (1951); Relatives (Rokonok) (1954); Land of Angels (Angyalok földje) (1962); Father (Apa) (1966); Black Diamonds (Fekete Gyémántok) (1976); The Red Baroness (A vörös bárónő) (1984), and My Dear Little Son (Drága kisfiám) (1994). She was one of the leading actresses in the 20th century theatrical life in Hungary. She was a recipient of the Merited Artist title (1950), the Kossuth Prize (1951, 1952) the Pro Arte Prize (1972); she became a member of the Society of Immortals (1996), and became a Freeman of Budapest in 1997. There is her Memorial House in Mohora. – B: 0871, 1031, T: 7684.

Tolnay, Lajos (Louis) (Pest, 31 May 1837 - Budapest, 30 April 1918) – Civil engineer. He studied at the Budapest Polytechnic, graduating in 1862. From 1862 he worked on the construction of the Pest-Losonc railway line, and from 1866 at the Kassa-Oderberg line. In 1870 he was Director of the Danube-Drava Railway. In 1871 he became Head of the National Railway Construction Directorate; from 1872 until 1886 he was the first President-Director of the Hungarian State Railways (Magyar Államvasútak – MÁV). The reorganization and development of the State Railways (earlier under Austrian influence) began under his leadership, based on independent national traffic policy, and also on the Magyarization of its organization, the development of the railway network (Budapest-Zimony, Budapest-Győr lines) serving to render the economic development of Budapest as the center of the country and also the modernization of the operation of the railways. Within this framework, he initiated a new tariff system in 1874, established the Northern Main Workshop of the MÁV, and the engine and carriage works of the Hungarian State Railways (MÁVAG), exclusively to manufacture new machines and wagons, thus creating a new and important branch of industry by the Hungarian production of locomotives. From 1885 to 1891 he was President of the Association of Hungarian Engineers and Builders. After his retirement, from 1887 to 1896, he was a Member of Parliament with a liberal program. His articles on railway transport and traffic appeared in engineering and economic papers. In 1917 he received an Honorary Doctorate of Engineering. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Tolnay, Sándor (Alexander) (Nagycsömöte, now part of Lukácsháza, County Vas, 8 September 1747 - Pest, 25 April 1818) – Physician and veterinarian. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Pest. From 1784 to 1786 he studied at the Institute of Veterinary Science in Vienna under A. I. Wollstein. From 1787 to 1818 he was Professor of Veterinary Science at the University of Pest. He dealt with the infectious diseases of animals. The introduction of teaching of Veterinary Science in Hungary is linked to his name. His works include Book for Treating Animals (Barmokat orvosló könyv) (1795), and Praktisches Handbuch der Erkenntniss und Heilung der Seuchen, Kontagionen (1817). His statue is at Lukácsháza, and a High School at Gyöngyösfalu bears his name. – B: 1730, 1897, T: 7456.

Töltéssy, Zoltán (Miskolc, 11 July 1900 - Budapest, 25 October 1932) – Minister of the Reformed Church. He carried out his Theological studies at the Reformed Theological Academies of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), and Budapest, as well as in Scotland. In 1922, he was Secretary to Bishop László (Ladislav) Ravasz. Thereafter he emigrated to the USA, and became Parish Minister in the Reformed Congregation of Davistown-Vestaburg. He played an important role in the formation of the Soli Deo Gloria Association – SDG of the Hungarian Reformed students. Returning to Hungary, he became the National Secretary of the Council of Christian Youth Societies from 1926.

He edited the paper Wake-up Signal (Ébresztő), and was Assistant Editor for the Calvinist Review (Kálvinista Szemle). – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Ravasz, László; Christian Youth Association.

Toma, András (Andrew) (Újfehértó, 1925 - 2004) – The last Hungarian prisoner of war of World War II. He served in the Second Hungarian Army during World War II and, in 1944 he fell into Russian captivity and was taken to a POW camp in Siberia. He was released in 1947 but, because he had no identification papers whatsoever and he spoke Hungarian only, no one could understand him. Consequently, he was taken to a psychiatric hospital where he languished for 52 years. Finally, somebody figured out that his language was Hungarian and soon he was transported to Hungary, where he arrived on 4 August 2000. During the long captivity he forgot his name, his place of birth and his relatives. It took some time to establish that he has a sister and a brother in Sulyánbokor. Since he never was discharged from the army, he was due 55 years of veteran payments. Probably, he was the last POW from World War II, to be repatriated – B: 1014, 1031, B: 7103.

Tomaj Clan – Anonymus mentioned this clan in his Chronicle and considered the clan leader, Tanis Aban (Thonuz-Oba), to be the descendant of a Petcheneg prince. He entered the realm during the rule of Prince Taksony (947-972), by whom he was given the settlement place of the Abád-harbor area, i. e. the land from the present-time Kunmadaras to the River Tisza (about 25 km east-west; Tomaj village is in the middle). Anonymus also noted about him that Tanis Aban did not convert to Christianity and, even after St. Stephen's (King István I) (997-1038) edicts, remained a pagan. His wife was Vivos (Ujjas?). After his death, he and his wife were buried in the harbor of Abád according to the ancient rites. Tanis Aban's son, Örkény, together with his wife, had already converted to the Christian religion. The Tomaj clan was still using the names Tanis (Thonyz) and Örkény during the 13th century; these were the branches called Lesencze-Tomaj. The clan had four known branches: those of Losonzy, Abády, Lesencze-Tomaj and Heney. – B: 1031, T: 7456.→Anonymus.

Tomaj, Dénes (Denis) (? - Battle of Mohi, 11 April 1241) – Royal office-bearer, descendant of the Pecheneg Tomaj clan. Earlier he was the adherent of King Andrew II, (1205-1235), Master of the Horse from 1222 to 1224, then from 1224 until 1230, he was Lord Chief Treasurer, and during the years 1228-1230, Bailiff of the town of Szolnok. In 1230, he joined King Béla IV, (1235-1270), under who he served as Voivode of Transylvania from 1233 to 1235. When king Béla brought about the fall of his father's followers in 1235, Tomaj was Palatine of Hungary until 1241. With a small Hungarian force he defended the march-land along the western border, when the Tartars first invaded the Carpathian Basin; but he suffered defeat on 12 March 1241: his troops were massacred by the Tartars and he himself in a wounded state rushed on horseback to the capital Pest to tell the news about the invading Tartar forces to the King. Again he joined the King's army and was killed during the disastrous Battle of Mohi. His contemporaries called him "big-nose" ("nagyorrú"). For his services he received large estates in Transylvania and County Nógrád, and thus he became ancestor of the families Losonczy, and Iosonci Bánffy. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Mohi, Battle of; András II, King; Béla IV, King.

Tomanek, Nándor (Ferdinand) (Pécs, 8 September 1922 - Budapest, 4 August 1988) – Actor. Early in his career, he was a town clerk in Pécs; later, he completed his acting training at the Studio of the College of Dramatic and Cinematic Art and, in 1951 he was engaged by the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Pécs. Early on, he became a leading hero in operettas; later, he also played character roles in dramas. From 1962 to 1964, he was a member of the Petöfi Theater (Petőfi Színház) and, from 1964 the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház) of Budapest. With his acrid humor, he could cope with the most contradictory roles; both his theatrical voice and singing voice were eminently suitable. Because of his illness, he retired early from the stage and could only undertake radio roles, where he offered, e.g. a memorable interpretation of Firs in Chekhov's Cherry Orchard (Csresznyéskert). His roles included Kerekes Ferkó in I. Kálmán's Csárdás Princess (Csárdáskirálynő); Karenin in Tolstoy-Székely's Anna Karenina; Seberiakov in Chekhov's Uncle Vania (Ványa bácsi); Malvolio in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night (Vízkereszt); Dunois in Shaw's Saint Joan; Fernand in Miller's Incident at Vichy (Közjáték Vichyben); Einstein in Dürrenmatt's The Physicists (A fizikusok); Dandy (Ficsur) in F. Molnár's Liliom, and Jány Gusztáv in I. Nemeskürty - I. Örkény's The Silence of the Dead (A holtak hallgatása). He was successful in 40 feature films and TV plays including Yellow Rose (Sárga Rózsa) (1968); Voronyezs (1970); The Mészga Family (Mészga család) (TV 1972); Monster (Szörnyeteg) (TV 1974); Labyrinth (Labirintus) (1976), and Petőfi (TV 1978). He received the Mari Jászai Prize (1966, 1972), the Merited Artist (1973) and the Outstanding Artist titles (1977). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Tömböly, Dénes (Dennis) (Csánig, 27 December 1898 - Asunción, Paraguay, 16 August 1937) – Architect. He received his Engineering Degree in Budapest in 1925, after which he served in the Army. After the army service, he settled in Budapest and became an assistant professor, then later full professor at the University. He was a Member of Parliament. He left the country after World War II, and stayed in Germany for a few years. He emigrated to Paraguay in 1951, and settled in Asuncion. The Ministerio de Obras Publicas y Comunicaciones offered him a position. In 1962 he became a Department Head. He designed many churches, schools and other official buildings. In 1969, the Government of Paraguay honored him with the Medalla Honor de Merito for his excellent work in that country. He did community work for the Hungarian group and he organized the Hungarian Funeral Society of Larnbaré. – B: 1020, T: 7663.

Tomcsányi, Ádám (Kamánfalva, now Kamena, Slovakia, 4 Decembetr 1755 - Pest, 4 July 1831) – Physicist, engineer. His higher studies were at the University of Buda and at the Institutum Geometricum of the same University. From that University he obtained first a Ph.D. in Philosophy, then a Degree in Engineering. He was Assistant Professor of Physics and Mechanics at the same University. From 1791 to 1798, he was professor of Physics and Agriculture first at the Academy of Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania), then at the Academy of Commerce of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). From 1801 until his passing he was Professor of Physics and Mechanics at the University of Buda where, from 1823-1824 he was Rector. He published a pioneering work in Hungary on the electrics including its utilization in chemistry and medicine. His work with Pál (Paul) Kitaibel on the earthquake of Mór was internationally recognized. – B: 2129, T: 7103.→Kitaibel, Pál.

Tomcsik, József (Joseph) (Aranyosgyéres, now Câmpia Turzii, Romania, 19 May 1898 - Basel, 30 December 1964) – Physician, serologist and microbiologist. He studied Medicine at the Universities of Budapest and Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), and received his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest. Early on, he worked in the Bacteriological Institute of the University of Budapest under Hugó Preisz; later (1923-1925) he studied in the USA on a Rockefeller scholarship. In 1926 and 1927 he was Head of the Bacteriological Laboratory of the Institute of Pathological Anatomy of the Rockefeller Foundation in Peking (now Beijing). Later, in 1927, he led the Bacteriological Laboratory of the National Public Health Institute (Országos Közegészségügyi Intézet – OKI). From 1932 he was Professor of Public Hygiene in the Department of Medicine of the University of Szeged. From 1936, he served as Director of the OKI and, from 1943, he was Professor of Public Hygiene at the University of Basel. He was engaged in the study of the fine structure of bacteria and also in immunology. His main work was: Pasteur und die Generatio spontanea (1964). He was awarded the Robert Koch Medal for his immuno-cytological investigations. – B: 1730, 0883, T: 7456.

Tomori, Pál (Paul) (? ca. 1475 - Mohács, 29 August 1526) – Archbishop and military officer. He was the descendant of a family of landed gentry from County Abaúj. He began his career as the familiaris of the magnate János (John) Bornemisza, working as a treasury official in Transylvania. From 1501 to 1514 he was Bailiff of the Transylvanian Salt Treasury. From 1505 to 1514 he was Castellan of Fogaras Castle. He played an important part in the suppression of the 1514 Peasant Uprising, led by György (George) Dózsa, during the reign of Ulászló II. In 1519, he was Castellan of Buda Castle. He was the favorite of the Royal Court. After two of his wives died and he himself was disregarded for the appointment of the prior of Vrana, he entered a Franciscan monastery in 1520; he was often referred to as “brother Tomori”. When Nándorfehérvár (now Belgrade) fell to the Ottoman Turks in 1521, he was forced by a papal decree to take up the Archbishopric of Kalocsa and, together with György (George) Szapolyai, also the office of National Captain-Generalship of Hungary, now as Archbishop of Kalocsa. From 1522, he fought successfully against the Turks, defeating the forces of Pasha Ferhat. While he fought valiantly, he organized the defense of the borders of the realm and maintained strict discipline among his troops. His work was supported by the Papal Legate, while encountering a lack of understanding and financial problems on the part of the feudal lords. Despite his successes, he was not really suited to lead a national military force against the approaching Turkish armed forces. He opposed the Battle of Mohács on 29 August 1526, when Hungary’s army of 28,000 opposed the Turkish might of 200,000; but he still carried out the decree of the Royal War Council. He valiantly fought and fell at Mohács, together with the young King Louis II (1516-1526), and five bishops. After the battle the victorious Sultan Suleiman I, “the Magnificent”, had Tomori’s severed head carried around as a sign of victory. With the lost Battle of Mohács, Hungary’s fate was sealed for 150 years: the country was divided into three sections, its middle part becoming a colony of the Turkish Empire. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Dózsa, György; Mohács, Battle of; Lajos II, King; János I, King.

Tömörkény, István (Stephen) (Steingassner) (Cegléd, 21 December 1866 - Szeged, 24 April 1917) – Writer. He was a pharmacist-apprentice in Szeged (1882-1885), then a pharmacist in Kistelek, and later again in Szeged. He became a contributor to the paper, Szeged Curier (Szegedi Híradó) in 1896. He was in the army from 1889 to 1892, and served in Bosnia, Szeged and Vienna. From 1892, he was a contributor to the paper, Szeged Diary (Szegedi Napló). In 1887, he was contracted by the office of the paper National Courier (Országos Hírlap) as an external reporter. From 1899, he was a librarian at the Somogy Library and the City Museum of Szeged. From 1904 till his death, he was its manager. He participated in the excavation of the vicinity of Szeged. In 1893, his first novel appeared, entitled the Peasants of Szeged and other Gentlemen (Szegedi parasztok és egyéb urak). It was followed by the Under the Poplar Trees (Jegenyék alatt), which earned him national fame. His novels and stories appeared regularly in the national newspapers. He also wrote essays in archeology and ethnography and collected a few thousand dialectal words. He wrote excellent descriptions of peasant life with social sensitivity. Some of his other works are Water-travelers and Manual Laborers (Vizenjáró és kétkezi munkások) (1902); János Förgeteg as Communal Force and other Stories (Förgeteg János mint közérő és más elbeszélések) (1905); Sunny Lands (Napos Tájak) (1908); Sand-filled World (Homokos világ) (1910); Peonies (Bazsarózsák) (1912); Simple People (Egyszerű emberek) (1914), and Selected Stories (Válogatott elbeszélések), (1960). – B: 0883, 1730, 1257, T: 7103.

Tomory, Zsuzsa (Susan) (Budapest, 11 September 1930 - ) – Historian. She spent her childhood in Majsza-Miklósvár, and later in Dombóvár. The family fled the Soviet occupation at the end of 1944 to Western Hungary, and later to Bavaria, Germany, and returned in 1945. She matriculated in Dombóvár in 1948. Since her family was stamped “class alien” by the Communists, she was unable to enter Medical School. She became an accountant. Later, she entered a School of Nursing in Budapest, where she worked until 23 October 1956, when participated at the early demonstrations of the Revolution. Later, she worked at another Hospital taking care of the wounded. She had to flee Hungary on 27 November 1956 to avoid capture. She went first to Austria, then to the U.S. and started work at a hospital in Connecticut, and enrolled in a course of ancient Near Eastern History at the University of Connecticut. In the meantime she got married, and became the mother of three children. Soon she audited Prof. Jacobsen’s Sumerian course at Harvard University. Her family befriended Dr. Ida Bobula, who achieved groundbreaking work in the research of Sumerian-Hungarian relationships. She made contact with linguist, ethnographer and artist Adorján (Hadrian) Magyar. Their correspondence lasted almost a decade and, as a result of his teaching and her research, she came to recognize the antiquity of the Magyar culture of Hungary. From then on, she did not stop working on behalf of her oppressed homeland. She has written several books concerning the Magyar language and culture, and several articles in different Hungarian publications. She founded the bilingual quarterly, Journal of Hungarian Studies (Magyarságtudományi Értesítő), which ceased publication after 3 years. She is also a founding member of the Institute of Hungarian Studies (Magyarságtudományi Intézet). She received her Ph.D. in 2008 at the Nagy Lajos Király Magánegyetem in Miskolc, Hungary. Her books include Christmas (Karácsony) (1993); Identicality of Hungarian and English Words (Magyar-angol szóazonosság) (1994); Our Beginnings (Kezdetek) (1995); Roots of Our Language (Szóbokraink) (1996), and A New View of the Arthurian Legends (Az Arthur legendakör magyar kapcsolatai), which traces the Hungarian connections of the Arthurian legends (1997). A number of her studies were also published. – B: 1935, T: 7690. → Bobula, Ida; Magyar, Adorján.

Tompa, László (Ladislas) (Betfalva, now Betești, Romania, 14 December 1883 - Székelyudvarhely, now Odorheiu Seculiesc, Romania, 13 May 1964) – Transylvanian Hungarian (Szekler) poet, translator of literary works. After completing his high school studies in Nagyszeben (now Sibiu, Romania), he studied Law at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) (1902-1907), where his first poem appeared in the University News (Egyetemi Lapok). Thereafter, he settled at Székelyudvarhely, working as administrative official; in 1918, he was appointed County Archivist. Because of a childhood injury, he did not take part in World War I. From 1919, he edited the paper Szekler Gazette (Székely Közlöny) at Székelyudvarhely. From 1920 on, a number of his poems and translations appeared in Marosvásárhely (now Târgu Mureș, Romania) in the literary journal, Grim Time (Zord idő). He won the poetry competition of Grim Time with his poem In the Inn of a Strange Village (Idegen falusi fogadóban). His poems were published in the papers Transylvanian Review (Erdélyi Szemle); Sunrise (Napkelet); Shepherd's Fire (Pásztortűz); Opposition (Ellenzék), and Transylvanian Helikon (Erdélyi Helikon). In 1943, he gave up the editorial work and went into retirement; but in 1944, for one year, he undertook the teaching of Hungarian literature in the High School of Székelyudvarhely. Beside Sándor (Alexander) Reményik and Lajos (Louis) Áprily, it was László Tompa, who was the third member of the famous Helikon Trio. In his poetry it is evident that he wished to break out of the confinement of the mountains of Transylvania, to leave the narrow, small-minded form of life of a small country town, and explore greater, mightier possibilities of life. His books include Among the Mountains of Transylvania (Erdély hegyei között) (1921); Northern Wind (Éjszaki szél) (1923); Don't be Afraid (Ne félj) (1929); Where Are You, Man? (Hol vagy, ember?) (1940), and Under the Destiny of Transylvania (Erdélyi végzet alatt) (2007). He also translated into Hungarian the works of Andersen, Goethe, Rilke, Schiller and Zweig. He won the Grand Prize of the Transylvanian Helikon in 1929 and, in 1941 he was presented with the Baumgarten Prize. He won the State Prize of the People's Republic of Romania in 1955. A Street and a Memorial House bear his name in Székelyudvarhely. – B: 1031, 1257, T: 7456. → Áprily, Lajos; Reményik, Sándor; Tompa Miklós.

Tompa, Mihály (Michael) (Rimaszombat, now Rimavská Sobota, Slovakia, 28 September 1817 - Hanva, now Chanava, Slovakia, 30 September 1868) – Minister of the Reformed Church and poet. His father was a tradesman. It was his schoolmaster who first recognized his talent. He enrolled at the Reformed College of Sárospatak in the fall of 1832, where he sustained himself as a servant-student. Between 1838 and 1844, he studied Philosophy, Law and Theology, all the while supporting himself as a tutor of the sons of nobility. In 1845 he made the acquaintance of Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi, under whose influence he began to take an interest in folk-poetry. He was ordained in Miskolc in 1848, and received a call from the town of Beje to serve as minister. By that time, he had established a reputation as a writer. He achieved considerable success with his book, Folklore and Legends (Népregék és legendák) (1846).

Tompa enthusiastically served the cause of the 1848 Revolution and War of Independence. In the fall of 1848, he received a call to be a minister in the town of Kelemér. He married there, and from then on, his poetry reflected the many aspects of the cares and joys of family life. From 1851 to his death, he served in the village of Hanva. After the defeat of the War of Independence, at first, his poems openly expressed the pain of the nation: To the Stork (A gólyához); On the Plain (Pusztán) and Letter to an Exiled Friend (Levél egy kibújdosott barátom után). After he was brought before the Military Tribunal of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) for his poem To the Stork, he was interned in his village, and his manuscripts were confiscated. Oppression and censorship forced him to speak to the people in allegories in poems such as The Bird to his Young (A madár fiaihoz), In Winter (Télben), The Wounded Stag (A sebzett szarvas) etc. Tompa was made a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1858. The treasures of Hungarian folklore enriched his knowledge, as did Reformed theology, and a general culture acquired in Sárospatak. Besides his folk-style and lyrical poems, the richest and most colorful ones are the legends or folk sagas. In Hungarian literature, he is unmatched in utilizing this literary form. It is to his greatest credit that he preserved the local folklore by turning the folktales into poetry, e.g. Csörsz' Moat (Csörsz árka); The Two Archers (A két íjász) and The Chiming Cave (Csengő barlang). His religious concepts find many expressions in the legends, e.g. ideas expressed in nature worship, such as The Spirit of Fire (A tűz szelleme) and the The Ghost of the Cave (A barlang lelke). Mihály Tompa was one of the most significant representatives of the national folklore movement. He was one of the arousers of national sentiment during the years of oppression following the Revolution and War of Independence of 1848-1849. – B: 0883, 1138, 1257, T: 7617.
→Petőfi, Sándor.

Tompa, Miklós (Nicholas) (Székelyudvarhely, now Odorheiu Secuiesc, Romania, 28 December 1910 - Marosvásárhely, now Târgu Mureș, Romania, 5 July 1996) – Theater manager, director and teacher. He was the son of poet László (Leslie) Tompa. He began his career with Antal (Anthony) Németh at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. He was a director at Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) in the early 1940s. In 1945, he was one of the organizers and founders of the Szekler Theater (Székely Színház) in Kolozsvár, and a member until 1966. From 1948, he was a teacher at the Hungarian Art Institute, and later at the István Szentgyörgy Theater Institute in Marosvásárhely and, from 1976 to 1981, was its Rector. During the first 10 years of his directorship, the Theater of Marosvásárhely became a well-known and widely respected representative of Transylvanian Hungarian Theaters. Its productions, dealing with societal and community issues reflected a deep psychological approach in the presentation of characters. These productions proved to be some of the best examples of micro-realism in Theater. From the 1960s – returning to his earlier style – he directed the most authentic and impressive productions of Áron Tamási in Marosvásárhely and Szepsiszentgyörgy. His major works as director include M. Bánffy's The Lord (A nagyúr); Chekhov's The Sea Gull (Sirály); S. Brody's The Schoolmistress (A tanítónő); Tolstoy's The Power of Darkness (A sötétség hatalma); Gorky's The Vacationers (better known as Summer Folk) (Nyaralók); A. Sütő's The Grand Gedeon (Pompás Gedeon), and all the dramas of Áron Tamási. He was an outstanding figure of Hungarian theater in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). The National Theater of Marosvásárhely has a Miklós Tompa Troupe. In 1954, he received the Romanian State Prize and the title of Outstanding Artist. – B: 1445, T: 7665.→Tompa, László; Németh, Antal; Tamási, Áron.

Tompa, Sándor (Alexander) (Kézdivásárhely, now Târgu-Secuesc, Romania, County Háromszék, 22 December 1903 - Budapest, 19 December 1969) – Actor. He studied at the Medical Faculty of the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and concurrently he completed the Drama School of Miklós (Nicholas) Izsó. He was engaged by Jenő (Eugene) Janovics for the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház) of Kolozsvár in 1923, where he played character roles for 21 years, e.g.: Uncle Samu in Á. Tamási's Deceptive Rainbow (Csalóka szivárvány), Grave digger in Shakespeare's Hamlet. It was in 1945 that he became a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. From his interpretations, humor and dramatic power radiated. He often played roles for Hungarian Radio, and he was a regular player of the program-series Treasure Calendar (Kincses Kalendárium). His roles included Csörgheő Csuli in Zs. Móricz's Gentlemen's Fun (Úri muri); Sir Toby Belch in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night (Vízkereszt); Bobchinski in Gogol's Inspector General (Revizor), and Sergeant in G. Illyés' The Example of Ozora (Az ozorai példa). From 1938, he also had film roles. There are 95 feature films to his credit, including Úz Bence (1938); Semmelweis (1939); The Speaking Robe (A beszélő köntös) (1941); Brother Loránd (Fráter Lóránd) (1942); Without a Lie (Hazugság nélkül) (1945); Gentlemen's Fun (Úri muri) (1949); Strange Marriage (Különös házasság) (1951); Student Gábor (Gábor diák) (1955); Háry János (1964), and Impostors (Imposztorok) (1969). He received the Kossuth Prize (1956) and the title of Merited Artist. – B: 0883, 1439, T: 7456.

Toncz, Tibor (Budapest, 26 September 1905 - Budapest, 9 November 1979) – Painter, graphic artist, cartoonist and book illustrator. Originally he studied to be an Engineer; then he moved to Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), where he studied Fine Arts. He continued his studies at the Applied Drawing School (Iparrajziskola) in Budapest. From 1925 until 1944, he was a graphic artist for the Tolnai World News (Tolnai Világlapja). From 1945 until 1947, he worked for the Workers' World News (Dolgozók Világlapja). From 1948, he was Artistic Editor-in-Chief for the comic weekly, Crafty Matt, the Goose-herd (Ludas Matyi). Drawings from a study tour of China were shown at exhibitions, and published in a book entitled Six Weeks in China (Hat hét Kinában) (1959). He also made caricatures, watercolors, posters, book-covers and stage designs. He received the Jean Effel Special Prize at the International Cartoon Exhibition of Vienna (1955) and the Munkácsy Prize (1956) – B: 0883, 1654, T: 7667.

Tonk, Sándor (Alexander) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 2 May 1947 - Budapest, 14 August 2003) – Hungarian historian, University Rector in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). His grandfather was Sándor (Alexander) Tavaszy. He completed his studies at the Babes-Bolyai University of Kolozsvár (1969). He was a librarian at the Teleki Téka Library in Marosvásárhely (now Târgu Mureș, Romania) until 1972; later he worked as a researcher at the Sociology Institute of the Romanian Academy of Sciences until 1992, after which he accepted a professorship at the University of Kolozsvár. Between 1998 and 2001 he was professor at the Protestant Theological Academy, Kolozsvár. In 2001, he was installed Rector of the Sapientia Hungarian University of Science in Transylvania (Sapientia Erdélyi Magyar Tudományegyetem). A selections of his writings include Transylvanians at Medieval Universities (Erdélyiek egyetemjárása a középkorban) (1979); Transylvanians in the Universities in the Early New Age, 1521-1700, (Erdélyiek egyetemjárása a korai újkorban, 1521-1700) co-editor (1992); Students of the College of Marosvásárhely 1653-1848, introduction (A marosvásárhelyi kollégium diákjai, 1653-1848, bevezető) (1994), and Hungarian Higher Education in Romania. Past-Present-Future (A magyar felsőfoku oktatás Romániában. Múlt-Jelen-Jövő), co-editor (1998). He received the Tőkés Prize posthumously. – B: 0875, 0877, 1031, T: 7103. → Tavaszy, Sándor; Teleki Téka.

Tonuzoba Legend – Tonuzoba was a Petcheneg (Besenyő) Chief in the 10-11th century, who, according to Anonymus the Chronicler, settled with his people in Hungary during the reign of Reigning Prince Taksony. He was given permission to settle on the left bank of the River Tisza, by the village of Abád. According to legend, he rejected Western Christianity and kept following the ancient beliefs. When he died, he was buried with his wife according to the ancient rites and customs, on his territory near the river-crossing at Abád. However, their son, Örkönd, (Urkund) was baptized. He was the ancestor of the Tomaj clan, among whose members the Örkönd and Thonuz names could still be found in 1292. – B: 1078, 0883, T: 7617. → Anonymus; Tomaj Clan.

Toplica Abbey (now Topusko, Croatia) – King András II (Andrew) of Hungary and Croatia (1205-1235), founded the Abbey in the Diocese of Zagreb in 1205, in honor of the Blessed Virgin; he gave its custody to the Cistercians. The founding document is of the year 1211, the date when the building of the Monastery was completed. The original members of the religious order were from the Abbey of Clairvaux, France. The Abbey, as an institution under the patronage of Hungarian kings, was directly subject to the Pope, and exempt from the supervision of the diocesan bishop. Some parish churches lay on the Abbey estate, but the appointment of parish priests as well as the care for pastoral duties and liturgy fell within the responsibilities of the Zagreb provost. – B: 1078, 2077, T: 7103. → András II, King.

Torch Dance – A dance based on the divine service of fire. The veneration of fire among pagan religions was connected mostly with the veneration of the Sun. During the winter and summer solstice, it was celebrated with fires lit on mountains. The last remnants of this pagan cult in Hungary are the fires lit on Christmas Eve and New Year's Eve, as well as in many places on the eve of St John's day (June 24), when fires are lit on the mountains and people dance around them. – B: 0942, T: 7682.

Tordai, Teri (Debrecen, 21 December 1941 - ) – Actress. Her family moved to Eger from Debrecen because of the bombings during World War II. She studied ballet under a German dancing teacher in the early 1950s; thereafter she studied at a Teachers' College, where she supposedly attended the Academy of Dramatic Art; she studied there from 1960 to 1964. Her outstanding beauty determined her roles for years. Already in her college years, she was given a role in the film Rainy Sunday (Esős vasárnap) (1962), which proved a success and made her well known. After completing her college studies, she acted in film after film. Soon she received roles in German films: in 1965 she played in the comedy Ferien mit Piroshka, followed by the Austrian film Susanne, die Wirtin von der Lahn; she was given roles in romantic films as well, among them a part in Der Liebesschüler (1974). For some years, she belonged to the most popular stars of the German-speaking region of Europe. Tordai did not regard her films made abroad particularly valuable, but they enabled her to get acquainted with the western filmmaking style; she learned foreign languages and saw the world. She also played roles in Hungary. She was particularly memorable in two TV films: The Coward (A gyáva) (1971) and Good Evening Summer, Good Evening Love (Jó estét nyár, jó estét szerelem). She acted in more than 100 feature and TV films, among them: Roads (Utak) (1964); Der Kapitän (1971); Mephisto (1981); Last Run (2001); Indian Summer (Indián nyár) (TV, 2006), and Presso (2008). From the 1980s, she played roles on stage. She played parts in a variety of genres: contemporary and classical in Hungary and abroad. She also played with her daughter Lili Horváth, both on stage and in films. Tordai is a recipient of the Mari Jászai Prize, and a number of other distinctions and prizes. – B: 1031, 1719, T: 7456.

Tordasi, Ildikó (Mrs. Kovács Schwarzenberger) (Budapest, 9 September 1951 - ) – Fencer. She grew up in Óbuda (“Old Buda”), the northern part of Budapest. In 1985, she received a diploma in professional coaching from the College of Physical Education (Testnevelési Főiskola). Since 1964, she has been a competitor for several clubs in Budapest, among them the Magyar Testgyakorlók Köre – MTK (Hungarian Physical Trainers Club). She became a champion with the Hungarian youth team; following that, in 1971, she was an individual youth champion. In 1975 and 1976, she was the Hungarian champion of fencing. From 1971 she was a member of the select team. In 1972 she won a silver medal at the Munich Summer Olympic Games and, in 1976, at the Montreal Summer Olympic Games she became an Olympic champion as a member of the fencing team. In 1980, as a member of the fencing team, she achieved a bronze medal at the Summer Olympic Games in Moscow. In 1973 she was a winning member of her team in the Göteborg World Championship. She retired in 1982 because of a knee injury; following that she became a coach. – B: 1031, 2111, T: 7684.

Torday, Emil (Budapest, 22 June 1875 - London, England, 9 May 1931) – Ethnographer and globetrotter. He completed his education in Budapest and Munich, and commenced his employment at the Budapest branch of the Belgian Bank, from where he was transferred to Brussels. Soon he was appointed Chief of the Bank’s Congo Branch. Between 1900 and 1904, he did research in Katanga, in the area of the African lakes. He was the first European researcher to draw attention to the ample mineral deposits in Katanga province, primarily the rich and valuable copper beds. From 1905 to 1907, the English Royal Anthropological Institute commissioned him to carry out research in the environs of the Congo River’s southern tributaries. On the basis of the great respect he earned, and because of his humane conduct, the natives elected him an honorary Chief. Between 1907 and 1909, he carried out anthropological and linguistic research around the Kassai, Sankuru and Kwilu Rivers, as well as ethnographical collection for the British Museum. In course of his travels he recognized the importance of writing tribal history, while discovering Africa's past. With this intent in mind he created a new genre in Africa's historical literature. During his nearly ten years long stay in Africa, he learned eight African languages. His anthropological and ethnographical observations are of pioneering significance and the material he collected is uniquely valuable. He donated an ethnographical collection of 350 pieces to the Hungarian National Museum. Diseases caused by the African climate ruined his health and, for this reason, from the 1910s, he lived in London, where he worked at the British Museum and reported his African collecting trips in several volumes. His essays were also published in foreign specialist periodicals. Among his publications, the ten-volume work, summarizing African races On the trail of the Bushongo: An account of a remarkable & hitherto unknown African people (1913), commissioned by the Spencer Committee, stands out in importance. It is a long-lasting source book on African ethnography. – B: 1078, 0773, 1020, T: 7669.

Tordy, Géza (Budapest, 1 May 1938 - ) – Actor and theater manager. He began his career in Kaposvár in 1956. Thereafter, he worked for the Theater of Szeged (Szegedi Színház) (1957-1959). From 1959, he was a member of the Theater of the Hungarian People's Army (Magyar Néphadsereg Színháza) and the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház). During the years 1963 to 1967, he was a member of the Madách Theater (Madách Színház). In 1967, he returned to the Comedy Theater. From 1982, he has been giving lectures at the Academy of Theatrical and Cinematic Art. He was the Head Manager of the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház) of Veszprém from 1988 to 1990. In 1992, he became the artistic director of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Győr. Tordy's character is equally well suited in molding romantic and modern heroes. In his acting, one may easily detect the inner tension, the direct emotional fulfilment and the occasional wild passion. In his stage roles an important aspect of his art is characterized by a romantic outlook and a wild, but controlled presentation of instincts and feelings. His roles include American Electra; Phantom of the Opera; Black Comedy (Játék a sötétben); Proconsul Caligula, Shakespeare's works: King Lear; All's Well That Ends Well (Minden jó, ha a vége jó); Much Ado About Nothing (Sok hűhó semmiért), Schiller's Maria Stuart. His roles as manager include Shakespeare's Othello and The Merchant of Venice (A velencei kalmár); The Man of Gold (Az aranyember); Liliom, and Lulu. He has played in more than 100 feature and TV films, such as: Sons of the Man with the Heart of Stone (A köszívű ember fiai) (1965), Eine Handvoll Helden (1967), a.k.a Die letzte Kompanie, West Germany; Per un pugno di eroi, Italy; The Last Battalion, (80 huszár) (1978); The Red Countess (A Vörös grófnő) (1985); Dearest Ann (Édes Anna) (TV, 1990); S.O.S. Love (S.O.S. Szerelem) (2007), and Presszó (2008). He received a number prizes and honors, including the Mari Jászai Prize (1970, 1977), the titles of Merited Artist (1980), and Outstanding Artist (1988), the Kossuth Prize (1991), and he became Actor of the Nation (2008). – B: 1031, 1719, T: 7456.

Torjai-Szabó, István (Stephen) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 24 October 1907 - ?) – Literary historian and writer. He was a high school teacher in Kolozsvár, a referee of the Transylvanian Fine Arts Guild (Erdélyi Szépművészeti Céh), and Associate Editor for the journal Transylvanian Helicon (Erdélyi Helikon). He also published in Credit (Hitel), Shepherd's Fire (Pásztorűz), and in papers from Budapest. In 1945, he moved to the West, settled first in Germany, then in Austria. From 1951 to 1958, he was a lecturer at the University of Innsbruck. He published short stories, literary and historical informative articles, studies and essays in émigré papers, mainly in the New Hungaria (Új Hungária); Shepherd's Fire (Pásztortűz) Scattered Glowing Embers (Szétszórt parazsak), and Hungarian Bibliophiles (Magyar Könyvbarátok). From March 1956 to January 1973, he worked at the Radio Free Europe in Munich as Director. His works include The Intellectual Centuries of Transylvania (Erdély szellemi századai) (1956); Einheit und Zerfall des latein-danubischen Geistes (Unity and Disintegration of the Danubian-Latin Spirit) (1958); Das Prosawerk Michael Vörösmartys (1965), and Apostles in the Clocktower (Apostolok az óratoronyban), four stories (1965). – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Torkos Justus, János (John) (Győr, 17 December 1699 - Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 7 April 1770) – Physician. He began his medical studies under Károly (Charles) Moller in Besztercebánya (now Banská Bystrica, Slovakia), obtaining his Medical Degree from the University of Halle in 1724. He became a medical officer in 1726, town physician in Esztergom from 1727 to 1740, and in Pozsony from 1740 to 1770. He dealt with epidemiology, balneology and medicinal waters. He was the first to introduce a pharmacological price-list in Hungary; also the first to introduce regulations regarding assistant midwives. His works include Taxa Pharmaceutica Posoniensis (1745); Thermae Almasiensis (1746), and Balneum aquae dulcis (1765) – B: 1730, 0883, T: 7456.

Törley, József (Joseph) (Szabadka, now Subotica, Serbia, 10 January 1858 - ? 1900) – Champagne-manufacturer. He completed his studies at the Commercial College in Vienna. In the late 1870s, he settled in Reims, France, in order to attain the mastery of champagne manufacturing. He returned to Hungary in 1881, and founded the Champagne Works at Budafok that became famous soon afterward. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Torma, Zsófia (Sophia) (Csicsókeresztúr, now Cristești Ciceului, Romania, 1840 - Szászváros, now Orăștie, Romania, 14 November 1899) – Paleo-archeologist. Her explorations were mainly conducted in County Hunyad. The symbols and scripts on clay objects she found during an excavation there were an archaeological sensation. At the suggestion of Flóris Romer, she began excavation at the site of Torda (now Turda, Romania). Her discoveries of prehistoric remains around Déva (now Deva, Romania) attracted international attention. She also found artifacts of the 4500-year old Tordos culture, some of which were covered with signs. Her main works include The Remains of Ancient Settlement at Torda and the Ancient Myth of the People of our Country (A tordosi őstelep és hazánk népe ősmítosának maradványai), Hunyad county, a monograph (Bp., 1897) and The History of County Hunyad from Prehistoric Times to the Hungarian Settlement (Hunyad vármegye földjének története az őskortól a honfoglalásig) (Budapest, 1902). Her most famous work, the Ethnographische Analogien was published in Jena in 1894. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7665.→Sumerian Pictorial and Cuneiform Writing.

Tormás (10th century) – Reigning Prince of the House of Árpád. He traveled to Byzantium with his companion Bulcsú, and made a five-year peace agreement with Emperor Constantine VII, Porphyrogenitos (“Purple born”) (905-959). They stayed as guests at his court, and were converted to the Christian faith. The Emperor honoured Tormás with the honorific “Friend of the Emperor”, and Bulcsu with the title “Patricius”. The Emperor wrote the history of the Empire, entitled De administrando imperio (On the administration of the Empire), in which, based on their narratives, he gave the names of the seven Hungarian (Magyar) tribes. Around 895, three Kabars tribes joined the seven Magyar tribes, thus we can reckon with ten tribes. All the reigning princes were from the House of Árpád, followed in rank by the Horka. Each clan also had its governor. – B: 1230, T: 7658. → Bulcsu; Horka or Harka.

Tormay, Béla (Szekszárd, 10 October 1838 - Budapest, 29 December 1906) – Agriculturist, father of Cecile Tormay. He conducted early studies in horticulture and farming machinery, and during 1858-1859, he studied Natural Science at the University of Pest, and in 1859, he qualified as a Veterinarian. He also obtained a diploma from the Bavarian Agricultural College of Weihenstephan. From 1855 to 1858, he was employed on the estate of Count István (Stephen) Széchenyi at Cenk; later, on the estate of Count István (Stephen) Károlyi at Derekegyház. From 1861, he was a demonstrator at the Veterinary College of Pest, from 1865 an assistant teacher; in 1868-1869, he was a teacher at the Higher Agricultural College of Keszthely (Keszthelyi Felsőbb Gazdasági Tanintézet), and between 1869 and 1873, he was Director of the National Higher Agricultural College of Debrecen (Országos Felsőbb Gazdasági Tanintézet). From 1873, as Director, he reorganized the Veterinary College of Budapest, moving it to a new building in 1881. In 1880, he organized the Veterinary Branch of the Ministry of Agriculture, Industry and Commerce. From 1885 to 1904, as a ministerial counselor, Tormay was National Head of all the Agricultural Colleges of Hungary. In several branches of animal husbandry, the systematic livestock farming began on his initiative. His educational work in this field was also significant. From 1878, he was a member of the National Public Health Council; in 1904, a titular Secretary of State, a founding member (later a titular president) of the Hungarian National Veterinary Association and, from 1880, a member of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons. His works include General Animal Husbandry (Általános állattenyésztés) (1871, 3rd edition 1895); Village Horse Breeding (A falusi lótenyésztés) (1873), and The Breeding of Domestic Animals (A háziállatok tenyésztése) (1896, 2nd edn. 1903). An Agricultural College in Debrecen bears his name (Tormay Béla Szakkollégium). – B: 1730, 1897, T: 7456. → Tormay, Cécile.

Tormay, Cécile (Budapest, 8 October 1875 - Mátraháza, 2 April 1937) – Writer and literary translator, daughter of Tormay Béla. She carried out her studies as a private student. She studied World Literature in the original, whether it was German, French, English or Latin. Her travels abroad between 1900 and 1914 expanded her international knowledge. Her first books formed a collection under the title, Love Life of a Page (Apródszerelem) (1899), and another collection of short stories entitled Venial Sins (Apró bűnök) (1905). Her first successful novel was People Among the Stones (Emberek a kövek közt) (1911), describing the life of simple people. It appeared in English, German, Italian, Dutch, Finnish and Estonian languages. Old House (Régi ház) (1914) is a novel about a family, a description of Pest in the Biedermeyer era. She won the award of the Hungarian News Agency (Magyar Távirati Iroda – MTI) with this novel. The book appeared in numerous languages; it was also published in the USA. Her book, written in diary style, entitled A Book in Exile, vols. i,ii (Bujdosó könyv, I, II) (1920-1921), was written in a powerful style about the period of the Revolution of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic (Magyar Tanácsköztársaság) from 31 October 1918 to 8 August 1919. It achieved world fame, appearing in German, English and French. Wax Figures (Viaszfigurák) is a collection of short stories (1918), so is The Clock Stopped (Megállt az óra) (1923). As requested by the Minister of Culture Kunó Klebersberg, Cécile Tormay translated medieval legends from Latin, entitled: Hungarian Legends (Magyar Legendárium) (1935). Her book, The City of Flowers (A virágok városa) (1925) depicts Florence, while the Country of Mermaids (Szirének hazája) (1935) is a travelogue of Sicily. The trilogy called: The Ancient Emissary (Ósi küldött) is set in the Mongol-Tartar times (1241-1242). After The Swan of Csallóköz (Csallóközi hattyú) (1933) and On the Other Shore (A túlsó parton) (1934), the book The White Monk (A fehér barát) (1939), remained unfinished because of her passing. She edited the periodical Dawn (Napkelet), from 1923 until her death. At the turn of the years 1918-1919, she founded the National Association of Hungarian Women (Magyar Asszonyok Nemzeti Szövetsége) to preserve the memory of Hungarians who perished during World War I. In 1935 she was unanimously elected a member of the International Committee of Intellectual Collaboration in the League of Nations (A Népszövetség Szellemi Együttműködés Nemzetközi Bizottsága), to fill the chair that became vacant after the death of Mme Curie. Here too, she spoke up against the dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920). In 1930, she was awarded the Corvin Wreath in recognition of her cultural activities. She was nominated for the Nobel Prize in 1936. In 1937 she would have received the Nobel Prize, but she died before it could have been awarded. She was posthumously awarded the Hungarian Heritage Prize (2012). Her bust is at the Rókus Garden, Budapest. Cécile Tormay was the greatest Hungarian woman writer of the 19th-20th centuries. – B: 0833, 1031, 1257, T: 7684. → Tormay, Béla; Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic; Trianon Peace Treaty; Klebersberg, Count Kunó.

Tornai, József (Joseph) (Dunaharaszti, 9 October 1927 - ) – Poet, writer and literary translator. After completing a Commercial High School, from 1948 he worked as a laborer in the industrial suburb, Csepel of Budapest. It was in 1962 that he became a freelance writer. He was an associate of the magazine Contemporary (Kortárs) from 1977. He was President of the Writers' Association (1992-1996). Lőrinc (Lawrence) Szabó, one of the great lyric poets of the 20th century, was his first poetic model. His basic principle was to demonstrate the unity of the modern and the ancient. Without a harmonious world-view, his lyrics are characterized by an avant-garde approach, surreal imagination, thought-rhythm and motive-repetitions. He writes on arithmetic, confessions of love, verses about the motherland, scenes of his birthplace, and expulsion from the world of childhood. His novels tackle such topics as love, sexuality, and married life. His poems include Bird of Paradise (Paradicsommadár) (1959); Timeless Time (Időtlen idő) (1969); Peter Veres' Songs (Veres Péter-énekek) (1981); The Screaming Rose (Sikoltozó rózsa) (1995), and Lunar Eclipse (Holdfogyatkozás) (1999). Among his prose works are Beauty of the Peacock (A páva szépsége) novel (1988); Modern Forms of Expulsion (A kiűzetés modern formái) a collection of essays (1998); his literary translations include Nazim Hikmet's Things I Didn't Know I Loved (Boldog látomások...) (1977), Baudelaire's Hymn to the Night (Himnusz az éjszakához), selected translations (1948). He was awarded the Attila József Prize (1975), the Small Cross of Merit of Republic of Hungary (1997), the János Arany Prize (1998), the Laurel Wreath (2001), and the Prima Prize (2012). – B: 0877, 1257, 1031, T: 7456.→Szabó, Lőrinc.

Tornaszentandrás, Church with Twin Sanctuaries (in County Borsod-Abaúj-Zemplén), situated by the Bodva Creek. The Church has one aisle and two half-circle sanctuaries identical in size. It was first mentioned in a 1283 document as royal property. When the renovation of the church began in the Baroque style, the builders found old frescos under the stucco. On the frescos a crowned head with the motives of the Anjou lily emerged. Subsequently they found more fresco fragments with Anjou motives. In the middle of the 14th century, a new aisle was added to the church with frescos originating from that period. Churches with two sanctuaries can be found from Asia Minor to France; but the church of Tornaszentandrás with one aisle and two sanctuaries is rather unique, similar ones can be found only in Central Europe. These parish churches and churches of monasteries are near each other geographically. The earliest ones were built during the reign of the Carolingian Empire, which extended from France to Pannonia. They used these structures for many centuries. The new Theological Encyclopedia calls this architectural style the Carolingian type. Historians assume that the church beside the Fortress of Tarna was dedicated to St Andrew, and the builders came from Meran/Tyrol, and settled in the Szepesség. In 1576, the Turkish invaders burned the village of Tornaszentandrás. A great number of people died during the attack and many of them fled. For 150 years the church was in ruins. According to some documents written in 1731, there were beautiful paintings of the saints under the arched vault. The people started to move back to the village in 1740. After resettling, they started to rebuild the church. In 1971, plans were made to restore the medieval architecture of the church. – B: 1020, 1031, T: 7663.

Tornyai, János (John) (Hódmezővásárhely, 18 January 1869 - Hódmezővásárhely, 20 September 1936) – Painter. He is from peasant parentage. From 1886 to 1888, as a regular student, he studied at the School of Decorative Arts in Budapest; and during 1888 to 1889 as a guest student under Bertalan (Bartholomew) Székely, Károly (Charles) Lotz and János (John) Greguss. From 1894 on, with a scholarship from his native town, he went to Paris for further studies at the Julian Academy. The art of the great painter Mihály (Michael) Munkácsy made a strong impression on him. In 1897, he traveled through Germany and Italy, before he returned to his birthplace. He was battling with a subsistence problem and he could only acquire a studio in 1903. With his picture, Share of Inheritance (Juss), which he entered in the Spring Exhibition of 1904 in the major Art Gallery (Műcsarnok) of Budapest, he won the György (George) Ráth Prize. Somewhat later he was collecting mementos of folk art in the company of Gyula (Julius) Rudnay and Béla Endre. To save the folk pottery, they established the Majolica and Pottery Colony of the artists at Hódmezővásárhely. In 1910, the three of them launched the art journal Future (Jövendő). In 1908, he arranged his first collective exhibition at Hódmezővásárhely. From the 1910s he lived in Mártély on the River Tisza, northwest of his birthplace, where he painted his long series of scenes of the Great Plain. In 1929 he moved to Budapest. He continued to win prizes at exhibitions; in 1929, at the International Exhibition of Barcelona, he was rewarded with a Gold Medal for his painting: Bouquet Making (Csokorkötés). In 1933 and 1934, he worked in Szentendre (north of Budapest), a town very popular with artists. Tornyai received a Gold Medal for his painting In the Studio (Műteremben) at the National Fine Arts Exhibition held in 1933 and, for the same work, he won the Grand Prix of the Szinyei Society in 1934. He was a member of a number of Fine Arts Societies. The last years of his life he again spent in his native town. As the realistic portrayer of peasant life, early in his career, he followed the folk-realism of Munkácsy, blended with the drama of expressionism, such as in the paintings Rákóczi at Rodostó (Rákóczi Rodostóban) (1904); Brigand Love (Betyárszerelem) (1907), and Miklós Nagybercsényi (Nagybercsényi Miklós) (1908). His first work, Share of Inheritance, painted several times over the years, stands out among his generally dark-colored works, and it seems to have affected his entire lifework. The message, i.e. the misery of peasant life and lonely ranch life is suggested even by the subdued colorings of his rural scenes, e.g. Shadoof Well (Gémeskút) and Magyar Fate (Magyar sors). Only in Szentendre, in his old age, does his coloring become livelier, tackling also the art of plein air. The Hungarian National Gallery holds some of his paintings. In 1961, there was a memorial exhibition held there. The Museum of Fine Arts holds his moving work My Mother in her Room (Anyám szobájában). Exhibitions were held at the Artist House Gallery in 1911, at the Ernst Museum in 1917, at the Creation Artist House in 1923, and at the Hungarian National Gallery in 1961. He received a number of prizes, among them a Gold Prize at the Barcelona Exhibition (1929), a Gold Medal (1933) and a Grand Prix (1934). He was a member of learned societies, including the Munkácsy Guild and the László Pál Society. Toward the end of his life, he lived for a short while in Szentendre; however, his last years were spent in Hódmezővásárhely and he left some of his paintings to this town. Some of his works are held in the National Gallery, in Budapest. He was one of the outstanding painters of the 20th century. His town of birth, along with artists, writers and friends, founded the Tornyai Society in 1934. There is a Tornyai Museum in Békéscsaba – B: 0872, 0883, 1031, 1068, T: 7456.→Székely, Bertalan; Lotz, Károly; Munkácsy, Mihály; Rudnay, Gyula.

Törőcsik, Mari (Mary) (Pély, 23 November 1935 - ) – Actress. After finishing her studies at the Academy of Performing Arts in 1957, she immediately gained public attention in the film called Merry-Go-Round (Körhinta), produced by Zoltán Fábry. The National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest contracted her in 1958, where she spent the years 1958-1979. In the theater she made her debut as Solveig in Ibsen's Peer Gynt. In 1979-1980, she was artistic Manager of the Kisfaludy Theater (Kisfaludy Színház) in Győr. From 1980 to 1990, she was a member of the MAFILM theatrical company, and from 1990 to 1993, she was a member of the Szigligeti Theater (Szigligeti Színház) in Szolnok. In 1993 and 1994, she was Director of the Thália Theater, Budapest. Mari Törőcsik was President of the Hungarian Chamber of Actors (1989-1992). Since 2002, she has been a member of the National Theater in Budapest. She achieved success playing young, dramatic female roles. Her youthful freshness is associated with disciplined movements and almost effortless portrayals. In the more dramatic roles she has portrayed many personalities, lending a special quality with her mannerism of speaking by using modulations of her voice. Her more important roles include Sipsirica in K. Mikszáth's Benedek; Margaret in The Playboy of the Western World, by J. M. Synge (A nyugati világ bajnoka); Maria in Darvas' Fire at Dawn (Hajnali tűz); Sasha in L. Tolstoy's The Living Corpse (Az élő holttest); Cordelia in Shakespeare's King Lear; Amal in L. Németh's The Monster (Szörnyeteg); Rozika in Móricz's Gentlemen's Fun (Úri muri), and Gertrúd in Eörsi's Interview (Interjú). She played the lead role in more than 100 feature and TV films, including Merry Go Around (Körhinta) (1956); St. Peter's Umbrella (St. Péter esernyője) (1958); Be Good Unto Death (Légy jó mindhalálig) (1960); Idol (Bálvány) (1963); Silence and Cry (Csend és Kiáltás) (1967); Cat's Play (Macskajáték) (1972); Cherry Orchard (Cseresznyéskert), (TV, 1979); Csinszka (TV, 1987); The Bible (A Biblia) (TV, 1990); Nobel (2001), and Esther's Bequest (Eszter hagyatéka) (2008). She frequently appeared in radio programs as well. Mari Töröcsik is a recipient of a number of prizes, including the Mari Jászai Prize (1964, 1969), the Kossuth Prize (1954, 1973, 1999), the Best Female Role Prize: Chicago (1971), Karovy Vary (1972), Cannes (1976), Taormina (1977), Madrid, and Salerno (1977); the Merited Artist title (1971), the Outstanding Artist title (1977), the Middle Cross of Merit of Republic of Hungary (1995), Member of the Society of Immortals (1997), Actor of the Nation (2000), Prima Primissima Prize (2007), the Anal Páger Actor Prize (2008), and the Szervátiusz Prize (2010). – B: 0871, 1031, T: 7684, 7103.

Toroczkai Wigand, Ede (Edward) (Pest, 19 May 1870 - Budapest, 1945) – Architect and industrial artist. At the beginning of his career, he worked on the construction of the Parliament Building under Imre (Emeric) Steindl. His experience with Gothic architecture contributed to his later artistic development. In his furniture, designed under English influence, at first he turned toward the secessionist style; then, due to his long stay in Transylvania at Marosvásárhely (now Târgu Mureș, Romania), and following in the footsteps of Károly (Charles) Kós and Béla Jánszky, he began to employ the elements of Transylvanian folk art. He was a great illustrator, and many of his sketches appeared in both artistic and fictional works. He was a teacher at the Budapest School of Industrial Arts. He was the recipient of numerous national and foreign prizes, including the Hungarian and Italian state gold awards, and silver at the Paris and Saint Louis World Fairs. His main work is Flowery Yard (Hímes Udvar) (Bp., 1916). – B: 0883, T: 7665. → Steindl, Imre; Kós, Károly.

Törő, Imre (Emeric) (Debrecen, 28 September 1900 - Debrecen, 27 September 1993) – Physician, biologist and histologist. From 1919 he studied Medicine at the University of Budapest, and from 1921, at the University of Debrecen, where he obtained his Medical Degree in 1926. Thereafter, he worked as a demonstrator at the Institute of Anatomy and Biology of the same University. In 1936, he became an honorary lecturer of embryology and, from 1938 he was Head of the Section of Biology and Physiology, established by him. From 1939, he worked as an assistant lecturer without pay; from 1945, he was delegated director of the Institute. Between 1947 and 1950, he was Professor of Anatomy and Professor of Biology, Director of the Institute of Anatomical Biology; in 1948 and 1949, he was Dean of the Faculty of Medicine. During the period from 1950 to 1971, he was Professor and Head of Department at the University of Budapest; Director of the Institute of Histology and Embryology; at the same time Vice-Chancellor of the University (1961-1964), and also a Member of Parliament from 1963 to 1967. He was also active in the field of research during 1929-1930 at the Collegium Hungaricum of Berlin, and from 1936-1938, on a Rockefeller Scholarship at Columbia University of New York. In Hungary, he was one of the introducers of tissue culture. He worked out the humoral regulation of the contractions of the developing heart muscle. He gained significant results in the field of histo-physiology of the reticulo-endothelial system. Between 1957 and 1968, he was editor of the journals Acta Morphologica, Acta Biologica and Natural Scientific Journal (Természettudományi Közlöny), also president of the editorial board of Nature's World (Természet Világa). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1946, ordinary later in 1946). His works include Histology (Szövettan) (1948, 5th ed. 1967); Biology (1966); Ultrastructure of Lymphoid Organs, with co-authors (1975), and The Development and Histology of Man (Az ember fejlődése és szövettana) (1968) – B: 1730, 1031, T: 7456.

Török, Aurél→Ponori Thewrewk, Aurél (1)

Török, Bálint (Valentine) (enyingi) (? - Constantinople, 1551) – Castellan, magnate with large landed property. In 1521, he was Bán (Viceroy) of Nándorfehérvár (now Belgrade); because he surrendered the castle fortress to the Turks, he was sentenced to forfeiture of property. However, with a royal pardon he regained his large estate. During the 1526 Battle of Mohács, he was one of the bodyguards of King Louis II (1516-1526). He was also one of the captains of John Szapolyai, and later that of Queen Isabella. In the anarchy, prevailing after the Mohács defeat, he was one of the despotic feudal lords, acquiring property by force. In 1527, he defected to Ferdinand I of the Habsburg side, who granted him a large property. However, in 1536, he changed sides to King János I, (John), reigning over the eastern part of Hungary, and, as a reward, he was given the castle of Hunyad and the town of Debrecen. In 1541, together with Isabella, Fráter György (George) and Péter Petrovics, he became the guardian of János Zsigmond (Sigismund John): and also in 1541, he excelled in the defense of Buda Castle against Roggendorf, when he escorted Isabella to Sultan Suleiman II (encamped near Buda Castle). The Sultan had him arrested and locked up in the Seven Towers of Constantinople for the rest of his life. His wife was Katalin Pemflinger, a patron of the Reformation. Bálint Török appears in a history-rich song of Sebestyén (Sebastian) Tinódi Lantos, he is the central figure in one of János Arany's ballads, and also appears in Géza Gárdonyi's historical novel, Eclips of the Crescent Moon (Egri csillagok) – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.→Mohács, Battle of; János I, King; Isabella, Queen; Martinuzzi, György; Tinódi Lantos, Sebestyén; Arany, János; Gárdonyi, Géza.

Török, Elemér (Elmer) (Lelesz, now Leles, Slovakia, 14 November 1930 - Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 30 May 2006) – Poet, journalist and teacher. In 1953 he completed his secondary education at the Pedagogical High School of Pozsony, and from 1954 to 1956, he attended for six-and-a-half years the Teachers College of Pozsony. From 1956 to 1961 he was a journalist for the paper, New Youth (Új Ifjúság). From 1961 to 1963 he worked as an instructor for the Agricultural School of Lelesz. In 1963 and 1964 he was a laborer in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). From 1964 to 1977 he was a teacher and headmaster at Abara (now Oborin, Slovakia). From 1977 until his retirement he was a journalist and editor for the paper, New Word (Új Szó) in Pozsony. His poems, narratives, reports and literary and cultural articles appeared in numerous papers and magazines, e.g. New Youth (Új Ifjúság) from 1952; the Working Woman (Dolgozó nő) from 1957, and the Literary Review (Irodalmi Szemle) from 1958. His works include I am Suing for Light (Fényért perelek) poems (1968); Flowering Stones (Virágzó kövek) poems (1973); Rotating Seasons (Forgó évszakok) poems (1989); Shadows and Lights (Árnyak és fények) selection of poems (1990); Flower and Song Are My Message (Virágot és dalt üzenek) poems (2000), and On the White Snow of My Years (Éveim fehér haván), poems (2003). He was awarded the Posonium Literary Prize (2005). – B: 1083, 1890, T: 7456.

Török, Erzsébet (Elisabeth) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 15 November 1912 - Budapest, 1 December 1973) – Folksong singer. Following completion of her training as an actress at the School of the National Actors' Association, she performed dramatic roles at the National Theater of Pozsony for a short period. She studied voice with Hugó Kelen, who emphasized Bartók's and Kodály's compositions, as well as traditional folk songs. The renowned singer, Mária Basilides influenced her. Already in the 1930s, she was recognized for her interpretations of folk songs laced with her characteristic language. She was particularly successful with folk ballads. She performed on the Independent Stage and, from 1941 she was regularly heard on Hungarian Radio programs. From 1950 she was a soloist with the National Philharmonic Orchestra. At the Poetry and Song Theater (later the Literary Stage, Irodalmi Színpad) in a folk song evening, she performed together with Adrienne Jancsó. She traveled across the country to promote the cultural heritage of traditional folk songs. She was a member of the Board of Judges for the television folk song contest Fly Peacock (Röpülj Páva). At the end of her career, she turned to religious folk poetry. Her last performance was in October of 1972, when she sang Kodály compositions at the Academy of Music of Budapest. She was a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1954), and the Merited Artist title (1968). – B: 0883, T: 7667. → Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán; Basilides, Mária; Jancsó, Adrien.

Török, Ferenc (1) (Francis) (Csillaghegy, 3 August 1935 - ) – Pentathlonist, trainer, sports leader, lawyer and politician. He graduated from the Árpád High School (Árpád Gimnázium) of Újpest, where he occupied himself with athletics. In 1957 he obtained a Law Degree from the Law School of the University of Budapest. Thereafter, he was a draftsman at the II. District Court. From 1959, he was Presidential Secretary at the XI. District Court. From 1962, he practised as a lawyer. From 1992, he ran his own law firm. In 1966, he obtained a professional trainer's diploma at the Academy of Physical Education (Testnevelési Főiskola), Budapest. Between 1953 and 1970, he was a pentathlonist at the Budapest Honvéd Club (Hungarian Army Club). In 1959-1960 and 1964 he was the individual Hungarian pentathlon champion. From 1956 to 1968 he was member of the select team. At the World Championships in Moscow in 1961, he and his team received a silver medal. In 1962 in Mexico, they again received a silver medal; in the individual event, he received a bronze medal. In 1963 he was a World team champion in Maglingen, Germany, and third as an individual. He was an individual champion at the 1964 Tokyo Summer Olympic Games. He and his team were team champions in 1965 in Leipzig, in 1966 in Melbourne, and in 1967 in Jönköping. At the 1968 Mexican Summer Olympic Games, he and his team were team champions. During 1976-1989, and between 1991 and 1992 he was team world champion. From 1990 to 1996 he was President of the Society of Hungarian Pentathlons (Magyar Öttusa Szövetség); from 1993 to 1996 he was Vice-President of the International Society of Pentathlons (Nemzetközi Öttusa Szövetség). He is Vice-President of the Gerevich Public Endowment (Gerevich Közalapítvány). – B: 2111, T: 7684.→Gerevich, Aladár.

Török, Ferenc (2) (Révkomárom, now Komárno, Slovakia, 23 September 1958 - ) – Violinist. He completed his primary and secondary education with Hungarian as the language of instruction at Komárom (1965-1974). From 1974 to 1980, he studied violin at the Conservatory of Music, Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), then, between 1980 and 1984, he completed the course at the Academy of Music and Drama of Pozsony. From 1975, he was second violinist in the Mucha String Quartet (from 1991 renamed the Moyzes String Quartet). In 1984 they won the scholarship of the Slovakian Music Foundation; from 1986 they worked with the Slovak Philharmonic. He is a member of the Slovak Music Union. They cooperated with Usi Wiesel, Rudolf Nel, as well as with the Dutch Gaudeamus, the German Melos, Amadeus and Janáček String Quartets. From 1975, he played in concerts in Slovakia, as well as in the Soviet Union, Germany (East and West), in Budapest, Austria, Italy, Switzerland, France, and numerous other countries. He also had radio presentations in Pozsony and Frankfurt. His CD-recordings include Dvořák's F-Major and A-Major String Quartets, Mozart's B-Major and C-Major String Quartets, and Smetana's E-minor and D-minor String Quartets. With the String Quartet he participated in the "Beethovenov Hradec" chamber music competition (1977), winning 3rd Prize and, in 1981, he was awarded First Prize in the Slovakian performance competition in Besztercebánya (now Banská-Bystrica, Slovakia), and he won another First Prize in Evian, France, for the performance of a contemporary work. – B: 1083, T: 7456.

Török, Ignác (Ignatius) (Gödöllő, 23 June 1795 - Arad, 6 October 1849) – Honvéd army officer. He was one of the thirteen martyred generals of Arad, executed on 6 October 1849. He completed the Military Engineering College of Vienna. For a short time he served in the Royal Hungarian Guards. At the time of the outbreak of the 1848-1849 Revolution and War of Independence, he was a Major, and Director of the fortification of Károlyváros (now Karlovac, Karlstadt, southwest of Zagreb). A few months later, he was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel, directing the fortification work of Komárom. From 29 January 1849, he became a General and Commander of the Fortress of Komárom until 10 March. During June 1849, he led the demolition work of Hentzi's fortification around Buda; and in July, he carried out the fortification of Szeged. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Arad, Martyrs of.

Török, János (John) (Bágy, now Bădeni, Romania, 11 June 1806 - Marosvásárhely, now Târgu Mureș, Romania, 10 March 1854) – Teacher and a martyr of the struggle for independence in 1848-1849. He was a teacher at the Reformed College in Marosvásárhely. In the summer of 1848, as a Captain, he participated in the military training of the Szekler (Transylvanian Hungarian) youth. In November 1848, the Austrians captured him and took him to Nagyszeben (now Sibiu, Romania). In March 1849, the soldiers of General Bem's army set him free. The Szemere Administration appointed him to the directorship of the College in Marosvásárhely. In 1850, Török resigned from his post and, in October, he was even prohibited from teaching. In 1851 he was again given a teaching position. By that time, however, he was already a member of the Makk conspiracy. Mátyás (Matthew) Rózsafi, a representative of Kossuth and Makk, appointed him to be the chief organizer of the military and of civilians. In 1852, together with Károly (Charles) Horváth and Mihály (Michael) Gálfi, he was captured and, in 1853, all three were condemned to death. In the interest of further investigation, the order was enforced as late as 10 March 1854. In 1874, a memorial column was built on the spot of the execution. As a teacher, he wrote numerous schoolbooks and other works. His main work was Roman Archeology (Római régiségtan) (1840). – B: 0883, 1122, T: 7684. → Makk-Gál Conspiracy; Szeklers; Kossuth, Lajos; Bem, József.

Török, József (Joseph) (Makó, 30 August 1946 - ) – Priest, theologian, church historian, and literary translator. He graduated from the high school of Makó in 1946, later he studied Theology at the Central Roman Catholic Seminary and at the Roman Catholic Theological Academy, Budapest. He was ordained in Székesfehérvár in 1975, earned a Doctoral Degree in Theology in 1976, and was a member of the research group of Fragmenta Codicum of the Hungarian Academy of Science. From 1975 to 1978, he was Chaplain in Csepel. He was on scholarship at the Institute Catholique and the University of Paris (Sorbonne) (1978-1980), where he earned his Doctorat de Theologie in 1980. Since 1980 he has been Professor of Medieval and New Age Church History at the Roman Catholic Theological Academy, Budapest, where he was also Dean and Deputy-Dean. He has been a church-history secretary of the Bishops' Council since 1980; editor of the international theological periodical Communio; a member of the Scientific Qualification Committee of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; Professor at the Church Music Department of the Franz Liszt Academy of Music; Professor of the Theological Institute of Szabadka-Újvidék, Serbia; a lecturer of the St. István (Stephen) Society (Szent István Társulat), and that of the Ecclesia Publishers, Budapest. Joseph Török is editor of the journal Teologia, Ecclesia Sancta monographs, and Lexicon of the Canonized Saints (Szentek Lexicon); a member of the editorial board of the Hungarian Catholic Lexicon (Magyar Katolikus Lexikon), and is on the staff of the Hungarian Radio and Danube Television; author of some 25 books, including Adoremus, textbook for secondary schools (1977); Church History of the Early Middle Ages (A korai középkor egyháztörténete) (1984); The Singing Church (Az éneklő egyház) (1985); Religious and Knightly Orders in Hungary (Szerzetes és lovagrendek Magyarországon) (1990); Saints of the Land of Hungary (A magyar föld szentjei) (2nd edition, 1991); Catholic Churches in Hungary (Magyarországi katolikus templomok) (1991), and The Catholic Church in the Centuries of Hungarian Culture (Katolikus Egyház a magyar művelődés századaiban) (1994). Some 120 studies and essays appeared in Hungarian, and a good number in French, Italian, Spanish, German and English. He has translated works from André Frossard, Paul Poupard and Jean Guitton. He is recipient of the First Prize of the Hungarian Radio (1994). – B: 7643, T: 7103.

Török, Lajos (Louis) (Pest, 3 September 1863 - Budapest, 25 January 1945) – Physician. He earned his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1887; worked as a demonstrator in the Department of Pathological Anatomy in Budapest from 1886 to 1896. He was a research student at the Institute of Pathological Anatomy of the University of Hamburg during 1887-1888. He became an honorary lecturer in dermatology and an associate in the Outpatients' Department of the Medical School in Budapest in 1895. He became a senior physician in 1898 and Associate Professor in 1908. He dealt with the pathological anatomical study of skin diseases, the pathomechanism of allergic skin processes, and dermatological histology. He was an internationally recognized expert in his field, who developed a school in dermatology. His works included Allgemeine Diagnostik der Hautkrankheiten (1895); Handbook of Dermato-pathology (A bőrkórtan kézikönyve) (1898), and Spezielle Diagnostik der Hautkrankheiten (1906). – B: 1730, 0882, T: 7456.

Török, Pál (Paul) (Alsóvárad, now Dolni Varad in Slovakia, in County Bars, 29 June 1808 - Budapest, 7 October 1883) – Bishop of the Reformed Church, church organizer and writer. His higher studies were completed at the Reformed Theological Academy of Debrecen. In 1832, he became Rector in Kisújszállás; in 1839, he was elected minister for the Reformed Congregation in Pest. In 1851 he was Archdean, and in 1860 Bishop of the Danubian Reformed Church District. During the 1840s he was one of the leading figures in the movement initiated for the union of the Reformed and Lutheran Churches. In 1842, together with József (Joseph) Székács, the Lutheran bishop-to-be, he launched the Protestant Church and School Paper, representing the case of the union. He founded the Reformed Theological Academy of Pest in 1855, as well as the Senior Reformed High School. He was a distinguished preacher. His main works were Descriptions of the Contemporary Life of the Danubian Calvinistic Church District (Korrajzok a dunamelléki helvét hitvallású egyházkerület életéről) (1858), and The Merits of Count István Széchenyi (Gróf Széchenyi István érdemei) (1860). – B: 1160, 0883, T: 7456. → Székács, József.

Török, Sándor (Alexander) (Homoróddaróc, now Drauşeni, Romania, 25 February 1904 - Budapest, 30 April 1985) – Writer. He had to abandon his high school studies and sustain himself from a variety of physical jobs. At the Renner Leather Works, he completed a course in manufacturing driving belts; in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), he was a chorister for a while, as well as an actor in the Hungarian Theater. From 1923, he was a correspondent for the paper Opposition (Ellenzék), from 1924 for the News (Újság) and, from 1925, for the Temesvár Courier (Temesvári Hírlap). From 1929 he was Editor for the Szeged Diary (Szegedi Napló); from 1931 he lived in Budapest and was a correspondent for the Hungarians (Magyarság) and News (Újság). From 1945 to 1948, he edited the series Festive Letters (Ünnepi levelek) for the Radio, featuring the leading scientists and artists of the world, until the series was banned. From 1951 he was Editor of the Textbook Publisher (Tankönyvkiadó), and between 1959 and 1966 was Editor for the paper Family and School (Család és Iskola). In 1938 he was elected a member of the Petőfi Society and he was decorated with the Golden Pen in 1984. His works include Somebody is Knocking (Valaki kopog) novel (1937); Your Life is a Veritable Novel (Életed kész regény) novel (1946); The Smallest God (A legkisebb isten) novel (1966), and God's Smile (Az Isten mosolya), essays (1984). His youth novels include Gilikoti (1945) and Three Miracles of Csilicsala (Csilicsala három csodája) (1956). He received the Baumgarten Prize in 1933, and the Attila József Prize in 1974. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Török, Sophie (née Ilona Tanner) (Budapest, 10 December 1895 - Budapest, 28 January 1955) – Poetess and writer. Her schooling was in Budapest; where she became a staff member in the Metropolitan Library. She was married to the eminent writer and poet Mihály (Michael) Babits. In her poems, the brooding, struggling woman's soul speaks; in her prose she is engaged in characteristically feminine themes. Her works include Woman in the Armchair (Asszony a karosszékekben) poems (1929); You Were Born for Joy (Örömrre születél) poems (1934); Assistant Professor Hintz (Hintz tanársegéd úr) novel (1935), and For Me and in Place of You (Értem és helyetted), poems (1940). She earned the Baumgarten Prize. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Babits, Mihály.

Toronyi, Etelka (Ethel) (Budapest, 28 August 1921 - ) – Educator, inventor, historian. She received her teacher's qualifications from the University of Budapest in 1944 and, in the same year, her Ph.D. from the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). In 1945, fleeing from the advancing Soviet Army, she settled in Innsbruck, Austria, where she took part in the establishment of the St. Stephen Hungarian School, becoming engaged there as a teacher. Concurrently she studied Medicine at the University of Innsbruck. She emigrated to Argentina in 1949, and settled in Buenos Aires. First, she worked as an accountant, and later (in 1951) she established a plastic factory in Villa Ballester. In 1954, she married Prince Louis Hohenlohe zu Langenburg and, in 1964, she was invited as a lecturer to the Sumerian Faculty of the El Salvador Catholic University in Buenos Aires. In 1974, she published her controversial first book: The Carpathian Basin as the Cradle of Civilization, and the Original Home of the Magyars (A Kárpáti medence a kultúrák bölcsője és a magyarok őshazája). Also in 1974, she introduced her invention Toronyi energy to a gathering of 40 specialists. – B: 1020, 1031, T: 7456. → Sumerians; Sumerian – Hungarian Relations.

Toró, Tibor (1) (Énlaka, now Inlăceni County Hargita, Transylvania, Romania, 1931 – Temesvár, now Timișoara, Romania, 17 October 2010) – Nuclear physicist. His secondary education was at the Reformed College of Székelyudvarhely (now Odorheiu Secuiesc, Romania). His higher studies were at the Mathematic and Physic Department of the University of Temesvár, graduating in 1953. He was working at the same University first as assistant, then adjunct professor, and until his retirement Professor of Theoretic Physic. His research field encompassed particle-research, astrophysics, and philosophy of science. He was a renowned Bolyai researcher. He wrote the first Hungarian-Romanian neutrino monograph. He published his scientific books in Hungarian, Romanian and English, as well as popular education booklets and pamphlets. He was regularly invited to international atom-physic conferences and science-philosophy discussions. He was Board-member of the Sapientia Foundation and an honorary president of the Bolyai Summer Academy. From 2007, he was Titular Professor of the University of Szeged. He was external member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; member of the Committee of Astronomy of the Romanian Academy of Sciences; honorary member of the Loránd Eötvös Society of Physicians. – B: 1817, 1031, T: 7103.→Bolyai, Farkas.

Toró, Tibor (2) (Temesvár, now Timișoara, Romania, 11 September 1957 - ) – Research physicist, politician. He studied at the University of Temesvár, majored in Physics, and graduated in 1982. Between 1972 and 1976 he was Editor of the student magazine Juventus; from 1977 to 1981 he was a member of the University Theater; 1983 to 1985, was leader of a High School Drama Society; in 1981 and 1982, he received a specialization in solid-physics research at the University of Temesvár; during 1981 to 1986, he was a teacher in Physics in the Béla Bartók Lyceum. Since 1986, he has been a research physicist in the Radiation-Protection Laboratory of the Public Health Institute. Toró is author of a number of science-popularizing articles. From 1990 to 1993 he was a member of the Presidium of the Romanian Hungarian Democratic Society (Romániai Magyar Demokratikus Szövetség – RMDSZ). From 1993 to 2003 he was President of the Reform Fraction, and also President of the National Liberal Platform. He is a Member of the Electorate of the Hungarian World Federation (Magyarok Világszövetsége – MVSZ), Budapest and, since 1994 he has been Vice-President of its Transylvanian Sub-Committee. Since 2003 he has been one of the leaders of the Szekler National Council (Székely Nemzeti Tanács – SZNT), which fights for the Autonomous Szekler Region in Transylvania, in Romania. In 2012 he became the President of the People Party of Transylvania (Erdélyi Magyar Néppárt – EMNP). – B: 1036, T: 7456.

Tőry, Emil (Pest, 17 April 1863 - Budapest, 31 May 1928) – Architect. He obtained his Degree in Architecture from the Budapest Polytechnic in 1887, and furthered his education at the universities of Berlin and Paris. On returning to Hungary, he opened a bureau of architecture. From 1897, he was an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) at the Budapest Polytechnic and, from 1906, its Associate Professor. From 1908, in association with Móric (Maurice) Pogány, and with Dénes (Denis) Györgyi (1911); he also planned several large-scale buildings, such as the Hungarian House at the 1911 World Fair of Turin, and he planned the former center of Adria Insurance (Elizabeth Plaza 9-10) in 1912-1918, which was one of the first creations of modern Hungarian architecture emerging from eclectics. With the combined plan of Tőry and Györgyi they won the competition of the National Theater. His technical literary works are also considerable. They include History of Greek Architecture in Antiquity (A görög építőművészet története az Ókorban) (1904), and Michelangelo's Ceiling Frescoes in the Sistine Chapel of Rome (Michelangelo mennyezetképe a római Sixtus kápolnában) (1912). He won numerous prizes in competitions in Hungary and abroad. – B: 0883, 1883, T: 7456.

Törzs, Jenő (Eugene) (Budapest, 23 April 1887 - Budapest, 1 February 1946) – Actor. In 1906 he completed the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. For a year he appeared on the stage of the Thalia Society. It was László (Ladislav) Beöthy, who had him engaged by the Magyar Theater (Magyar Színház) in 1907. In 1923, he was engaged by the Renaissance Theater (Renaissance Színház), and in 1924, he became member of the Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház), Budapest. In 1925, he played in the Comedy Theater (Vígyszínház), and the following year he became re-engaged by the Magyar Theater. From 1928 to 1931 he played at the Comedy Theater, and 1932-1941, he was again a member of the Magyar Theater. Because of his severely damaged health condition during the siege of Budapest early in 1945, he could appear only in one role. He was an excellent realistic actor, who also appeared in dramatic roles and social and musical comedies, vaudevilles and operettas. He was the author of a play and a novel, and translator of several plays. His wife was the actress Rózsi Fornti. His 250 roles included Shakespeare's Hamlet, Goethe's Faust, Ibsen's Peer Gynt, Nora; Galsworthy's Escape (Úriemberek), and F. Molnár's Play is the Thing (Játék a kastélyban). From 1914 he also played 27 feature film roles including Yellow Rose (Sárga Rózsa) (1914); Oliver Twist (1919); Nameless Castle (Névtelen vár) (1920); Train of Ghosts (Kísértetek vonata) (1933); The Clever Mom (Az okos mama) (1935), and Black Diamonds (Fekete gyémántok) (1938). – B: 0883, 1427, 1031, T: 7456.

Tot, Amerigo (Tóth, Imre) (Fehérvárcsurgó, 27 September 1909 - Rome, 13 December 1984) – Sculptor. He attended High School and the Creative Arts School in Budapest. He lived briefly in Germany, later moved to Italy, where he lived and created for more than half a century. His early works were characterized by bas-reliefs of Biblical themes and so-called situation sculptures. Quarreling (Veszekedés) (1946) and Gossip (Pletyka) (1946) represent Baroque animation with a rich sense of form. His later works, such as The Ear of the Ground (A föld füle) (1962) demonstrate a monumental, non-figurative style. Tot became the center of nationwide interest after he moved back to Hungary in 1969. He created the beautiful bronze statue Madonna of Csurgó (Csurgói Madonna) for the village of his birth. He was appointed to a teaching position at the Creative Arts College; later a peculiar aura developed around him. Meanwhile a Museum, dedicated solely to him, was opened in Pécs in 1978 and, at the same time, several of his sculptures for plazas were also erected, the first one His Majesty, the Kilowatt (Őfelsége, a kilowatt). His other famous works include The Frieze of the Termini Railway Station of Rome (1949-1953), Ceramic reliefs of the Palazzo dello Sport, Rome (1960), J. F. Kennedy Memorial, New York (1966), the Eye of the Earth bronze-iron plastic art at the University of Debrecen (1969), and Apotheosis of the Seed (A mag apothézise) relief in the aula of the University of Szent István, (St. Stephen), Gödöllő, which is a kind of summary of his art. – B: 0881, 0883, 1020, 1153, T: 7675.

Tótfalusi Kis, Miklós→Misztótfalusi Kis, Miklós.

Tóth, Aladár (Székesfehérvár, 4 February 1898 - Budapest, 18 October 1968) – Music theorist, music esthete and Director of the Opera. He obtained a PhD in Philosophy in 1925. From 1920 he wrote critiques for the paper New Generation (Új nemzedék); he worked for the periodical, Music Review until 1929, then he was music critic for the papers, West (Nyugat) and the Pest Diary (Pesti Napló) from 1932 until 1939. He placed emphasis on promoting primarily Béla Bartók and Zoltán Kodály, but also others like Lajos (Louis) Bárdos and Zoltán Vásárhelyi, representing the younger generation of musicians. He edited the Music Lexicon (Zenei Lexikon) with Bence (Benedict) Szabolcsi (1931-1932, 1935). In 1940, he moved to Sweden, returning home in 1946, when he was appointed director of the Budapest Opera. In that position, he hired many young talents and created a flourishing Mozart-culture. He hired the famous German conductor Otto Klemperer. From 1951 until 1956, he found himself in opposition to the political direction of the Opera House because of omissions of the operas of Wagner, and Bartók's Miraculous Mandarin (A csodálatos mandarin), and retired in 1956. His main works include Mozart's Figaro (Mozart Figarója) (1928); Zoltán Kodály (1934); Ferenc Liszt On The Path of Hungarian Music (Liszt Ferenc a magyar zene útján) (1940); Verdi's Musical Confession (Verdi művészi hitvallása) (1941); Mozart (1941), and Aladár Tóth's Music Critiques (Tóth Aladár zenei kritikái). He was a recipient of the Baumgarten Prize (1930, 1940), and the Kossuth Prize (1952). A Music School in Budapest bears his name. – B: 0883, 1122, T: 7667.→Liszt, Ferenc; Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán; Bárdos, Lajos; Vásárhelyi, Zoltán; Szabolcsi, Bence.

Tóth, Antal, O.S.B. (Antony) (Veremund) (Szakony, 3 July 1922 - São Paulo, Brazil, 6 June 2005) – Benedictine monk and literary historian. He joined the Benedictine Order in August 1942; professed himself in the Order in May 1944, and was ordained a priest in July 1948. The Order sent him to Brazil in the summer of 1951. He taught Latin, French and religion in the Saint Emeric College of São Paulo. From 1963 he was a counselor in educational and vocational guidance. He was also a scoutmaster and was the leading teacher at the Hungarian School on Saturdays. The St Gellért Monastery elected him Prior in 1968. From 1952 to 1955, he was a literary critic for the South American Hungarian News (Délamerkai Magyar Hírlap). Between 1970 and 1973, he was Dean and also Vice Chancellor of the Kálmán Könyves Free University, and from 1990, again Vice Chancellor. He was a parish priest, district deacon, teacher in a Seminary, novice master, teacher in the Training College for Teachers of Religion, later its Director. His writings appeared in the papers South American Hungarian News (Délamerkai Magyar Hírlap); Hungarians of South America (Délamerkai Magyarország); the Hungarian News (Magyar Hírlap) of Buenos Aires; the Catholic Review (Katolikus Szemle); Catholic Hungarian Sunday (Katolikus Magyarok Vasárnapja), and Carpathian (Kárpát). His other works include History of Hungarian Literature (A magyar irodalom története), textbook (1960); Outlines of Hungarian History (Vázlatos magyar történelem) (1971), and Caminhos de pastoral vocacional, textbook (1983). – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Tóth, Árpád (Arad, now in Romania, 14 April 1886 - Budapest 7 November 1928) - Poet, journalist and translator of literary works. His father, the sculptor András Tóth, moved to Debrecen with his family in 1889, where he attended a Vocational Secondary School from 1896 to 1904. His higher studies were in Arts and Education (Hungarian-French) courses at the University of Budapest from 1905 to 1909, which he left incomplete. From 1908, he was a correspondent for the literary paper West (Nyugat), but because of his insufficient earnings he moved back to Debrecen. There he became a drama-critic for the paper Independent News (Független Újság) in 1909. In 1911, he worked for the paper, Debrecen Great News (Debreceni Nagy Újság). In 1913, he settled in Budapest and supported himself by coaching as a private tutor. His lung illness forced him to visit health-resorts in the Tatra Mountain during 1915 and 1916. By then he was the Assistant Editor for the newly established journal of Lajos (Louis) Hatvany, the Year (Eszkendő). In 1918 he was a secretary for the Vörösmarty Academy, newly founded by progressive writers. He greeted the dictatorship of the proletariat (the Soviet Council Republic, March to August 1919), with the ode The Lord God (Az Úr Isten). After the fall of the Council Republic, for a long time, Tóth had to live under difficult circumstances; he even considered suicide. In the fall of 1921, he became an associate of the paper The Evening (Az Est), for which he wrote colorful news and political glosses. His critiques and literary works also appeared there. Toward the late 1920s, his illness became increasingly worse; he had to spend periods of time at Újtátrafüred, and he died prematurely (at 42). In the Farkasrét Cemetery the great poet Mihály (Michael) Babits delivered a funeral oration at his grave. Tóth was an outstanding figure of the literary generation of the West (Nyugat), and his lyric poetry is characterized by a prodigious cultivation of form and sorrowful resignation. He was one of the greatest translators of the literary works of John Milton, Charles Baudelaire, Percy B. Shelley, John Keats, and poems of Oscar Wilde, Gustave Flaubert, Guy de Maupassant, and the prose of Anton Chekhov. His works include Serenade at Dawn (Hajnali szerenád) poems (1913); Eternal Flowers (Örök virágok) translations (1923); From Soul to Soul (Lélektől lélekig) (1928), and Complete Poems of Árpád Tóth (Tóth Árpád összes versei), edited by Lőrinc Szabó (1934). – B: 0883, 1068, 1257, T: 7456. → Hatvany, Lajos; Babits, Mihály; Szabó, Lőrinc.

Tóth, Baron Ferenc (Francis) (? 17 August 1733 - Tarcsa, 23 September 1793) – Soldier, engineer and diplomat. First, he served with the Bercsényi Hussars. In 1754 he was appointed secretary at the French Embassy in Istanbul. In 1767 he was the French Envoy to the Tartars of Crimea. In 1770, the Sultan charged him with organizing the Turkish Artillery and the Engineering Corps, as well as with reinforcing the Dardanelles. He founded a gun-casting workshop in Istanbul. He suggested cutting through the Suez isthmus to create a water link between the Mediterranean Sea and the Red Sea. In 1776 he returned to France and became Superintendent of the commercial harbors of Levante and Berberia. In 1781 he was made a Marshal. In 1785 he became Castellan of Douai. He escaped to Switzerland before the French Revolution. In the spring of 1793 he returned to Hungary with an amnesty. His main work is: Mémoires du Baron de Tott sur les Turcs et les Tartares, vols. i-iv (Amsterdam, 1784); it reached five editions within five years. – B: 0773, T: 7103. → Dardanelles.

Tóth, Ede (Edward) (Putnok, 14 October 1844 - Budapest, 26 February 1876) – Folk-play writer. He worked as a shop assistant and later became a strolling player under the name of Lantos. His needy way of life affected his constitution and he was already unwell when he won a prize with his play The Rouge of the Village (A falu rossza) in 1874: when it reached the stage in 1875, it scored a great success and gave momentum to the folk-play literature. He was member of the Kisfaludy Society from 1876. His folk-plays rise above the average ones by his poetic language and his portraying of some walking-on figures bereft of reality. His works, apart from the above, include Schneider Fáni (1872); The Organ-grinder Family (Kintornás család) (1876); The Vagrant (A tolonc) (1878), and The Works of Ede Tóth, vols. i-iii (Tóth Ede művei, I-III (1894). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Tóth, Endre (Andrew) (Hajdúszoboszló, 7 December 1899 - Debrecen, 15 November 1970) – Minister of the Reformed Church, historian and writer. His education started in his birthplace and continued in Pápa, where he completed his theological studies in 1921. For two years, he studied at the University of Utrecht, Holland, and later earned a Ph.D. at Debrecen in 1927. He was Professor of Church History at the Reformed Theological Academy of Pápa (1924-1947), University Professor at Debrecen, (1947-1950), then Professor at the Reformed Theological Academy of Debrecen (1950-1970). His area of research concentrated on church history. A selection from his works includes The History of the Reformed Church in Pápa, vol. i, (A pápai református egyház története, I) (1927); The Life of Márton István Mándi (Mándi Márton István élete) (1931); Pápa in the Kuruc World (Pápa a kuruc világban) (1936); Archives of the Transdanubian Church District (A dunántúli református egyházkerület levéltára) (1939), and History of the Hungarian Reformed Church (A magyar református egyház története), co-author 1949. – B: 0932, T: 7103.

Tóth, Ilona (Helen) (Árpádföld, 23 October 1932 - Budapest, 26 June 1957) – Medical student. After completing her secondary education at a girls' high school, she began her higher studies at the Medical School of the University of Budapest. On 23 October 1956, in the first days of the Revolution, she reported for service, working at first as an ambulance doctor. Then she transported medicine and dressing-material from Austria to Budapest. She was repeatedly offered refuge in the West, but she thought that in those times every helping hand was needed in Hungary. In the last days of October of 1956, she worked at the Hospital in Sándor Péterfy Street as an almost fully-fledged physician. When this hospital could not take any more wounded, she was entrusted with heading the Emergency Hospital of Domonkos Street. Here, with a few medical associates, she carried out medical work, turning night into day and making no distinction between freedom fighters and Soviet soldiers requiring medical attention. After 4 November 1956, Ilona Tóth continued to work in the Emergency Hospital and, at the same time, she assisted journalists who suddenly found themselves in an illegal situation. Their editorial office and the duplicating machine were placed in the cellar of the Hospital, but the Communist authorities discovered it and, as a result, she and her associates were arrested on 19 November 1956, on charges of homicide and subversion. At the lower court of Budapest she was sentenced to death on 8 April 1957. An appeal court endorsed her death sentence on 20 June 1957 and, along with her, József (Joseph) Gáli, Ferenc (Francis) Gönczi, Miklós (Nicholas) Gyöngyösi, Ferenc (Francis) Kovács and Gyula (Julius) Obersovszky were also sentenced to death. The next day, the court formed itself into a court of grace, which upheld the death sentence for four of the prisoners and converted the sentences of József (Joseph) Gáli and Gyula (Julius) Obersovszky to life imprisonment. Meeting with their relatives was not allowed. The hangings were all carried out in the Transit Prison, Budapest, but not at the same time. They were buried in unmarked graves. In 1989, Ilona Tóth's gravesite was discovered in the allotment 301 of the Rákoskeresztúr Cemetery, Budapest; it was put in order and, on 28 June 1989, with church rites and a funeral, she was given the last tribute of respect. In 1989, she was rehabilitated with other victims of 1956. There is an Ilona Tóth Foundation and a Memorial Prize, and her bronze bust can be seen in front of the Medical Department of the University of Budapest. – B: 1020, 1031, T: 7456.

Tóth, István (Stephen) (Szatmárnémeti, now Satu Mare, Romania, 12 December 1865 - Budapest, 25 November 1935) – Physician, obstetrician and gynecologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1889. From 1889 to 1909, he was an assistant to Vilmos (William) Tauffer; thereafter, an assistant lecturer in the No. 1. Obstetric Clinic; in 1899, he was an honorary lecturer; in 1908 a titular associate professor. From 1910 to 1918, he worked as a senior physician in the Rókus Hospital in Budapest. From 1918 he was Acting Head of the Obstetric Clinic; from 1920 Professor and Director of the clinic. He was Editor for the journal Gynaecologia, and President of the Medical Association of Budapest. He dealt with obstetric surgery and created an important school in the field. His main work was Handbook of Gynecology (A nőgyógyászat kézikönyve) (1916). – B: 1730, 0883, T: 7456.

Tóth, János (John) (Debrecen, 16 January 1923 - Strasbourg, 2 July 1984) – Lawyer and cultural organizer. He obtained his Ph.D. in Law from the University of Debrecen, and afterwards taught at the Reformed Academy of Law in Kecskemét. After its dissolution, he became an Assistant Professor of International Law at the University of Budapest. Due to political developments, he had to leave the University, so he worked as a translator. After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, in the spring of 1957, he fled to the West through Yugoslavia, and in August he settled in Geneva. Until his death he worked as an assistant professor in the International Law and Human Rights Department of the University of Geneva and, for a number of years, he was a correspondent of the Human Rights Committee of the UN. From 1972, he worked at the Administrative Court of Canton Geneva. He took an active part in the work of the Swiss and European Hungarian Reformed Church and also in the foundation of the European Protestant Hungarian Free University, becoming its first President, later one of its Leaders. His writings mainly appeared in the journals New Horizon (Új Látóhatár) and the Catholic Review (Katolikus Szemle). His works include Comparative Law in Eastern Europe (1965). – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Tóth, József (Joseph) (Békés, 22 June 1933 - ) – Hydrogeologist and geophysicist. He studied at the School of Mining and Geodesy of Sopron, and obtained a M.Sc. in Geophysics and Ph.D. in Hydrogeology from the State University of Utrecht, the Netherlands. He introduced and taught Hydrogeology at the University of Alberta (1964-1968, 1980-1996), and the University of Calgary, Canada (1978-1980), and was a visiting professor at the Université de Neuchâtel, Switzerland (1980), and the University of Budapest (1996-1997).

He worked as a researcher and consultant, lectured at conferences and universities in more than twenty different countries on five continents; formulated and directed the hydrogeological mapping program for the Province of Alberta, Canada, and was guest editor of the journal Hydrogeology. His research areas include the theoretical and applied aspects, and the natural manifestations of regional groundwater flow. He has presented his work in over eighty scientific publications. His concepts and ideas have been applied to problems of water resources, groundwater mapping, radioactive waste disposal, soil salinization, slope stability, hydrology of lakes, and the genesis of strata-bound ore deposits, and have contributed considerably to the birth and development of the new discipline of "Petroleum Hydrogeology". József Tóth was the first recipient of the Geological Society of America's O.E. Meinzer Award for Distinguished Contribution to Hydrogeology (1965), and received the International Association of Hydrogeologists' President's Award (1999), presented annually to a senior hydrogeologist, who "...has made outstanding contributions to the advancement of hydrogeology". – B: 7674, T: 7103.

Tóth, Kálmán (Coloman) (Baja, 30 March 1831 - Budapest, 3 February 1881) – Poet and writer. After completing his secondary school education, he followed the wishes of his parents and entered the Benedictine Monastic Order. However, in 1846 he left the Order and joined the military. He took part in the 1848-1849 Revolution and War of Independence as a Lieutenant. After its defeat, he was in hiding for a while. From 1851 on, he lived in Pest and was an Associate Editor, and from 1856 Editor-in-Chief for the journal Ladies' Courier (Hölgyfutár). Between 1856 and 1861, he was Editor for the satirical paper Crazy Miska (Bolond Miska), where he sharply criticized the despotic Habsburg rule. The authorities closed down the paper for a while and jailed its editor. In 1861, he became a Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. From 1864 until his death, he edited the literary daily journal The Capital's Newsletters (Fővárosi Lapok). Between 1865 and 1879, Tóth also served as Member of Parliament. Tóth was one of the most popular poets of the 1850s and 1860s. With his plaintive lyric poetry, he belonged to the most talented followers of the late Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi during the years of Habsburg oppression. His patriotic poems Forward (Előre), and Who Were the National Guards? (Kik voltak a honvédek?), inspired by the experiences of the Revolution, were popular. Of his later poems, some turned into virtual folk-ballads, e.g. First I Saw You in the Cemetery (Temetőben láttalak meg); The Road is Covered with Snow (Befűtta az utat a hó), and The Forest is Overcast (Felleg borult az erdőre). His historical and social dramas were successfully produced in the National Theater. – B: 0883, T: 7617.→Freedom Fight of 1848-1849; Petőfi, Sándor.

Tóth, Károly (Charles) (Győrszemere, 3 April, 1930 - ) – Prelate of the Reformed Church, theologian, church politician. He completed his high school studies in Pápa and studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy of Pápa (1950-1952); after its closure he continued his theological studies at the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest (1952-1955), where he received a Ph.D. in Theology. 1956 to 1957 he worked at the Foreign Relations Department of the Reformed Convent, Budapest. He was on a scholarship in Montpellier, France in 1958, and he became leader of the Foreign Relations Department of the Reformed Convent and its Press Department. From 1958 to 1967 he was a member of the International Secretariat of the Prague-based Christian Peace Conference (Keresztyén Békekonferencia), and its Deputy Secretary General from 1967 to 1971; its General Secretary from 1971 to 1978, and finally its President 1978-1991. He served as Parish Minister in the Calvin Square Church, Budapest (1978-1990), and concurrently became Bishop of the Danubian Reformed Church District (Dunamelléki Református Egyházkerület) (1978-1990). He modernized and extended the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest, and organized the Ráday College. He was the President of the General Synod of the Reformed Church in Hungary for years and was a Member of Parliament. He held high-ranking offices in the World Council of Churches and the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, Geneva. After 1990, he was the leader of the Inter-Denominational Research Institute in Budapest. He is a prolific writer. He not only published theological books, such as the Roots and Perspectives (Gyökerek és távlatok) (1985), but several hundred studies, essays, sermons and articles in Hungarian, German, English, French, Czech, Russian and other languages. He was one of the leading Reformed theologians and church-diplomats of the Socialist period of Hungary and of the Eastern Block of that era. He is Honorary Doctor of prestigious Universities, and the recipient of many awards and prizes. – B: 1016, T: 7103.→Reformed Church in Hungary; Christian Peace Conference; Bartha, Tibor.

Tóth-Kurucz, Mária (Mrs. Ernő Kálnoki) (Izsa, now Iža, Slovakia, 5 August 1922 - Oroszlány, 2 August 2004) – Authoress, poetess and archeologist. She completed her higher education at the Agricultural College of Mosonmagyaróvár (Mosonmagyaróvári Gazdasági Akadémia). Her first poems appeared in Hungarian newspapers. She moved to the West in 1945, and lived in the Tirol Region of Austria. She studied at the Faculty of Arts of the Universities of Graz and Innsbruck. In November 1949, she emigrated to the USA, and settled in Cleveland. In the 1990s, she resettled in Komárom. Her poems, short stories and translations from literary works appeared in the New Horizon (Új Látóhatár); Catholic Hungarians' Sunday (Katolikus Magyarok Vasárnapja), and the National Guard (Nemzetőr). Her works include Hand-bell of September (Szeptemberi csengettyű) (1957); Isaiah (Izsaiak) novel (1974); Bees (Méhecskék) poems (1983); Baying of an Ass (Szamárbögés) novel (1987); Golden Thread. Prehistory of the Transylvanian and Danube-European Hungarians (Aranyfonál. Az erdélyi- és a Duna-európai magyarság őstörténete), (1990) and Transylvanian Painted Pots (Erdélyi festett edények) (1996). – B: 1672, 0878, T: 7456.

Tóth, László (1) (Ladislav) (Győr, 6 June 1910 - Rome, 22 March 1982) – Literary historian, critic and translator of literary works. He completed his higher studies at the Universities of Pécs, Rome and Pavia, majoring in Hungarian and Italian. He obtained his Ph.D. in Philosophy from the University of Debrecen. After further studies in Italy, he was a demonstrator at the Italian Institute of the University of Pécs (1934-1935). From 1935 to 1943 he was Secretary of the Hungarian Institute in Rome. From 1944 to 1946 he was Professor of Italian Language and Literature at the University of Debrecen. In 1946 he moved to Italy. In August 1946, he was an instructor of Hungarian at the Universities of Rome and Naples. Later, he gave lectures in Hungarian language and literature at the Oriental Institute of the University of Naples. As a translator, he mainly translated recent Hungarian prose works into Italian, and translated Italian novels and short stories into Hungarian. His literary studies, articles and critiques were regularly published in the periodical Catholic Review (Katolikus Szemle). He also wrote for the National Guard (Nemzetőr), the South American Hungarian News (Délamerikai Magyar Hírlap), Critique (Kritika), and Hungarian Bibliophile (Magyar Könyvbarát). He was a correspondent of several Italian literary and scientific journals, and played active role in the work of the Foreign Hungarian Actio Catholica. His published works include La lingua magiara, textbook (1939, 1948, 1964) and Italian Language Textbook (Olasz nyelvkönyv) (1966). – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Tóth, László (2) (Ladislav) (Budapest, 26 September, 1949 - ) – Poet and writer. In 1967 he completed his high school studies in Rév-Komárom (now Komárno, Slovakia). Between 1967 and 1969 he was a laborer, waiter and a store clerk. During 1969 to 1970 he became Editor for the paper, Csallóköz of Dunaszerdahely (now Dunajská Streda, Slovakia). 1972-1975 he was editor for the Literary Review (Irodalmi Szemle), and dramaturge at the Hungarian Regional Theatre in Komárno (MATESZ). In 1986 he settled in Budapest. From 1986 to 1988, he was an external associate of the Society for Hungarian Book Publishers and Distributors. From 1987 to 1989 he was an External Associate of the daily, Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet), and of New Source (Új Forrás); later, from 1990 he was its Editor-in-Chief. Also, from 1990 he was a member of the Czechoslovakian Hungarian Writers' Association. His poems, narratives, fables, sketches, literary and theater-historical essays, critiques appeared in Czech and Slovakian translations in the Week (Hét) (1967), New Youth (Új Ifjúság), from 1967 on in the New Word (Új Szó) and the Literary Review (Irodalmi Szemle), also Csallóköz (1969-1975), the Day (Nap), and New Hungary (Új Magyarország). His works include Imitation of Sounds (A hangok utánzata) poems (1971); Crossing (Átkelés) poems (1977); Approximation (Megközelítés) anthology of young poets and artists, edited with Ferenc Kulcsár (1980); Debate and Confession (Vita és vallomás) interviews (1981); Life is a Struggle... (Küzdés az élet...) a selection from Imre (Emeric) Madách's works (1989); Like a Bird Driven from its Nest... (Mint fészkeből kizavart madár...), literature from the Years of Exile (1945-1949) with Imre Molnár (1990), and Parallels, Detours (Párhuzamok, kitérők), essays and studies, (1991). In 1983 it was planned that he be awarded the Madách Prize but for political reasons it was not carried out. – B: 1083, 1257, T: 7456.→Madách, Imre.

Tóth, Lőrinc (Lawrence) (Révkomárom, now Komarno, Slovakia, 17 December 1814 - Budapest, 17 March 1903) – Writer and lawyer. He studied at the Academy of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), and later read Law at the University of Budapest. In 1838 he passed his final examination and became an attorney. He worked as a lawyer for aristocratic families. In the Kiszfaludy Society he was minutes-taking secretary from 1837, and secretary from 1841 to 1843; he was also a member of the Petőfi Society. During 1839 and 1840, he went on an extended Western European tour, about which he reported in his work Travel feuilleton, vols. i-vi (Úti tárcza I-VI) (1844). He was elected Secretary of the Protective Association (Védegylet) in 1844. He took part in political, social and cultural movements, and belonged to the circle of friends of the great poet, Vörösmarty. As a delegate representing absent lords, he took part in the Diets of 1839-1840 and 1843-1844. In 1847-1848, he was the envoy of Breznóbánya (now Brezno, Slovakia) at the Diet. During the 1848-1849 Revolution and Freedom Fight against Habsburg oppression, he was a Member of Parliament and Counselor to the Minister of Justice, and also Head of the State Attorney's Department. While the Government had to move to Debrecen (near the end of the War of Independence in 1849), Lőrinc Tóth was a follower of the Peace Faction; but he followed the Government to Szeged, as well as to Arad. After the surrender to a Russian General at Világos, Tóth had to go into hiding; he was caught in Pest and tried by courtmartial and was sentenced to death, but received pardon; he was interned in Pest. Later, he worked in the legal field and as a journalist. From 1865 to 1869, he was a Member of Parliament. From 1869 he was a Judge of the Court of Appeals, later of the High Court, and from 1883 to 1894 he was its President. He was the author of numerous legal works. His published works include Curse (Átok) drama (1835); László Hunyady, drama; on its basis Béni Egressy wrote the libretto to F. Erkel's opera (1839), and From Dark Times (Sötét időkből) short stories (1882). He was a Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1836, ordinary 1858), also its attorney and treasurer. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Vörösmaty, Mihály; Egressy, Béni; Erkel, Ferenc.

Tóth-Máthé, Miklós (Nicholas) (Tiszaluc, 7 July 1936 - ) – Writer, dramatist. He is a descendant of a Reformed Pastoral family. He studied at the Reformed Colleges of Sáropatak, Debrecen, and later at Diósgyőr. Between 1954 and 1956, he worked as an unskilled laborer; thereafter, he furthered his studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art in Budapest in 1961. He played in Veszprém, Békéscsaba, Győr and Budapest. The theme of his writings was the experiences of his childhood and youth and he wrote historical novels featuring outstanding figures of the Hungarian Reformation. From 1997 to 2004 he gave lectures on elocution and the basics of dramaturgy at the Reformed Theological College of Debrecen. In some of his writings, he represents reality in satirical, humorous, grotesque, and even absurd ways. His works include The Trumpet of God (Isten trombitája) novelette (1981); Pecúrok, novel (1989); Méliusz, novel (1993); My Mother's Book (Anyám könyve) reminiscences (1997); Junk-clearance (Lomtalanítás) short-stories (1998); Fire and Cross (Tűz és kereszt) historical drama (1998); I, Gáspár Károli (Én, Károli Gáspár) monodrama (2009), and A Man of Grand Designs (Nagyrahívott), drama (2010). Besides his books and dramas, he also published two CDs. His novels and dramatic works emphasize the Protestant and historical moral values. His works raise him among the significant contemporary writers and for recognition of his works he received the Károli Prize in 2006. – B: 1257, T: 7456.

Tóth, Mihály (Michael) (Mezőkaszony, now Koszini, Ukraine, 5 October 1954 - ) – Politician. He studied at the Academy of Transportation in Dnepropetrovsk, Soviet Union (1972-1977). He completed his higher studies at the Law School of the University of Kijev (1977-2000). From 1979 to 1984, he was an architect in Beregszász (now Berehovo, Ukraine) and Munkács (now Mukacheve, Ukraine). From 1984 to 1986, he was Departmental Head, then from 1986 to 1989 Mayor of Beregszász. During 1989-1992, he was Chief Engineer, and from 1992 to 1994, President of Beregszász County. From 1990 to 1994, he was a member of the County Council, and Leader of the Hungarian fraction. He was a Member of the Ukrainian Parliament (1994-1998). Since 1998 he has been the chief contributor for the Political Science Institute of the Ukrainian Academy of Sciences. From 1989 to 1992 he was Vice-President of the Sub-Carpathian Hungarian Cultural Association (Kárpátaljai Magyarok Kulturális Szövetsége). Since 1996, he has been the President of the Democratic Society of Hungarians in the Ukraine (Ukrainai Magyarok Demokratikus Szövetsége). – B: 0874, T: 7103.

Tóth, Miklós (Nicholas) (Szekszárd, 6 August 1925 - ) – Lawyer, cultural organizer. He read Reformed Theology and Law. After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight he fled to the West and settled in the Netherlands, where he worked as an insurance clerk. He played an active role in organizing the Hungarian cultural and religious life in Holland. He was general superintendent of the Hungarian Reformed Church of Holland. He was one of the founders and heads of the Dutch Kelemen Mikes Circle (Hollandiai Mikes Kelemen Kör) and organizer and lecturer of its Research Circle Weeks. He is the author of Our Self-portrait in the Mirror of our Fate 1945-1949 (Önarcképünk sorsunk tükrében 1945-1949) (1984) – B: 1672, T: 7456. → Mikes, Kelemen.

Tóth, Miklós Tamás (Nicholas, Thomas) (Harsány, County Borsod, 1956 - ) – Electrical engineer and inventor. When his family's electrical power bill was too high, he invented a solar roof tile. It was exhibited at the InterSolar Expo in 2009, where it was well received. The advantages of the solar roof tile include being replaceable and extendable by the piece. At the international inventors' meeting in Budapest in 2009, the jury acknowledged the solar roof tile by awarding a prize. The invention has already been protected in 160 countries, and 36 countries would like to distribute it. Tóth won 46 million Forints from the New Hungary Rural Development Program (NHRDP) to build the first workshop producing his solar roof tiles. The lifetime of the solar roof tile is 25 years on average. Miklós Tóth is planning to build a larger factory to start mass production. – B: 2114, T: 7103.

Tóth, Péter (Budapest, 12 July 1882 - Budapest, 28 February 1967) – Fencer. He worked as a Military Prosecutor in the Capital and it was in 1902 that he first took part in a competition in Szeged. He was a member of the Hungarian Athletic Society (Magyar Athletikai Club – MAC) in 1907. In 1918, then in the 1922 Olympic Games he was a member of the Hungarian sword team that won the title of Olympic Champion. In 1913, he participated as a founding member of the International Society of Fencers (Nemzetközi Vívó Szövetség). He was an active sportsman for a long time, winning his first victory in 1907, and the last in 1934. As a foil-fencer, he participated in the Summer Olympic Games of Amsterdam in 1928. Also, he dealt with the theory and history of that branch of sports; he published numerous articles connected with fencing. During the last months of his life, he wrote with Kálmán (Coleman) Klell (a photographic artist) a work on the history of fencing, but it remained in manuscript form. He died in a car accident. – B: 1031, 2111, T: 7684.

Tóth, Sándor (1) (Alexander) (Debrecen, 16 February 1828 - Pest, 22 November 1862) – Zoologist, physician and teacher. He studied Philosophy and Chemistry at the University of Pest from 1847 to 1848; following this, he studied Law and Theology at the Reformed College of Debrecen in 1850-1851. Between the years 1854 to 1859, he was a medical student at the University of Pest, where he obtained his Medical Degree in 1860. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1861), and first secretary of the Hungarian Natural Scientific Society (Magyar Természettudományi Társulat) in 1862; he was also a member of the Zoological-Botanical Society of Vienna. From 1851 to 1854, he was Vice-Chancellor of the Reformed School of Nagyszalonta (now Salonta, Romania). Concurrently with his medical studies, he was a Natural Science teacher at the Pál (Paul) Szőnyi Boarding-School for Boys (Szőnyi Pál Fiúnevelő Intézet) in Pest (1854-1859). From 1859, he was a teacher of Natural History and Latin at the Lutheran High School of Pest; from 1861 taught in the same capacity at the Senior High School of District IV of Pest (Pesti IV. ker. Főreáliskola). Earlier in his career, he studied the crayfish fauna of Pest and Buda; later on, mainly the phyllopod crabs. He also dealt with the spas of northern Hungary. His works include Über die an Umgebung von Budapest vorkommenden Rotatorien und Daphnien (1859) and The Crayfish of Budapest (A budapesti keréknyövények) (1891). – B: 1730, 0883, T: 7456.

Tóth, Sándor (2) (Alexander) (Kőrösladány, 1884 - 1963) – Minister of the Reformed Church in the USA. He received his education at the Reformed College of Debrecen, and was ordained a minister in 1907. Between 1907 and 1909, he went to Geneva, Switzerland on a scholarship. After arriving in the USA in 1909, he served as minister of the congregations in Buffalo and Tonawanda, N.Y., and from 1911 to 1922, he served in the First Hungarian Reformed Church of Cleveland, Ohio. Between 1922 and 1934, he taught at the Theological Seminary in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, and at the newly formed Department of Hungarian Theological Studies; however, the Depression and the policy of the American Reformed Church forced its closure. Sándor Tóth then left the Seminary to become a circuit speaker for the Hungarian Evangelical and Reformed Church. Between 1938 and 1960, he edited the Reformed Newspaper (Reformátusok Lapja). Tóth was elected Vice-President of the Hungarian Reformed Federation of America in 1912 and, between 1919 and 1935 he served as its treasurer. – B: 0906, T: 7103.

Tóth, Sándor (3) (Alexander) (A. Tóth; Alexandre Tóth) (Rimaszombat, now Rimavská Sobota, Slovakia, 7 April 1904 - Zalaegerszeg, 2 October 1980) – Painter and puppeteer. He completed his high school studies at Rimaszombat in 1922. He studied at the Academy of Applied Art, Budapest, as a student of Oszkár Glatz, Gyula (Julius) Rudnay and Károly (Charles) Lyka. He obtained his drawing-teacher's diploma in 1926. He opened his first exhibition under the name Sándor (Alexander) Gömöri Tóth at Rimaszombat, and in the Art Gallery of Budapest (Múcsarnok) he organized a one-man-show of his paintings. He furthered his studies under Rudnay at the Academy for another year, and took on private tuition for a while in the family of Count Sándor (Alexander) Teleki. In 1928 he went abroad, living in Nürnberg, Cologne, London and Wales. In Scotland, he scored success as a portrait painter, play manager and singer of Hungarian folksongs. He also presented in the Welsh language the famous ballad by the great lyric poet János (John) Arany entitled The Bards of Wales (A waleszi bárdok). Between 1929 and 1931 he lived in Paris; he worked in the studio of the artist and puppeteer Géza Blattner. As the associate in Blattner's puppet-show Arc-en-Ciel, he prepared independent shadow plays. He also prepared marionette puppets, painted and carved by him. At the Paris World Fair of 1937, his puppets were exhibited, displaying the Egyptian scene in Madách's play, The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája). Sándor Tóth's oil paintings, Peasant Madonna (Parasztmadonna) and Puppeteer (Bábjátékos) were exhibited at the Salon d'Automne and Art Hongrois Moderne Galleries. After returning to Hungary, he worked for the periodical Hungarian Scout (Magyar cserkész) (1931-1932). Late in 1932, he taught drawing, history of art, mathematics and several languages at the Reformed College of Pápa. As Deputy Head of its Boarding School, he was also leader of the Scout Team. He supported folk writers, and assisted talented peasant youths. In 1933, at the World Jamboree at Gödöllő, he played a leading role in scouting and puppet-show activities. He was also active at the 1937 Jamboree in Holland. Between 1933 and 1944, he organized a number of exhibitions in galleries; wrote articles in the Hungarian Scout and the Protestant Review (Protestáns Szemle). After World War II, he was particularly active in the puppet-shows as a teacher of puppetry and marionette plays. From 1952 he taught Russian and drawing at the State High School of Pápa. From 1958 until his retirement in 1967, he also taught at the Petőfi High School of Pápa. From 1965 to 1966, he exhibited in the USA. Tóth prepared portraits of many distinguished literary figures of Hungary, among them Gyula (Julius) Illyés, László (Ladislav) Németh, Dezső (Desider) Szabó and Sándor (Alexander) Weöres. His early works were characterized by avant-garde composition of form, and the influence of expressionism and cubism; later in his career, Hungarian folk motives played an original, lyric part in his artistic oeuvre. His paintings are held in the National Gallery, and in a number of galleries of country towns. A bronze relief of him in the Reformed High School of Pápa is the work of Barna Búza. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Glatz, Oszkár; Rudnay, Gyula; Lyka, Károly; Búza, Barna; Illyés, Gyula; Németh, László; Szabó, Dezső; Weöres, Sándor; Teleki, Count Sándor.

Tóth, Tihamér (Szolnok, 14 January 1889 - Budapest, 5 May 1939) – Roman Catholic Roman Catholic Bishop and writer. He completed his high school studies at Eger, studied Theology at the Central Seminary of Budapest and in Vienna. He was chaplain in Heves, a teacher of religion in Győr, then tutor and librarian at the Theological Academy in Eger. He served as an army chaplain in World War I (1915-1916). From 1918 on, he was Study Superintendent at the Central Seminary of Budapest, and Governor from 1931. From 1925 he was Professor of Ecclesiastical Oration. In 1926 he participated in the Eucharistic Congress in Chicago, USA, and in 1932 in Dublin, Ireland. He was appointed Auxiliary Bishop in 1938, then Bishop of Veszprém in 1939. He wrote extensively and his works were translated into 16 languages and in 1936, they were compiled into 23 volumes. A selection of his works include Immaculate Malehood (Tiszta férfiúság) (1919); Do Not Drink (Ne igyál) (1919); Pastoral Care of the Intelligentsia (Az intelligencia lelki gondozása) (1923); Cultured Youth (Művelt ifjúság) (1924); Youth with Character (A jellemes ifju) (1925); Religious Youth, vols. i-ii (Vallásos ifjú, I-II) (1928); Christ the King (Krisztus király) (1931) and I Believe in the Church (Hiszek az egyházban), 1934. – B: 0883, 0932, 1257, T: 7103.

Tötös de Zepetnek, Steven (István Töttös) (Budapest, 1950 - ) – Educator and bibliographer. He was a political refugee in Austria (1964), and moved to Switzerland in 1972. He completed his high school education in West Germany, Austria and Switzerland and emigrated to Canada in 1975. His post-graduate studies were from the University of Western Ontario; he earned a B.A. (1980) from Carleton University, an M.A. (1983) from the University of Ottawa, a Dip. Ed. in 1984, and from the University of Alberta he obtained a Ph.D. in Comparative Literature (1989). He served as Adjunct Professor of Comparative Literature at the University of Alberta (1984-1992), and Assistant Professor (1992-1998). He has published more than 120 research papers in English and other languages, five books, and over a dozen edited volumes; he was also Associate Editor for the Canadian Review of Comparative Literature (Revue Canadienne de Litterature Comparee) (1989-1997). His published books include The Social Dimensions of Fiction on the Rhetoric and Function of Prefacing Novels in Nineteenth Century Canada (1993); Legitimizing the Study of Literature. A New Pragmatism: The Systemic Approach to Literature and Culture (1997); Comparative Literature: Theory, Method, Application (1998), and Data of the Zepetneki Tötösy Family (A Zepetneki Tötösy család adattára) (1992). He has served as an advisory member of several journals and an executive member of international scholarly organizations. – B: 0893, 1031, T: 4342.

Tótsolyosi Apród, János (John) (János Küküllei Apród) (around 1320 - around 1394) – Bishop and chronicler. He was a notary at the Royal Chancellery. Between 1352, and in 1394 he was Canon of Arad, Eger, and later of Zágráb (now Zagreb, Croatia), and Székesfehérvár. Later, he became Arch-Dean of Küküllő, as well as Royal Chaplain of King Lajos I (Louis the Great) (1342-1382) in Visegrád (1364-1382). While at court, as bishop, he wrote the biography of King Lajos I under the title Chronicon de Ludovico rege (The Chronicle of King Louis) in 25 chapters. After the death of the King, he completed the biography with additional 30 chapters. The text of this work was preserved in the Budai and Thuróczy Chronicles. – B: 1031, 1153, T: 7617.→Buda Chronicle; Thuróczy Chronicle; Codex Literature.

Töttösy, Ernő (Earnest) (Szombathely, 8 December 1918 - Brussels, 25 March 2009) – Lawyer and writer. From 1936 to 1940 he studied Law and earned a Ph.D. in Law. From 1940 he served in the army; in November 1944, he passed a unified final judicial and law examination. From 1945 he worked as a solicitor and company legal adviser. He attempted to leave the country in 1952, but without success; he was arrested and for “illegal Christian Party conspiracy” he was sentenced to 12 years’ imprisonment. He regained his freedom during the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight. Late in 1956, he fled to the West and settled in Belgium. In Brussels, he led the “Hungarian Bureau” of the Belgian Christian Unions, and edited the paper, Hungarians (Magyarok) from 1957 till 1967. He was also the European representative of an American firm from 1964 on. His writings were published, among others, in the National Guard (Nemzetőr), Catholic Review (Katolikus Szemle), Canadian Hungarians (Kanadai Magyarország), South American Hungarian News (Délamerikai Magyar Hírlap), Catholic Hungarians’ Sunday (Katolikus Magyarok Vasárnapja). For his novel entitled: Mind Twisters (Téboły) (1985), translated into German, English and French, he was awarded the Silver Medal by the French Art and Literary Society at Avignon in 1986. His other works include Land of Judgment (Ítélet földje) stories with György (George) Széchenyi (1962); Hongrie (1966); Bivalve (Kagyló) (1989); Law and Fist-law (Jog és ököljog) (1991), and The Winter was Long... (Hosszú volt a tél...) (1994). Töttösy was one of the outstanding leaders of Hungarians in the West. – B: 1672, 1257, T: 7456.

Tourmaline  $[\text{Na}(\text{Mg,Fe})_3\text{Al}_6(\text{BO}_3)_3(\text{Si}_6\text{O}_{18}(\text{OH})_4)]$  – A silicate mineral of trigonal crystal system, glassy luster, and containing boron. Crystals are elongated, prismatic and strongly fibrous lengthwise. It is suitable for the production of circularly polarized light. Its color wanes according to its composition from lightly translucent, brownish, greenish-brown to brownish-black and black. Baron Ferenc József Müller discovered it in the Velence (Venice) hills in 1778. – B: 1138, T: 7674. → Müller, Baron Ferenc József.

Town Musicians – Musicians playing on various instruments, employed by the towns; one master-musician and his assistant for smaller places, and a group of 4 to 8 country-or town-musicians for larger towns and cities. This custom spread from Germany to Hungary and became an established institution by the second half of the 16th century, at the time when, in order to present polyphonic church music, it became necessary for choirs to use instrumental accompaniment. These musicians were competent with every kind of instrument, particularly with wind instruments. According to guild custom, the apprentice became free after 5-6 years of apprenticeship; the assistant often set out on a journey lasting several years, and competed for a vacant town musician's position at try-outs. Town musicians performed on other occasions as well, for example at town festivals, at initiations, or at graduations and dedication ceremonies. In Hungary, their use spread mainly to Northern Hungary (Upland or Felvidék, now Slovakia) and the western towns of Transdanubia. With the decline of the guild system, and with the proliferation of non-professional playing of instruments, music-making and public concerts, the economic conditions for town-musicians declined. – B: 0886, T: 7456.

Tower Watchman – There are documents dating as far back as the 15th-16th centuries, mentioning organized sentry duty at night in Hungarian towns. The night watch was carried out from the tower of the church or from the fire watchtower, from which the town was usually easily surveyable. From the 18th century on, some texts, loudly announced to the public at the time, have also been preserved; these are related to the texts of the vigil-keepers of the Castle and to the dawn-songs (Hajnalénekek). These texts are surprisingly uniform and were usually announced at two-hourly intervals after the chimes. For example: The time is ten o'clock, the bed is to be prepared; The clock is striking twelve, everybody should go to bed!, etc. The verse-form of these little songs, called the night watchman's songs, was quite general, but was not adopted everywhere, and its use ceased by the turn of the 19th/20th centuries. – B: 1134, 1020, T: 7456.

Tózsér, Árpád (Gömörpéterfala, now Petrovce, Slovakia, 6 October 1935 - ) – Writer and poet. From 1956 to 1960 he studied at the Teachers' College of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), and obtained a Dip. Ed. in Hungarian and Slovak literature. Between 1960 and 1965 he was editor for the paper Week (Hét). From 1965 to 1971 he was editor for the paper Literary Review (Irodalmi Szemle). During 1971 to 1976 he was a lecturer at the Hungarian Department of the Faculty of Education University of Nyitra (now Nitra, Slovakia). From 1976 he was Editor-in-Chief of the world literature editorial of the Madách-Posonium Publishers. He was a Member of the Slovak and the Slovakian-Hungarian Writers' Association, during 1962-1990. He was Adjunct Professor at the Komenský University, Prague (1992-2002). Tózsér's poems, literary critiques, studies, articles, book-reviews, commentaries, reports, translated from Slovakian, Czech and Polish languages, appeared in numerous publications, such as the New Word (Új Szó); Week (Hét); Literary Review (Irodalmi Szemle); Conference on the Topical Problems of the Minority Literature (Ankét nemzetiségi irodalmunk időszzerű kérdéseiről); Woman (Nő); Presence (Jelenlét); With Faithful Humaneness (Hű emberséggel), and Tradition and Revival (Hagyomány és megújulás). His works include Sullen Star (Mogorva csillag) poems (1963); Contacts (Érintések) poems (1972); Genezis, poems (1979); Additions to the Eighth Color (Adalékok a nyolcadik színhez) poems (1982); A Night with Hamlet (Éjszaka Hamlettel) by Vladimír Holan, editing (1983); Circles (Körök) selected poems (1985); Escorial in Middle-Europe (Escorial Közép-Európában) essays (1992); Leviticus, poems (1997), and Faustus in Prague (Faustus Prágában) drama (2005). Tózsér was awarded the Imre Madách Prize (1980, 1984), the Merited Artist title (1988), the Zoltán Fábry Prize (1991), the Attila József Prize (1993), the Tibor Déry Prize (1997), the Milán Füst Prize (2002), the Small and Middle Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1996, 2002), the Kossuth Prize (2004), the Ludovít Stúr Medal (2004), and the Prize for Hungarian Culture (2005). – B: 1083, 1890, T: 7456, 7103.

Trade Guilds in Hungary – Villagers appointed during the Árpád Dynasty (1000-1301), supplying the household necessities of the princely and baronial families. The later expansion of the guilds – due of the settlement of the Teutons and the Italians – became more controlled as a western guild system. At the turn of the 15 and 16th centuries, there were many hundreds of active guilds around the more significant royal boroughs; in the 19th century, their number reached over 4000. The number of members in an individual guild varied; sometimes three masters formed a guild; sometimes there were over 100 masters working in a guild. The most popular trades were those of the miller, butcher, tanner, cobbler, boot-maker, furrier, weaver, fuller, tailor, blacksmith, cartwright, cooper, carpenter, bricklayer and potter. The guild was a strict self-governed organization. The admission of new members was restricted and they had to prove their legal status by producing a proof of their nationality. The trade membership was usually handed down from father to son. To belong to a guild was an honor; to be excluded was to be a bungler, an amateur. The once freed apprentice had to be accepted into the society of the journeymen. They acted within the guild's guidelines under the master and elected a leadership of deans. Their separate chest was the common chest; into this the journeymen paid their dues. From these they supported their sick brothers and the traveling journeymen. The initiation of a journeyman took place with the handing over of the common drinking glass (társ pohár). One became a master only after completing the journeyman years and a masterpiece. The guilds lasted about 500 years; from them originated the different associations and insurance associations. – B: 1020, T: 7668.

Trajtler, Gábor (Gabriel) (Budapest, 12 May 1929 - ) – Lutheran pastor and organist. He studied Theology at the Lutheran Evangelical Theological Academy, Sopron-Budapest (1947-1952), studied organ with Ferenc (Francis) Gergely at the Franz Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, and qualified as an organist and composer in 1959. He learned organ building in Thuringia and Saxony, East Germany in 1963, and was on a scholarship at the Academy of Music, Hamburg, West Germany in 1973. Between 1952 and 1976, he was an active pastor of the congregations of the Budapest Fásor, Cinkota, and of the Budapest Deák Plaza (Tér) churches. Since 1959, he has been the organist for the Deák Plaza Lutheran Church. Since 1960, he is the Organ-Superintendent of his Church, and teacher and principal of the Organist Training Institute of the Church. He is the Chair of the Church Music Department of the Lutheran Theological Academy/University, and Vice-President for the Hungarian Church Music Society (1995-1999). He is a member of the Europäische Konferenz für Evangelische Kirchenmusik, the GDO: International Society of Organ-builders and Organists, and the Liturgy Committee of the Lutheran Church. He is editor of the Evangelical Hymnbook (1982), and Evangelical Organ Book (1982). He is author of a number of entries in lexicons and music history books. Since 1962, he has been an organ soloist of the National Philharmonic Society. He was on a concert tour in Germany, France, Finland, Sweden, Denmark, Switzerland and Romania. His organ concerts are broadcast by Hungarian Radio. He designed 39 organs. He is recipient the Ferenc Kölcsey Prize. – B: 0874, T: 7103.→Gergely, Ferenc.

Trans-Himalaya (Hedin Mountain) – An enormous mountain range running parallel with the Himalayan Range, which was theoretically discovered and named by Lajos (Louis) Lóczy. Following him, Sven Hedin, during his 1905-1908 Tibetan trip demonstrated the correctness of Lóczy's findings. The mountain range is still undefined and largely unexplored. Its highest peak, 7315 m above sea level, is Aling Gangri, while the highest pass is the Chargoding Pass at 5885 m. – B: 1078, T: 7456.→ Lóczy, Lajos.

Transylvania (Hungarian: Erdély, German: Siebenbürgen, Romanian: Ardeal) – The eastern one-third of the territory of the Historic Kingdom of Hungary until 1920, and the eastern third of the Carpathian Basin. The population of Transylvania in 1960 was 3,661,000; the territory of the whole area is 103,093 km<sup>2</sup> together with the Partium and Banat areas, which was annexed to Romania in 1920 by the Trianon Peace Dictate. According to the 2002 census, there were 5,393,400 Romanians and 1,416,844 (in reality about 2 million) Hungarians in Transylvania.

(1) Geography. By Transylvania is understood all the eastern part of the Carpathian Basin, ceded to Romania in 1920. The historic Principality of Transylvania does not include the eastern peripheral strip of the Great Hungarian (Pannonian) Plain with wholly Hungarian-populated towns like Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, Romania), Nagykároly (Carei), Nagyvárad (Oradea), Arad, and Temesvár (Timișoara). It does not include the eastern half of the Banat region in the south (the southern part of the Great Plain), or the "Crisana" area (the western slopes of the Bihar Mountain Complex), nor the mountainous area of Máramaros (Maramureș) further north. Historic Transylvania is the area covered by the Transylvanian Central Mountains in the west, the Transylvanian Basin in the center, the inner slopes up to the watershed of the Eastern Carpathians in the east, and the northern slopes up to the watershed of the Southern Carpathians (including the Transylvanian Alps) in the south. In 1920, not only was the Historic Principality of Transylvania (Erdély) annexed to Romania, but the above mentioned regions as well.

(A) The Transylvanian Central Mountains (Bihar Mtn. Complex, or Apuseni Mountains) is a heterogeneous complex of mountain ranges, also referred to as the Eastern Central Mountains or Transylvanian Island Mountain. (1) It consists of the Bihar Mountain, in a strict sense, positioned axially in the center of the whole complex, with an average height of 1400-1500 m, and the highest point, the Kukurbeta, at 1849 m. Its crystalline core is overlain by the Permian sandstone beds and Triassic-Jurassic limestone units (with dolinas and caves), forming a tectonic block, not folded, but fractured by faults. Its lower slopes are covered with oaks; at the middle level (600-1200 m) with beech, and higher up with pine forests. The rounded high-level tops offer excellent alpine pastures. There are rich mineral deposits here: lead, silver and copper-ore deposits and coal seams. It is only thinly populated, except in the valleys of the western slopes. (2) Királyerdő Range (“King’s Wood”, Padurea Craiului) placed further north, between the Fast Kőrös River (Sebes Kőrös) valley and the Belényes Basin; a relatively low plateau-like northwestern continuation of the Bihar Mountains. Its northern flank is steep, whereas the southern side is gently sloping. The highest point is Ho dringus at 1024 m. The constituent beds are of fossil-rich Mesozoic and Tertiary limestone and fine-grained sandstone. There are important aluminum-ore deposits here. (3) The northeastern part is the Gyalu Alps (Muntii Gilau), a rugged, thickly forested range, mainly with pines. Its axial ridge extends west-east, reaching the town of Bánffyhunyard (Huedin) in the north, rising between the valleys of the Aranyos and Warm Szamos Rivers, covered by dense oak and pine forests. The valleys are steep, almost canyon-like. It is a fault-block mountain, composed of schists and slates, with a huge granitic intrusion in the center; highest point is Nagyhavas at 1827 m. There are extensive alpine pastures, with scattered Romanian population. The peak Vigyázó (1838 m) is at the meeting point of the above three mountain ranges. (4) Farther south, the Transylvanian Ore Mountain delimited by the valleys of the Maros, Aranyos and White Kőrös (Fehér Kőrös) Rivers, extending East-West, reaching about 1400 m height. To the west there are volcanic rocks, which contain important gold, silver and lead ores; its gold-mining was known by the Romans in towns like Verespatak, Brád, Abrudbánya, Kőrösbánya, Offenbánya and Zalatna. The eastern part, as far as Torda, is comprised of strongly folded sandstone ridges with a picturesque central limestone-cliff belt (Vulkán, Székelykö, Bedellő), which is cut through by the Hesdát Creek, forming the famous and picturesque Torda Gorge (and the Tur Gorge), 1.2 km long, with 200 m high cliffs, formed by collapsed caves: it is a unique botanical meeting point of the eastern (Asiatic) and Alpine plant-regions, containing such species as: Allium obliquum of Turkestan, Iris arenaria of the Great Plain, Taxus baccata (Tisza-tree) and the Alpine Saxifraga rocheliana. (5) Bél Mountain Range (Muntii Codru) rises between the White and Black (Fekete) Kőrös Rivers; the highest point is Szártető (Pless), 1174 m, composed of a Late Paleozoic and Mesozoic sequence of sediments, with limestone dominating, with dolina-type caves. (6) The Szilágyság Hills form the northeastern extension of the Bihar Mountain Complex, composed of low hills as far north as the Szamos River with the town of Szatmárnémeti: the Réz Hill (800 m) in the south, directly north of the Bihar Mountain Complex, the Meszes Hill (Terbete, 870 m) in the east and the Bükk Hill (Palahegy, 575 m) in the northeast.

(B) The Transylvanian Basin, surrounded by mountains on all sides, is a somewhat elevated, hilly basin with an average height of 300-400 m a.s.l. It is traversed by the Szamos River system and the Maros (Mureş) River, with its large tributaries, the Little Küküllő (Kis Küküllő) and the Great Küküllő (Nagy Küküllő) Rivers, the latter forming the so-called Mezőség region. The cultural and historical center of the whole of Transylvania is the town of Kolozsvár (German: Klausenburg, Romanian: Cluj-Napoca) at the western edge of the Basin. It is on both banks of the Little Szamos River (345 m, the citadel 411 m). It is an important administrative, educational, religious (including Unitarian), cultural, commercial and industrial center. Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia, Romania) is in the southwest, facing the Transylvanian Ore Mountains over the Maros River; it is an ancient Hungarian town of more than thousand years of history;

Nagyszeben (Germ. Hermannstadt, now Sibiu, Romania) situated in the south, near the foot of the Southern Carpathians, is the cultural center of the Transylvanian Saxon settlers from mediaeval times, also an industrial and commercial center; Marosvásárhely (now Târgu Mureș, Romania), is almost in the center of the Basin, a transport, communication, commercial, industrial and cultural center, with an almost entirely Hungarian (Szekler) population up to recent times, situated on the banks of the Maros River; its fairs go back to mediaeval times.

(C) Eastern (Oriental) Carpathians extend from the Borsa Pass (1418 m) and the Maramaros Alps in the north as far as the Dimbovița River valley in the south, after taking an extraordinarily sharp turn, forming a bend from northwest-southeast direction to one of east-west. The length of this section of the Carpathians is about 350 km and the highest peak is Great Pietros (2303 m). It is made up of three belts, running parallel. The outer belt is composed of sandstone ranges (together with a limestone cliff belt), such as the Borgó, Gyergyó, Csík, Bereck, Háromszék and Bodza Ranges. The central crystalline ranges, which form the watershed, are composed of the Beszterce Range, while the Radna Alps, the Ilosva Range and the Lapos Mountain are relic mountains of Late Paleozoic origin. The inner belt constitutes the volcanic ranges: the Kelemen Alps in the north, the Görgény Alps and the Hargita farther south. Tectonically, the Eastern Carpathians are composed of two units: the inner crystalline belt (westerly in position) and the outer flysch belt (easterly in position). There are a number of passes through the ranges: the Borsa, Radna, Borgó, Tölgyes, Békás, Gyimes, Ojtoz and Bodza Passes. The Eastern Carpathians are the source of a number of rivers: inwardly the Szamos and Maros Rivers, outwardly the Olt, Szeret, Moldava and Beszterce Rivers.

(D) Southern Carpathians (Transylvanian Alps) are situated between the Dimbovita River in the east and the Danube at the Iron Gate in the west. Though topographically they are the continuation of the Eastern Carpathians, west of the “great bend”, geologically these ranges do not belong to the Carpathians proper. The component ranges, made up of crystalline (igneous and metamorphic) rocks, are arranged in two broad belts: (1) an easterly and more northerly, more internally situated series of ranges: the Fogaras-, Szeben (Cibin), Hunyad (Kudzsir) and Ruzska (Poyana Rusca) Alps, and partly the Bánát (Krassó-Szörény) Ore Mountain, and a westerly, more southerly, more external belt (Paráng, Retyezát and Vulkán Ranges, the Semenik Range, the Szárkő-Godyan Range, and the Damogled and Orsova Ranges). The best-known passes are the Vöröstorony (Turnu-Rosu) Gorge (352 m), the Vulkán Pass (1624 m) and the Vaskapu Pass (700 m). The Negoj peak in the Fogaras Alps is the second highest (2544 m) in the whole Carpathian System. The Cindrel peak in the Hunyad Alps is 2248 m the Szárkő is 2196 m and the Godyan peak 2289 m. There was considerable glaciation during the Pleistocene, as shown by the U-shaped valleys and tarns. These ranges are the source of numerous creeks and rivers; some flowing north as tributaries of the Maros River, such as the Sebes and Sztrigy Creeks; the Bega River is a tributary of the Tisza River, while the Temes River flows directly into the Danube; the outward flowing Cerna Creek and Zsil (Jiul) River are also direct tributaries of the Danube. There is a rich brown-coal basin of Tertiary age in the Petrozsény (Petroseni) Basin, north of the point, where the Zsil River cuts through the Vulkán Range in the form of a gorge first, then the Vulkán Pass. The basin is wedged between the Paráng and Vulkán Ranges in the south and the Hunyad Alps in the north. The main mining towns are Petrozsény and Lupény (now Lupeni).

Average thickness of the Oligocene coal seams is 30 m, with heating value of 5000-6900 cal. The output was 170,000 tons in 1938.

The Banat (Krassó-Szörény) Ore Mountain (Banat Contact Belt) is composed of a heterogeneous group of ranges, over a 80 km long, north-south running belt, positioned south and west of the Berzava River and east of the lower course of the Karas (Caraşu) River, east of Krassóvár (Carasova), extending southwards to the Néra River. This is an important industrial area with Jurassic black coal seams, which are unusually near an iron-ore deposit. Its highest point is Plesiva (1144 m) and the mean height is maintained between 500 and 1000 m above sea-level. This contact belt occurs in the form of a graben (trough) between two north-south oriented structural lines, the Oravica Lineament being the western boundary. The centrally positioned limestone belt (av. 12 km wide) contains the iron ore deposit in Jurassic and Cretaceous limestone, folded during the Tertiary Period. It is flanked by large masses of granite and schists on either side. The Late Cretaceous granitic intrusion caused the contact metasomatism, leading to the formation of the important iron-ore deposits. The iron ore is mined at Vaskő (Ocna-de-Fier), Dognácska (Dognecea), Újmoldova (Moldova Noua) and Resicabánya (Reşiţa, now all in Romania). The black coal is mined at Stájerlakanina (Anina) and Resicabánya. The center of the mining and steel industry in the Bánát Ore Mountain region is Resicabánya, because the iron-ore mines are combined with the proximity of the coal deposits, an ideal situation. Already in the 19th century, heavy industry was developed due to the growth of the Austro-Hungarian Railway Company with furnaces, iron and steel foundry and rolling mills. Before 1920, the Royal Hungarian Railways manufactured rails and locomotives here. Since then, under Romanian rule, this heavy industry continues to flourish.

(E) Eastern edge of the Great Hungarian Plain, a strip of flatland, 20-30 km wide, between the foot of the Central Mountains and the Hungarian border, extends in the north from Szatmárnémeti through Nagykároly, Margitta, Nagyvárad on the Fast (Sebes) Körös River, farther south through Nagyszalonta, Arad and Temesvár, all in Romanian territory since 1920; then, crossing the Romanian-Serbian border, the same strip of flatland reaches the Lower Danube. The southern part of the strip of the Great Plain reaches a width of nearly 100 km. In the north it is traversed by the Szamos and Kraszna Rivers, farther south, near Nagyvárad, by the Berettyó River and the three branches of the Körös River; at Arad the Maros River crosses it, flowing westward toward the Tisza River. The northern part of the strip of lowland is called Érmellék, and the whole eastern margin of the Great Plain, now the westernmost part of Romania and not part of historic Transylvania, is now loosely called the Partium, a name used in the 16th and 17th centuries for the southern part of this flatland, which was incorporated into the Principality of Transylvania at the time.

The northern part of this eastern marginal belt of the Great Plain is in part swampy (as the moorland of Ecsed), partly sandy and only partly rich agricultural loess-land. The rich loess soils occur between Nagyvárad and the Lower Danube: agriculturally, it is a fertile wheat and maize-growing lowland, with dense population.

(2) History. Transylvania had a long history, even before the Magyars settled in the Carpathian Basin. In prehistoric times, Neanderthal Man lived there in Late Pleistocene times, followed by Mesolithic and Neolithic man, whose remains were found in a number of places (Körös/Criş and Vinca-Tordos Cultures, the tablets of Tartaria, and the Tiszapolgár Culture). In pre-Christian times Thracians, Cimmerians, Scythians, Gauls/Celts and warlike Dacians, Illyrian pastoralists from the region of today's Albania, settled on the outer slopes of the southern Carpathians, and probably in southern Transylvania as well. The Kingdom of Dacia from Burebista (50 B.C.) to Decebalus (107 A.D.) was conquered by the Romans under Emperor Trajan, who made it a Roman province, Dacia. After the Marcomannic War (166-180 AD), Dacian groups from outside Roman Dacia had been set in motion. So were the 12,000 Dacians from the neighbourhood of Roman Dacia sent away from their own country.

After the withdrawal of the Roman legions under Emperor Aurelianus in 271 A.D., Transylvania was overrun in the migration period by Visigoths, Gepids (300-360 A.D.), Longobards and Huns, until the Avars, related to the Magyars, established an empire in the whole Carpathian Basin, which lasted from 568 until 803, when they were defeated after a five-year campaign against them by Charlemagne's Frankish forces. Slavic tribes began settling in the area about this time and, for most of the 9th century, the Bulgar Khan established his rule in the eastern half of the Carpathian Basin, including the Great Plain, as well as the present-time area of Bulgaria. The advance guards of the Magyars appeared in reconnaissance missions in the middle of the 9th century. From 896 to 900, Prince Árpád's forces followed, with the whole Magyar tribal confederation, occupying the Carpathian Basin.

At first, the Magyars had only loose control over Transylvania (only the Gyula's tribe settled there) until, in 1003, King István I (997-1038) (the first Christian King of Hungary, also called St. Stephen) led a campaign into the heart of Transylvania, put down all resistance by Magyar and Slavic tribes, and placed it under the Hungarian Crown. From hence Transylvania acted as a natural buffer zone for Hungary against eastern invaders for centuries. At first, the southeastern part was settled by the Szeklers, who had been there since the time of the Huns, close relatives of the Magyars; but King László I (St.Ladislav) (1077-1095) resettled them in the easternmost corner of Transylvania as eastern frontier guards for the Kingdom of Hungary. In the 12th century, Saxon colonists settled there, while King András II (Andrew) (1205-1235) invited and settled Teutonic Knights in the southeastern area. These settlers, together with the Szekler (Székely) Hungarians, fought and drove out the Petchenegs (Besenyők), and later the Cumanians (Kunok); in 1241 they tried in vain to hold up the Mongol invasion of Batu Khan's armies in the Eastern Carpathian passes. The Mongols devastated Transylvania and other parts of the country as well.

The exact time is uncertain and controversial when the Vlach (Romanian) infiltration into Transylvania began; as shepherds in remote mountainous parts of southwestern Transylvania, the Vlachs (meaning "nomads") are not mentioned in written sources prior to 1200. They wandered from near Albania as semi-nomadic shepherds who later on adopted agriculture as well. Their neo-Latin language has an affinity with Albanian, with 3,800 Slavic loanwords, besides 2,600 Latin words. Their claim to be descendants of the Roman colonists planted there in the 2nd century AD seems to be tendentious and improbable: there is a millennium between the withdrawal of the Romans from the territory about 270 AD, and the appearance of the Vlach states outside Transylvania. The Hungarian kings appointed royal governors (Voivodes) to administer this eastern part of the realm. Transylvanian society (feudal until 1920) consisted of three privileged "nations", more along social, rather than ethnic lines: the Magyars, the Szeklers (Transylvanian Magyars/Hungarians) and the Saxons. As a result, the non-privileged class of serfs was made up almost entirely of Vlachs (Wallachians), but it did include also a few Saxons, Szeklers and Magyars. János (John) Hunyadi, a famous fighter in the wars against the expanding Ottoman Turks, joined the ranks of the Hungarian nobility, although, according to some historians, he was of Vlach origin. However, King Mátyás Hunyadi (1458-1490) believed that János Hunyadi was the illegitimate son of King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxembourg, King of Hungary and Holy Roman Emperor) (1387-1437). During the reign of King Károly I (Charles Robert) (1307-1342) Transylvania enjoyed relative peace; at this time, in the early 14th century the Vlachs, (Wallachians) started to form organized states, but only outside Transylvania, beyond the Carpathians, after the Pechenegs, Cumanians and the Khanate of the Golden Horde withdrew from the territory. By 1360 the Principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia were established. During the reign of Nagy Lajos (Louis the Great) (1342-1382), the peasant discontent in Transylvania was fomenting, because the landed (feudal) magnates kept the Szeklers in serfdom and this continued in the reign of Zsigmond. (Sigismund). In the last year of his 50-year reign the unrest among the Szekler-Hungarian and Wallachian peasantry finally erupted in a widespread revolt in 1437; however, it was cruelly suppressed, after the three dominant “nations”, during a meeting at Kápolna (in County Szolnok-Doboka), solemnly renewed their union in the Unio trium nationum; its role in the constitutional law of the land, remained in force until 1848. During the regency of János Hunyadi (1446-1452) and the otherwise golden age of King Mátyás' (Matthias Corvinus) reign (1458-1490), the serf-conditions of the Szekler and Wallachian peasantry in Transylvania became increasingly entrenched.

The defeat of the Hungarian army, fighting against the huge forces of Suleiman the Magnificent in the Battle of Mohács in 1526, had far-reaching consequences: János (John) Zápolya (Szapolyai), Voivode of Transylvania at the time, with his considerable military strength, succeeded in having himself elected King of Hungary as János I (John) (1526-1540) in opposition to Ferdinand I (1526-1564) of the Habsburg party. Zápolya received the support of the Sultan. Later, King János I (John) tried to make peace with Ferdinand, with the diplomatic help of Friar (Frater) György (George) (the later Cardinal Martinuzzi). This resulted in the Treaty of Nagyvárad in 1538, by which they recognized each other's kingship and territory. In 1514 it was János Zápolya and István (Stephen) Báthory who put down the peasant rebellion at Temesvár, executing its leader, György (George) Dózsa and his men. When Zápolya died in 1540, the Sultan's forces overran the central part of Hungary, even taking Buda in 1541 by resorting to a ruse. Henceforth, Historic Hungary of the Carpathian Basin was divided into three parts: the western part under Austrian Habsburg rule, central Hungary under Ottoman Turkish rule, and semi-independent Transylvania in the east, where Habsburg and Turkish influences fought for supremacy for two centuries. The Hungarian nobles of Transylvania were forced to resort to a policy of duplicity in order to preserve their independence. King János II (John) (John Sigismund, Zápolya's son) (1540-1570) put down the Szekler rebellion in 1562. As a result of his skilful diplomacy, the Sultan recognized the independence of Transylvania in the Peace of Adrianople in 1568. In the same year the Diet of Torda declared the liberty of conscience in a speech by Ferenc (Francis) Dávid, the apostle of Unitarianism. The Báthory family came to power in 1571 as Princes of Transylvania under Ottoman Turkish suzerainty until 1602, except for the ephemeral interlude (one year) by Michael the Brave, Prince of Wallachia as governor of Transylvania and Prince of Wallachia and Moldavia, briefly uniting all the Vlach-populated lands (he defeated Cardinal András (Andrew) Báthory in 1599, Zsigmond (Sigismund) Báthory in 1600, finally to be assassinated by the imperial general Basta's men in 1601). In 1604, Prince István (Stephen) Bocskai led an uprising against Habsburg rule; in 1606 Emperor Ferdinand I. recognized him as Prince of Transylvania. Under his successors, particularly during the reign of Prince Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen (1613-1629) and Prince György (George) Rákóczi I, (1630-1648), Transylvania experienced its golden age politically, economically, culturally and religiously. Despite the feudalistic conditions, the Principality was the chief center of humanism; book-printing was in full swing; it was the strongest bulwark of Protestantism in Europe east of Vienna, and the only country in Europe in the 17th century, where Roman Catholics, Calvinists, Lutherans and Unitarians lived in mutual tolerance; only the Greek-Orthodox Romanians were excluded from this policy of equal rights. The rule of the Princes of Transylvania proved to be the most important defense for the Hungarian people, especially against the Habsburgs, making use of high-level foreign alliances and returning Transylvania to the lands of the Holy Crown of St. István. However, the Habsburg rulers continued to administer it as a Principality (under Prince Michael Apafi (1661-1690); Emperor Leopold's Diploma of 1690 (Diploma Leopoldinum) secured the rights of the Transylvanian "nations" and the various churches; in this kind of governing activity usually a Transylvanian magnate stood at the helm of the seat (gubernium) of government.

From the end of the 18th century, the main question was how and when the unification (re-union) with Hungary could be achieved. From 1711 on, the whole of the 18th century was characterized by an ever-increasing absolutistic Habsburg rule over Hungary, including Transylvania: Hungary's alliance with Turkey under Imre Thököly's princship, as well as with France under Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II, proved fatal to its independence. The "Siculicidium" (the bloodbath at Mádéfalva) at the hands of the Austrian troops during Maria Theresia's rule, took place on 7 January 1764, when the unarmed gathering of several hundred villagers, offering no resistance, were massacred as a reprisal for the men folk refusing to be enlisted for border-defense. The Proclamation of Transylvania (in 1765) as a Grand Principality was only a formality; it did not change the sorry situation. The Horea-Cloșca peasant uprising of 1784 was put down by the Austrian army sent to the Transylvanian Ore Mountains by Emperor József II (Joseph) (1780-1790). Of the three leaders, two (Horea and Cloșca) were condemned to the wheel; the sentence was carried out in Gyulafehérvár on 18 February 1785, in the presence of a huge assembly of peasants; the third leader, Crișan took his own life in prison. At the same time, the old spirit of Transylvanian independence (so much fostered by Magyars, Szeklers, Saxons and Wallachians) was gradually broken down under the sheer weight of Austrian bureaucracy. In 1791, the Wallachians petitioned Emperor Leopold II (Lipót II) (1790-1792) for recognition as the fourth "nation" and for religious equality (Supplex Libellus Valachorum), stating among others, that the Wallachian population of Transylvania was more numerous than any of the other three "nations". The Transylvanian Diet rejected their demands and the Wallachians were restored to their old status. The unification issue only became a reality in the diet of 29 May 1848, during the War of Independence against the Habsburg rule, led by Lajos (Louis) Kossuth and his Hungarian army; the abolition of serfdom was promised to the Wallachians if they supported the Hungarians against the Habsburgs. The Wallachians rejected this offer and rose against the Hungarian state. This resulted in bitter fighting during 1849. The issue of the union was put aside when Hungary lost this war, followed by the Habsburg oppression with a military government (1849-1860), which affected Hungarians and Wallachians alike; only the Saxons found it fair. The Compromise (Ausgleich) of 1867 between the Habsburg ruler and Hungary finally brought the union to fruition: Transylvania became an integral part of the Hungarian state until 1918, in the peaceful era of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy.

Half-way through World War I, when Romania declared war on the Central Powers, joining the Allied side on 27 August 1916 after two years of vacillation (to decide on which side to enter and which side would bring more gain), Romanian forces occupied some parts of Transylvania but, by the end of October 1916, after bloody fighting, the Austro-Hungarian and German troops retook almost all the occupied areas. After the end of World War I, in 1918, the Transylvanian Romanians organized an ad hoc Convention of Gyulafehérvár (Alba-Iulia) of Transylvanian Romanians on 1 December 1918, without the invitation of fellow nations of Transylvania: Hungarians, Szeklers and Saxons, where they one-sidedly proclaimed their union with Romania, and the Romanian Army immediately invaded Transylvania. Transylvania was simply seized by Romania and shortly afterwards ceded by Hungary in the Treaty of Trianon (4 June 1920). Hungary was understandably devastated by the drastic measures and territorial losses imposed by the Treaty. Hungary, a thousand-year Kingdom, became the victim of France's insistence on her anti-German political strategy and her strive for European hegemony. In this process France successfully destroyed Hungary by creating independent states for nationalities of Hungary (Slovaks, Serbs, and Romans of Transylvania were added to Romania). The new states in turn accepted France's hegemony over Europe.

Suddenly, about 3.3 million Hungarians living in Northern, Southern and Eastern Hungary (Transylvania and the Partium and Banat areas) found themselves under the rule of foreign newly created states (Czechoslovakia, Serb-Croat-Slovene Kingdom, later Yugoslavia, and Romania) that, at that time, were well below their own standard in statecraft, administration, culture, language, religion and experience.

To illustrate Hungarians' life subjected to the successor states, let it be mentioned the case of Romania. The very name "Rumania" (now Romania) was first coined and suggested to Bismarck (for adoption for the Romanians) by the Hungarian Foreign Minister, Count Gyula (Julius) Andrássy as recently as 1878, at the Congress of Berlin, since prior to that year only Romanian principalities (Wallachia, Moldavia) existed, without a name for the three regions combined, an area which roughly corresponded to the ancient "Dacian kingdom". Not only were the estates of the Hungarian magnates and feudal lords simply expropriated, but also those of Hungarian farmers; distribution of the lands to the Romanian peasants followed in the land reform of 1922. The school and church self-government was discontinued. Serious friction between Hungary and Romania was caused by the superimposition of Romanian culture; for several years, the Hungarians in Transylvania were in a state of stunned political paralysis. Only in 1922 did they start a political group: the Hungarian National Party, while the Romanian Liberal Party in power worked until 1928 to introduce laws dealing with education and culture for the integration of Transylvania into the framework of the Romanian state. Hungarian agitation for border revision and even return of Transylvania to Hungary was gaining momentum. During World War II, the northern (more Hungarian-populated) part of Transylvania was re-annexed to Hungary in 1940, as a result of the decision of the Second Vienna Award arranged by Italy and Germany. However, it was returned to Romania after World War II, as a reward to Romania for changing sides on 23 August 1944, and attacking (back-stabbing) the German armies fighting on the southern flank of the Soviet-Russian front. A large proportion of the Transylvanian Saxons fled to Germany before the arrival of the Soviet army. From 1952, for a few years, the Szekler area of Transylvania was declared the Mureş-Magyar Autonomous Region for the purpose of local self-government, with a population of about one million. This was abolished a few years later, in 1968. Toward the end of the 20th century, the Romanian oppression of the Hungarian minority eased somewhat after the downfall of the hard-line Communist rule (which stopped Ceausescu's whole-sale destruction of villages in Transylvania), and because of the necessity (early in the 21st century) of abandoning nationalistic policies by protecting and cultivating, not assimilating, national minorities, in order to enable Romania to enter the European Union. When this was realized, Romania found a way to continue to keep almost 2 million Hungarians under strict Romanian control, not even considering granting them territorial autonomy, which they had already had for a while after World War II, and the assimilation of Hungarians is still continuing unabatedly – everywhere where Hungarians live under foreign states in the former Historic Hungary. – B: 1068, 2026, T: 7456. → Hungary, History of; Trianon Peace Treaty; Vienna Award II; Paris Peace Treaty; Atrocities against Hungarians; Transylvanian Vlach Peasant Uprising; Most of the names and events mentioned above have their own entry.

Transylvania, Inner Erdély – It is the Seven Counties of Historical Transylvania with Szeklerland and three smaller territories of mixed population. The three northern counties are: Inner-Szolnok, Doboka and Kolozs, the middle one is Torda, and the three southern counties are Hunyad, Fehér and Küküllő in part. – B: 1020, T: 7672.

Transylvanian (Erdély) Goldsmith's Art – The most important goldsmith center in the Carpathian Basin, especially during the 17th century, was Transylvania (Erdély, now Romania). During this period, the reigning princes ordered richly decorated and exquisite works from their goldsmiths. In 1640, Reigning Prince György (George) Rákóczi I (1630-1648), had an enameled gold cup, which contained the Passion scenes in 18 medallions. The creator of this cup was goldsmith István (Stephen) Brózer from Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). In 1687, Mihály (Michael) Apafi I (1662-1690) ordered the famous Teleki Cup from master György (George) Belényessy. – B: 1020, T: 7673.

Transylvanian Helicon (Erdélyi Helikon) – Title of the Association of the Hungarian writers of Transylvania (Erdély, now Romania). As a periodical, the Transylvanian Helicon was founded on 18 July 1926, at the Kemény castle of Marosvécs (now Brâncovenesti, Romania), on the initiative of Baron János (John) Kemény. The founders were Lajos (Louis) Áprily, Count Miklós (Nicholas) Bánffy, Károly (Charles) Kós, Károly (Charles) Molter, József (Joseph) Nyirő and Áron (Aaron) Tamási. Starting with this event, they came together once a year under the leadership of Miklós Bánffy, who was its creator, organizer and patron. They published a series of books of Transylvanian Hungarian writers in white cloth covers. Bánffy had an important role in the Hungarian literary life of Transylvania until 1944. – B: 1150, 1078, 1230, 11 3240.→Áprily, Lajos; Bánffy, Count Miklós; Kemény, Baron János; Kós, Károly; Molter, Károly; Nyíró, József; Tamási, Áron.

Transylvanian Homes – The East-European or family-type homes with an interior ceramic oven had certain local variations. Some varieties had a fireplace to heat the house. These houses had high roofs with wooden shingle covers. They built these types across the border from Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) in neighboring Moldavia, and were mentioned in 16th century written sources. They had one or two rooms in the early times. Later in the 17th or 18th centuries, they built larger houses with four or five rooms. The house had a peculiar feature: the front room was open. Only a wooden grate wall closed it, and sometimes it continued into a porch. – B: 1133, T: 7663.

Transylvanian Hungarian Lexicological Thesaurus – Planned for twelve or more volumes (vol. I, 1975, vol. 12, 1998), the work became the greatest achievement of 20th century Hungarian philology in Transylvanian Hungarian intellectual life of Romania. Professor Attila T. Szabó (1906-1987) gathered the material over several decades and edited the volumes. The entries also include their Romanian and German meanings. The illustrative sentences, serving the interpretation of the headwords, are from the 15-19th centuries. They are precious resources not only for philology but also for historical geography and cultural history as well. – B: 0882, T: 3240, 7456.→Szabó, T. Attila.

Transylvanian (Southern) Hungarians – Hungarians living south of the River Maros and the Nagyöküllő Mountain, and west of Szeklerland (Székelyföld). The component parts of their population are: Hungarians from County Hunyad, Moldavian (csángó) Hungarians from Déva, and from Hétfalu. These Hungarian groups originated even before the Árpadian Age, and their settlements are connected with the early history of the Szeklers. In the Middle Ages, they lived on a larger territory; however, frequent wars in the 16th and 17th centuries reduced their population. Later the population was further decreased by Romanian persecution and assimilation. Nowadays a large number of Hungarians live in the southern Transylvanian Saxon towns: Brassó (Braşov), Medgyes, (Mediaş), Nagyszeben (Sibiu), and Segesvár (Sighişoara), now all in Romania. – B: 1134, T: 7672.→Szeklers; Csángó; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Transylvanian Union – In 1848, the Transylvanian Grand Principality and Hungary, both under Habsburg rule, mutually agreed to reunite. After repressing the Hungarian War of Independence (1848-1849), the Habsburg Dynasty did not acknowledge this Union; only following the Compromise of 1867 did the Union come into force again. On 30 May 1898, there was a 50th anniversary celebration of the Transylvanian Union declaration in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). On this occasion a memorial plaque was placed on the Redoubt in Kolozsvár and it remained there until 1920, when the Romanians removed it. – B: 0942, 1020, T: 7672.

Transylvanian Vlach Peasant Uprising (Horea-Closca Uprising) – The 18th century’s biggest peasant revolt in Hungary was led in 1784 by Nicolae Horea, Ion Closca and Gheorghe Crisan, the Vlach mountain herdsmen. Some thirty thousand Vlach peasants and shepherds participated in this revolt that spread over Zaránd, Hunyad, Fehér, Torda and Kolozs counties. The reason of this uprising was the military conscription ordered by King József II (Joseph) (1780-1790). In many cases, designated army officers instigated the unsatisfied crowd against county squires. Among them was Lieutenant Colonel Karp who, together with Horea’s son, Juon, traveled from village to village to instigate people. Thereupon, extermination of Hungarians became the most important mission of Horea, who overran Hungarian villages one after another. After this, on 16 December 1784, King József II sent Lieutenant General Fábri to suppress the revolt. The revolt resulted in the death of about 4000 Hungarians and 1500 Vlachs. The three leaders were caught on 30 January 1785, after Greek Orthodox priests from Abrudkerpenyés (now Abrud-Sad) and Nagylupsa (now Lupşa) denounced them. The leaders were sentenced to death by the Imperial Judicature, which assembled in Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia), Romania. Crisan committed suicide in the prison on 3 February 1785. – B: 1078, 1031, T: 7672. → Atrocities against Hungarians; Transylvania; Hungary, History of.

Transylvania’s Coat of Arms – In 1596, Levinus Hulsius created a coat of arms for the Imperial Province of Transylvania, consisting of a shield party per fess (divided horizontally across the middle of the shield), with a rising eagle in the upper field and seven hills with towers on top in the lower field. He published it in his work “Chronologia”, issued in Nuremberg the same year. The seal from 1597 of Zsigmond (Sigismund) Báthory, Prince of Transylvania, reproduced the new coat of arms with some slight changes: in the upper field, the eagle was flanked by a sun and a moon and, in the lower field the hills were replaced by simple towers.

Transylvania's coat of arms, adopted by the Diet of 1659, represents the constituent nations who, from 1558, were subjects of officially accepted religions in the region (Roman Catholics, Calvinists, Lutheran, and Unitarians), while Orthodox Romanians were simply tolerated. The Coat of Arms depicts: (1) On a blue background, a black Turul Bird facing dexter, with gold bill and red tongue representing the majority, which was mainly Magyar; (2) The Sun (dexter) and the crescent Moon (sinister) representing the Szeklers, kin of the Magyars; (3) A red dividing band (originally not part of the coat of arms); (4) Seven red towers with black doors in two series (4+3) on a gold background representing the seven fortified cities of the Transylvanian Saxons - the display is connected with the German name of Transylvania - Siebenbürgen (“Seven Fortresses”). (5) The red dividing band was used for the first time by Prince Mihály (Michael) I Apafi, and its first variant was featured on gold coins he issued in 1666.

On the coat of arms used after 1765 was the new Grand Principality Crown, awarded by Empress Maria Theresa of Austria, and two women supporters representing abundance (dexter) and justice (sinister); the figures were removed in 1848, when Transylvania was reunited with the Kingdom of Hungary. The historic coat of arms was used within the coat of arms of the Hungarian Kingdom from 1867, after the Compromise, and until 1949. – B: 1031, 1020, T: 1031, 7103.

Treaty of Eternal Friendship with Yugoslavia – Between the two world wars the standing foreign policy of consecutive Hungarian governments was to recover by peaceful means, that is, by negotiations, at least those territories with Hungarian ethnic majority, lost to the neighboring states by the Dictated Trianon Treaty on 4 June 1920. The First and the Second Vienna Awards were achieved by this policy in 1938 and 1940 respectively. Count Pál (Paul) Teleki, Prime Minister of Hungary, would have liked to employ the same method of negotiation in order to solve disputed questions with regard to Yugoslavia. On 12 December 1940, Hungary reached a mutually acceptable treaty with Yugoslavia, called the “Treaty of eternal friendship”; but it was not passed by the Yugoslav parliament. On 26 March 1941, Yugoslavia joined the Tripartite Pact with the Axis Powers. However, on 27 March, a coup d'état occurred in Yugoslavia. The new pro-western Yugoslav Government annulled the paraphrased treaty. Following this, Hitler decided to attack Yugoslavia and demanded that Hungary assist. Now Count Teleki faced a dilemma: if he complied, he would drag Hungary into the conflict that would ultimately end in disaster for Hungary; if he denied Hitler’s demand, he would risk the German occupation of Hungary. It was too much for Teleki to bear, and on 3 April 1941, he committed suicide (which is still a debatable issue). Although a politically futile gesture, Winston Churchill, on hearing of his death, said that an empty chair for him would be reserved at the future peace conference. However, at the Paris Peace Conference in 1947, the promised chair was not there, only the reinstatement of the Trianon Peace Dictate. – B: 1032, T: 7103.→Teleki, Count Pál; Trianon Peace Treaty; World War II, Hungary in; Churchill, Sir Winston; Paris Peace Treaty.

Tree of Life (Életfa) – (1) In Hungarian folklore it is a decorated branch symbolizing life, fecundity, and the extended family or clan. It was mainly used at weddings. It had different names in various districts of the country, like “nuptial branch” “green branch”, etc. Strong mutual influence is shown between the wedding cake and a decorated tree branch dipped into dough. In its original form, a dry or green branch was decorated with apples or nuts, symbolizing fecundity. In some places it is used when calling the bride, who is put on a cart and brought to the groom’s house in a procession, where the best man proposes a toast. The branch is placed on the table and the fruit eaten at the end of the supper.

(2) Well-known cultic symbol that can be found in some folk art drawings as well as in fables. The birth of plants, growth, ripening and fading happens in the sight of men and it is perfectly similar to the life-form of humanity. Yet, plants are reborn in the spring, but men come to the end forever with death. There is the clue to the idea of the Tree of Life: the perpetual regeneration of vegetation is transferred to man in order to remove the horror of death and to attain the desired eternal life. In developing cultures it is believed that a plant has a soul. Good or evil spirits live in it. This explains the notion of the water of life, because, from the ferment of the tree, drinks are made, and with their drugging effect on the mind, they help people to forget the sad end of life. This interpretation in a milder form is the veneration of springs flowing from the base of the trees.

The sacred tree of Dionysus, the grape vine, is another type of veneration of the Tree of Life; this was embroidered on the Royal Hungarian Coronation Robe. The Tree of Life was the center of the ancient myths. The Myth of the Moon was followed later by the Myth of the Sun. These two later coalesced, either one or the other became more important. The number of the branches on the Tree of Life is strictly regulated. The most frequent is known in three divisions, but sometimes in multiples of three. These myths are connected with numbers, and thus mythical numbers are formed. We find this among several nations, also among Hungarians, and even nowadays they exert strong influence on their minds. The most ancient and primitive one is connected with the number two, found now only in the southern hemisphere. This was followed by the Moon Myth; its cultic number is three. This was the basic myth of the whole of Europe, Central Asia and Africa. Here, the Moon is male, the Sun female, brother and sister. The cultic signs were present in the ancestral religion of the Hungarians, in peasant folk art, and in our religious manifestations. This was followed by the Sun Myth, where the number four is dominant. There the genders change role, man and woman become husband and wife. The trinity-system of old age culture was based on this cult; nevertheless, the trinity concept of the Moon cult is still present in the cultic past and present in Hungarian folklore. Also in religious Christian practice of the Hungarians, the sign of the Sun Myth reappears in the foreground.

(3) The present form of the Tree of Life was developed in Mesopotamia; its creative form is the palmetto, similar to a lotus bud. The flower with many petals accommodates the numerical order of three, proving its origin from the Moon cult. Typical representation of the Tree of Life is the tree with a long stalk crowned by a palmetto or a complicated cage-construction. In the Hungarian countryside, one could observe the maypole, or in hamlets a branched tree, on the top of which there is a figure, symbolizing a bird. This is a shamanic symbol of the tree reaching the sky with a bird on the top, the symbol of the soul. At the center of the myth stands the sacred Tree of Life, its fruit and the spring flowing from the base, giving eternal life to all those who can reach it; but this can be achieved only by the chosen hero, usually the third son. According to the myth, which takes its origin from Mesopotamia, the sacred Tree of Life was guarded in Paradise by fate guards so that only the elect should reach the water of life. These fate guard figures were originally three in number, according to the Moon Myth; later the adversary, the evil one joined them, so then the number increased to four, adjusting to the Sun Myth. The four fate figures were represented in the form of leafy rosette-like lotus flowers, which in Christian transformation became the form of the Maltese crown. The fate-figures are often represented as birds, and as guardians of the sacred tree, they stood on both sides of the tree. They could be replaced by dragons, wild beasts or snakes. The bird has one more function, the stealing of the fruit of the tree, when the bird is placed between the leaves. In Europe, the representation of the Tree of Life had two forms. One is the Dionysus Tree of Life. Its characteristic form is the grapevine emerging from the two-eared kantharos, with leaves, bunches of fruits, birds picking on them. This form is known mostly in the southern, Latin countries. In the original Sassanid art the large-stalked tree became better known in the northern part of Europe, and also among Hungarians. On both sides of the tree are birds; at the base of the tree is a triangular hole, which stores the fountain of life. Hungarian folk art never represented space, yet it gave up its static character and brought movement to the otherwise immovable space connecting East and West. The Tree of Life was so named also in the history of religions in ancient times. General sources give this name to life-trees that are venerated in tree worship, when their fate was symbolically connected with a particular person. – B: 1134, 1020, T: 7682.

Tree Reaching to the Sky (Égigérő fa) – In shamanistic imagination, a story-type with an independent motive with variations, sometimes just a frame to a fable. The tall poplar tree reaching to the sky is a typical beginning of a fable. The story goes that the storyteller learned the story from the 77th fold of the pleated skirt hanging on the 77th branch of the tree. According to Sándor (Alexander) Solymossy and Kálmán (Coloman) Diószegi, the Hungarians preserved the shamanistic image when entering their present land (the Carpathian Basin) from the East, identifying it with the tree of shamanistic rite. In one variation the hero walks up the stairs cut into the trunk of the tree and encounters three old women: the mothers of the Sun, Moon and Stars, who inquire about the purpose of his journey. The hero tells them that he was sent by the old king to bring down the fruit of eternal youth, but he – in several variations – forgets about it, or only belatedly remembers, after the recovery of the captured princess, when he casts the fruit down to earth at the end of the story. – B: 1134, T: 7682.→Shaman; Solymossy, Sándor.

Trefort, Ágoston Ádám Ignác (Augustine, Ignatius) (Homonna, now Humenné, Slovakia, 7 February 1817 - Budapest, 22 August 1888) – Cultural politician and publicist. He studied Law, and after some travels abroad, he was mainly involved in the problems of banks, railways and the reform of towns. Prior to 1848, he was active as a publicist in the paper Pest News (Pesti Hírlap). He belonged to the Centralists within the Reform Opposition. In the 1843-1844 Diet he was a delegate from County Zólyom. In the 1848-1849 Revolution and War of Independence, he was Undersecretary of State for agricultural, industrial and commercial matters. After the defeat of the war, he left Hungary, together with József (Joseph) Baron Eötvös. From 1850, he lived in seclusion on his landed property at Csabacsüd, County Békés. In 1860 he became Sub-prefect in County Békés and, in 1861, he became a Member of Parliament. In 1863, together with Eötvös, he launched the paper Political Weekly (Politikai Hetilap). About the time of the Compromise (1867), he was a member of the Deák Party. From 1872 until his death, he was Minister of Education and Religion in the Governments of M. Lónyay, J. Szlávy, I. Bittó, B. Wenckheim and Kálmán (Coloman) Tisza, and he was also Minister of Agriculture, Industry and Commerce. He took numerous measures in cultural politics to support secondary and higher education. He supported the Finno-Hungarian common linguistic origin, and made it the official theory. He pressed for the construction of the University Library, and organized the National Committee of Public Monuments. His 1883 secondary-school reform provided for the introduction of teaching compulsory German. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding (1841), honorary (1867) and director (1874). His works include The Bank Issue (Bankügy) (1842); Memorial Orations and Essays (Emlékbeszédek és tanulmányok) (1881), and Speeches and Correspondence (Beszédek és levelek) (1888). A Street in Budapest bears his name. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Andrássy, Count Gyula (1).

Trencsényi Waldapfel, Imre (Emeric) (Budapest, 16 June 1908 - Budapest, 3 June 1970) – Classical philologist, literary and religious historian. In 1932 he obtained a Doctorate specializing in Hungarian, Latin and Greek languages. He was a member of Stemma, a group of young writers and academics of ancient history, led by Károly Kerényi. Between 1938 and 1946, he was scientific editor for the journal the New Times (Új Idők), and contributed to the Lexicon by the same name. From 1946 to 1948, he worked for the Public Education Center in Budapest, and had his own column in the newspaper, New Word (Új szó). Between 1948 and 1950 he was Professor and President of the University of Szeged. From 1950 until his death, he was head instructor of the Institute of Latin-Greek Philology at the University of Budapest. From 1950 until 1953, he was President of that University. He edited many works, including the periodical Argonauts (Argonauták) in 1937 and 1938; an illustrated series of books under the title Officina (1937; Horatius Noster (1935)); the Pastoral Hungarian Vergil (Pásztori Magyar Vergilius) (1938); the Anthology of World Literature (Világirodalmi antológia) (1952 - 1958); the Acta Antiqua from 1950; the series Hungarian Science (Magyar Tudomány), and Tales and Legends (Regék és mondák) between 1956 and 1965. He published about 400 studies with themes ranging from Hesiod to Gorky, and from János Küküllei to Attila József. Trencsényi Wladapfel's life's work is an inseparable mixture composed of scientific, educational and literary activities. Most of his writings focus on Greco-Latin antiquity. He studied the influence of Latin and Hungarian literature on each other. He contributed significantly to the introduction of classical humanist literature to Hungarian audiences through publications such as the Greek Literary History (Görög irodalomtörténet) in 1944, and the Classical Portraits series (Klasszikus arcképek) of 1964. His philosophical views are expressed in Erasmus and His Hungarian Friends (Erasmus és magyar barátai) (1941). He also conducted studies into religious history: Mythology (Mitológia) (1956), and Studies of Religious History (Vallástörténeti tanulmányok) (1959). His other works include Greco-Roman Mythology (Görög-római mitológia), (1936); Humanism and Marxism (Humanizmus és marxizmus) (1948); Greek Myths (Görög regék) (1967); Erasmus: Friendly Discussions (Erasmus: Nyájas beszélgetések) (1967), and You Are Human (Ember vagy) (1979). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences and recipient of the Baumgartner Prize (1949), as well as the State Prize (1970). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7667.→Kerényi, Károly; József, Attila.

Triangle Symbol – An ancient cultic form, symbol of fertility, or of Mother Earth. A fair example of this is the Venus of Kőkénydomb, excavated by János (John) Banner in Hódmezővásárhely around 1940. The triangle is also a pictograph, meaning “woman”. – B: 1230, T: 7617.

Trianon Peace Treaty – The Treaty – in fact a dictate – forced on Hungary by the Allied and Associated Powers, signed at the Grand Trianon Palace of Versailles on 4 June 1920. For Hungary it closed World War I, which began with the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy's declaration of war, and which ended for Hungary with her signing of the armistice agreement on 3 November 1918 at Padua, Italy. Of all the defeated nations, the victors of World War I punished Hungary the most severely. Neither Austria, who started the war, nor Germany, the leader of the Central Powers, were truncated to the drastic extent Hungary was, which lost 2/3rd of its historical territory and 1/3rd of its Hungarian (Magyar) compatriots.

The historical background to the Peace Treaty of Trianon: Its roots reach back to the time when the Ottoman Turkish Empire began its conquest of the Balkans, commenced after the fall of Constantinople (Byzantium), and the Eastern Roman Empire, in 1453, causing the flight of a great number of Vlachs (Wallachians, Rumunyi, later Rumanians, Roumanians, recently Romanians), Slovaks and Serbs into Hungary. The massive immigration of nationalities was further reinforced when, after 150 years of Turkish rule (1526-1686), and after the expulsion of the Turks (1699), the Austrian Government permitted the settlement of large numbers of Serbs and other nationalities in the depopulated regions. The neighbors of Hungary considered the presence of the descendants of these refugee or immigrant groups, whose numbers had swollen over the centuries, as the legal basis for their territorial claims against Hungary. The time to place their claim arrived after World War I. For example, in the 14th century, there were only 389 Vlach villages in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania); the Vlach population in 1700 was only 250,000; by 1780 it had increased to 787,000; in 1910 to 1,300,000; by 1992, Romanians of Transylvania amounted to 5,392,400.

Already on 10 April 1915, Eduard Beneš, leader of the Czechoslovak independence movement, prepared and presented to the British Foreign Office a quite detailed plan. In it he intended to offer the throne of a future Czecho-Slovak state to a Russian prince. In the remaining part of Hungary, he insisted on the creation of a Slavic corridor to connect Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia. This corridor would have taken about one-third of Transdanubia (Dunántúl), the region of western Hungary extending from the Austrian border to the Bakony Mountains. He offered the use of this area to the British for a future military action against Germany.

On 14 November 1915, the Czech Foreign Committee was formed in Paris. Its leaders were Eduard Beneš, G. Thomas Masaryk and Milan Rastislav Štefánik. Their purpose was the creation of an independent Czechoslovak state. On 13 February 1916, this committee was transformed into the Czechoslovak National Council. The Central Powers, which included the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy as well, lost World War I; but at the end of the war, the territory of Hungary was free of enemy soldiers, except prisoners of war. For this reason, in the 3 November 1918 armistice agreement signed in Padua by General Weber on the side of the Monarchy and by Adamo Diaz on the side of the Entente, it was stipulated that the armies of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy should be withdrawn to the 1914 borders. For the Monarchy this armistice agreement ended World War I.

A few days before, on 31 October 1918, the so-called “Aster revolution” (Őszirózsás Forradalom) overthrew the Hungarian Government and Béla Linder, the new Minister of Defense, announced on 1 November 1918 that he would return every soldier to his family “since there is no reason to expect enemy attacks”. On the news of the dissolution of the Hungarian army of 1.5 million – returned from the front lines in an orderly manner – the Supreme Council of the Entente recalled General Diaz and revoked the armistice agreement signed four days earlier.

On 7 November 1918, Count Mihály (Michael) Károlyi, the new Prime Minister, led a delegation formed from the members of the National Council, the Budapest Workers’ Council and the Military Council to Belgrade, Serbia, to conduct further armistice negotiations with General Luis-Felix F. d’Esperey, the commander-in-chief of the Eastern front of the Entente. The General presented a list of 18 demands to Károlyi, including the drawing up of a new demarcation line on Hungary’s territory, which the Hungarian delegation found unacceptable and refused to sign. On the same day – on the instruction of Misic, the Serbian chief of staff – the 1st and 2nd Serbian armies began the occupation of Szerémség (a southern border region of Hungary), Slavonia, Croatia, Bosnia-Herzegovina and Dalmatia, as well as the western part of the Bánság (Banate) and the southern part of the Bácska (Backa).

On 8 November 1918, on the order of the provisional Czech government, the Czech troops – which until then had fought on the Austrian side – entered Hungarian territory. The same day, on the order of the new Ministry of Defense, Béla Linder began the de-commissioning of all non-professional officers and privates. With this order Linder placed the whole country at the mercy of the enemies attacking Hungary from all sides. Also on the same day began the repatriation of the prisoners of war. During November, 270,000 Russian and 48,000 Italian and Serbian prisoners of war left the country.

On 11 November 1918, the Hungarian National Council announced the establishment of an independent Hungarian Democratic Republic. Official proclamation of the Republic was on 16 November 1918, and its President was Count Mihály (Michael) Károlyi, who struggled to establish the new government's authority and to control the country.

On 17 November 1918, the Austrian State Council announced its territorial claims for Western Hungary. On the same day, the leaders of the Hungarian section of the Russian Communist (Bolshevik) Party – mostly former Hungarian POWs in Russia – who were trained in Moscow, arrived in Budapest.

On 20 November 1918, the proclamation of the Romanian National Council announced Romania's claim to the Romanian inhabited areas of Hungary. These areas included all of Transylvania (Erdély), the Banate (Bánság) and all the territories of Arad, Bihar, Szatmár and Szilágy counties, as well as parts of Békés, Csongrád and Csanád counties, forming the eastern part of the Great Hungarian Plain.

On 1 December 1918, a hastily convened ad hoc 'National Assembly' of the Transylvanian Romanians at Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia, Romania) one-sidedly proclaimed Transylvania's union with Romania. Hungarians, Szeklers and Saxons in Transylvania were not even invited to the Assembly, although, with other minorities, they represented almost 50 % of the Transylvanian population.

On 3 December 1918, Colonel Ferdinand Vix of France, the leader of the Entente Military Commission in Budapest, in his communiqué for the Hungarian Government, demanded the evacuation of Northern Hungary (Felvidék and Kárpátalja) and its cession to Czechoslovakia.

On 20 February 1919, Colonel Vix presented further demands to the Hungarian Government, whose response was that these demands could not be fulfilled. In fact, the successor states with French support, occupied various areas of Hungary before the signing of the peace treaty.

On 21 March 1919, the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic was established in Budapest with a Communist agenda.

On 28 March 1919, the Supreme Economic Council of the Entente decided to continue Hungary's economic blockade.

On 30 March 1919, Foreign Affairs Commissar, Béla Kun, notified the Czechoslovak, Romanian and Serbian governments by telegram that, in the name of the Hungarian Soviet Republic, he recognized their territorial demands. In the meantime, the Czech Legion had invaded Northern Hungary (Felvidék, Kárpátalja), the Romanian army had occupied Transylvania and the Banate (Erdély, Bánát) and the Serbian army had moved into Southern Hungary, Croatia and Voivodina (Horvátország, Vajdaság). At the beginning of April, the Hungarian Soviet Republic began the organization of the Hungarian Red Army, asking the de-commissioned army officers to return to active duty. The Red Army succeeded in stemming the advance of the Romanian armies and ejecting most of the Czechs from the country. The personal and telephone request of the Hungarian Soviet Government to Lenin for military aid produced no tangible results, since the Bolsheviks' hold on power in Russia was still tenuous at this time.

On 21 July 1919, the Peace Conference awarded a strip of Western Hungary, the Órvidék, now Burgenland, to Austria.

Since the Entente demanded the end of Red rule in Hungary on 1 August 1919, the Revolutionary Governing Council resigned – after 133 days in power – and the Hungarian Soviet (Council) Republic ceased to exist.

On 4 August 1919, the Romanian troops moved into Budapest, where they remained until 13 November 1919. They occupied the main military and administrative buildings and offices and began the systematic looting of the occupied territory under their control. During their stay, they removed various goods, equipment and movable properties (e.g. railway carriages and locomotives) estimated to be worth about 3 billion and 150 million golden forints. Only the personal intervention of the Entente's Budapest representatives saved the historically and nationally significant collection of Budapest's museums, art galleries and libraries.

On 6 January 1920, led by Count Albert Apponyi, the Hungarian peace delegation arrived in Paris. From the railway station they were escorted to their hotel, the Chateau de Madrid, in Neuilly, which they could leave only with an escort. By treating them, and the representatives of the other defeated nations, as prisoners, the Allied Powers violated the age-old international tradition, according to which, after a war's end, the defeated parties should be afforded respectful treatment by the victors during the peace negotiations.

On 16 January 1920, at the sitting of the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference, Count Albert Károlyi asked for plebiscites in the settling of territorial questions; partly because his position regarding plebiscites came from the principle of "self-determination", which was one of the 14 points of American President Woodrow Wilson's Peace Plan, and partly because the plebiscite was still acceptable in international disputes.

It is an irony of fate that the Hungarian army, believing in Wilson's 'principle of self-determination' for all the nationalities, voluntarily disarmed in 1918, when there was not a single enemy soldier on Hungarian territory, while the successor states (the newly created Czechoslovakia, as well as Serbia and Romania) either did not participate in the war or did so ingloriously, they were regarded as "victorious states" by the "judges" of Versailles.

On 6 February 1920, the representatives of Romania, Czechoslovakia and the Serbo-Croatian-Slovenian Kingdom handed in a joined memorandum to the Peace Conference in which they outlined their territorial demands vis-a-vis Hungary and in which they ab ovo protested against the plebiscites requested by Hungary. Forester Bowill, the English historian, who had visited Hungary on numerous occasions, stated publicly that: "The ambition and hunger of the neighboring countries is insatiable. It is not the minorities living in Hungary, but those avaricious elements outside the borders who hanker after the treasures of Hungarian land". The Slovak National Council, formed on 30 October 1918 at Eperjes (now Presov, Slovakia), decided against a union with the Czechs and expressed their wish to maintain their political unity with Hungary. Similarly, on 4 December 1918, the Slovak National Assembly at Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) resolved that the Slovak people wished to live in community with the Hungarian people. Also, the Sejm, formed at Ungvár (now Uzhhorod, Sub-Carpathia, Ukraine) declared its decision on 12 March 1919 to join Hungary. But none of these resolutions were taken into consideration at the Peace Conference. The population of the River Mura region in South-western Hungary expelled the Serbian troops on its own initiative.

An ad hoc Transylvanian Romanian Assembly in Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia, Romania) on 1 December 1918 one-sidedly proclaimed Transylvanian unity with Romania proper, although three weeks after the fateful Romanian meeting at Gyulafehérvár, Hungarians and Szeklers and even Romanians held a national assembly in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and proclaimed Transylvania's unity with Hungary, but to no avail, for the city was already surrounded by Romanian troops. Only the Transylvanian Saxons, at their meeting in Medgyes, approved Transylvania's incorporation into Romania, though they came to regret this decision gravely later on.

Eduard Beneš presented eleven memoranda to the Paris Peace Conference. In his memoirs he recollects: "...I began the preparation of our action alone,...almost everything impromptu, without a bibliography...", his memoranda was full of untruths; to support their claims, the Czechs falsified maps and statistics, which were accepted as authentic by the Peace Conference which – from the start – would not allow the discussion of the Hungarian point of view. To accomplish their plans, the Czechs paid off numerous publicists and semi-scientists. One of the best known was Seton Watson (Scotus Viator). Though ignorant of Hungary, which he never visited, and he spoke neither Hungarian nor any language of the nationalities of Hungary he was introduced in Paris as the foremost authority on Eastern and Central Europe. His opinion was decisive. After the war, in final payment, he received the only Masaryk academic chair at London University; naturally financed by Prague. Members of the Peace Conference accepted all the lies without exception. True, President Wilson had no idea where Transylvania was, but it is also true that, in the United States, every text-book from the elementary to the university level, from which the people of the United States could have learned about Hungarian geography or history, was written by Czech, French, German or Romanian authors and contained false information about Hungary; in addition to this, all of them displayed a clearly anti-Hungarian bias.

On 12 February 1920, the Hungarian Government responded to the Council of Ambassadors with a counter-proposal, which rejected the peace conditions. The Hungarian proposal advocated the holding of plebiscites in the territories under dispute, which was promised by President Wilson's Fourteen Points of Peace well before the end of the war.

The representatives of the victorious powers were as follows: David Lloyd George, England; George Benjamin Clemenceau, France; Thomas Woodrow Wilson, United States, and Vittorio Emanuele Orlando, Italy. Wilson, who had a less shortsighted view, did not wish to abolish the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, only to transform it. His main opponent was Clemenceau. In most questions though, Lloyd George agreed with Clemenceau and Orlando had no influence. Unknown to the public, Wilson suffered of serious illnesses resulting in fits during which he accused his French hosts of trying to poison him. Then, when his principles about the self-determination of nationalities were ignored, he left the Peace Conference. (Later on the USA signed separate peace treaties with the defeated states). When the Peace Conference officially opened, Clemenceau, who hated Hungarians, dictated every decision. The members of the Peace Conference were impotent in opposing Clemenceau, who wanted to create a Europe under French hegemony; with it he actually destroyed Europe and laid the foundation of World War II.

The Hungarian peace delegation received the final peace conditions from the representatives of the Entente on 6 May 1920. In his accompanying letter E. A. Millerand, the President of the Peace Conference, rejected the arguments of the Hungarian delegation, though at the same time he did not exclude the possibility of the peaceful modification of the borders at a later date – which never materialized.

The terms of the Trianon Peace Treaty: On 4 June 1920, in the Grand Trianon Palace at Versailles, the representatives of the Entente – with the exception of the United States – signed the peace agreement, in reality a peace dictate. Hungary could not refuse to sign the peace treaty, as did Turkey, another member of the Central Powers since, due to the Entente's economic blockade, the people of the country were starving and freezing in the middle of winter and the country's 1.5 million-strong army had been demobilized by the Mihály (Michael) Károlyi Government after the "Aster Revolution" of 1918.

The Peace Treaty legalized separation of Southern Hungary (Délidék), Northern Hungary or Upland (Felvidék and Kárpátalja), Transylvania (Erdély), and Croatia (Horvátország).

It restricted Hungary's armed forces to 35,000, prohibited general conscription, and limited the possession of private guns.

It obliged Hungary to pay for war damages in a form of reparations to be determined later. In international trade Hungary was to apply the principle of the "most favored nation" to the victorious powers.

To ensure Hungary's compliance with the terms of the Peace Treaty, the Allied Control Commission was dispatched to Hungary.

The dismemberment of the territory of Historic Hungary, including Croatia, expressed in square kilometers as follows: to Czechoslovakia 61,633 km<sup>2</sup> = 18.9%; to Poland 589 km<sup>2</sup> = 0.25%; to Romania 103,093 km<sup>2</sup> = 31.8%; to Yugoslavia from Hungary proper 20,551 km<sup>2</sup> = 6.3%, and from Croatia 42,541 km<sup>2</sup> = 13.1%; to Italy 21 km<sup>2</sup>, and to Austria 4,026 km<sup>2</sup> = 1.2%. For truncated Hungary remained only 92,963 km<sup>2</sup> = 28.5%.

The corresponding population figures were as follows: to Czechoslovakia 3,515,351 = 16.8%; to Poland 24,880 = 0.1%; to Romania 5,256,451 = 25.2%; to Yugoslavia from Hungary proper 1,510,897 = 7.2%, and from Croatia 2,621,954 = 12.6%; to Italy 49,806 = 0.2%, and to Austria 292,031 = 1.4%. In truncated Hungary there remained 7,615,117 = 36.5%.

Hungary lost 71.5% of her territory and 63.5% of her population. In other respects Hungary's losses were also dramatic: 61.4% of arable land, 88% of the forests, 62.1% of the railway lines, 64.5% of public roads, 55.7% of industry, 67% of the financial institutions, and all the gold, silver, copper and salt mines. Due to the total disregard of ethnographic borders, of the 13 million people detached in the severed regions 3.5 million were ethnic Hungarians.

The Peace Treaty of Trianon contained no reference as to the length of time its provisions should be maintained and enforced.

At the moment the Treaty was signed, in protest against the peace dictate, all the bells of Hungary began to toll. All traffic stopped for 10 minutes and shops, schools and universities were closed. The whole country began to mourn. Black flags were raised and black hung on public buildings. According to contemporary newspaper reports, with the bells of the country tolling for two hours, the Hungarians buried and mourned their past and future.

Trianon Peace Treaty, International reaction on: The Peace Treaty of Trianon, France, in 1920, created a widespread response in Europe. There were those looking for huge war indemnities and territorial gains, and enthusiastically praised and advocated the execution of the Trianon Peace Dictate. To achieve this goal, these groups employed tactics, which ranged from the falsification of history and maps to political intrigues and even briberies. There were, however, many moderate voices.

Andrew Hlinka, the Slovak leader declared in 1920 in the paper Narodne Novoti: "In spite of blackening propaganda the old Hungarian government gave us more than the Czech Republic, which is so alien to our hearts. You cannot forget a thousand years, and the memory of the old Hungarian homeland continues to live in our hearts".

Asquith, Herbert Henry, Prime Minister of Great Britain for 8 years, said in 1925: "This peace treaty is not the work of statesmen and is the result of serious and fatal errors".

Baldwin, Stanley Prime Minister of Great Britain, stated: "The peace of Europe came to an end on the day of the conclusion of the Peace Treaty of Trianon".

Bryce, Viscount James, a member of the British Parliament stated in 1921 that: "It was actually the Conference at Trianon which violated the rights of the minorities the most, because it passed judgment over their fate without any regard of their desires, having not even bothered to solicit their opinion. This peace treaty is no more than a shameful blemish on the sheets of history, brought about by some invisible evil hands. You really believe that this treaty will mean peace? On the contrary! It will sow the seeds of the next war in our age when peace is the chief desire of the world".

Chamberlain, Neville Prime Minister of Great Britain, declared in 1938 that: "The result of the Treaty of Trianon in Europe is not peace, but fear of a new war".

Churchill, Winston later called the treaty ending World War I: "a tragedy of universal consequences".

George, Lloyd, the English Prime Minister of Great Britain, one of the creators of the Peace of Trianon wrote on 25 March 1919 as follows: "There will never be peace in South-Eastern Europe, because inside the borders of Serbia, Czechoslovakia and Romania there will be large Hungarian irredentists desiring a return of their territories to Hungary. I wish that in making peace we should adhere to the principle that the nationalities should be joined to their mother countries. This humanitarian consideration should precede all economic, strategic and financial considerations".

He stated in his address on 7 October 1929 that: "The entire documentation furnished to us by our Allies at the peace conference was deceitful and lying".

He condemned again the spirit of the Treaty, when on 27 July 1936, he declared in the Lower House of the British Parliament that: "Every proof of a claim presented to us by certain of our allies was based on lies and was falsified and thus we came to our decisions by accepting their false information. We made our judgment on the basis of"

those statistics that were placed before us by these allies. And we accepted their tainted statements rather than consider the data that the defeated nations presented to us”.

Hlinka, Andrei (Andrew), Catholic priest, leader of the largest Slovakian party, the so-called Slovakian People’s Party, stated the following on 4 June 1925: “The memory of the Hungarian fatherland should be flapping in the souls of all of us, because we have not suffered so much under the thousand-year Hungarian rule, as under the six-year Czech rule”.

Lenin, Vladimir Ilyich: “The peace treaty was forced onto them, but this peace is an extortionist peace, the peace of murderers and butchers...a monstrous peace, a marauding peace...this is not a peace treaty; these are conditions dictated by highwaymen with knives in their hands to the defenseless victims”.

Lord Newton, a member of the British House of Lords expressed his opinion in the following words on March 1920 that: “What is the crime of the Hungarians? The fact that they fought against us? But there were times when the Czechs, the Poles and others, whom we now welcome as friends, were not our allies, just like the Hungarians in this war...”. A year later the same politician declared: “Again, without shame or apologies, I can say that Hungary deserves a more humane and just treatment. Much calumny has been said about this country. It was accused of war criminality when – in fact – Hungary was least responsible for this war”.

MacCartney, Elmer C. A. in his Short History of Hungary wrote the following: “One of the most glaring examples of the unjustified territorial re-adjustments is the case of Kárpátalja (Carpatho-Ukraine) in North-eastern Hungary, which was awarded to Czechoslovakia, though neither Czechs nor Slovaks are living in the region”.

Masaryk, Thomas G., first President of Czechoslovakia stated: “We had to choose between the creation of Czechoslovakia and the plebiscite”.

Nicholson, Harold, the secretary of the English Peace Delegation, wrote in his book entitled The Creation of Peace that: “We came with the intention that the purpose of our negotiations will be a just and wise peace and we left with feeling that the peace treaties forced on our opponents were neither just nor wise”.

Nitti, Francesco S., Italian Prime Minister, in 1922 in his book entitled The Wreck of Europe, wrote that: “Hungary was the victim of the cruelest form of occupation and the greediest exploitation of her wealth. This nation, with that great historical past, the defender of Christianity and civilized Europe, was treated with such immeasurable cruelty that it could not be explained with anything but the insane hatred and greed of her neighbors. At the end of the war, most of the Allied Powers demanded great sacrifices from this state and none of them had a sympathetic word in support of this much-endured nation. I raised my voice in her defense, but, alas, it was too late”.

He stated the following in September 1924: “With the Treaty of Trianon, no country was devastated more savagely than Hungary. However, this country is inhabited by strong-minded people, who would not put up with the destruction of their fatherland. The mutilation of historic Hungary is so disgraceful, that nobody wants to take responsibility for it. Everybody acts as if he would not know about it, everybody remains bashfully quiet. Allusion to the right of peoples to self-determination is an untrue fabrication...the western powers misused their victory in the most wicked manner. There is not a single Frenchman, Englishman or Italian, who would accept for his country those conditions that were forced on Hungary.”

Pozzi, Henry, a French reporter, who traveled in all areas covered by the Treaty of Trianon, wrote in 1934 in his book entitled The War Returns that: "What does Hungary demand today on the eve of a new war and with full justification? She simply demands the return of those unquestionably Magyar (Hungarian) territories, which the three neighboring states annexed disregarding the principle of self-determination of the nationalities. They only ask the return of those territories, whose inhabitants would express – under an internationally supervised plebiscite – their desire to belong to Hungary again. I am neither a friend of Hungarians or Serbs, but I am convinced that a new war is approaching which would require the French nation to make huge sacrifices again. For such borders? For nothing?"

Rothermere, Lord Viscount, publisher and editor-in-chief of the paper Daily Mail, wrote the following in an article entitled "Hungary's Place in the Sun" in the 21 June 1927 issue: "Two of my sons were killed in the war. They sacrificed their lives for noble ideas and not for so ignoble a maltreatment of this illustrious nation. There will not be quiet in Europe, until the infamous and inane Treaty of Trianon undergoes revision".

Tardieu, André, three-times Prime Minister of France, wrote in his book La Paix that: "Plebiscite could not be held in the Upland or Northern Hungary (Felvidék of Historic Hungary), uprooted from Hungary, because then Czechoslovakia would not have become a reality as a result of the counter-voting of the population". – B: 2070, T: 7456.

Voevode, ex-Prime Minister of Romania, compared the past to his times in 1931, stated that: "Under Hungarian rule the Transylvanian Romanians were exposed to half as much injustice as today under Romanian rule. The Romanian civil servants were not fired for their political conviction and the Hungarians did not steal the ballot boxes on the day of the election. True, the Romanian members of parliament were not considered to be important but they were equally protected by laws. Then, we sent more representatives to the parliament at Budapest than today to Bucharest! In Hungary, eight Transylvanian Romanians held high financial positions as opposed to two in Bucharest today. There were no slaves in Hungary. We could freely express our opinions, because we were protected by Hungarian laws...". (The Hungarian question at the British Parliament).

Yves de Daruvar in connection with the decisions of the Peace of Trianon, in his book entitled The Tragic Fate of Hungary (1970) wrote that: "With the Peace of Trianon, territories, that for over a thousand years without interruption had been an organic part of Hungary, were now awarded to one or the other of the successor states. One stroke of the pen destroyed not only Hungary's national and historical unity, but that physical and economic entity, which had taken ten centuries to develop in the Carpathian Basin".

The peacemakers of Trianon annihilated the geographic unity of Historic Hungary, which for a thousand years had provided political and economic security to its multi-ethnic population, who had been able to live in peace with each other. Due to ignorance and motivated by revenge the victors committed a blunder that removed a power from the center of Europe that had been a bulwark not only against conquering designs from the East but also had resisted German expansion. – B: 2070, 2027, 1230, 1288, 1304, 1031, T: 7665, 7456.

The consequences of the Peace Treaty of Trianon: Hungary signed the Trianon peace-dictate under duress and the Hungarian people never accepted the crippling and unjustified population and territorial losses. In June of 1920 the Alliance of Defense

Leagues sponsored a literary contest for the composition of a prayer and a slogan to support the national movement aimed at the restoration of the borders; Mrs. Elemér Papp-Váry was the winner. This was the text of her prayer: “I believe in one God - I believe in one homeland - I believe in the eternal justice of God - I believe in the resurrection of Hungary - Amen”. (Hiszek egy Istenben, hiszek egy hazában, hiszek Magyarország feltámadásábn! Ámen). This became the “Hungarian Confession of Faith”. There is a popular slogan in Hungarian, which ran thus: “Csonka Magyarország nem ország - Egész Magyarország mennyország” (The verbatim translation of this rather hyperbolic slogan is: Dismembered Hungary is not a country, restored or complete Hungary is Heaven.)

On 23 April 1920, Czechoslovakia and Romania signed an agreement, aimed at the harmonization of their foreign policy against Hungary, whereby they created the “Little Entente” with Yugoslavia joining in, on 7 June 1921.

On 28 August 1921, the Western Hungarian Uprising broke out in the territories awarded to Austria. To settle the fate of the disputed area, the Venetian Agreement authorized the holding of a plebiscite for the city of Sopron and its surroundings. In the plebiscite, held on 14-16 December 1921, the areas in question decided with a huge majority to remain with Hungary. The result of this plebiscite proved the mistakes made by the Paris peace treaties, indicating also that if the Wilsonian principle regarding the self-determination of nations had been allowed to apply, the map of Europe today would look very different; the plebiscite broke the first link in the fetters of Trianon.

On 21 February 1924, the Reparation Commission accepted the plan for the total settlement of Hungary’s financial obligation. The total amount came to 179 million golden crowns and three years of coal supply for the Serbo-Croatian-Slovenian Monarchy.

Few nations would have survived dismemberment similar to that caused by the Peace of Trianon. The loss of products from the detached territories and the severe reparations payments gravely impacted on the economic life of the country and had a serious effect on the socio-economic conditions of her people.

In the period between the two world wars, the irredentism and revisionist movement rose to the level of government policy. Besides the will to live, these revisionist ideas, promoted and nurtured by social organizations, education and the arts, helped the people of the country to recover and start over again. Revisionism was not taken seriously abroad, since the great powers were always indifferent toward the injustices suffered by small nations. In Hungary, however, many people in the 1920’s and 1930s, believed that to gain redress, it would be enough to win over or convince the leaders of the Western nations, and the friendly statements by polite foreign politicians were received with great enthusiasm. In the truncated country, this hopeless belief restored self-respect and helped in the recovery. The people did not lose hope in the future but began to rebuild the country amid the existing dire circumstances. Between the two world wars, surrounded by enemies, the dismembered and consequently disjointed country reorganized itself into a well-functioning economic and political society.

As a result of the destruction of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, in their diminished size both Austria and Hungary were incapable of self-defense. The words of Anthony Eden, ex Foreign Minister of Britain, underline this well: “The disappearance of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy had a catastrophic effect on the peace of Europe”. The Peace of Trianon was a huge blunder, not only because it was unjust and biased toward one nation, but because it destroyed the balance of power in Europe, resulting first in German domination, then later in the Soviet control of Central and Eastern Europe.

This incorrect decision made by the Paris treaties led directly to World War II. The treaties ending World War II not only repeated the well-known mistakes made by the peace-dictates ending World War I, but added new ones. They allowed Soviet rule to extend into the heartland of Europe, which resulted in dividing Europe into two hostile armed camps. For half a century this decision represented a grave danger for the whole Western world, including England and the United States. Instead of recognizing the right of self-determination for the national minorities, the victorious powers emphasized the need for the recognition of the rights of the minorities but took no practical steps for the actual international enforcement of these rights. Instead of solving the question of the minorities, as it was claimed, the Peace of Trianon created new and larger minorities. The successor states had even more serious difficulties with their minorities than the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy had experienced. The so called minority agreements, signed after the peace treaty were worthless in reality, since their observation was never verified and the complaints raised were never remedied. In fact, the successor states tried the very best to expel or assimilate their Hungarian minorities.

Czechoslovakia, one of the successor states created by the Versailles-Trianon treaties, proved that it was not viable, when it fell apart after the first shocks of World War II and, though the victorious powers insisted on its restoration, later – in peacetime – it broke into two states on 1 January 1993. A large section of the Slovaks themselves look upon Beneš and Masaryk as liars, who disingenuously enticed them into the formation of the new common artificial state with the Pittsburg Declaration. However, the Slovaks do not want to recognize that, by being part of Czechoslovakia, they became the beneficiaries of the common ill-gotten gains. When the Czechs did not fulfill their obligations regarding minority rights as laid down in the post-Trianon minority agreements, the Slovaks raised no objections and, since they have become independent, they continue the Czech policy of assimilation.

In the territory awarded to Czechoslovakia, no Czechs lived and the number of Slovaks did not reach 50% of the population. The population of Kárpátalja (Carpatho-Ukraine) was Hungarian and Ruthenian, without any Czech or Slovak residents. In the territory of Transylvania given to Romania, which was a reward for attacking the Central Powers in 1916, and the Romanian promise to channel 20 years revenue of the “Gold mine triangle” of Transylvania to France, as it had been agreed on in the secret Bucharest Agreement, the proportion of the Romanians was 55%. In the territory awarded to the Serbo-Croatian-Slovenian Monarchy (later to be called Yugoslavia) from Hungary proper, the south Slavs made up only 33% of the population. Yugoslavia, another successor state, similarly proved unviable as a political entity. It became the tinderbox of the Balkans and fell apart into its many components. However, there the Hungarians remain under Serbian control and there their dwindling numbers continue to suffer discrimination.

The fate of the Hungarian and Szekler minorities in Transylvania, Romania, one of the successor states, is also lamentable and, although the Romanians also undertook to ensure full equality for the minorities, from the beginning their assimilation has been part of the governments’ program in the past for more than 90 years. Their obligation undertaken in a formal agreement remained on paper, since there was no international body set up to verify their fulfillment. Thus, many Hungarians and other minorities have left Transylvania seeking a better and freer life elsewhere.

The lot of the Hungarian minority in Serbia/Yugoslavia was equally heavy. Between November 8 and 12 1918, the Serbs occupied Southern Hungary and never moved out. The Trianon Peace Treaty awarded Croatia-Slovenia and Southern Hungary to Serbia with a three times larger non-Serbian population. This started the systematic elimination of everything Hungarian.

According to conservative estimates, the number of Hungarians living in the severed territories in 1995 was as follows: Austria 25,000, Czech Republic 52,000, Croatia 40,000, Slovenia 15,000, Romania 2,400,000 and Slovakia 800,000. In total 3,912,000 Hungarians live in minority status, representing about 30% of the population of Hungary today.

During the nine decades that have passed since the Peace Treaty of Trianon, the decisions made about the minority problem have not led to a satisfactory solution. The decisions that created the large Hungarian minorities in the neighboring states were not only unjust but lacked foresight: they provided no practical vehicles for securing their cultural and civil rights.

That the Peace of Trianon (and it was repeated by the Paris Peace Treaty in 1947) caused a deep wound in the Hungarian national consciousness is illustrated by the efforts of various Hungarian associations around the world to call the attention of the world's leaders to Hungary's plight. One of these is the 24 July 1992 Memorandum of the American Hungarian Association to the senators of the United States and the European Border Revision Conference. The memorandum contained the following requests: (1) the reinstatement of the prewar 1938 Vienna Agreement and the return of the area in question to Hungary. (2) The return of Carpatho-Ukraine (Kárpátalja), since this territory was never part of the Soviet Union or Ukraine and Czechoslovakia, which no longer exists, had relinquished it. (3) The return of those areas of Transylvania, which on the basis of mutual agreement with Romania came under Hungarian control in 1940, well before Hungary entered World War II. (4) The return of the Baranya Triangle and the Mura region, since they had never been part of Croatia. (5) The return of the Backa (Bácska) and the Banate (Bánság), because these areas were never part of Serbia or the new Yugoslavia or the old one which ceased to exist. Real peace and political balance in Central and Eastern Europe hinge on the fair treatment of the minorities.

To solve this question there are some options. Since the introduction of the "mild Status Law" (2001) for the protection of Hungarian ethnic minorities in the successor states, that Slovakia met with stiff resistance. The next solution came with the new Hungarian Government in 2010, which legislated Hungarian Citizenship to all Hungarians wherever they live, including the detached territories, if they wish to assume Hungarian citizenship. This would provide guarantees against discrimination and for the unfettered cultural autonomy for the Hungarian minorities. This would also help to win territorial autonomy. If this is also sabotaged, the final solution would have to be the restoration by peaceful means of the pre-World War I frontiers of Hungary. – B: 1020, 1230, 1288, 1304, 2027, 1031, T: 7665, 7456.→World War I, Hungary in; Wilson's Fourteen Points; Young Agreement; 'Justice for Hungary' Ocean Flight; Irredentist Movement in Hungary; Revisionist Movement in Hungary; Vienna Award I; Vienna Award II; World War ## II, Hungary in; Paris Peace Treaty; most of the persons and events have their own entry.

Tricolor – The tricolor originates from the slogan of the 1798 French Revolution (Liberté, Egalité, Fraternité). Italy adopted the tricolor in several variations and settled with the green, white and red colors. Garibaldi brought the Italian tricolor to Hungary, where the stripes were applied horizontally: red, white and green, and the slogan, liberty, equality and fraternity, was always on it, according to a contemporary report of the Pest News (Pesti Hírlap). It was the flag of the 1848-1849 War of Independence and the three colors symbolized the aims of the struggle. The use of the tricolor was forbidden in Hungary between 1849 and 1867. Baron Julius von Haynau, the Austrian general and commander of Austrian forces in Hungary executed a tailor for the production of the forbidden tricolor. This tailor can be regarded as the first martyr of the red-white-green flag. The tricolor, with Hungary's coat of arms, became the official flag of Hungary in 1867. During the 1956 Freedom Fight, the Soviet emblem was cut out of the tricolor, creating the famous flag with the hole, which became the symbol of freedom. – B: 1102, T: 7662.→ Haynau, Baron Julius Freiherr von; Freedom Fight of 1956; Hungary, History of.

Tripartitum – A collection of Hungarian Laws in Latin, comprised of three parts, compiled in 1514 by the Lord Chief Justice, István (Stephen) Werbőczy (1458-1541). Its original title is: Opus Tripartitum Juris Consuetudinarii Inclyti Regni Hungariae. King Ulászló II (1490-1516) directed Werbőczy to “collect and arrange by title and chapter all laws, rights, customary laws and rules of the country”. In the same year it was introduced in the Hungarian Parliament under number 1514 LXIII; the titled nobles defeated it, on account that it proposed granting equal rights to the lesser nobility. Although it was defeated, it nevertheless became Hungary's first Civil Code, and was used by the judges in the courts from the time of its introduction. Werbőczy had it printed in Vienna in 1517. As the legal basis for the binding force of customary law, the Tripartitum acquired equal force with statute law. In Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), the Tripartitum had the power of law in procedures because, by the provisions of §3 of the Diploma Leopoldinum, it became part of the laws (statutes) of the Principality.

In form, it was a statute book, containing laws pertaining mostly to the rights of the nobility, private law, and court procedure. The Doctrine of the Holy Crown of Hungary is laid down in it as a fundamental principle. In 1628, when the Tripartitum became part of the Corpus Juris Hungarici, its validity could no longer be disputed. Its inception and use predated the world famous Code Napoleon by 301 years. – B: 1078, 1231, 1020, T: 7617.→Ulászló II, King; Werbőczy, István; Diploma Leopoldina; Holy Crown Doctrine; Corpus Juris Hungarici.

Triznya, Mátyás (Matthew) (Budapest, 29 May 1922 - Rome, 18 October 1991) – Painter and graphic artist. In his early childhood he decided to become a painter. He studied at the Faculty of Economics of the Budapest Polytechnic, then at the Arts Faculty of the University of Budapest, majoring in Hungarian and English Literature, and finally completing the graphics section of the Academy of Arts in Budapest. In February 1949, he fled to Austria and worked as a stage designer in Graz. In 1950, he settled in Rome, working in the field of filmmaking. Until 1978, he was a correspondent for the Catalucci SPES Printing Laboratory. His home “The Triznya Pub” was the meeting point of a number of Hungarian students, artists and writers living in Italy and the West. As a painter, he held several one-man shows and also took part in collective exhibitions. For a few years, he worked in the Hungarian section of Radio Italy and was sub-editor of the journal Catholic Review (Katolikus Szemle, with a number of historical studies by him), and he wrote a lecture series on history for the Vatican Radio. His work entitled István Szőnyi was edited with his wife (1982). For decades his home was one of the Hungarian intellectual centers of Rome. In 1977, the Dante Alighieri Art Society awarded him the Gold Medal. Together with his wife, Zsuzsa (Susie) Szőnyi he was presented with the commemorative medal of the Hungarian PEN Club. – B: 1672, 1654, T: 7456.→Szőnyi, István.

Trnka, Vencel (Tabor, now in Czech Republic, 16 October 1739 - Pest, 12 May 1791) – Physician. He studied Medicine at the University of Prague and later in Vienna, where he obtained his Medical Degree in 1770. Already in 1769, he worked as an intern at the Crown Hospital of Vienna, and from 1770 he taught Anatomy at the Medical Department of the Hungarian University of Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia). In 1785 and 1786 he was Professor of General Pathology and Pharmaceutics; from 1786 to 1791, Professor of Internal Medicine at the University of Pest, later that of Buda. On three separate occasions he was Dean for a session, and during 1786 and 1787 was Vice-Chancellor of the University. His works include De diabete commentarius (1778); Historia cophoseos et barycoiae (1781); Abhandlung über das Magenweh (1788) and Geschichte der Englischen Krankheit (1789). – B: 1730, 0883, T: 7456.

Trócsányi, Dezső (Desider) (Sárospatak, 3 January 1889 - Pápa, 7 September 1962) – Writer in philosophy and pedagogy. He completed his studies at the Reformed Theological Academy of Sárospatak. Thereafter, he obtained a Dip. Ed. and a Bachelor of Arts (B.A.) Degree from the Art Faculty of the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). For a while, he was in Germany for further studies on a scholarship. On returning to Hungary he taught at a High School in Pápa from 1927 until 1929, and at the Reformed Theological Academy there from 1929 to 1951. He was Archivist of the Reformed Transdanubian Diocese until the summer of 1962. He organized, with Lajos (Louis) Szathmáry, the People’s College at Pápa in 1941. In the philosophical field, he followed the Hungarian neo-Kantian school, developed around the philosopher Károly (Charles) Böhm. He wrote several books on Hungarian grammar. His works include Philosophical introduction (Bölcséleti bevezetés) (1934) and History of Philosophy (Bölcséletörténelem) (1939). – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Böhm, Károly.

Trócsányi, Zsolt (Pápa, 15 April 1926 - Budapest, 23 August 1987) – Historian. He completed his high school studies at the Reformed College of Pápa, where he took Latin, History and Archival subjects, and received his Degree from the University of Budapest in 1949. He was also on a scholarship in Bucharest, Romania. From 1949 he worked at the National Archives, Budapest, where his works, published since 1956, focused on his main area of interest: the history of Transylvania between the 16th and 19th centuries. A selection of his writings includes History of the Transylvanian Peasantry 1790-1849 (Az erdélyi parasztság története 1790-1849) (1946); On the History of the College of Nagyenyed, 1831-1841 (A nagyenyedi kollégium történetéhez, 1831-1841) (1957); Diets of the Era of the Transylvanian Principality (Az erdélyi fejedelemség korának országgyűlései) (1976); Transylvania's Central Government 1540-1690 (Erdély központi kormányzata 1540-1690) (1988); History of Transylvania vols.i-ii (1986) with a co-editor (Erdély története I-II), and Habsburg Politics and Habsburg Governing in Transylvania, 1690-1740 (A Habsburg politika és Habsburg kormányzat Erdélyben 1690-1740) (1988). – B: 0877, T: 7103.

Trogmayer, Ottó (Budapest, 24 July 1934 -) - Archeologist and Museum Director. His ancestors originated from Southern Bavaria. He completed his higher education in Budapest and obtained a Degree in archeology and pre-historic archeology in 1957. He studied under such renowned professors as Gyula (Julius) László, János (John) Brenner and Zoltán Oroszlán. He received his Ph.D. in 1962. Already as an undergraduate, he began his long career in archeology with field studies at the Ferenc Móra Muzeum at Szeged. In fact, he spent his whole professional career at the same Institute with outstanding achievements. From 1970, he directed the excavations of early Hungarian relics at Ópusztaszer near Szeged, and the National Historical Memorial Park at Ópusztaszer (Ópusztaszeri Nemzeti Történeti Emlékpark – ÓNTE) established under his leadership. Trogmayer supported the work of the eminent folklorist Sándor (Alexander) Bálint, who was persecuted under the Communist system for publishing his writings in the yearbook of the Ferenc Móra Muzeum. From 1965 he taught Archeology at the University of Szeged; then, from 1989 he became a department head. However, the main areas of his work and responsibilities remained with the Ferenc Móra Museum and with the Directorship of the Museum of County Csongrád. His research areas were the early Neolithic history of South-East Europe, the middle and late Bronze Age of the Carpathian Basin, and the early middle-age period of County Csongrád. He retired in 1997 and, in 1999, he obtained the highest scientific degree achievable in Hungary after a Ph.D. He then was appointed a full professor, and as a professor emeritus he continued to give lectures into the early 2000s. He was a member of the National Museum Association, the Scientific Qualifying Committee, the sub-committee of UNESCO, and the archeological section of the Academic Committee of Szeged. Among his numerous works are The Monastery of Szer (Szer monostora) (1973); Das bronzzeitliche Gräbelfeld bei Tápé (1975); Stories of Excavations: the Best Memories of 50 years (Ásatási történetek: ötven év legszebb emlékei) (2004), and Story Teller of the Past (Múltmesélő) (2008). Among his awards are: the Ferenc Móra Prize (1979), the Officer's Cross of Republic of Hungary (1994), the Széchenyi Prize (1996), the Hungarian Heritage Prize (1997), and the Tömörkény, as well as the Flóris Romer Prize (1998). – B: 1031, T: 7665.→László, Gyula; Bálint, Sándor; Brenner, János.

Trombitás, Dezső (Desider) (Detroit, Mich., USA, 13 July 1913 - Los Angeles, California, USA, 29 April 1990) – Minister of the Reformed Church in America and writer. He returned to Hungary with his parents at the age of twelve, and completed his theological studies at the Theological Academy of Pápa in 1936. He was a minister in Nagyvázsony, Magyarbarnag, Tatabánya, Dean in Komárom, and an honorary lecturer at the Reformed College of Sáropatak from 1950. He was forced to leave his position and became an industrial worker in Komárom between 1954 and 1956. Later, after the defeated 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he fled to western countries: Austria, Germany, England and (in 1959) the United States. He was Parish Minister of the Hungarian Reformed Church in Hollywood, California for 31 years until his death. His works include Here and Today (Itt és ma) sermons (1966); Either Or! Hungarian Church in the Emigration (Vagy-vagy! Magyar Egyház az emigrációban) (1967); Little Andrew (Andráská) play (1968); History and Self-Knowledge (Történelem és Önismeret) (1971); The Fallible Aged (Esendő öregek) study (1975), and Mission Awareness and Human Management (Küldetéstudat és embergazdálkodás), study (1978). – B: 0932, 1672, T: 7103, 7456.

Tróznér, József (Joseph) (Marosvásárhely, now Târgu Mureș, Romania, 4 August 1904 – 1989) – Transylvanian Hungarian composer and music instructor in Romania. His music education began at the Conservatory of Music in Marosvásárhely, and he continued it as a student of Richard Stöhr and Franz Schmidt at the Academy of Music in Vienna, from 1928 until 1933. From 1947 until 1949, he taught at the Conservatory of Music in Marosvásárhely, and during 1949-1971, at the School of Folk Arts. Between 1949 and 1960, he was a teacher at the Music High School for Girls, and from 1961 until 1968 at the College of Education. Many of today's most prominent Transylvanian composers were his students. Songs and choral works constitute the bulk of his compositions. He wrote more than 50 songs for poems mainly by Rainer Maria Rilke, Mihály (Michael) Babits, Gyula (Julius) Juhász, and Jenő (Eugen) Dsida. His works include Symphony in C-Major (1935); String Quartet in F-minor (1935); Sonata for Violin and Piano in D-Major (1950), and Szekler Rhapsody (Székely Rapszódia) (1951). – B: 0883, T: 7667. → Babits, Mihály; Juhász, Gyula; Dsida, Jenő.

Trunk → Chest.

Tubular electrical condenser – A device producing a voltage of about 5 million volts, the predecessor of today's pulse generators, producing several million volts. It was constructed in 1863 and exhibited at the World Exhibition of 1873 in Vienna by Ányos István (Stephan) Jedlik, 1800-1895. – B: 1020, T: 7674. → Jedlik, Ányos István.

Tüdős, Klára (Clara) (Mrs. Zsindely) (Debrecen, 20 July 1895 - Budapest, 16 April 1980) – Writer, fashion designer in folk-art. After attending the Dóczy Reformed Girls' High School in Debrecen, she visited several Western and Eastern countries before completing her studies at the Academy of Applied Arts in Budapest. Later, she was a student and research worker of Professor István Györffy in the Ethnographic Department of the University of Budapest. In 1925, she became a member of the Opera House in charge of the wardrobe room, and working as a costume designer. She designed the costumes for Zoltán Kodály's opera Háry János in 1926. In the 1930s, in the Inner City of Budapest, she opened the Ribbon (Pántlika) Fashion Shop to popularize traditional Hungarian costumes, and became a fashion designer for two prominent stores. Klára Tüdős was a specialist on peasant (folk) embroideries, hand-woven fabrics and ornamental gala dresses. She was an avid supporter of the Folklore Writers (Népi Írók), and established the periodical entitled New Hungarian Woman (Új Magyar Asszony). She wrote articles in progressive journals and was a popular speaker at conferences. In 1940, Tüdös established the Gyórrffy College for helping talented, poor peasant boys. In 1944 she was president of the Reformed Women's Alliance (Református Nőszövetség). During the siege of Budapest (from 24 December 1944 to 13 February 1945), in collaboration with the Swedish Mission, she sheltered 150 persecuted persons. In 1952, the Communists sent her and her husband to the countryside; until 1963, they lived in Balatonlelle, working as caretakers of a summer residence. Her works include The Protestant Intellectuals of Villages in the Service of Hungarian Folk-Culture (A falu protestáns értelmisége a magyar népi kultúra szolgálatában) (1940); In the Palm of God, (Isten markában) sketches (1975, 1976, 1977, 1978, 1980, posthumously: 1982, 1986); Portraits, Reminiscences (Arcképek, emlékezések) (1978) and Boot on the Table. Reminiscences (Csizma az asztalon. Emlékezések), (Zürich 1978 and Bern (1978)). – B: 0883, 0877, T: 7103, 7456.→Gyórrffy, István.

Tudun – Avar dignitary's title. In the Avar Empire of the Carpathian Basin (568-796), the head of the western part of the realm. As a dignitary's title, it was last mentioned in 811 AD. It may possibly be connected with the Hungarian titles of Tétény and Tátöny. – B: 1078, 1274, 1020, T: 7456.

Tüköry, Lajos (Lewis) (Körösladány, 9 September 1830 - Palermo, Italy, 6 June 1860) – Freedom fighter. He began his military career among the National Guards of Békés in 1848; later, he enlisted into the army, where as a Second-Lieutenant, he fought in General Bem's army in Transylvania. In 1849 he emigrated, and joined the Turkish army, where he received the name effendi Selim. As a Lieutenant, he took part in the Turkish cavalry of Damascus, and fought against the nomadic Bedouins. From 1853, in the Crimean War, first he served as an aide-de-camp of Richard Guyon, and later of György (George) Kmety. During the fighting around Karst, he was wounded, and received the rank of Major, and given a high Sultanic decoration. After the outbreak of the North-Italian War in 1859, he left the Turkish military service and, in the Italian Hungarian Legion, he became head of the 4th battalion, as part of the II. Brigade. Thereafter, as a Major, he joined the "Thousands", together with István (Stephen) Türr and served on Garibaldi's General Staff. He led the charge to take Palermo on 27 May 1860 and, during the breakthrough at Porta Termini, his left leg was seriously injured. His leg had to be amputated, and he died of his injury. At his burial, Garibaldi gave a funeral oration and, in his dispatch, he praised Tüköry's distinctions, and he was raised to the rank of Colonel. His remains were placed in the San Domenico Pantheon of Palermo, with a war memorial in 1910; a Street in Palermo cherishes his memory, as well as a School and a Street in Körösladány. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Guyon, Richárd; Kmety, György; Bem, Joseph; Türr, István.

Tulogdi, János (John) (Torda, now Turda, Romania, 12 October 1891 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 1 October 1979) – Geologist and geographer from Transylvania. He obtained a Dip. Ed. from the University of Kolozsvár in 1919, and a Ph.D. from the University of Budapest in 1925, on the Pleistocene deposits of the environs of Kolozsvár. Until the end of World War II, he worked as a teacher at the Reformed College of Kolozsvár. In 1943, at the University of Kolozsvár, he was promoted to honorary lecturer (privat dozent); and in 1945 he was appointed Professor of Geography, a position he held until his retirement. In his field of research, he mainly covered Transylvania and, in particular, the area of Kalotaszeg (now Țara Călatei, Romania) and Kolozsvár. In his geological works, he also studied speleological tasks and the allied study of springs. The number of his published studies reached nearly 300. He was active in cultural associations, enthusiastically organizing the Transylvanian tourist movement, and was a pioneer in nature-conservation. He was a member of several scientific societies, such as the Hungarian Geographical Society and the Hungarian Karst and Speleological Society. His works include Geology of Transylvania (Erdély geológiája) (1925); Data for the Knowledge of the Springs of the Environs of Kolozsvár (Adatok Kolozsvár környéke forrásainak ismeretéhez) (1957), and The Karstic Aspects of the Headwaters of the Berettyó (A Berettyó forrásvidékének karsztjelenségei) (1972). – B: 0883, 103, T: 7456.

Turan – A flat, steppe and desert in Central Asia, north of Iran and east of the Caspian Sea, in the area of the Amu Darya and Sir Darya Rivers, about 3,000,000 km<sup>2</sup>, with limited agriculture (nomadic shepherding) mainly along the river banks. Several large-scale migrations of peoples started from this area. In the 7th millennium BC, the Sumerians probably wandered to Mesopotamia from here. In the 3rd century BC, the Great Wall of China prevented eastward migration of these peoples. They were forced to migrate westward and this became the great migration of peoples (Völkerwanderung) in Europe and Western Asia during the 4th to 7th centuries A.D.. In the 13th century, the Mongols (Tatars) of Turan again burst into Europe and devastated Hungary and Poland. According to Persian literature, the one-time Turan covered the Russian part of the present Turkestan. – B: 1068, T: 7456. → Curse of Turan.

Turán, Pál (Paul) (Budapest, 18 August 1910 - Budapest, 27 September 1976) – Mathematician. He obtained a Degree in Education from the University of Budapest, majoring in Mathematics and Physics in 1933, and later a Ph.D. in Mathematics. Until 1938 he lived from private tuition. From 1938 to 1947 he worked as a high school teacher, and in 1945 he became an honorary lecturer at the above University. In 1947, he was a visiting professor at the University of Copenhagen. In 1948, he gave lectures at the Institute for Advanced Studies, Princeton University, USA. From 1949 until his death, he was Professor of Mathematics at the University of Budapest. Turán was one of the outstanding mathematicians of the 20th century in Hungary. His scientific results had international significance. The results of his work had an unusually wide scope in nearly all branches of mathematics. He was an editorial member of a number of international journals, such as Acta Arithmetica; Journal of Number Theory; Archiv für Mathematik; he was also Editor of the Mathematical Papers (Matematikai Lapok). He was President of the János Bolyai Mathematical Society. Centrally important in his investigations was the Analytic Number Theory, especially the problem-group connected with Riemann-conjecture. In this connection, he reached his most important discovery: the formation of the Power-Sum Method, known since then as the Turán Method, a new method of mathematical analysis. It even led to the solution of several old problems of mathematical analysis. It created a new way to the unsolved problems of the Theory of Prime Numbers, and influenced the Theory of Diophantine Approximation. The Turán Method made it possible to clarify the frequency of the value-set of quasi-analytic functions, trigonometric and nearly periodic polynomials and a number of problems of the frequency of their roots. Pál Turán initiated the research school of Functional Algebra, and the establishment of the border value of the Graf Theory, creating a new trend in this field. He was a member of the Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1948, ordinary 1953); a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1949, 1952), and the Tibor Szele Medal (1975). His works include On Riemann's Hypothesis (1947) and Eine neue Methode der Analysis und deren Anwendungen (1953). There is a Pál Turán Memorial Prize established in 2006, and a lecture series named after him. – B: 0883, 1031, 1132, T: 7456.

Turan, Peoples of – Before the present era, the great majority of the inhabitants of Turan consisted of Turkish tribes. The word ‘taran’ or ‘turan’ was still used in 19th century Turkish poetry as a collective noun for all peoples and tribes of the Turkic race. Miksa Müller was the first Hungarian ethnographer and linguist to use this term, calling all peoples of Asia and Europe – not belonging either to the Aryan or the Semitic groups – as such. He divided the ethnic group of Turan into two: the Northern (Uralian-Altaic) and the Southern (Finnish, Ugrian, Mongol, Samoyed, Turkish Tatar and Tunguz) sub-groups. According to him, the language of these peoples was agglutinative.

The Turanians were neither Christians nor image worshipers. They respected the light, the brightness, the spirit of the ancestors; they favored cleanliness and freedom, and honored their women. They gave to the world horseback riding, the saddle, and the stirrup. Because of their mounted army, they were the rulers of the ancient world. Their equestrian culture was much more developed than the ancient water culture. They believed that they were the sons of the Sun.

By the strict definition of the word by the Hungarian Society of Turan, established in 1910, the original Bulgars, Bashkirs, Estonians, Finns, Kirghizs, Magyars, Tatars, Turks, Turkmens and Uzbeks, and by large, the Japanese, Chinese, Koreans, Manchurians, Mongols, Siamese, Tamils and Tibetans can also be included. The Society considers Bulgaria, Estonia, Finland, Japan, China, Hungary, Nepal, Siam, Tibet and Turkey as Turanian countries.

Peoples of the historical Turan are the Avars, Pechenegs, Etruscans, Huns, Indo-Scythians, Yazigs, Cumanians, Massagetes, Paloc, Parthians and Sumerians. – B: 1078, 1020, T: 3240.→Turan.

Turanian Curse→Curse of Turan.

Turanian people and languages→Ural-Altaic People of Turan; Uralic Languages.

Turanian Society – A Society founded in Budapest in 1910, engaged in the promotion of scientific, cultural and social relations among peoples linguistically and ethnically related to Hungarians. Its activities include holding lectures on ethnic and linguistic relationships and organizing celebrations, publishing the journal Turán, and individual publications. Its president in 1941 was the distinguished Professor of Geography, Jenő (Eugene) Cholnoky and the Honorary President for life was Alajos Paikert. The Society ceased after 1945. – B: 1020, T: 7456.→Cholnoky, Jenő.

Turányi, Gábor (Gabriel) (Kardoskút, 22 April 1948 - ) – Architect. He studied at the Ybl Miklós College, under Kornél Beszédes. He acquired a Degree at the Architectural Faculty of the Budapest Polytechnic. He worked as an architect at Lakóterv, a residential planning firm, working with Károly (Charles) Juricsik, whom he considers his master. He became an associate at the General Design Engineering Department of the General Building-Designing Company (Általános Épülettervező Vállalat – ÁÉTV). In the second half of 1980s he studied at the School of the Society of Hungarian Architects, where he became a teacher in the 1990s. He also taught at the College of Industrial Arts in Budapest. Since the beginning of the 1990s, he has been an architect of BUVÁTI. Some of his designs made Turányi a well-known architect in Hungary. In his designs he applies a variety of the style of Post-modernism, as well as elements of regionalism. He makes use of natural, organic materials (i.e.: bricks and natural stones) as opposed to fashionable ones. His rustic buildings, with their strong emotional charge, draw from the notions of F. L. Wright and the traditional architecture of Finland. He, however, remained independent of any specific architectural style. However, Turányi is considered a member of the Hungarian traditional group. In 1995, he founded the Turányi and Simon Architectural Office. Some of his important works include Block House (1982-1983, Orsó Street, Budapest); Educational and Leisure Building (1984, Badacsonytomaj); arrangement of the Szabadság Square, Gyula (1984-1985); enlargement of the Roman Catholic Church of Óbuda-Újlak, Budapest, with László (Ladislav) Vincze, (1985-1987); office building (Gyarmat Street 26, Budapest), and project for the Hungarian Pavilion for the cancelled Budapest EXPO 96 (1994). His one-man shows are: Municipal Picture Gallery, Budapest, Three Architecture, Ljubljana and Dossa Architectural Gallery, Budapest. He is recipient of the Ybl Prize (1984), the Pro Architecture Prize (1997), the Pro Hungarian Art Prize (2006), and the Architectural Level Prize (2008). – B: 1654, 1031. T: 1654, 7103.

Turay, Ida (Thurmayer) (Rákospalota, 28 September 1907 - Budapest, 2 June 1997) – Actress. One of her sisters, Klára (Clara) Tabódy (Thurmayer) was also an actress; but early on, she moved abroad and continued her acting career there. Ida Turay completed one year at the Academy of Dramatic Art in Budapest. She began her acting career in 1924 and, until 1945 she appeared in most of the Capital's private theaters. From 1924 to 1926, she was with the Renaissance Theater (Reneszánsz Színház); from 1925 to 1929, 1932 to 1935, 1938 and 1940 with the Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház); in 1926, 1931, 1934 and 1944 with the Comedy Theater (Vígyszínház); from 1928 to 1931, 1935, 1937 and 1938 with the Magyar Theater (Magyar Színház); in 1932 with the Artist Theater (Művész Színház); in 1939 with the Royal and Pest Theaters (Royal, Pest Színházak) and, in 1940 and 1943 with the Andrassy Boulevard Theater (Andrássy úti Színház). In 1944 she was engaged by the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. After lifting the ban on her stage appearance in 1945, Ida Turay was again on the stage. In 1946, she played in various theaters in Budapest, including the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház). From 1957 to 1974 she lived abroad with her husband, István (Stephen) Békeffy. She made guest appearances in the USA and Canada. They returned to Hungary after 18 years absence, and she appeared, for example, on the Literary Stage (Irodalmi Színpad), and in the Comedy Theater. She was a member of the Thália Theater (Thália Színház) during the years 1978 to 1991. She was an original figure of the Hungarian theatrical life. Early in her career, she had ingénue roles; later, she successfully interpreted older ladies. She captivated her audience with her endearing, pleasant appearance, delightful humor, and good singing voice. Her roles included Columba in Jonson-Zweig's Volpone; Toinette in Molière's The Imaginary Invalid (Le Malade imaginaire) (A képzelt beteg); Katherina in Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew (Makrancos hölgy); Eliza in Shaw's Pygmalion, and Mrs. Marosi in F. Molnár - B. Zerkovitz's The Doctor (A doctor úr). She had 57 feature and TV film roles to her credit, including Captive Bird (Rab madár) (silent, 1929); The New Relatives (Az új rokonok) (1935); Hotel Kikelet (Hotel Dawn) (1937); Alpine Sunshine (Havasi napsütés) (1941); Siege of Beszterce (Beszterce ostroma) (1948); State Department Store (Állami Áruház) (1952), and Direction California (Irány Kalifornia) (TV, 1997). She received the Merited Artist title in 1987. There is an Ida Turay Theater, functioning in the Endre Ady Cultural Center, and a Prize bears her name. – B: 0883, 1031, 1445, T: 7456.→Tabódy, Klára; Békeffy, István.

Turchányi, Olivér (1900 - 1956) – Film technician and inventor. He started in the film industry as a cameraman in 1914, specializing in news and war reports, and later recording the military activities of Béla Kún's Communist regime of 1918-1919. Following the disintegration of the Hungarian Red Army, Turchányi went to work at the Mondial Film Studio in Vienna, returning to Budapest only in 1932, where he opened a film laboratory and became known as an innovator and inventor in the film industry. After World War II, he did not reopen his laboratory, but tried to further develop his Filmatyp, which was already successful before the war. He succeeded in marketing a few more machines but, shortly following the Communist takeover of Hungary, his firm Filmatyp System was nationalized, and Turchányi was locked out of his own small office. After that, he had to endure some very hard times until he died penniless in 1956. – B: 7654, 7655, T: 7654.→Filmatyp.

Túristvánd Watermill – A mill located near the tributary of the River Túr. It is a beautiful mill building, which had many functions in the past, among them: sawmill and hemp dressing. According to a document from 1315, there was a previous mill on the location, equipped with a floodgate and a running waterwheel, while the recent mill was built at the end of the 18th century, and underwent reconstruction in the 20th century. The whole building was again renovated in 1962 and 1963 and, in 1977 it became a monument of village architecture. The roof is covered with wooden shingles. – B: 1020, T: 7663.

Türker (Tyrker, Tyrkir) (about 992 AD) – Globetrotter. He was the foster father of the world traveler Leif Erikson, and sung in the Icelandic chronicles. He took part in the voyage of Leif Erikson, departing from Greenland, which led across the ocean as far as the eastern coast of Canada. According to the chronicles, 35 sailors departed in order to discover “the western land”, which was sighted by their fellow-countryman Bjarni, when he drifted during a sea storm. The Heimskringla Viking chronicle described in detail all those voyages, which the Icelandic Norsemen carried out in the 10th and 11th centuries to Greenland, and from there to the American continent. First they discovered Helluland (Land of Flat Stones) and Markland (Forest Land), which might have been the northern and southern coastlines of the present-day Labrador. Continuing their voyage southward, they stepped eventually onto dry land; among the crew there was Türker, who – so the chronicles state – found grape vines, which were unknown to the Icelandic Norsemen. From these plants, Türker collected a large quantity of cuttings and, based on this find, Leif Erikson named the area Vinland (Vine country).

Already the earliest commentators of Heimskringla raised the question of the ethnic origin of Türker, and contended that Türker (Török, Turk) was Hungarian (Magyar), with which conception several Hungarian researchers expressly agree on grounds that the old Norsemen were in frequent contact with Byzantium, where the Magyars were called Turks (Töröks), and in Pannonia, grapes have been well known since time immemorial.

Despite the connection of the Norse-Varég troops of the Rurik Dynasty of Kiev with Hungary, Türker is more likely to have reached so far north from Germany after the defeat of the Magyar army in the Battle of Augsburg, where he could have become a prisoner of war. The Norse Grønlandinga Saga and the Eiriks-Saga describe Türker as being a short-built, unattractive and quick-tempered man of many trades, with piercing eyes.

In the 1700s, a rock with runic script was discovered in Yarmouth Bay in Nova Scotia, Canada. The text appeared in Budapest in 1984, and its inscription is considered to have been written with Szekler (Transylvanian-Hungarian) runic script. It would be difficult to imagine that the inscription had not been prepared by Türker but by another member of the troop. A. Johnson, in his work entitled America Explorea, contends that the Greenland settlements of the Vikings have survived for five centuries and that several buildings and one church have been excavated there. At the northern headland of Vinland (L'Anse aux Meadows in the present Newfoundland) the Norwegian expedition of the archeologist Helge Ingstad excavated remains of buildings and personal belongings, which had been radiocarbon dated to be about 1000 AD. The Szekler runic script on the Vinland map (within the text) confirmed this locality. The discovery of America was not achieved by Columbus; it took place 500 years earlier – in 992 AD by Leif Erikson. – B: 0942, 1078, 1020, T: 7456.→ Szekler-Hungarian Runic Writing; Hungarian Runic Script.

Turkic Peoples – The large family of Turkic peoples is named after its ancestor Tur, and is sometimes designated as Turan, Turk, and Turi. Byzantine Emperor Leo VI, “Leo the Wise” (886-911) remembers him, and calls the Magyars “Turks” in his work Tactics: “Large and free nation are the Turks who, in front of the enemy always place heroism before their comfort and enjoyments. These people bear calamities, tiredness, hot and cold nobly, and being people of the Plains, they are not affected even in time of need”. The son of Leo the Wise, Constantine VII (912-959), known as Constantinos Porphyrogennitos (“Purple Born”), described the Magyar settlers similarly in his work De administrando imperio (The administration of the Empire). Even on the lower band of the Hungarian State (Holy) Crown, the title of King Géza I is “King of Turkia”. According to historians, Emperor Michael Dukas VII sent this part of the crown to the Hungarian King Géza I. Historian János Zonaras, in the first half of the 12th century, noted that the Turks are also known as “Ungros”. Simon Kézai wrote his universal Hungarian history, the Gesta Ungarorum in the second half of the 13th century, and in it he calls Árpád’s people Huns. Other historians originate the Hungarians from the Scythians. Popes Gregory I (1227-1241) and Urban V (1362-1370), called the Hungarians “Royal Scythians”. Scythian, Hun and Turk are collective names as much as Germanic and Slavic are today. The Avars, Pechenegs, Bulgars, Cumanians, Magyars, Parthians and Uzbeks all belonged to the same large ethnic group at first called Scythians, Huns, and later Turks, in spite of also having their own distinctive names. There is a river and a settlement in the Carpathian Basin named after Tur, the Turkish ancestor. – B: 1274, 1020, T: 3240.

Turkish Runic Writing – The center of its evolution is the area of Yenisey River in Siberia and Orkhon River in northern Mongolia. Among them the most famous and voluminous is the more than three-meter tall stone pillar, the gravestone of Khagan Bilge, discovered by Russian geographic explorers in the Orkhon area in 1887. An impressive relic also remained from other Turkic peoples, the Uyghurs, who are regarded as one of the Hun tribes. Russian scientist V. V. Radloff, and Danish scientist Wilhelm Thomsen are credited with deciphering their writing.

The runic writing of the Inner Asian Turkic peoples (Ancient Turkish runic writing) shows a connection with the Phoenician peoples’ runic writing, as well as with the Hungarian and Etruscan scripts. The connection of the Phoenician and Turkic writings could have come through the Aramaeans and Sogdians as intermediaries. According to a numerical comparative chart, the proportion of Hungarian and Phoenician signs is 50%, the Etruscan 43%, while the Turkic is 29%. In practical terms this means that, out of these runic writings, the Hungarian has the closest connection with Phoenician script since, through the Sabirs and the Phoenicians, they formulated the first alphabetic writing based on Egyptian hieroglyphs, the runes (letters), about 3500 years ago. – B: 1020, 2123, T: 7669. → Hungarian Runic Script; Uyghurs; Turkic peoples.

Turkey, Hungarians in – During their domination of the middle part of Hungary in the Carpathian Basin (1526-1686), the Turks indiscriminately kidnapped thousands of Hungarian men, women and children and took them to Turkey, where they became slaves. The able-bodied young men were sent to Janissary schools. In 1683, following the unsuccessful Thököly rebellion, only a small number of Hungarians moved to Turkish territory, mostly in the region of Izmit. At the end of the Rákóczy Freedom Fight in 1711, perhaps 100 to 120 Hungarians escaped to Turkey. About 80 of them were in attendance on Reigning Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II, and most of them settled down in the city of Rodosto (now Tekirdag). After the defeat of the 1848-1849 Revolution and War of Independence, the enemy approached from every direction but from the south. The only road open was to Turkey. Their exact number is not mentioned in the university textbooks; but Gyula (Julius) Szekfű estimated it to be around 4000. At first, they were interned in Vidin; later they were moved to Sumen and Kütahya. After a short while, about 3000 of them returned home, due to Haynau’s promise of a clean record. The Austrians and Russians wanted to extradite the rest, but the Sultan declined it; instead – in return for this gesture – he demanded that they convert to Islam. Lajos (Louis) Kossuth and his party refused, but general József Bem and about 240 Hungarian émigrés became Muslims.

During the period from the second half of the 19th century to World War I, the Turkish-Hungarian scientific, historical and cultural cooperation was especially important. As one of the results, the Corvin Codices were finally returned; this was the beginning of a linguistic relationship research and the Hungarian-Turkish scientific collaboration.

Kemal Atatürk asked for 500 Hungarian scientists, engineers and agriculturists to help with the realization of the Turkish economic reforms between the two World Wars. In the 1930s, almost 5000 Hungarian doctors, skilled laborers and craftsmen went to Turkey to work there. At that time Hungarian agriculturists directed most of the Turkish state farms.

By the records of the Central Office of Statistics in Ankara, at the turn of the millennium some 1200 Hungarians lived in Turkey. – B: 1020, T: 3240.→Török, Bálint; Thököly, Count Imre; Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Haynau, Baron Julius Freiherr von; Szeckfü, Gyula; Kossuth, Lajos; Bem, József.

Turks' Expulsion from Hungary – A series of campaigns that resulted in the liberation of most of the historic Kingdom of Hungary of the Carpathian Basin from Ottoman Turkish occupation near the end of the 17th century. The liberation of Hungary by military action began with the Turkish siege of Vienna in 1683; it was repelled by German, Austrian and Polish Armies, and the Turkish forces were routed in the Battle of Kahlenberg in 1683. The following year, on the initiative of Pope Innocent XI, the Holy League was formed to end the Ottoman Turkish rule in Europe; the League consisted of the Habsburg Empire, Poland, Lithuania, Bavaria, Brandenburg and the Saxon States of Germany, and the Venetian Republic. In 1686, the combined armies of the League organized and led by Prince Karl Leopold von Lothringen liberated Buda and most areas of Hungary from Turkish enslavement. During 1687, the mopping-up of military operations continued against the Turks in some remaining areas of the Carpathian Basin. Maximilian Emanuel's contingent, after failing to take Eszék (now Osiek, Croatia), defeated some Turkish troops and, on 12 August 1687, in the Battle of Nagyharsány, Prince Karl von Lothringen defeated Suleiman's army at Mohács (the site of the fateful battle of 1526). By then, all of Transdanubia (Dunántúl) and most of the Great Plain (Nagyalföld) were cleared of remaining pockets of Turks. In 1697, the main body of the Sultan's army was also defeated in the Battle of Zenta (now Senta, Serbia). The military operations against the Turks in the territory of Hungary were concluded with the Treaty of Karlowitz (Karlóca) of 1699, with the exception of the town of Temesvár (now Timișoara, Romania) and the Temes Interfluve (Temesköz) in the Banat area, which were reoccupied by Austrian troops in 1718. Of the Hungarian leadership, only the Prince of Northern Hungary (Upland, Felvidék, now Slovakia), Imre (Emeric) Thököly remained on the Turkish side, though most of his followers went over to the Christian side. Transylvania soon became free from Turkish suzerainty; and after the death of the Turkophile Prince Mihály (Michael) Apafi I in 1690, it became incorporated into the Habsburg Empire as well. The final defeat of the Turks in Hungary ended the three centuries of non-Christian, Islamic Turkish peril in Europe during the 15th to 17th centuries. – B: 1031, 1068, 1789, 1887, T: 7456.→Lothringen, Prince Karl Leopold von; Savoyenor, Eugen von; Thököly, Prince Imre; Lipót I, Emperor and King; Temesvár.

Turkish Rule in Hungary (16th-17th centuries) – This is the period in Hungarian history when, after the Battle of Mohács (1526), the large central part of the country gradually came under Ottoman-Turkish occupation. The Turks established their own rule on the occupied territories, where there were approximately 17,000-30,000 Turkish soldiers stationed at a time. The number of Turkish civilians was small; although in some key cities (Buda, Esztergom, Temesvár, Eger), the majority of residents were made up of those belonging to the Muslim religion, and to South-Slavic peoples (Serbians), who settled there during that time.

The largest unit of Turkish administration was the Vilayet, made up of Sanjak, similar to a county; those in turn were divided into a number of Nahiyek. The military and civilian roles were not separate from each other. At the helm of the whole occupied territory was the Bey (Pasha); in the 17th century that position often went with the honor of a Vizier. The Pasha in Buda was the omnipotent representative of the Sultan; by maintaining diplomatic contacts with Vienna, he could begin military enterprises on his own; financially, however, he was completely subject to the central administration. His power was limited also by the fact that whoever was under him (sandjak bey, kadi, defterdar) was appointed by the Porta (Sultan's Court). During the 145 years of occupation, there were 99 Pashas in Buda; it was only the activities of Sokoli Mustafa that proved to be lasting; he spent 12 years at the helm in Buda and could also pursue building projects (e.g. The Rudas Bath).

In Turkish administration, the Kadis filled key positions not only as judges of the Muslims, but they could also impose and collect taxes, organize mobilization of armies, form trade associations, markets, and supervise building projects. On the basic level, the institutions of Hungarian administration were kept.

As a reflection of the Ottoman production methods, the most profitable and least endangered areas became the property of the Sultan; the remainder was distributed among the field officers and Spahis; that is, they established farms on them to take care of the supplies of the garrison.

The Turkish tax system brought even some relief in comparison to the Hungarian tax system. The unit of taxation was the Hane (house and lot). The amount of the state tax, the Haradj (dzhizye) was 50 akche (1 florin); that was complemented by the gate tax of a similar value. The tenth of the crop (the successor of the church tax) was collected by the state, the rest by the landowner. The (extraordinary) military tax had already been collected in the XII century. The manpower of the residents was used in the transport of armaments and in fortification work. From the 16th to the end of the 17th century, the real value of taxes increased to three-times the size of the initial tax. The burdens were increased by the practice of the almost obligatory bribery.

Meanwhile, the commandants of the border fortresses in Turkish occupied territories also collected (church and state) taxes; from the 1650s, even the landowners collected their due. The only thing that provided some ease for the taxpayers was that they could redeem their burdens in one sum. The system of dual taxation was acknowledged by the Turks in their peace agreements as well. The Hungarian landowners insisted on maintaining their legal power; and they did practice it in the interior areas. This situation was made easier by the fact that, by the 17th century, the Turks passed on the right for jurisdiction and carrying out of a sentence for money, to the Hungarian communities.

Today's historical writings don't consider the occupation as 145-year-long uninterrupted destruction; although the "frontline", cutting the country into half, made the military conditions permanent. The devastation of the population to a great extent occurred during the Fifteen-year War, as well as during the war of re-conquest. During peace times, the country showed signs of development, though the wars never stopped completely. By the end of that period, the population of Hungary had decreased from approximately 4 million to 2 million. The nationality structure changed irreversibly: whereas in the Middle Ages the population of the country was 80% Hungarian, by the end of the 17th century Magyars (Hungarians) made up not even 50% – B: 1752, 1992, T: 7684.→Bég.

Túrmezei, Erzsébet (Elizabeth) (Tamási, 14 February 1912 - Budapest, May 1999) – Poet, writer and deaconess. After completing her studies at the University of Budapest, she was ordained a Lutheran deaconess. She served as administrator of the Senior Citizens Home of Balassagyarmat, and published 14 volumes of religious poems, stories and plays. Between 1946 and 1968, none of her works was published, only before and after. A selection from her writings includes The Secret (A titok) poems (1933); Song at the Time of the Earthquake (Ének földrengéskor) poems (1941); Little Esther's White Dress (A kis Eszter fehér ruhája) stories (1941); Two Boys (Két fiú) play (1943); Shine, Beautiful Stars (Ragyogjatok szép csillagok) stories, tales (1946); Thus You will be a Blessing (Így leszel áldás) poems (1968), and Living Now is a Mission (Most élni – küldetés), poems (1984). – B: 0878, 0877, T: 7103.

Túróc and Liptó Registries (now Turiec and Liptov in Slovakia) – A collection of estate deeds from the Counties of Túróc and Liptó, compiled at the end of the 14th century. It was necessitated by the circumstances that a certain “Clerk János (John) of accursed memory” made so many forgeries of similar documents that deeds in the possession of the nobles in these counties had to be re-examined and authenticated. Based on the results of a commission of experts, headed by the Lord Chief Justice Imre (Emeric) Bebek, the Registry of Túróc released 71 documents, the Registry of Liptó 84, pertaining to these cases. Prior to 1848, they were often used in estate litigation cases. – B: 1078, T: 7617.

Túróc Cantionale (Cantionale et passionabile Hung. S. J. Residentia Turocien) – A manuscript dating from around 1700, containing folk-hymns, utilizing numerous tunes from the Cantus Catholici. It is held in the Library of the University of Budapest. – B: 1197, 0886, T: 7617.

Turóc, Provostship of (or Turócz) (Northern Hungary or Upland, now Turiec, Slovakia) – It was founded by King Béla IV (1235 - 1270). Its founding charter was dated 15 July 1251, and handed over to the Premonstrian Order at Zniováralja. In 1266, the King granted many privileges to the members of the provostship. Later Turóc became a locus credibilis, i.e. “a place of authentication” (hiteleshely). Archbishop Miklós (Nicholas) Oláh, at his own expense, redeemed the hypothecated provostship of Turócz. Uriel Majtényi (1506-1541) was the last provost. Then the King donated the estate to the Jesuit Order. At the time of the dissolution of the Jesuits by King Joseph II (József II) (1780-1790), the estate was transferred to the University Foundation. – B: 1078, 1230, 1020, T: 7103.

Túróczy, Zoltán (Arnót, 23 October 1893 - Győr, 21 November 1971) – Lutheran Bishop. He completed his secondary studies at Rozsnyó (now Rožňava, Slovakia) and his theological studies at the Theological Academy of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). He spent a number of years in Bodelschwing's Institute at Bielefeld, Germany, and became an assistant pastor at Komárom and Ózd in Hungary; he also served as pastor in Arnót, Győr and Nyíregyháza. He took an active part in the internal missionary work; during his trips to Finland he developed lively connections with the revival movement there. In 1939 he became Bishop of the Tisza Church District. In 1945, he was arrested and imprisoned for 10 years with the trumped-up charge of warmongering, but was released in 1946. It was only in 1948 that he was restored to his position as Bishop; however, in the same year, he was appointed Bishop of the Transdanubian Church District and participated in discussions with the Communist Hungarian state; then in 1952 he resigned from his Bishopric as a result of external pressure. In 1956, during the Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight, his position was restored; but in 1957 he was set aside for good, after which he lived in Győr. It was also in 1957 that he received an Honorary Doctorate from the University of Helsinki; however, he was not allowed to travel to Finland for the distinction to be handed over to him. His main works are The Church Life of the Finns (A finnek egyházi élete) (1933); Our Age and the Mission (Korunk és a misszió) (1934), and Loosened Sheaf on God's Treshing Floor (Oldott kéve Isten szérűjén), 1936. – B: 1050, T: 7456.

Turret – Small spires with four or eight sides, projecting from gables, from corners of square towers, or from the top of buttresses of Gothic stone churches. Their role is mostly decorative, but they also give additional static loads to the buttresses. On Hungarian wooden churches usually four small turrets are at the base of the large, central spire. These turrets are slim and tall, like the main spire, and lack any stabilizing role. According to some researchers, the four turrets honor the four elements (air, fire, water, earth). – B: 1138, 1153, 1020, T: 7663.

Türr, István (Stephen) (Baja, 11 August 1825 - Budapest, 3 May 1908) – Military officer. He was an apprentice in Baja. He interrupted his school studies by volunteering for military service in 1842, and went to Lombardy with the 52nd Austrian Infantry Regiment. He was in Milan at the time of the 1848 Revolution; as a second-lieutenant, he took part in the war between Austria and Piedmont. During the armistice, he changed sides to the Piedmont Army; he was raised to the rank of Captain and commissioned to organize a Hungarian Legion. When the Legion was disbanded, he and his troop joined the Baden insurgents and he was promoted to Colonel. After the fall of the Revolutions and the War of Independence in 1849, he spent time in various European countries, mainly in Piedmont during 1850 and 1853, and became involved in the Mazzinist Conspiracy and the unsuccessful uprising of Milan on 6 February 1853. He was sent into exile in Tunis. In the Crimean War, he was in Turkish, and later in English service. When he was in the Romanian Principalities, he was arrested by the Austrians and the court-martial in Brassó (now Braşov, Romania) sentenced him to death on 23 February 1856. He was freed on the intervention of Victoria, Queen of England. In 1859, with Garibaldi's troops, he fought the Austrians and was wounded. In 1860, during the Sicilian expedition, Garibaldi appointed him General; the 15th Division was under his command, including the Hungarian Legion. After the occupation of Naples, he became the Military Commander of the town and the province. In the struggle between the Democratic-Republican forces and the Cavourist-Monarchist Party, he sided with the latter. He became Lieutenant-General of the Royal Italian Army. He became related to the French Emperor Napoleon III, by marrying his niece, Adele Wyse-Bonaparte. During the times of the 1866 War, he was on diplomatic missions. After the 1867 Compromise he offered his services both in Pest and Vienna. He was an advocate of the Triple Alliance of the Habsburg Monarchy, Germany and Italy. He took part in the preliminary work of the Panama Canal in the 1870s, and in the Corinthian Canal in the 1880s. In the canal-network of Hungary, he took part in the formation of the Ferenc Canal system in the 1870s, and he was the President of the Ferenc Canal Society. He also played a role in the Freemason Movement. He was the author of innumerable pamphlets, articles and recollections in a great variety of European dailies. Schools, streets and a Museum bear his name. – B: 0883, 1068, 1031, T: 7456.→Italy, Hungarian Legion in; Panama Canal.

Turul bird – The most important bird of the origin-myth of the Magyars (Hungarians). It is a messenger from God in Hungarian mythology, and sits on top of the tree of life along with the other spirits of unborn children in the form of birds. The Turul is probably a large falcon, and the origin of the word is most probably Turkic (togrul or turgul means a medium-large bird of prey in the family Accipitridae, Goshawk or Red Kite). In Hungarian, the word sólyom means falcon, and there are three ancient words describing different kinds of falcons: kerecsen (saker), zongor (Turkish Sungur = Gyr Falcon, lives on in the male given name Zsombor), and turul. In the legends Turul is mentioned at least twice as directing the fate of the Hungarians: the first time, Emese, mother of Álmos, wife of Ügyek (whose ancestor is Attila the Hun) had a dream, where a Turul appeared, impregnated her symbolically, and a crystal-clear water stream started to flow from her, and as it moved Westward, it grew into a great river, which meant that her child was going to be the father of a line of great rulers. In the second version, the leader of the Hungarian tribes had a dream, where eagles attacked their horses and a Turul came and saved them, to symbolize that they had to move; and when they did, the Turul helped to show them the way and led them finally to the land in the Carpathian Basin that became Hungary. This legend is about Hun-Magyar kinship, and the basis of the theory that Magyars reoccupied the Carpathian Basin as their rightful inheritance from Attila's great Hun Empire. Based upon ancient Hungarian tradition, the royal house of the Hun(garian)s (the kings of the Huns and later the Hungarians) bears the name of the Turul clan (original Latin: genere Turul, later called by the name of the House of Árpád) that descended from the wise and just king Nimrod, the first king on Earth. The Turul represents God's power and will. The Turul was seen as the ancestor of Attila, and it was also the symbol of the Huns. The Hungarian Turul is often represented carrying the flaming Sword of God (the sword of Attila). The authentic representation of the Turul is always shown with a crown. It cannot be linked directly to the Holy Crown of Hungary, but more to the crown of Attila, as by ancient heritage, Attila is considered to be the first king of Hungary, as stated in the Chronicum Pictum and in other codices. There were 3 Turul statues, each with the wingspan of 15 meters in Greater Hungary, encompassing the entire Carpathian Basin (before its borders were reduced by the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon of 1920). On the mountain near Tatabánya, Hungary stands the last one of three, the other two having been destroyed. It is the largest bird statue in the world, and the largest bronze statue in Central Europe. There are 195 statues of the Turul in Hungary, and 32 in Transylvania, 16 in the Partium, 8 in Slovakia, 5 in Ukraine, 7 in Voivodina and 1 in Austria. – B&T: 1031.→Emese; Ügyek; Álmos; Attila; Holy Crown.

Turul Legend – It is the ethnogenesis of the Hungarians, as told in the Dream of Emese. The legend, preserved in the chronicles, lived on for hundreds of years. Modern research is once again of the opinion that the water motive in the Turul legend indicates that the original meaning of the dream is buried in the Attila tradition. The interpreters of the dreams – the shamans – who considered the Turul tribe of the Hungarians identical with Attila's tribe, construed it to mean that the common tribal ancestor, the Turul bird of the dream is in fact the reincarnation of Attila, who will lead his people to another land, where the newly-found power of his dynasty will reach its height. – B: 1231, 1020, T: 7617.→Attila; Shaman; Turul.

Tusk – Tusk symbolizes the capability of the attack and the defense. Figuratively it should stand for a being who strives to achieve perfection. In the negative sense, the tusk signifies bestiality, beastly passions and desires; this is the reason why the devil is illustrated with tusks. It is well known around the world that, wearing a slain animal's tusk transmits strength to the bearer. There is a provable connection in the case of the shaman's and the medicine man's mysterious power and having been born with teeth (tusk), or more than usual number of teeth. Teeth not only symbolized strength but also knowledge. – B: 1020, T: 7685.

Tüskés, Gábor (Gabriel) (Pécs, 13 September 1953 - ) – Literary historian, ethnographer. He studied German literature and ethnography at the University of Budapest (1975-1980). From 1980 to 1982 he joined the ethnographic research group of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, later working on a scholarship from the Academy (1983-1986), as well as on a Soros scholarship there during 1987 and 1999. He also went to Würzburg to study on a Humboldt scholarship (1989-1990). Then he worked as a research fellow at the Literary Institute of the Academy, later becoming a senior research fellow (1993-1999), and from 2000 Head of Department, while he was on a Széchenyi-professorial scholarship. From 1997, after obtaining a Ph.D. in literary studies, he became Professor of World Literature at the Esterházy College of Keszthely. He specialized in the literature and cultural history of the 17th and 18th centuries: Historia Litteraria in the 18th century, and also the history of human relations, ideas, religiosity, iconography and folklore. He publishes studies and monographs in these fields in western languages and gives lectures at about 30 international conferences. Tüskés has been one of the most prolific, internationally known researchers. His works include Johannes Nádasí: Europäische Verbindungen der geistlichen Erzählliteratur Ungarns im 17. Jahrhundert (2001); Vernacular Religiousness in Hungary in the 17-18. Century (Népi vallásosság Magyarországon a 17-18. században)(2001); A Study of the Symbolic Representation in Renaissance and Baroque Literature (2003), and Germania Hungaria litterata. Deutsch-ungarische Literaturverbindungen in der frühen Neuzeit (2008). – B: 0874, 0878, 1817, T: 7456.

Tüskés, Tibor (Balatonszántód, 30 June 1930 - Pécs, 11 November 1989) – Writer, cultural and literary historian. In 1952 he obtained a diploma of education (Dip.Ed.) in Hungarian language and history, from the University of Budapest, and began to work as a teacher in Dombóvár, later in Pécs, already author of a number of books, studies and articles. From 1959 to 1964 he was Editor-in-Chief of the periodical Present Age (Jelenkor). Having published in it articles by authors considered to belong to the “opposition”, e.g. János (John) Kodolányi, Sándor (Alexander) Weöres, Miklós (Nicholas) Mészöly, he was relieved of his position; however, he did not give up his editorial activity; he edited a book series and carried out extensive literary correspondence and, after the end of the Communist rule and change of regime (1991), he worked as Editor of the journal Somogy (County Somogy). His writings, studies and essays in literary and cultural history reveal considerable sensitivity, as do his monographs on János (John) Pilinszky, László (Leslie) Nagy, János (John) Kodolányi, Gyula (Julius) Illyés, Péter Veres or György (George) Rónay, featuring and interpreting the development of the creative role in them; approaching them in an unbiased, impartial way, interpreting not only their literary and esthetic content, but also the vision behind the work concerned. His more than fifty works include Thus Lived Miklós Zrinyi (Így élt Zrínyi Miklós) (1973); Our Birthplace, Transdanubia (Szülőföldünk a Dunántúl) edited (1980); Gyula Illyés in the Mirror of his Creations and Confessions (Illyés Gyula alkotásai és vallomásai tükrében) (1983); László Nagy, short monograph (1983); Ormánság (1987), and Exposed Time (Exponált idő) (2000). He was presented with a number of honors, such as the Attila József Prize (1976), the Janus Pannonius Art Prize (1981), the Gyula Krúdy commemorative medal (1994), the János Arany Prize (1998) and the Zoltán Szabó Prize (2000). – B: 0874, 0878, 2080, T: 7456.→Most of the persons have their own entry.

Tüski, István (Stephen) (Budapest, 2 June 1924 - Utrecht, 27 July 2010) – Reformed minister. Though a tailor's son, he chose to work as a pastor and joined the youth movements of the Church. He studied at the Theological College of Budapest, where he lived and worked during the Soviet siege of Budapest at the end of World War II. He was briefly taken prisoner by the Russians, which basically determined his life. He was a teacher of religion in the Capital Budapest and in 1947, he received a scholarship from the Netherlands, where he remained after the onset of the Communist rule in Hungary in 1948. He became the pastor of the Hungarian refugees. On his request the Admiraal de Ruyter Fonds (Foundation) was established for the aid of suffering Hungarians. He also published in Hungarian the Heidelberg Catechism, the Bible, and the hymnbook for dispersed Hungarians. After the defeat in the 1956 Hungarian Revolution, he returned five times from Vienna to the Netherlands with Red Cross trains filled with Hungarian refugees. Later on he often traveled to Eastern Europe bringing the aid of Dutch charities for congregations and persecuted parsons. In the Netherlands he organized the care of the Hungarian refugees: the Spiritual Service of the Hungarian Protestants in Holland (Hollandiai Magyar Protestáns Lelkigondozói Szolgálat). On his initiative the Kelemen Mikes Circle (Mikes Kelemen Kör) was formed and he became the first president of the Hungarian Federation of Holland (Hollandiai Magyar Federáció). He founded the Hungarian Home (Magyar Otthon), as well as the paper Come along (Jöjjetek). After the political changes of 1989, new possibilities arose. In Holland he organized the financial provision for the resumption of the Reformed Consultative Synod (Református Tanácskozó Zsinat) and The Reformed World Federation (Református Világszövetség). Of the greatest importance to him were the reopening of the church schools and the recovery of the church buildings both in Hungary and beyond the present borders of Hungary, e.g. the buildings needed for reopening the churches in Carpatho-Ukraine (Sub-Carpathia). For their purchase, fitting-out and commencement he requested and found the necessary funds. Realizing the importance of founding the Gáspár Károli Reformed University in Budapest, he left no stone unturned to get it going. Many Reformed kindergartens and primary schools in Hungary received assistance through his work. Both Márta Tüski, the wife of Tüski, and his daughter Márta Szabó are Reformed ministers in Holland. During the second half of the 20th century and after the turn of the millennium, István Tüski provided outstanding service for Reformed life both in Hungary and in the detached territories around historic Hungary of the Carpathian Basin. Among his numerous distinctions are the Memorial Medal of the Holland Red Cross (1957), the Knight of Honor of the Order of Merit of Oranje-Nassau (1989), the Small Cross of Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1994), the Presidential Gold Memorial Medal of the Republic of Hungary (1999), the Pro Patria Hungaria Prize (2001), and the Officer's Cross of Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2006). – B: 2124, T: 7456.

Tűz, Tamás (Thomas) (Lajos Makó) (Győr, 18 April 1916 - Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, 7 April 1992) – Roman Catholic priest, poet and writer. He received his secondary and Theological education in Győr, and was ordained at the Theological College there in 1939. For a few years he served as a priest and religious instructor. He was member of the Vigilia Poets circle, and his poems were published in newspapers and journals, such as the Hungarian Star (Magyar Csillag), Life (Élet), Bridge (Híd), Hungarians (Magyarok), and New Man (Új Ember) in the 1940s. He published two volumes of poetry, one in 1941, the other in 1943, the year in which he was conscripted and served as an army chaplain. In the fall of 1944, he was captured on the Soviet Russian front and spent three years in a POW camp in the northern part of Russia. After his release, he served as a chaplain in the countryside. After the defeat of the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he fled to the West. He lived in Canada for seven years, and served in several ethnic Hungarian parishes, including Calgary, Alberta, also in Italy for three years, and in California, USA for five years. He returned to Canada in 1971 to live in Toronto and Hamilton. Tamás Tűz was the founder of the Hungarian American Writers' Association. He published more than twenty volumes of poetry, including On Restless Wings (Nyugtalan szárnyakon) (1959, in English 1966); Selected Poems (Válogatott versek) (1972); Angel, Reveal Only Half Of It (Angyal, mondd ki csak félig) (1975); Storm on the Puszta (Vihar a pusztán) novel (1980), and Seven Sighs on the Mountain (Hét sóhaj a hegyen), selections (1987). He also published novels and a book of stories. His poems, short stories, literary articles and reviews were published mainly by the émigré Hungarian Press, such as Literary Paper (Irodalmi Újság), National Guard (Nemzetőr), Catholic Review (Katolikus Szemle), Horizon (Látóhatár), New Horizon (Új Látóhatár), New Europe (Új Európa), Rainbow (Szivárvány), Our Life (Életünk) and Chronicle (Krónika). – B: 0892, 1150, 1257, 1672, T: 2342, 7617, 7456.

Tuzson, Pál (Paul) (Zernyest, now Zărnești, Romania, 18 March 1901 - Budapest, 7 May 1959) – Chemical engineer. He received his Degree from the Budapest Polytechnic in 1924. During 1928-1939 he was a lecturer in the Medical Chemistry Institute of the University of Pécs. In 1939 he received his PhD in Chemical Engineering. In 1937 he became Assistant Professor. From the end of the 1930s, he worked in various research laboratories of pharmacological companies in Budapest and Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). In 1953 he organized the Botanical Chemistry Section of the Pharmacological Industrial Research Institute, which he led until his death. Outstanding are Tuzson's experiments with the carotenoids; he worked out a number of procedures for the manufacture of drugs for treating the heart. The most important results of his last years were attained in the field of research into Solanum alkaloids, by which he established the basis for the manufacture of steroid hormones. – B: 0883, 1336, T: 7685.

Twelve Points→March 1848, 12 points.

Twilight Star (Esthajnal Csillag – Evening star) – The name originates from the observation that the star is visible in the western hemisphere immediately after sunset, and in the eastern hemisphere just before sunrise. Therefore, in the past it was thought to be two different stars, the morning star and the evening star. The star's old name still occurs frequently in Hungarian folk songs. – B: 1138, T: 7456.

Tyll, Attila (Szombathely, 21 May 1923 - Budapest, 20 May 2002) – Actor. He started his carrier in 1951 in Debrecen. In 1955 he obtained a diploma by correspondence from the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. In 1959 he worked with the Theater of Szolnok (Szolnoki Színház); from 1962 to 1979 he was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. He played one season at the Jókai Theater (Jókai Színház) of County Békés, and three seasons at the József Attila Theater (József Attila Színház) in Budapest. From 1983 he was a retired member of the Folk Theater (Népszínház) in Budapest. The acting ability of Attila Tyll found expression in portraying complicated characters. Because of his pleasant personality, he soon became a well-liked member of the acting groups. His easily adjustable nature and his attitude for avoiding conflicts made him the most employed member of the National Theater. Theater companies soon included him and he became the Old Man of theater life. Among his roles were: Polonius, later the Ghost (Szellem) in Shakespeare's Hamlet; Padre, father of Gyula Illés' Compromise (Kiegyezés); Somai in Gergely Csiki's Bubbles (Bubborékok); Candy in John Steinbeck's Of Mice and Men (Egerek és emberek); Anzel in Molière's The Miser (A fősvény), and Mikhal in József Katona's Bánk bán. The world of film and television soon discovered this artist of singular abilities. Among his 27 feature films are Rab Raby (1964); A Hungarian Nabob (Egy magyar nábob) (1966); The Last Circle (Az utolsó kör) (1968); Cat's Play (Macska játék) (1974); Temptations (Kisértés) (1977); The Last Manuscript (Az utolsó kézirat) (1987), and Sacra Corona (2001). Of the 64 TV films, his portraying of Regent Miklós (Nicholas) Horthy in Our Century (Századunk) stands out. His awards were the Jászai Mari Prize (1967), the Merited Artist title (1983), and the Aase Prize (1992). – B: 1031, T: 7684.→Horthy, Miklós.

Type-printing fast telegraph – An apparatus for the transmission of continuous texts, using telegraph tape instead of the Morse code; it can be written and read by anybody. The apparatus that employed the Latin alphabet for writing in many languages was invented by Antal (Antony) Pollák and József (Joseph) Virág. The first demonstration of the fast telegraph took place in 1899. The machine transmitted 40 thousand words per hour. Although other systems did not even approach it in terms of simplicity, reliability and speed, the apparatus has not gained currency because of the lack of need for such a high performance. – B: 1230, 1226, T: 7674.→Pollák, Antal.

Typesetter (or typesetting machine) – Mechanized typesetting. Around 1815, the English Benjamin Foster advanced the idea; but his machine did not reach even the experimental stage. The English William Church took out a patent on his typesetter, but his machine did not live up to expectations either and was soon forgotten. The Hungarian József (Joseph) Kliegl was the first who, in 1840, was successful in developing a machine for typesetting and distributing. The machine, introduced in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), could set and distribute 28 thousand types per hour, the equivalent of the work of 28 typesetters. At the end of the 19th century, Károly (Charles) Méray-Horváth invented a new kind of typesetter. – B: 0883, 1226, T: 7674.→Kliegl, József; Méray-Horváth, Károly.

U

Ubrizsy, Gábor (Gabriel) (Ungvár, now Uzhhorod, Ukraine, 23 September 1919 - Budapest, 25 May 1973) – Mycologist and herbalist. In 1941, he obtained a B.A. Degree from the University of Debrecen, majoring in Biology, Geography and Chemistry; he worked there under Antal (Anthony) Gulyás. For a short time (1940 to 1944), when Northern Transylvania was returned to Hungary by the Second Vienna Award, he worked at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania); later, in 1949, he became a correspondent for the Institute of Phytopathology at the University of Debrecen, participating in its development of the Research Institute of Plant Protection.

He was its Director until 1969. Thereafter, he acted as scientific advisor and titular professor. In 1968, he was President of the Mycological Section of the National Forestry Association (OEE). From 1971, he was a member of the British Mycological Society. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1965, ordinary 1973), and member of a number of societies in Hungary and abroad, e.g. a member of the Centre International des Antiparasitaires (International Center for Pesticides – Nemzetközi Növényvédőszeri Központ) of Zürich from 1955; from 1960, a specialist consultant for the European Plant Protection Organization and, from 1966, a presidium member of the European Weed Research Council. Later in life, he was engaged in herbal studies and in environmental protection problems. His main research fields were: plant pathology, mycology; ecology and cenology of large mushrooms, and the systematics of micro-mushrooms; also ecology and cenology of weeds and integral plant protection. His international prestige is shown by the naming after him of several mushroom species and genera. His works include Plant Pathology (Növénykórtan) (1952, 1965); The Large Mushrooms of Hungary (Magyarország nagygombái) (1953); Agricultural Mycology (Mezőgazdasági mykológia) (1968), and Pesticides – Blessing and Curse? (Peszticidek – áldás és átok?) (1969). He received the Clausius Memorial Medal and Diploma (1971), and the Kossuth Prize (1951). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456

Udránszky, László (Ladislav) (Budatin, near Zsolna, now Žilina, Slovakia, 12 October 1862 - Budapest, 21 March 1914) – Physician and physiologist. He received his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1883, where he became an Intern at the Clinic for Internal Medicine. From 1886, he practiced at Strasbourg under Felix Hoppe-Seyler; later at Freiburg, where he became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) in 1889. From 1890, he worked as a demonstrator at the Clinic for Internal Medicine of the University of Budapest, and Head of the Clinical Laboratory. In 1891, he became an honorary lecturer in Medical Chemistry. In 1892 at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) he was Professor of Biology, lecturing in biology and pathological chemistry. From 1909 to 1914 he was Professor of Biology at the University of Budapest. He is internationally known by the reaction developed and clarified by him to detect carbohydrates. He proved that glycerin is formed as the main product during fermentation. He determined the chemical structure of putrescin, the presence of ptomains in the cystinuria urine. He clarified the formation of urohelinin. He carried out important research in the field of temperature sensation and vision. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1909). His works include Über die Identität des Putrescins und des Tetramethyldiamins (1888) and The Biology of Vision (A látás élettana) (1909). His researches are significant in the sensation of heat and on vision. – B: 0883, 1730, T: 7456.

Udvardy, Anna (Unatínska, Unatinszky) (Piraeus, Greece, 25 July 1927 - Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 20 April 1987) – Actress. She was born in Greece; at the age of 7 she moved to Budapest with her parents. In 1946 she completed her studies at the School of Dramatic Art of the National Actors' Association, Budapest. Thereafter, she pursued further studies at the Conservatory of Music in Prague. She worked as a draughtswoman in Karlovy Vary from 1946 to 1948. From 1952 to 1986, she worked as an actor for the Hungarian Regional Theater of Rév-Komárom (now Komarno, Slovakia) (Magyar Területi Színház). She played the trials and tribulations of women's fate with high-standard articulation and refined acting. Her roles included Eliza in J. B. Molière's The Miser (A fősvény); Timea in M. Jókai - I. Fellegi's The Golden Man (Az Aranyember); Beatrice in J. Heltai's The Silent Knight (A néma levente); Luiza in F. Schiller's Love and Intrigue (Ármány és Szerelem); Angustias in Garcia Lorca's The House of Bernarda Alba (Bernanda Alba háza); Mother in Čapek's The Mother (Anya); Kamilla in E. Szigligeti's Liliomfi, and Baroness Plankerhorst in M. Jókai - Gy. Kopányi's Sons of the Stone-hearted Man (A kőszívű ember fiai). – B: 1445, 1890, T: 7456.

Udvardy, Erzsébet (Elizabeth) (Baja, 27 December 1929 - ) – Painter. She was born into a teacher's family. In the last year of high school, she was a student of the free school of Gyula (Julius) Rudnay at Baja. Between 1948 and 1953 she studied in the class of Aurél Bernáth of the Academy of Fine Arts in Budapest. Her tutors were Géza Fónyi and Endre (Andrew) Domanovszky. She taught Art History at the Klára Leöwey Teachers' Training College, Budapest. Between 1960 and 1963, she studied on a Derkovics scholarship. One of the subjects of her painting is the scenery around Lake Balaton, and the life of people living there. Except for József (Joseph) Egry, there hasn't been such an inspired and individual immortalizer of the world of Lake Balaton as she. The Bible and the Church inspired the other subjects of her paintings. Her creations of religious art have found place in numerous churches and church-related buildings. In the St. Imre (Emeric) Parish Church of Toma, three panels, depicting the story of suffering can be seen: The Last Supper (Az utolsó vacsora), The Night at Gethsemane, and the Resurrection (Getszemáni Éjszaka, és a Feltámadás). The creations at the Saint Anthony Chapel (Szent Antal kápolna) of Badacsonyörs were completed in 1975-1976. It was in 1957 that her work entitled Iconostasis with Hungarian Saints (Ikonosztázia Magyar Szentekkel) was created and installed at the Saint Ladislav Chapel (Szent László Kápolna) at Ábrahámhegy. Udvardi's works can be seen in numerous churches and public buildings: in Veszprém, Keszthely, Lesencefalú, Tapolca, and also in the Franciscan Convent of Sümeg and Balatonakarattya. The third range of her works call to mind moments of a vanished historical past. Her paintings are projections of clean radiance, where even the paint turns into light; the use of oil paint, gold leaf foil and silver foil together make them unique. Since 1953, she appears continuously at individual and collective exhibitions at home and abroad. Among her creations, most are to be found in Badacsonytomaj and its environs, and also in public collections: in the museums of Székesfehérvár, Szolnok, Keszthely, at the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and the Hungarian National Gallery. Her works were awarded with many prizes, including the Egry Prize (1966), the Munkácsy Prize (1969), the Meritorious Artist and the Outstanding Artist titles (1975, 1981), the Artist's Award of the Saint Fortunatus Knighthood of Mainz (1989), the Award for Hungarian Art (1990, 1999), the Kossuth Prize (1999), and the Pro Cultura Christiana Prize (2009). – B: 0874, 1484, 1654, T: 7684.→Rudnay, Gyula; Bernáth, Aurél; Domanovszky, Endre; Egry, József.

Udvardy, Tibor (Budapest, 4 September 1914 - Balatonboglár, 16 July 1981) – Opera singer (tenor). He graduated from the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest in 1939; then he signed a contract with the Budapest Opera House. His first performance was the title role in Ferenc (Francis) Erkel's opera, Hunyadi László. For many years he was the soloist at the Inner City Parish Church of Budapest. On the occasion of the opening of the Opera House after World War II, he sang the tenor solo in Z. Kodály's Psalmus Hungaricus. His opera and operetta performances have been recorded on numerous occasions. Foreign performances include Vienna, Moscow and the USA. His main roles included Wagner's Lohengrin and Sigfried; Britten's Peter Grimes; Tchaikovsky's Eugene Onegin; Cavadarossi in Puccini's Tosca; Pinkerton in Puccini's Madama Butterfly, and Alfred in Verdi's La Traviata. He was a versatile singer. His repertory included lyric characters as well as dramatic ones. He was an eminent oratorio singer as well. He was a recipient of the Liszt Prize (1952) and the Merited Artist title (1955). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7667.→Erkel, Ferenc; Kodály, Zoltán.

Udvarhelyi, Miklós (Nicholas) (Tiszaabád, 1790 - Pest, 14 January 1864) – Actor, singer (bass), theater director and manager. He graduated from the Reformed College of Debrecen and studied Reformed Theology at Debrecen, what he gave up to follow a theatrical career. In 1813 he was already a member of the Second Hungarian Theatrical Company in Pest. Together with Ádám Láng, he tried to establish a permanent Hungarian theatrical life. In 1824 he was an actor at the Theater of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). From 1827, as its director, he founded the first Opera Company and played an important role in the production of the operas of József (Joseph) Ruzitska. From 1828 to 1835 he was a member of the Troupe of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). In 1833, he chose as his farewell play József (Joseph) Katona's great historical drama, Bánk bán, which turned out to be its world première. From 1835 to 1837, he was a member of the Ensemble of Buda; and between 1837 and 1861, he was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. During 1852-1853 he managed the staging of operas. By donating his extensive score collection, he contributed significantly to the development of the music score collection of the National Theater. He was one of the decisive, pioneering figures of Hungarian theatrical life. His roles included Kálmán in Ruzitska's Béla's Flight (Béla futása); Mikhál in Katona's Bánk bán; Basilio in Rossini's The Barber of Seville (A szevillai borbély); Gloster in Shakespeare's King Lear (Lear király); Don Fernando in Beethoven's Fidelio; Palatine Gara in Erkel's Hunyadi László, and Zakarias in Verdi's Nabucco. His book is entitled: Data on the History of Hungarian Acting (Adatok a magyar színészet történetéhez) (1860). He was one of the pioneers of the Hungarian theatrical art. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.→Katona, József.

Udvaros, Béla (Budapest, 10 January 1925 - ) – Theater manager. He began his career in 1951 when, on a scholarship, he became Manager at the Hungarian People's Army Theater (A Magyar Néphadsereg Színháza). From 1953 to 1957 he worked at the Mme.

Déry Theater (Déryné Színház), then as Manager at the József Katona Theater (Katona József Színház) of Kecskemét until 1973. From 1974 until 1985, he was Manager at the Jókai Theater of County Békés. In the autumn, his new initiative, the Gospel Theater (Evangéliumi Színház) was started. During his career he managed more than one thousand drama evenings, in which he mostly popularized contemporary plays. His roles include F.R. Čapek's The White Disease (A fehér kór); Chekhov's Three Sisters (Három nővér); Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája); Sophocles' Electra, and Ben Jonson's Volpone (Italian for "sly fox"). Since 1990, he has been the Founder, Artistic Director and Manager of the Evangelical Theater (Evangéliumi Színház), where his stage management has included Hone Kouka's The Prophet (A próféta); Jenő Heltai's One Penny (Egy fillér); Gyula Illyés' Torch-flame (Fáklyaláng); G. Bernard Shaw's Saint Joan (Szent Johanna), and Magda Szabó's Day of Saint Bartholomew (Szent Bertalan nappala). He was awarded the Hungarian Heritage Prize. – B: 1445, 1506, T: 7456.

Udvaros, Dorottya (Dorothea) (Budapest, 4 August 1954 - ) – Actress. On completing her studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art in 1978, she was contracted to the Szigligeti Theater (Szigligeti Színház) in Szolnok. In 1981, she was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) in Budapest and, from 1982, of the József Katona Theater (Katona József Színház) in Budapest. Since 2002, she has been a member of the National Theater in Budapest. A ceaseless sweep of complex color- and voice-alterations characterize her playing. Her roles include Ala in Mrożek's Tango; Lena in Trifonov's The Exchange; Cressida in Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida; Rosalinda in Shakespeare's As You Like It (Ahogy tetszik); Natalia Ivanovna in Chekhov's Three Sisters (A három nővér); Sofia Yegorovna in Chekhov's Platonov; Celimene in Molière's Misanthrope (A Mizantróp/Embergyűlölő), and Alkmene in H.v. Kleist's Amphitryon. She played the leading role in more than 60 feature and TV films, including Evil Men (Rossz emberek) (1972); Lost Illusions (Elveszett illúziók) (1982); Colonel Redl (Redl ezredes) (1985); Miss Arizona (1987); Meeting with Venus (Találkozás Vénusszal) (1991); Girls (Csajok) (1995); Next (2000); Hungarian Beauty (Magyar szépség) (2003); Ciao Bambino (2005), and The Inheritance of Esther (Eszter hagyatéka) (2008). Her TV films include Police (Rendőrség) (1976); Mednyánszky (1978); Petőfi (1981-series); Tihamér (1989); Családi nyár (Family Summer) (1996), and This Kid Takes After Whom? (Kire ütött ez a gyerek?) (2007). She was awarded a number of prizes, including the Mari Jászai Prize (1983), the Montreal Festival Prize (1964), the Vevey Festival Prize (1985), the Erzsébet Prize (1988, 1989), the Déryné Prize (1995) the For Hungarian Art Prize (1998), the Gundel Art Prize (2004), and the Kossuth Prize in 1990. – B: 1031, 1445, T: 7456.

Úgek (? – 850) – He was a descendant of Prince Opos of the Hungarians. He first appeared west of the River Dnieper on the former land of the Scythians. His daughter was Emese, a girl supposedly of Hun origin, a descendant of Attila. According to the early chronicles, from the bloodlines of Emese were born Prince Álmos and his son Prince Árpád. The Turul bird became the mythological symbol of the House of Árpád. – B: 1020, T: 7658. → Emese Legend; Álmos; Árpád; Turul Bird; Scythians.

Ugyan, Anita (Nyíregyháza, 6 October 1969 - ) – Mountain climber. She finished her elementary and secondary school studies at Nyíregyháza, after which she attended the Academy of Physical Education, and completed her studies at the University of Physical Education in Budapest. She is a Swedish World Class fitness manager, and a teacher at the Mountain Climbing School that organizes high mountain tours. Her mountain climbing achievements are: Elbrus, Caucasus Mountain, 5600 m; Aconcagua, South America, 6962 m; in 2001 Mount Everest, Millennium Mount Everest Expedition, 7800m; in 2003 Gasherbrum II., Himalaya-Karakoram, 7300 m; In 2006 Dhaulagiri, Himalaya, 7300 m; in 2007 Gasherbrum I, Himalaya-Karakorua, 8068 m; in 2007 Broad Beak, Himalaya-Karakoram, 8047 m; in 2009 Mount Everest, Himalaya, 8850 m; in 2010 Mt Everest, Himalaya, 8850 m, by herself. She is the first Hungarian female conqueror of Mount Everest. In 2009, she received the Officer's Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary. – B: 1031, T: 7684.

Uher, Ödön Sr. (Edmund) (Nagyszeben, now Sibiu, Romania, 15 June 1859 - Budapest, 19 September 1931) – Court photographer, filmmaker, father of Ödön (Edmund) Uher, Jr. In 1911, Ödön Uher Sr. was on a study trip in Denmark and Germany, thereafter he converted his photos studio at the Lajos (Louis) Kossuth Street, Budapest, into a filmmaker workshop. In 1916, he had a photo studio at Ráday Street, Budapest, and a film-laboratory on Váci Street, Budapest, where he worked with Árpád Virágh, a renowned cinematographer; István (Stephen) Altmayer (Apáti), Gusztáv (Gustavus) Kovács, István (Stephen) Berendi, as well as Ödön Uher Jr., artistic editor. Uher Sr. wanted to invent a new lighting system, like his outstanding contemporaries, such as Már (Maurice) Erdélyi and Gyula (Julius) Jelfy. He made a life-size photo of the famous actress Klára (Clara) Kúry for the Millennium Exhibition (1896). Between 1912 and 1918, the Uher Film Industry produced 24 feature films including Sisters (Nővérek) (1912); the Diamond Necklace (Gyémánt nyaklánc) (1912), and a popular series of novels of Mór (Maurice) Jókai. Many individual filmmakers processed their films at the Uher Film Industry, and they even produced movies for other film firms. The Progress Firm in Berlin purchased Uher's Film Industry, but it closed down shortly afterwards. Uher was an individual of great understanding, cultured in literature, with a wide range of vision, who assisted the talented film-directors, writers and dramaturges, such as Michael Kertész, Márton (Martin, Garas, and Béla J. Győrffy. Uher Sr. was one of the pioneers of the Hungarian Film industry. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7103.→Uher, Ödön Jr.; Jókai, Mór; Kúry, Klára; Kertész, Michael.

Uher, Ödön Jr. (Edmund) (Nagykanizsa, 30 August 1892 - Cap d'Antibes, France, March 1989) – Court photographer, inventor, film director and industrialist. He completed his secondary education in Budapest and Déva (now Deva, Romania). At the age of 16, he constructed a motor, which could run using two different types of fuel (petrol vapor or a mixture of hydrogen-oxygen) for driving airship motors. From 1915, he was a war correspondent. In 1916, he participated in filming the coronation of King Charles IV (Károly) and Queen Zita in Buda. Barely 18, together with his uncle, he founded the Uher Film Corporation, which was in production until 1922, and made some 24 films. Later he worked as a film cameraman and director. From 1910 to 1914, he shot several films and, for a while, Mihály (Curtiz, Michael) Kertész was his partner. Sári Fedák's acting career began here. At that time, Emilia Márkus was acting in Ferenc (Francis) Herczeg's film The Golden Haired Sphynx (Az aranyhajú szfinksz) (1914), and also By the Time We Get Old (Mire megvénülünk) (1916); The Secret of the Mine (A bánya titka) (1918); The Lie (A Hazugság) (1918), and O'Hara (1920). They had their greatest successes with the Jókai-series of novels. In the early 1920s, he ran a film actor training school, called Ödön Uher's Cinema Academy (Uher Ödön Moziakadémiája). Finally, he moved to Germany and Switzerland. It was he who worked out a fully automated film-developing method. He patented his equipment under the name Correx-method. To put his invention into practice, he established the factory, Correx Works Ltd. Instead of the cumbersome offset-procedure using lead letters in the printing trade, he worked out a system of directly photographing the letters, which he called the Uherotype Method, the essence of photo-typesetting to this day. For this he founded the Uherotype Co. in Switzerland in 1930. Then he became a manufacturer of airplanes, tape-recorders and refrigerators. – B: 1226, 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Uher, Ödön Sr (1); Fedák, Sári; Márkus, Emilia; Kertész, Mihály; Herczeg, Ferenc.

Uhrik, Dóra (Theodora) (Budapest, 27 August 1943 - ) – Dancer, ballet-instructor, actress. In 1960, she completed the State Ballet Institute course, where her instructors were Karola Szalay, Magda Mák and Irén Bartos. From 1961, she worked for the Ballet Company of Pécs, from 1967 as its solo dancer. Until 1989, she danced a number of leading roles and took part in nearly all of the Company's tours abroad. Her dramatic evocativeness and multi-faceted ability for playing a role made her the company's leading dancer. In 1978, she obtained a ballet-instructor's diploma and, since then, she has been teaching in the special Arts High School of Pécs, from 1991 as Head of the Dancing Section. In the 1980s she also appeared on stage as a dramatic actress. She wrote a book entitled Illustrated Classical Ballet Book (Klasszikus Balett Képeskönyv) (2000). Her roles include Donna Elvira in Imre Eck's Don Juan; Lady in I. Eck's Blue Ballet (Kék balett); Woman in I. Eck's Love (Szerelem); Herodias in I. Eck's Salome; title role in I. Eck's Passaglia Requiem: also Funny Girl; Can-Can (Kánkán), and The Cowardly Tiger-cub (A gyáva kistigris). She was awarded, among others, the Ferenc Liszt Prize (1976), the title of Merited Artist (1982), the Kossuth Prize (2002), and was elected into the Society of Immortals in 2010. – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Uitz, Béla (Mehala, near Temesvár, now Timișoara, Romania, 8 March 1887 - Budapest, 26 January 1972) – Painter and graphic artist. He is descendant of a peasant family of many children. He worked as an engine fitter for three years. He studied at the Academy of Applied Arts of Budapest in 1907 and, from 1908 to 1914, at the School of Arts. In 1914 he scored his first success with his picturesque charcoal drawings in the Youths' Exhibition at the National Salon, Budapest. Thereafter he traveled to Italy. In 1915, he joined the artists of the anti-militarist circle of his brother-in-law, Lajos (Louis) Kassák; his expressive aquatint drawings appeared in their journal The Action (A Tett). In the summer of 1916, he won a gold medal with his Portrait of a Woman at an exhibition held in the artist colony of Kecskemét. His drawings and exhibition critiques appeared in the newspaper, Today (Ma). His art was influenced by Cézanne, Goya, Picasso, and The Group Eight. His expressive monumental aquatint drawings also show the influence of his friend, József (Joseph) Nemes Lampérth. He was very active during the Soviet Council Republic (Tanácsköztársaság) period, especially with his mural sketches planned for the Parliament Building. He also established a Proletarian Apprentice Art-Workshop for artist training. After the downfall of the Council Republic, Uitz was arrested; but in 1920, he managed to move to Vienna, where he continued his activity with his reorganized Today (Ma) circle, and his works were featured in the No. X “Today” exhibition in Vienna, and an album entitled Versuche of 8 plates of copper engravings also appeared there. In 1921, he went to Moscow and joined the Communist Workers Party (KMP). Back in Vienna in 1922, he launched the journal Unity (Egység) in the spirit of committed art. He went to London; then, from October 1924, spent two years working in Paris. His works and articles appeared mainly in the Parisian journal Clarté. From October 1926, he lived again in the Soviet Union, lecturing at the newly founded Vhutein College from 1927 to 1930. He produced a series of monumental head-portraits. In 1933 he had to undergo treatment in a Crimean health-resort. In 1936 he worked in Kirgizia on mural decorations for a palace, and also on a fresco depicting the Kirghiz uprising of 1916. In 1938, he was arrested on trumped-up charges. He returned to Moscow a year later as head of a Collective, engaged in a studio of frescos for the Palace of the Soviets. In 1970 he returned to Hungary. In his works he excelled with his activist style, realism, dramatic power, a self-assured form and monumentality. In 1969, Hungarian Film (MAFILM) made a portrait film of Béla Uitz, directed by József Kis. He was an outstanding representative of Hungarian political activism that influenced his art. A Museum for his works was opened in Pécs in 1978. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456. → Kassák, Lajos; Council Republic of Hungary; Eight, The Group of.

Újfalussy, József (Joseph) (Debrecen, 13 February 1920 - Budapest, 22 January 2010) – Music historian and music esthetician. He matriculated in high school in 1938; following that he was accepted at the University of Debrecen, in the Faculty of Greek-Latin, and that of the History of Arts, where he obtained a Dip.Ed. in 1943. In Debrecen, he studied piano and composition with Emil Szabó, a pupil of Béla Bartók and Zoltán Kodály. In 1946 he was admitted to the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, where he studied composition, as well as conducting. He obtained his diploma in 1949. His masters were Dénes (Denis) Bartha, and Sándor (Alexander) Veress. His teaching career was started at the Reformed College of Debrecen. Between 1948 and 1955, he was an administrative clerk; then he was first employed at the Ministry of Religion and Public Education, and later at the Ministry of Culture as its Director. In 1955, he became lecturer at the Academy of Music, his teaching starting with music theory and history of music; later he was appointed professor at the University. In 1980 he became rector of the Academy of Music. In 1990 he became professor emeritus. Between 1995 and 1998, Újfalussy was Rector of the Gáspár Károli Reformed University, Budapest, where, for a while was heading the Department of Hymnology. Besides his work at the University, he also worked at the Bartók Archives of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. His Doctorate in Music was obtained in 1973. He became member of the Academy of Sciences (correspondent in 1973, regular and vice-president in 1985). Between 1944 and 1997, he was a member of the State Accreditation Commission; during 1995 and 1996 he was a member of the Doctoral Council of the Academy of Sciences. Újfalussy was also Editor-in-Chief of the Studia Musicologica. His main research area was music esthetics, music theory and the history of 20th century music; he was also a renowned scholar of the music of Béla Bartók, Claude Debussy and Ferenc Liszt. His educational work was also significant. As a University-level leader at the Music Academy, he supported the development of the training of musicians. As Rector of the Károli Gáspár Reformed University, he solidified the position of this Institution in the Hungarian higher educational sector. His works include Bartók-Breviarium, edited together with Vera Lampert (1958); Achill-Claude Debussy (1959); A Musical Picture of Reality (A valóság zenei képe) (1962); Béla Bartók, I-II, in German, English, Russian and Lithuanian (1965); About Music and Esthetics (Zeneről, Esztétikáról) (1980); Tamino at the Cross Roads (Tamino a választúton) (1986), and Danse Macabre. Variations, Construction, Modal Transformations in the Music of Franz Liszt (Haláltánc. Variációk, építkezés, modális transzformációk Liszt Ferenc zenéjében) (1990). He received many distinctions, among them the Ferenc Erkel Prize (1961), the Kossuth Prize (1966), the Herder Prize (1987), the Honorary Doctorate of the Reformed Theological Academy of Debrecen, and that of the University of Debrecen (1990, 1993), the Zoltán Kodály Prize (2000), and the Széchenyi Prize (2006). – B: 0874, 1031, 1257, T: 7684.→Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán; Ferencsik, János; Liszt, Ferenc; Szabolcsi, Bence, Szabó, Emil; Veress, Sándor.

Újfalvy, Károly Jenő (Charles Eugene) (Vienna, Austria, 18 May 1842 - Florence, Italy, 31 January 1904) – Globetrotter and linguist. At the age of 19 he joined the Austrian army and quickly rose to officer's rank. In 1864 however, he left it, completed his university studies in Bonn, Germany, later settled in France. In Paris he became a teacher and devoted himself to literature; wrote a book on the geography and history of Hungary in French, also translated some poems of Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi and published a select anthology of more Hungarian poems. He also took part in the currently raging Hungarian linguistic debates. Between 1876 and 1881, he undertook three Central Asian research trips, accompanied by his wife, Chaire-Virginie-Marie Bourdon. During these, he examined the geographic conditions of Central Asia, carried out linguistic studies, examined anthropological data, and collected valuable geographical, ethnographical and anthropological material. He summarized his first journey's scientific observations in six volumes, and the results of the third journey in two volumes. His wife wrote popular travel stories, which were also published in Hungarian translation. From his third trip, he returned with a serious eye disease, after which he had to retire and give up any scientific work. He achieved outstanding work with his anthropological and ethnographical research in Central Asia and the western part of the Himalayas. His works provided important observations for geography. The well-known book, Le livre d'or de la géographie (The Golden Book of Geography) mentions him among the most famous globetrotters of the world. – B: 1614, T: 1031, 7669.

Újházi, Ede (Edward) (Debrecen, 28 January 1841 - Budapest, 14 November 1915) – Actor, actor-pedagogue. Against the wishes of his parents, he joined Imre (Emeric) Szigeti's troupe at the turn of 1864-1865, where he played until the winter of 1866. After that, he was contracted to the company of Bényei-Laczkó, later to the National Theater of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), and then to that of Endre (Andrew) Latabár in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) in 1867. Eventually he became a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) in Pest. He was called to take the place of József (Joseph) Tóth for a trial run, drawing up a contract on 1 April 1870. He became Stage Director of the Opera House in 1888. He acted until his retirement in January 1914. He suffered all the misery of country theatrical life and, for this reason, later on in life he preferred helping out theater directors. He tried out every line in all the theaters of the country, appearing also in operettas and ballets. He had no equal in the knowledge of theatrical methods and craftsmanship. His inexhaustible comic ability rendered him most successful in comedies, combining tragic and comic elements. He was best suited to play in Gerhard Hauptmann's Kollege Crampton (Colleague Crampton). On 28 September 1903, he became a life member of the National Theater and, from 1886 he worked as a teacher of drama and opera at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. From 1889 he was stage director at the Opera House of Budapest. On the occasion of his guest appearance at the National Theater in Vienna, he also won the audience in that city with his role in L. Halévy's Abbé Constantine. His roles included Wicked Steve in Ede Tóth's Rogue of the Village (A falu rossza); Bartolo in Beaumarchais' Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága); Menenius in W. Shakespeare's Coriolanus and in Julius Caesar; Franz Moor in F. Schiller's The Brigands (Die Räuber, Haramiák); Merchant in M. Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde; Apostle Peter in the world première of I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája); Harpagon in Molière's The Miser (A fősvény); Tiborc in J. Katona's Bánk bán, and Doctor Rank in H. Ibsen's Nora. His book was entitled On Old Actors (Régi színészekről) (1908). Újházy was one of the pioneers of realistic acting. A soup and a street in Debrecen bear his name.— B: 1445, 0883, 1031, T: 7456.—Latabár, Endre.

Újházy, László (Ladislav) (Budamer, now Budimir, Slovakia, 1793 - San Antonio, TX., USA., 7 March 1870) – Activist in the 1848-1849 War of Independence, politician and landowner. He studied Arts at the Reformed College of Debrecen, and studied Law at the Reformed College of Sárospatak. From 20 April 1848, he was Lord-Lieutenant of County Sáros, and the only radical member of the Upper House. From 28 September 1848, he was State Commissioner for County Pozsony, organizer of the defense in the northern part of the Hungarian Kingdom (Felvidék, now Slovakia), and organizer of the material and monetary aid to be sent to the insurgents against the Viennese Habsburg rule. Újházy began to participate in the War of Independence on 10 December 1848, at his own expense. He set up an irregular army unit in County Zemplén, by means of which he took part in the fighting for the mining towns of the North. From 18 June 1849, he was one of the seven-member Court of Law, followed by an appointment by Lajos (Louis) Kossuth to be the Government Commissioner in Komárom.

Escaping the revenge of the Habsburgs, in 1850 he left Hungary and went to the USA, where he founded the settlements of New Buda (Új Buda) and Necropolis (Sírmező). The settlers were able to purchase landed property for $1.25 per 0.57 hectare on the recommendation of US President Zachary Taylor. Újházy was the first Hungarian to obtain US citizenship. Then, as Postmaster of New Buda, he became the first US public servant of Hungarian origin. The new immigrants working on the land tried vineyard cultivation and livestock farming with varying success. He was the US Consul-General for Italy in Ancona from 1861 to 1864. In an open letter, dated 16 May 1867, he protested against the 1867 Compromise with the Habsburgs, as Ferenc (Francis) Deák prepared it. After this, he went into quiet retirement. In 1869, he was nominated in absentia for a seat in the Hungarian Parliament, but lost the election. Although offered amnesty by Austria, Újházy held steadfast to his resolve to remain an exile as long as the Hapsburgs ruled Hungary. His sons returned and settled in Hungary – he committed suicide on his estate, near San Antonio. His memoirs contain very valuable historical material. – B: 0942, 0883, T: 7456.→Freedom Fight of 1848-1849; Compromise of 1867; Deák, Ferenc; Kossuth, Lajos; Kossuth emigrants.

Ujhelyi, József (Ecsér, 4 May 1910 - Budapest, 3 May 1979) – Botanist. He completed his Science course, majoring in natural science, geography and chemistry at the University of Budapest in 1934, after which he worked as an assistant under János (John) Tuzson at the Department of Plant Systematizing (Növényrendszertani Tanszék), where he later became a demonstrator, then a lecturer. He obtained his Ph.D. in 1937, and taught at the Teachers' Academy and the Academy of Horticulture (Tanárképző Főiskola; Kertészeti Akadémia) beside his position at the University. From 1950 to 1952, he led the Natural Science Group of the Museums' National Center (Múzeumok Országos Központjának Természettudományi Csoportja). Then he again became a researcher at the Botanical Museum, where later he was appointed as Deputy Section Head. He went into retirement in 1977. He carried out valuable teaching, museological, editing and scientific organizational work and, in addition, he was also a devoted botanist in the field. Beside the Carpathian Basin, he also did research work and collecting in the Balkans. His published studies in botanical systematizing, based on cell-tissue research covering several plant genera, are models of their kind and are known Europe-wide. His works include Sesleria-Studien (1937); Species Sesleriae generis novae (1959), and Etude taxonomique sur le groupe de Lotus corniculatis (1960). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Ujlaki, Miklós (Nicholas) (ca. 1417 - 1477) – Bosnian king. From 1438, he was the Bán (Viceroy) of Macsó and, during his four decades of work, he proved to be one of the most important representatives of the barons. After the death of King Albert (1437-1439), he belonged to the followers of King Ulászló I (Wladislas, 1440-1444), and became National Captain-General after the battle of Várna (1444). As Voivode of Transylvania (1444-1465), he fought with János (John) Hunyadi (1446-1453) against the expanding Ottoman Turks, but later turned against Hunyadi and joined the Garai-Cillei faction and idly viewed Hunyadi's fights against the Turks. He played an important part in having László (Ladislav) Hunyadi executed. From 1457 to 1473, he was Ban of Slavonia. After the death of King László V (Ladislav, 1453-1457), he withdrew from active administrative work. When King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490) had Mihály (Michael) Szilágyi seized, Ujlaki became the leader of the disgruntled barons and, forming a league together with Szilágyi and Garai, offered the Crown of Hungary to Emperor Frederick on 17 February 1459. In the campaign against Mátyás I, he took part with a sizable army of 1500 armored knights and 1500 light cavalry; however, later, on 30 July 1459, he had to return to being faithful to King Mátyás I. Though he could not regain his former influence, he remained the Voivode of Transylvania, Bán of Macsó and Slavonia. In 1465, King Mátyás relieved him of his office as Voivode. From 1465 to 1471, he was restricted to being the Ban of Ozora (South of the River Sava). In 1471, King Mátyás appointed him Governor of Bosnia with a royal title. His dream of becoming king of a Balkan area south of Hungary was foiled in 1473, when Mátyás relieved him of his office as Ban of Slavonia. In 1465, he founded a Franciscan Monastery at Galgóc (now Hlohovec, Slovakia). His gravestone is situated at Újlak. – B: 0883, 1105, 1122, T: 7456.→Hunyadi, János; Hunyadi, László; Szilágyi, Mihály; Mátyás I, King.

Újlaki, László Sr. (Ladislav) (Lendvahosszúfalu, now Brezovica, Slovenia, 15 June 1915 - Budapest. 1994) - Actor. He completed his studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, and in 1936, he was contracted by the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház). Budapest, where he stayed until 1949. In the same year he became a member of the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), Budapest. His stage characters were precisely formed and presented with authenticity. His pleasant voice and clear elocution contributed to his perfect acting. In many plays he acted together with Sándor (Alexander) Pécsi. His roles included Kabanov in I. Osztrovszky's Storm (Vihar); Pepel in M. Gorky's The Lower Depths (Éjjeli menedékhely); Father Jácint in F. Molnár's The Swan (A hattyú); Bonemisza in D. Szomory's Louis II (II. Lajos), and Ardelier in A. Sütő's Star at the Stake (Csillag a máglyán}. There are more than 30 feature and TV films to his credit including State Department Store (Állami Árnház) (1952); Dollardad (Dollárpapa) (1956); Zrínyi (TV series. 1972); A Tiny Place Under the Sun (Egy kis hely a nap alatt) (1973); Stephen the King (István a Király) (1984); Petőfi (1977); Brutus (1980); Mata Hari (1985), Neighbors (Szomszédok) (TV series. 1987), and Wilderness (Vadon) (1989). He received the Merited Artist title (1971) – B: 1445, 1719, T: 7103.→Pécsi, Sándor.

Ujlaky, László Jr. (Ladislav) (Budapest, 8 March 1942 - ) – Actor. After completing his studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, he became a member of the Szigligeti Theater (Szigligeti Színház) in Szolnok, in 1964. From 1972 to 1979, he played at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Szeged, and he spent three seasons at Győr and six at Pécs. From 1988, he was again a member of the Szigligeti Theater in Szolnok. Since 2002, he has been a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) in Budapest. With his precise character depicting, he excels equally in musicals and in dramas. His roles include Bey Mustafa in P. Abraham's Ball at the Savoy (Bál a Savoyban); Edmund Tyrone in O'Neill's Long Day's Journey Into Night (Hosszú út az éjszakába); Frosch in J. Strauss Jr's: Fledermaus (Denevér); Priest, Mr. Cotton, Hussein in Ibsen's Peer Gynt; Alonso, King of Naples in Shakespeare's The Tempest (A vihar), and Brakenbury in Shakespeare's Richard III. He is a recipient of the Mari Jászai Prize (1977). – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Ujlaky, Sári (Charlotte) (Budapest, 13 January 1920 - ) – Translator of literary works and journalist. First, she was a correspondent for the periodical Hungarian Girls (Magyar Lányok) and after that, she worked as an applied art correspondent to the paper, New Times (Új Idők). In 1945, when the military forces of the Soviet Union were step-by-step occupying Hungary, she escaped to Germany, later to France. She has been engaged in translating literary works since 1955. She translated into German the Hungarian and French prose works of recent times, e.g. the novels of Tibor Déry, László (Ladislav) Németh, János (John) Kodolányi, Géza Ottlik. As a journalist, she worked for German papers and Radio, and also for the Hungarian sessions of Deutsche Welle and Deutschlandfunk of Cologne. Her works include Sprachgekreuzt, Ungarische Lyrik im Deutschen Sprachraum (1975). For her work as a translator she received the German Georg-Mackensen Prize in 1963, the Memorial Medal of the Hungarian PEN Club in 1973, and the Tibor Déry Award in 1986. – B: 0878, 1672, T: 7456.→Déry, Tibor; Németh, László; Kodolányi, János; Ottlik, Géza.

Ujszászy, István (Stephen) (Nagykőrös, 30 August 1894 - Krasnojarsk, Soviet Union, 1945?) - Army officer. He studied at the Military High School of Sopron and completed his education with the rank of Second Lieutenant at the Military Technical College of Mödlingen, Austria, from 1912 to 1914. In World War I, he served as an artillery officer. From 1920, he served with the artillery detachment of Szombathely as a Lieutenant, later as a Captain. Between 1922 and 1924 he studied at the Ludovika Military Academy, Budapest and, after that, he worked at the Ministry of Defense until 1930. From 1931 he served in the Hungarian foreign services, first in Warsaw until 1934, later in Prague until 1938. In 1939, with the rank of Colonel, he was appointed Head of the Military Reconnaissance and Defense. From 1942, as a Brigadier-General, he was in charge of the State Defense Center of the Ministry of the Interior. He sought connections with the legal and illegal left-wing forces in preparation for withdrawing from the war. In 1945, he was kept under house arrest by the Russians, and later taken to the Soviet Union as a prisoner of war. His further lot is unknown. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Karády, Katalin; Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy.

Újszászy, Kálmán (Coloman) (Budapest, 13 December 1902 - Sárospatak, 24 April 1994) – Minister of the Reformed Church, theologian, educator and writer. His secondary school studies were in Budapest. He studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy of Sárospatak, completing his studies in 1927. From 1929 he taught at the Teachers' College there and, from 1931, he was Professor at the Theological Academy of Sárospatak. Earlier, he studied for one semester each at the Theological Colleges of Glasgow, Basel and Athens. He came to be Head of the Chair of Philosophy and Pedagogy at Sárospatak. In 1932 he obtained a Ph.D. in Philosophy from the University of Debrecen and, in 1939, he became qualified as an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) at the University of Szeged with his thesis entitled Spiritual Basis of Village Education (A falunevelés szellemi alapjai). In 1931 he started the so-called Village Seminary (Faluszeminárium), for the better understanding of the villagers. He set up a fund for talented youth in 1934, which grew into a national movement by 1941. With his colleague, Zoltán Szabó, he created the so-called People's Academy (Népfőiskola) movement, which became a nation-wide movement and from 1944 to 1946, he was its Vice-Chancellor. The People's Academy was forced to close in 1948, and among the Reformed Institutions in Sárospatak, the Teachers' College (1950) and the High School (1952) were nationalized, and the Theological Academy was closed down (1951), resuming operation only in 1992. After 1948, Újszászy was the Head of the College Library; from 1950 Head of the Scientific Collections of the Cistibiscan Reformed Diocese (west of the River Tisza – Tiszaninnyi Református Egyházkerület) and, from 1952, he was Curator of the Zemplén Deanery of the Reformed Church in Hungary. During the period between 1964 and 1990, he was Chief Curator of the Cistibiscan Reformed Diocese. In addition, from 1969, he was the Executive President of the National Council of the Reformed Collections (Református Gyűjtemények Országos Tanácsa). He was a member of the editorial committee of the Reformed periodical, Confessio. In the village-research of Hungary, his village tutorial of Sárospatak (1931-1952) proved to be an important establishment in the Movement on Village Research. From 1952 to 1991 he was the only professor of the nationalized Reformed College and Theological Academy of Sárospatak who lived long enough to witness the return of these historical Institutions to Reformed Church ownership, and also their reopening. Újszászy was an important scholarly figure of the second half of the 20th century. In his scholarly activity the significant aspects were the education for humaneness, scouting, and the People's College. His name became linked with Sárospatak. He was a great guardian and promoter of the "Spirit of Patak". His numerous works include Culture, Nation, Village (Kultúra, nemzet, falu); Today's Tasks of Hungarian Village Research (A magyar falukutatás mai feladatai); Experiences with the People's College (Népfőiskolai tapasztalatok); Gospel and People's Academy; Culture and Nation (Kultúra és nemzet); My Three Torches are Burning (Három fáklyám ég), and Hungarian Protestantism Yesterday and Today. Professor Újszászy played an important role in preserving the "Spirit of the Sárospatak College" during the decades of Communist regime, and he was the only living link between the the old College and the reopened one. He was awarded the Middle Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary in 1993. His bust may be seen at Sárospatak. – B: 0883, 0910, 1134, 1973, T: 7456. → Szabó, Zoltán.

Ujvárosi, Miklós (Nicholas) (Hajdúnánás, 25 January 1913 - Budapest, 15 August 1981) – Botanist, founder of the Hungarian Agro-Botanical School. After completing his high school studies in his town of birth, he completed the Arts course at the University of Debrecen, graduating in 1938. He acquired a Master's Degree in 1952, and a Doctorate in Agriculture in 1959. He lectured at the University, was Head of the Botanical Gardens of Debrecen and, from 1941 to 1943, while Northern Transylvania was returned to Hungary, he was in charge of the Botanical Gardens in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). After 1943, he taught at an Agricultural College; from 1947, he lectured at the Agriculture Department of the University of Debrecen; from 1949 to 1955 he was a section head in Pallag, later in Martonvásár. From 1955 till his retirement in 1980, he was a section head of the Botanical Gardens of the Botanical Research Institute of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences at Vácátót. Despite his disabled condition throughout his life, he proved to be an outstanding researcher of flora and vegetation, and was also an ecologist, organizer, and in charge of several botanical gardens. With his detailed studies carried out on site over several decades, he became the foremost specialist of the weed flora of Hungary's arable lands, and was involved in the publishing of manuals in this field. His works include The More Important Weeds on the Plow-lands of Hungary (Fontosabb szántóföldi gyomnövényeink) (1951); Weed Plants (Gyomnövények) (1973), and Weed Control (Gyomirtás) (1973). He received the State Prize in 1973. In 1988, a memorial conference was held for his honor at Hajdúnánás and Debrecen. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Ujváry, Ignác (Ignatius) (Pest, 20 September 1860 - Kisoroszi, 4 July 1927) – Painter. He was a student in the master class of the eminent painters Károly (Charles) Lotz and Gyula (Julius) Benczúr. He continued his studies abroad: he went to Italy, Spain and Germany, and spent a longer period in Paris. He first appeared with his grandiose religious compositions, The Canonization of St. Stephen (Szt. István szentté avatása); later, when he moved to Kisoroszi, he painted vigorous, fresh scenes. He was a teacher at the School of Industrial Arts. He was the recipient of several prizes. In 1928, an exhibition of the contents of his estate was held in the Art Gallery of Budapest. The Art Gallery holds some of his works, e.g. Cotter Courtyard (Zselléruddvar); Autumn Evening (Őszi est), and Ship-building on the Danube Bank (Hajóépítés a Duna parton). He participated in the creation of Feszty's Cyclorama, entitled The Entry of the Hungarians (A magyarok bejövetele). – B: 0883, 1821, T: 7456. → Lotz, Károly; Benczúr, Gyula; Feszty, Árpád.

Újváry, Lajos (1) (Louis) (Dunaföldvár, 24 February 1896 - Budapest, 31 October 1959) – Pedagogue, writer on pedagogy. He obtained a Teacher's Degree from the University of Budapest, majoring in Hungarian and Latin Literature. He became a prisoner of war in World War I. On his return, he worked as a publisher's proofreader in Budapest from 1921. He became a high school teacher in 1927; was headmaster at Mezőkövesd from 1936, and a specialist teacher at a high school in Miskolc. Later, when the southern strip of Northern Hungary (Felvidék) was returned to Hungary in 1938, he was a regional superintendent of schools in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) from 1940 to 1945. He worked for the University Printers until 1949, and at the Textbook Publishers till 1952; later, he was co-editor for the Thesaurus of Words and Phrases (Értelmező Szótár), put out by the Academy Publishers. He was engaged in translating works by Stefan Zweig, Antoine F. Prevost and Knur Humsun. He published short stories, essays and pedagogical writings, as well as textbooks and methodological works. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Újváry, Lajos (2) (Louis) (Kaposvár, 25 February 1925 - Budapest, 23 March 2006) – Painter. His higher studies were at the Academy of Applied Art, Budapest, where he was a student of István (Stephen) Szőnyi and Bertalan (Bartholomew) Poór. He graduated in 1951. He was a teacher at the High School for Applied Art until his retirement in 1985. He was a painter mainly of old peasant life, and especially the life of Szekler villages in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). He also painted the scenery of the snow-capped Gyimes mountains, as well as the Danube-bend. His pictures are characterized with lively colors and terse expression. Among his works are Luring Lights (Bújkáló fények); Cumuli (Gomolyfelhők), and Transylvanian House (Erdélyi ház). He was a member of the Mednyánszky Society. He participated in some 50 exhibitions at home and abroad. He received a number artist diplomas and the Munkácsy Prize in 2005. – B: 1654, T: 7103. → Szőnyi, István; Poór, Bertalan; Szinyei Merse, Pál.

Újváry, Sándor (Alexander) (Kassa, now Košice, Slovakia, 6 May 1904 - Munich, 11 April 1988) – Writer, book publisher. He studied at the Faculty of Arts at the Universities of Budapest and Paris (Sorbonne). His first poems appeared when he was 16. He was editor for the journal Torch (Fáklya) (1923-1925). He edited a number of papers in the 1920s and 1930s. His writings appeared in the papers World (Világ), Evening Courier (Esti Kurír), News (Újság), and Theater Life (Színházi Élet). He wrote poems and novels. Prior to World War II, twenty of his works were published, some of them in German and French. In 1938 he founded the Griff Publishing Company, which was in operation until 1944. He took part in the Resistance Movement against German occupation of Hungary, when the armies of the Soviet Union were approaching. From 1945 to 1947, he was Undersecretary of State in the Ministry of Reconstruction. In August 1947 he left Hungary and settled in Austria. In Salzburg, he published popular dictionaries. In 1952 he moved to Munich, where he purchased a printery and reestablished his former Budapest Publishing House, combined with a literary agency. His articles appeared in New Hungaria (Új Hungária), in the Hungarian Courier (Magyar Híradó), and Literary News (Irodalmi Újság) of Vienna. For a short time, he edited the critical column of Literary News. During his émigré years, he edited the republication of his earlier works and published his recollections in several volumes. He also published articles in German illustrated magazines under various names, and he wrote shooting scripts as well. His works include Die Wundermaschine, novel (1956) and The Man of Chances (A véletlenek embere), novel (6th ed., 1978). – B: 1672, 0883, T: 7456.

Újváry, Tamás (Thomas) (17/18th century) – Priest, Kuruc writer of verses. He was the “unworthy Hungarian cantor of the Church of Our Lady of many splendourous wonders on top of the Nyitra-Ködesd Hill”, founded by Erzsébet (Elizabeth) Rákóczi. He was also a chaplain of the Kuruc army during the Rákóczi-insurrection (1703-1711). In 1704, he compiled and dedicated a manuscript poetry booklet to Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II, containing one Latin and two Hungarian verses. Both verses laud the Prince as the deliverer of the Hungarians. The two Hungarian verses are among the best products of patriotic Kuruc poesy, written from a Catholic viewpoint. – B: 1150, T: 7617.→Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Kuruc.

Újváry, Zoltán (Hét, 25 January 1932 - ) – Ethnographic researcher. He was student at the University of Debrecen, where he studied Hungarian Literature and obtained a Degree in 1955. Following that, he was first a teaching assistant at the Faculty of Ethnography at the same University, an adjunct professor from 1962, docent from 1970, and a full professor from 1979. He became an Editorial Associate of the Hungarian Academy of Science’s Ethnographic Commission, and editor of numerous professional periodicals of the country. He became a Doctor of Science in 1989. He was editor of the series Culture and Tradition, Folklore and Ethnography and Ethnography of Gömör (Műveltség és hagyomány, folklór és etnográfia, Gömör néprajza). The areas of his research are folklore, ethnic customs, and agrarian culture. Among his numerous works are Folksongs and Ballads from a Lower-Danubian Szekler Community (Népdalok és balladák egy al-dunai székely közösségből) (1968); Research of the Agrarian Cult in Hungarian, as well as in European Folklore, vols. i-iv (Az agrárkultusz kutatása a magyar és az európai folklórban I-IV) (1969); Games and Mask, vols. i-iv (Játék és maszk I-IV) (1983, 1988); Chapters to Gömör’s Folklore (Fejezetek Gömör folklorjához) (1986); Anecdotes from Gömör (Adomák Gömörből) (1988); Homeless in the Motherland. Deportation of Hungarians to Czech-land (Szülőföldön hontalanul. Magyarok deportálása Csehországba), document-novel (1991); Sayings and Proverbs of a Land-laborer (Egy földműves szólásai és közmondásai) (1996); Waggish Anecdotes (Huncut adomák) (1998), and Collection of Sayings (Szólásgyűjtemény) (2001). He has received numerous distinctions including the Pitre Prize, István Györffy Prize, Ferenc Móra memorial medal, the Ortutay Gyula memorial medal (1990), Ferenc Kölcsey Prize (1992), and the Csokonai Prize (1997). – B: 0874, 0878, 1257, T: 7684.

Újvidék (German: Neusatz; Serbian: Novi Sad) – Main city of the province of Voivodina, in the southern (Bácska-Bánát) area of the historic Kingdom of Hungary, on the left banks (north) of the Danube, 81 m. above sea level, opposite the Fruskagora Range and Pétervárad, with which Újvidék is connected with a railway and a road-bridge and with which it was merged in 1929. Its population was 29,296 in 1901 (among them 10,321 Magyars (Hungarians), 9889 Serbs and 6483 Germans); 39,150 in 1921 (among them 17,200 Serbs, 10,300 Magyars, 6500 Germans), 61,077 in 1941; 257,500 in 1981; and 190,602 in 2002. It is an industrial and commercial town, manufacturing agricultural machinery, electrical equipment, munitions, textiles, canned food, pastry, soap, matches and producing china and pottery. The town's thermal bath is rich in iodine, used medically for rheumatism, neurological and women's illnesses. There are factories making airplanes, mills and distilleries; there is also a 2-km long riverside beach. It is the seat of a Roman Catholic Archbishop and Greek-Orthodox Bishop of Bács; altogether the town has 14 churches. There are a number of high schools, a commercial college and other special colleges, a state theater, an exchange and banks. The Serbian cultural organization, Serb Matica, founded in Pest in 1826, was moved to this town in 1864, and it became the center of the Serbian literary revival in the early 19th century. The town was already known in the 16th century. In the neighboring region there was an ethnically pure Magyar population in the Middle Ages but, after 1526, the Ottoman Turks totally wiped out this population. In 1702, the Greek Orthodox Episcopal See was moved from Szeged to Újvidék. Next to the earthworks, some military settlements developed later on, which led to the growth of this town; the inhabitants were the members of these military bases of the border regiment. When the Turks again occupied Belgrade in 1739, many German and Armenian merchants and tradesmen settled in the town, side by side with new Hungarian settlers. In 1748, Empress Maria Theresa declared the "Base of Pétervárad" (Újvidék) a royal town and called it Neo Planta, making it a royal free town of Austria-Hungary. After World War I, Újvidék, with the southern part of Historic Hungary, was ceded to the newly created South Slav state of Yugoslavia by the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920). In World War II, when the German forces overran and broke up Yugoslavia into its component republics in 1941, Hungary retook the Bácska area with Újvidék but, after the war in 1945, Yugoslavia was reassembled, and Újvidék came under Serbian rule again. It continued as Serbia after the break up of Yugoslavia in 1990, placing the town in the state of Greater Serbia. – B: 1068, 1582, 1789, 1816, 7456; T: 7456. → Atrocities against Hungarians.

Újvidék, Raid at (now Novi-Sad, Serbia) – Hungary, after a long search for a peaceful solution of the territorial dispute finally, on 12 December 1940, signed a "Treaty of Eternal Friendship" with Yugoslavia, which was not ratified by the Yugoslav Parliament. Soon after, there was a friendly approach between Germany and Yugoslavia. After a brief preparation, on 26 March 1941, Yugoslavia joined the Axis Powers, and the Yugoslav Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs put their initials onto the document. However, on 27 March, a coup d'état occurred in Belgrade and the new Yugoslav government turned against Germany. Croatia immediately declared its independence. In response Germany and Italy entered Yugoslav territory. Since Yugoslavia was in a state of disintegration, Hungary, in order to protect the great number of Hungarian nationals in Bácska (Bačka) in the southern part of Historic Hungary, ceded to the Serb-Croat-Slovene Kingdom (later Yugoslavia) by the Treaty of Trianon in 1920, the Hungarian army recovered the Baranya Triangle and the territory between the Rivers Danube and Tisza (northern Voivodina), as well as Mura-vidék (now Prekmurje, Slovenia) and Muraköz (Mura interfluvium, now Medimurje, Croatia) from 12 to 18 April 1941. By this action 11.5 thousand km<sup>2</sup> of territory and 3 major Hungarian towns, as well as 40 Hungarian villages and 1 million people, 37% ethnic Hungarians, were returned to Hungary.

However, the activities of the Serb guerillas (Chetniks) were intensified against the Hungarian army, the gendarmerie units and the Hungarian population. Finally, a raid was launched against the guerillas, which was concentrated on Újvidék (now Novi Sad), which affected 14 other locations as well. The raid lasted from 21 to 23 January 1942. The total number of civilians killed in the raid was 4,211. The victims included 2,842 Serbs, 1,250 Jews, 64 Roma, 31 Ruthenians, 13 Russians and 11 ethnic Hungarians. When the magnitude of the numbers of victims came into the open, the main officers responsible for the raid, including Ferenc (Francis) Feketehalmy-Czeidner, József (Joseph) Grassy, László (Ladislav) Deák and Márton (Martin) Zöldy were prosecuted but they escaped to Germany. After the war, they were returned to Hungary and executed. In the fall of 1944, when the Soviet and Yugoslav armies re-occupied these territories, in revenge the Tito partisans, after cruelly torturing them, massacred 40-50 thousand ethnic Hungarians, including women and children, simply because they were Hungarians. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Treaty of Eternal Friendship with Yugoslavia; Atrocities against Hungarians; Teleki, Count Pál; Cseres, Tibor.

Ulászló I, King (Wladislas) (Krakow, Poland, 1424 - Várna, Bulgaria, 1444) – Grandson of King Lajos I (Louis the Great, 1340-1380) of Hungary, known as Wladislaw III from 1434, and by his Hungarian name Ulászló from 1440, elected King by a group of Hungarian Estates, and a delegation headed by Bishop Simon Rozgonyi, who requested his acceptance. He entered Buda and was crowned with the reliquary crown of King István I (St. Stephen, 997-1038). Until peace was made, the first two years were spent in conflict with the Cillei-Gara families, supporters of Queen Erzsébet (Elizabeth) and the Giskra troops. The following years wavered between war and peace against the Turks. In 1443, between September and December, he successfully fought the Turks in the Balkans. He waged war against them again in April 1444, and in July forged a peace agreement in Szeged, which lasted for ten years. Yet, he resumed fighting on the 4th of August. During the last and seemingly successful battle at Várna, launched against the advice of János (John) Hunyadi against the Janissaries, King Ulászló was killed. His death sealed the fate of the battle and the whole war. The contemporary Polish sources blame the Magyar aristocrats for his demise. – B: 0883, 1138, T: 7658.→Lajos I, King; Hunyadi, János.

Ulászló II, King (Wladislas) (1 March 1456 - Buda 13 March 1516) – King of Bohemia from 1471, and of Hungary from 1490. As grandson of King Lajos I (Louis the Great, 1340-1380), he claimed both crowns. At his Bohemian coronation he vowed to wage war against King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490), and in 1474, was soundly defeated. Upon the death of King Mátyás, the Hungarian aristocracy elected Ulászló king, because they thought they could easily manage him. They were right. From the hands of his adversaries, such as Prince János Corvin and his own brother, the troops of Pál (Paul) Kinizsi and Prince István (Stephen) Báthory of Transylvania rescued him. The King signed a humiliating peace accord with Emperor Miksa (Maximilian) at Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) resulting in the country being governed by István (Stephen) Szapolyai (or Zápolya), Archbishop Tamás (Thomas) Bakócz and György (George) Szatmári. While he was involved in the conflict between the Estates and the lesser nobility party, the situation of the peasantry grew worse. He became totally incapacitated and was nicknamed “Dobzse László”, meaning “László Bene” (because he answered every question with “bene” meaning “it’s good”). Near the end of his reign in 1514, under the leadership of György (George) Dózsa, a Peasant Uprising erupted. Upon their defeat, all civil rights were deprived from the peasantry through a decree issued by the Diet in 1514. The death of the King left a legacy of huge debts and liabilities and eventually led the weak government to be defeated by the Turks at the Battle of Mohács in 1526. – B: 0883, 1138, T: 7658.→House of Jagello; Mátyás I, King; Kinizsi, Pál; János I, King; Bakócz, Tamás; Dózsa, György.

Uldin – According to speculative sources he was the son of Karaton, a prince amongst the Huns, whose people appeared in the area of the Lower Danube River in the winter of 394-395, and reached the environs of the River Tisza in the Carpathian Basin in 400-405. – B: 1230, 1020, T: 7658.

Úlló (10th century) – Third son of Árpád. He passed away before 907. His name is borne by a village in the environs of Budapest. – B: 1020, T: 7658.

Ulrich, Keresztély (Christian) (Vienna, 27 April 1836 - Vienna, January 1909) – Architect. He completed his studies at the Polytechnic of Vienna. Already in his early adulthood, he received important commissions abroad. In 1881, he moved to Budapest to build the grain elevator designed by him. He built a number of fine mansions on the Great Circular Boulevard (Nagykörút) of Budapest. In 1885, he designed the Hall of Industry (Városligeti Iparcsarnok) in the Town Gardens; in World War II, it was badly damaged, and had to be pulled down; also several warehouses. He built grain elevators in Fiume (now Rijeka, Croatia), and Mezöhegyes. He designed public and private buildings in Vienna, Prague and Stuttgart. In 1896 he became Professor of Architecture and Architectural Engineering at the Vienna Polytechnic. He published articles and studies in various architectural journals. His main work is The Elevator of the Capital City of Budapest (Budapest főváros elevátora) (1884). He received a number of distinctions and the Medal of the Order of Ferenc József (Francis Joseph). – B: 0883, 0942, T: 7456.

Umling, Lőrinc (Lawrence) (18th century) – Painter and carpenter. A Saxon master, he probably learned his trade in the carpenters’ guild of Segesvár (now Sighișoara, Romania). On 23 June 1742, he became a citizen of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Transylvania, Romania), but he was mainly working in the Kalotaszeg (now Țara Călatei, Romania) area. He formed his flower compositions from elements of the Italian Renaissance in elegantly colored Baroque style, and used this for the ceiling, gallery, benches and pulpits of a number of Reformed churches. From the 1770s, on several occasions, he worked with the assistance of his sons Lőrinc (Lawrence) and János (John). His church decorations include Kiskapus (now Copșa Mică, Romania) (1742), Kispetri (now Petrinzel, Romania) (1746), Magyarlóna (now Luna de Sus, Romania) (1750), Gyerővásárhely (now Subcetate, Romania) (1752), Magyarkapus (now Căpușu Mare, Romania) (1759), Kőrösfő (now Izvoru Crișului, Romania) (1764), Bánffyhunyard (now Huedin, Romania) (1780), and Jákótelke (now Horlacea, Romania) (1786). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Unbudding (Sterilization) – Freeing from micro-organisms, destruction of vegetative and sporule forms of bacteria, viruses, fungi, parasites. The destroying procedure may take the form of treatment with dry or moist heating, ultraviolet or other radiation or by chemical materials. The unbudding of foodstuff may be made by temperature above 100° Celsius, or else by pasteurization with approximately 60° Celsius heating. Móric (Maurice) Preysz, a chemist, demonstrated the first process of unbudding – pasteurization – on 16 October 1862, three years before Pasteur at the Viticulturists Association of Hegyalja. – B: 1230, 1153, T: 7675.→Preysz, Móric.

Underground Railway – The first underground electric powered railway on the Continent of Europe was built in Budapest. Francis Joseph (Ferenc József) King of Hungary and Emperor of Austria, opened it in 1896, as part of the Millennial Festivities. It is directly underneath the Andrásy Boulevard from Deák Square to Hero's Square in Budapest. It is 3.7 km long. With an additional 1 km lengthening, it became part of the Budapest Metro underground system in 1973. – B: 1230, 1153, T: 7656.→Ferenc József I, Emperor and King; Millennium Celebrations, Hungarian, 1896.

Ungár, Anikó (Annie) (Mrs. Székely) (Kapnikbánya, now Cavnic, Romania, 10 April 1790 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 25 December 1862) – Actress. She was a student of János (John) Kocsi Patkó. In 1808 she married her career-associate. She played in Miskolc and Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) in 1827, in Buda in 1831, and in Pest with various strolling theatrical companies. Then she withdrew from the stage. She was an artist with a wide range. Her roles included Juliet in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet; Desdemona in Othello; Ophelia in Hamlet; Amalia in Schiller's The Robbers (Die Räuber, A haramiák); Lujza in F. Schiller's Love and Intrigue (Ármány és szerelem), and title role in Schiller's Maria Stuart. She was one of the pioneers of Transylvanian acting. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Ungár, Imre (Emeric) (Budapest, 23 January 1909 - Budapest, 22 November 1972) – Pianist and pedagogue. He lost his eyesight at the age of three. First he studied under Izsó Rozenfeld, then under István (Stephen) Thomán. From 1924, he regularly gave concerts in Hungary and abroad. In 1926, he was the winner of the first prize in the talent-protection competition in Budapest; in 1932, he was honored with Signum Laudis, and in the same year, together with the Soviet pianist, Alexandr Unyinski, won the first prize in the International Chopin Competition in Warsaw. In 1935 he scored successes in the USA. In World War II, he was caught in the Netherlands, from where he was allowed to return to Hungary with special permission. After 1945, he resumed giving concerts. From 1949 until his death, he taught at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. His blindness did not prevent him from educational work. In his pedagogic work he was a colleague of Bence (Benedict) Szabolcsi, Aladár Tóth and József (Joseph) Gát. He was an eminent interpreter of the works of Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Chopin, Bartók and Kodály. He was awarded the Kossuth Prize (1949), the Liszt Prize (1962), and he received the Merited Artist title in 1956. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Thomán, István; Szabolcsi, Bence; Tóth, Aladár; Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán.

Unger, Ernő (Earnest) (Arad, now in Romania, 17 January 1900 - Budapest, 28 May 1968) – Conductor, composer and pianist. He studied at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, and received his qualifications under Árpád Szendy (piano), János (John) Koessler (composition). From 1922 he taught at the conductor-training Department, and was the permanent conductor in the examining lectures of the Opera House. From 1923, he was conductor of the Concert Association of Budapest. He also organized opera presentations at the Academy of Music. In Budapest, he was the first to present Mozart's opera Così fan tutte (Mindenki így csinálja) (première, 1923). At the Academy, he organized a series of opera and chamber music presentations, where the comic operas of Cimarosa and Mozart were presented from 1925 to 1930. In the same period, he also appeared as conductor of the Hungarian Radio Symphony Orchestra, as well as that of the Margaret Island Symphony Orchestra. In 1948, as a teacher of the Operatic Section at the Academy of Music, he trained and conducted the operas Háry János and Szekler Weaver (Székelyfonó) by Zoltán Kodály in Miskolc, Győr, Diósgyőr, Sáropatak and Eger – all premieres. From 1950 to 1952, he was conductor of the Győr Philharmonic and the Symphony Orchestra of the Diósgyőr Steelworks. From 1957 until his retirement in 1960, he worked as a teacher at the Academy of Music in Budapest. He trained several eminent opera singers and conductors. His works include the opera Petőfi (first night: 14 March 1944); Symphony Hungaria; Piano Concerto in Memory of Ferenc Liszt; and Hungarian Variations for Voice and Choir. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Szendy, Árpád; Koessler, János; Kodály, Zoltán.

Unger, Karolina (Caroline) (Székesfehérvár, 28 October 1803 - Florence, 23 March 1877) – Austrian singer (mezzo-soprano) of Hungarian descent. She was a student of J. M. Vogl, A. Salieri and Aloysia Lange in Vienna; then she studied under Giorgio Ronconi in Milan. She made her debut in Vienna in 1821 in the role of Dorabella in Mozart's Così fan tutte. Beethoven selected her to sing the soprano solos in the first performances of the Ninth Symphony and the Missa Solemnis; in 1824, she was the first to sing the alto solo in his Ninth Symphony. Bellini and Donizetti both wrote operas particularly for her. From 1825 she sang in Italy, in the famous impresario Domenico Barbaja's theaters. A number of opera composers wrote operas for her, for example Bellini's The Foreign Woman (La Straniera – Az idegen nő), and Saverio Mercadante's The Two Figaros (A két rivális). Besides playing romantic heroines, she also had great successes in Mozart opera roles, and in Schubert Lieder performances. She was an outstanding singer. – B: 0903, 1445, T: 7456.

Ungerleider, Mór (Maurice) (Mezőlaborc, 18 January 1872 - Budapest, 20 April 1955) – Film producer, cinema director, founder of the Hungarian film industry. In 1899 he was among the first to open the so-called “coffee-house cinema” in the Venice Coffee House of Rákóczi Street, now the Tisza Movie, 68 Rákóczi Street, Budapest. In 1898, with József (Joseph) Neumann, he founded the film-lending and film-making firm, Projectograph Co. His enterprise obtained, in addition to news and educational films, also the distribution in Hungary of the largest film factories abroad; he was also engaged in the organizing and outfitting of cinemas. In 1917 and 1918, under the name of Phoenix Film Company, he prepared a number of feature films all directed by Mihály (Michael) Kertész. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Kertész, Mihály.

Unghváry, László (Ladislav) (Cegléd, 6 June 1856 - Cegléd, 1 August 1919) - Viticulturalist and owner of a fruit-tree school. He was one of those who conquered the sandy areas of the Great Plain (Nagyalföld). He was trained in horticultural and viticultural schools in Bihardiószeg (now Diosig, 27 km north of Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania), and Buda. From 1879 to 1896, he was Town Gardener of Cegléd. In the outskirts of Cegléd, in the Danube-Tisza interfluvium, he set up a tree-nursery on a sandy field of 8 acres; he procured the fruit-tree seedlings from the plantation of Máté (Matthew) Bereczki. From 1886 on, he regularly published a prize-list of fruit-trees. Two years later, he already supplemented it with useful particulars and pieces of advice. Toward the end of the century, he made himself independent. In 1902 and 1903, he already had over 400 acres of vineyards and a fruit-tree school; in the latter, he carried out a considerable export trade, reaching from Poland to Turkey. His wine cellars became known everywhere in Europe. He also wrote some published works. From his enormous wealth, he established a foundation for the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. His works include Elements of Fruit-tree Horticulture (A gyümölcskertészet alapismeretei) (1878), and Fruit-tree School of László Unghváry at Cegléd (Unghváry László gyümölcsfa-iskolája Cegléden) (1885). From 2008 the Commerce Hotel and Catering School in Cegléd bears his name. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Ungvár (Ukrainian: Uzhhorod; Russian: Uzhgorod, now in Ukraine) – Town built on a flat area (132 m above sea level), with three adjoining hills; on the highest is the fort of the town, which is on the banks of the Ung (Uh) River, a tributary of the River Tisza. It is situated on the northeastern-edge of the Great Hungarian Plain, and at the foothills of the Northeastern Carpathians, now in the Ukraine, known also as Zakarpattia, Transcarpathia, or Ruthenia. The site of the town is the part of the Carpathians, where the Magyars, led by their Leader (Khagan) Árpád, entered and settled in the Carpathian Basin (896-900). According to Anonymus, Árpád already found a fort there. It is an economic and cultural center. It has a variety of manufacturing industries; many of the inhabitants are engaged in handicraft and home trade in wood, clay, etc. and commerce. Among its noteworthy buildings are the Greek Catholic Cathedral, the 18th century Roman Catholic Church, and the more recent Protestant and Byzantine-style Greek Orthodox churches; the Baroque-style Episcopal Palace, the Empire-style County Hall, the Town Hall and the Theater, several high schools, a synagogue and an Episcopal seminary. The University of Ungvár was founded in 1945. Population of the town was 14,723 in 1901 (composed of Magyars, Slovaks and Germans). In 1920, out of 17,000 inhabitants, 14,000 were Hungarian. Its population was 35,155 in 1941 (Jewish, Ukrainian, Magyar and Slovakian); 52,000 in the 1970s, 125,000 after 2000. It was an old Slavic (Ruthenian) settlement, going back possibly to the 8th century, when Ungvár (Uzhgorod) was founded. It belonged to the Kijevan state (the Principality of Russia) in the 10th century, prior to the conquest of the Carpathian Basin by the Magyars. Ever since, the town has belonged to the northeastern corner of the Hungarian Kingdom. During the reign of the Árpád-dynasty kings (1000-1301), the town was the center of royal estates. From 1322 till the late 17th century, the town was the property of the Drugeth family; later, Count Miklós (Nicholas) Bercsényi owned it. Early in the 18th century, it passed to the Hungarian Treasury. The Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920) placed it in the newly created Czechoslovak state. When Czechoslovakia started to break up under German pressure, the lowland part of Transcarpathia with Ungvár was returned to Hungary by the First Vienna Award on 2 November 1938, where it had belonged for more than 1100 years. When a separate Slovakia was formed under German initiative, Hungary retook the mountainous part of Transcarpathia above Ungvár in March 1939. After World War II, Czechoslovakia surrendered Transcarpathia to the Soviet Union in June 1945. After the breakup of the Soviet Union, Ukraine inherited it in 1991, though Sub-Carpathia never was part of Ukraine. Ever since, Ungvár has been under Ukrainian sovereignty. – B: 1068, 1582, 1789, 1816, 7456, T: 7456. → Anonymus; Árpád; Bercsényi, Count Miklós; Trianon Peace Treaty; Vienna Award I.

Ungvári, Endre (Andrew) (? - Tel-Aviv, 5 September 1974) – Actor. From 1957 he was the indispensable walk-on actor of the Hungarian theater life in Israel. The great individual success of his career was the title role of the opera Gül Baba of J. Huszka. His roles include Valet, Secretary in V. Jacobi's The Marriage Market (Leányvásár), and Praed in G.B. Shaw's Mrs. Warren's Profession (Warrenné mestersége). – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Ungvári, Tamás (Thomas) (Budapest, 25 September 1930 - ) – Writer, literary historian, translator of literary works and critic. He obtained an Art Degree, majoring in Hungarian and English Literature, from the University of Budapest, in 1952. Afterwards, he worked for a number of newspapers. In 1960 and 1961, he was a drama critic of the Petöfi Theater (Petőfi Színház) in Budapest. From 1970 to 1974, he worked as Scientific Correspondent for the Hungarian Theatrical Institute. During 1975 to 1979, he was Editor of the Literary Publisher (Szépirodalmi Könyvkiadó); in 1980 and 1981, he was Assistant Professor at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, and since 1982, he has been professor there. He was a member of the Theatrical Science Committee of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences until 1989. He obtained a Masters Degree in Literary Sciences in 1968, and a Ph.D. in 1989. He translated several plays from English and German. His works include Fielding (1955); Thackeray (1962); The Theatrical Revolution of Brecht (Brecht színházi forradalma) (1978); Adventure and Providence (Kaland és gondviselés) (1985), and The Birth of Beauty (A szépség születése) (1988). He received the Attila József Prize in 1985. – B: 1445, 1257, T: 7456.

Ungvárnémeti Tóth, László (Ladislas) (Kistokaj, 17 February 1788 - Vienna, 31 August 1820) – Poet. He was a descendant of a family of ministers of the Reformed Church. He started his schooling in Miskolc, and studied Theology in Sárospatak. In 1810 he met and formed a friendship with Ferenc (Francis) Kazinczy in Eperjes (now Prešov, Slovakia). Breaking off his theological studies, from 1814 he studied Medicine at the University of Pest, and concurrently worked as an assistant editor of István (Stephen) Kultsár's paper,

Home News (Hazai Tudósítások). In 1819, he went to Vienna to complete his medical studies, but he passed away, aged 32, possibly from cholera, before graduation. While studying medicine, he was also engaged in literature; having learnt Greek and Ancient Greek, he composed poems in those languages, for which he appended Hungarian translations. His works include His Poems (Versei) (1816) and Poems in Greek by László Tóth of Ungvárnémet (Ungvárnémeti Tóth László görög versei, magyar tolmácsolattal) (1818). – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Kazinczy, Ferenc.

Ungváry, László (Ladislav) (Untener) (Budapest, 8 December 1911 - Budapest, 21 September 1982) – Actor. In 1933 he received his diploma from the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, and obtained a contract from the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) in Budapest, where he remained a member throughout his career. He also appeared on stage after his retirement in 1980. Although he played in all kinds of roles, classical and modern, he tended to be drawn to the classical roles. His fine voice and majestic style asserted themselves most effectively in roles featuring striking costumes. His acting gestures and the language were equal in value; he attached great value to the plastic, expressive, fine movement on the stage. He suggested the inclusion of these aspects of theatrical art on stage. He prepared the first syllabus and taught it in the college from 1950 until 1956. He often appeared on the air and, also in some important film roles. His roles included: Cléante in Molière's The Miser (A fősvény); Ariel in Shakespeare's The Tempest (A vihar); Oberon in Shakespeare's A Midsummer-Night's Dream (A Szentiványéji álom); Malcolm in Shakespeare's Macbeth; Orsino in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night (Vízkereszt); Cassio in Shakespeare's Othello; Benedick in Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing (Sok hühhó semmiért); Count Almaviva in Beaumarchais' Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága); Otto, then Biberach in Katona's Bánk bán; Lucifer in Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája), and Ferdinand in Schiller's Love and Intrigue (Ármány és szerelem). There are 35 feature and TV films to his credit, including The New Landlord (Az új földesúr) (1935); Europe Does Not Answer (Európa nem válaszol) (1941); Semmelweis (1952); Relatives (Rokonok) (1954); The Captain of Tenkes i, ii (A Tenkes kapitánya I,II) (1963); Spider Net (Pókháló) (1973); Kojak in Pest (Koják Pesten) (1980); Torch-flame (Fáklyaláng) (TV, 1969); Chinese Jug (Kínai kancsó) (TV, 1974), and The Siege of Beszterce (Beszterce ostroma I-13) (TV, 1976). He was presented with the Kossuth Prize (1953), the Merited Artist title (1958), and Outstanding Artist title (1982). – B: 0883, 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Unitarian Church in Hungary – Its origin is in Transylvanian Unitarianism of the 16th century, which was founded by Ferenc (Francis) Dávid (1510-1579). Following World War I and due to the “Treaty of Trianon” (1920), the majority of the church-membership, eight deaneries were attached to Romania. The 9th deanery, which was in Budapest, has been turned into an autonomous Church. At present, the Church is made up of 11 parishes and 50 diaspora communities with about 25,000 members. The highest governing body of the Church is the Synod, presided over by the bishop as the spiritual president, and the general curator as the lay president. The members of the Synod are the ministers of the Church, the elected officers, and the representatives of the parishes. The “Church Representative Council” and the “Presidency” function as organs of the church administration.

In 1971, for the first time, the Hungarian Unitarian Church could elect its own bishop in the person of József (Joseph) Ferenc, and the lay president was Béla Bartók Jr. The Unitarians' situation in Hungary was resolved in 1948 between the Hungarian Government and the Church, when the Church was taken under the control of the Hungarian Government. Until that time, the Unitarian Bishopric was in Kolozsvár (now Cluj Napoca, Romania), and the Church was led from there. The Unitarian Church of Hungary was in a situation where her headquarters and the majority of the members were in Romania, and the members remaining in Hungary had to reorganize their life. First, they could not elect a bishop, so the Church was led by a vice-bishop or a vicar.

There are three Unitarian churches in Budapest: the Budapest Unitarian Church, the Béla Bartók Unitarian Church, and the Pestszentlőrinc Unitarian Church. Other churches in Hungary are in Debrecen, Győr, Füzesgyarmat, Hódmezővásárhely, Kocsord, the Dunántuli (Transdanubian), and Duna-Tiszaközi (Between the Danube and the Tisza). There are altogether 11 Unitarian ministers. – B&T: 1023.→Dávid, Ferenc; Unitarian Church in Transylvania; Trianon Peace Treaty.

Unitarian Church in Romania – The oldest Unitarian Church traces its roots to 16th century Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). The founder of the Unitarian Church was Ferenc (Francis) Dávid (1510-1579). After becoming acquainted with the Unitarian ideas in Europe, he returned home and founded the Unitarian Church, and elaborated its basic tenets. The beginning of the Unitarian Church is thought to have been at the “Diet of Torda” (Transylvania, now in Romania) in 1568, where the freedom of religion and conscience was for the first time declared in history. The resolution concerning religion, made at the Diet held in Torda between 6 and 13 January 1568 was: "Our Royal Majesty confirms at the present diet what he had decided at the previous debates within his country about the matters of religion, namely that in every place the preachers shall preach and explain the Gospel, each according to his understanding of it, and if the congregation accepts it, so be it; if not, no one shall compel them, for their soul would not be satisfied, but they shall be permitted to keep a preacher whose teaching they approve. Therefore, none of the superintendents or others shall annoy or abuse the preachers on account of their religion, according to the previous constitutions, and it is not allowed for anyone to be imprisoned or punished by removal from his post on account of his teachings, for Faith is the gift of God; this comes from hearing and hearing by the word of God."

The new faith spread quickly even beyond Transylvania, mainly in various parts of Hungary. The Hungarian Unitarianism and its Polish variant, the “Socinianism” proceeded through the Netherlands, to Britain and America. Ferenc Dávid converted the Ruling Prince of Transylvania, János (John) Zsigmond (1540-1571), and much of the population to the idea of one God, with Jesus as the model of human perfection. Throughout most of its 500-year history, the Church has been either controlled or suppressed by the government. While, in the 16th century, there were 500 congregations in Transylvania, today there are 150. After the Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate in 1920, the Church lost one deanery to truncated Hungary, and the Transylvanian Church fell under Romanian authority.

This created a new situation. In 1921, the Agrarian Reform took away most of the Church estates. It was difficult to run 26 elementary, 2 secondary schools and a Theological Academy. However, at the end of 1930s, the Church had 36 Elementary schools, 2 High Schools, one Agricultural School, a Theological Academy, and a People's Academy. The 45 years of Communist rule took away all schools, and started to demolish not only religious faith, but everything Hungarian. The political change in 1989 barely changed the situation of the Church. Most of the formerly nationalized Church properties have yet to be returned.

The Church is organized on the Synod-Presbytery system; but an Episcopal form of polity governs the Unitarian Church in Transylvania. Authority in the Unitarian Church is vested in the "Consistory", which is made up of lay-people and clergy. Local churches elect lay members to the Consistory. A bishop is elected by the Consistory, which meets quarterly. The bishop initially served for a life term. Under new by-laws, the bishop is elected for a six-year term. An annual General Assembly of elected lay-people meets in December. An Executive Committee also works with the bishop. The local clergy elect Deans and they work with and for the bishop. Church membership is determined at birth by parentage (boys are assigned to the father's faith, girls to the mother's) and changing churches is rare. Before 1989, the Communist culture discouraged attachment either to a religion or a local church; but the new regime offers less hostility to religion. Local churches have a lay board, elected annually. The minister relates to the board as the bishop to the Consistory.

According to the 1992 census, there were 80,000 Unitarian believers in 126 parishes, 38 affiliated and 220 diaspora congregations under the care of 100 pastors, organized in 6 districts. There are 3 High Schools with state support, a College, and a Theological Academy. Church publications are the Christian Sower (Keresztény Magvető), quarterly; Unitarian Gazette (Unitárius Közlöny), bi-monthly; Unitarian Pulpit (Unitárus Szószék), bi-yearly, and the Book-Calendar (Könyvnaptár). Since 1995, the Church has had its own printing press. Banned associations in 1948 are active again, such as the Ferenc Dávid Association; National Ministerial and Women and Youth associations. The Church has strong ties with the Hungarian, North American and English Unitarianism and founding members of the International Association for Religious Freedom (IARF), 1900. – B: 1023, 1024, T: 7103. → Dávid, Ferenc; János II, King; Varga, Béla; Unitarian Church in Hungary.

Unitarian Church in Hungary and Unitarian Church in Romania – separated by historical causes restored their unity on 28 June 2012 at Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). – B: 1874, 1031 T: 7103.

Unitarian Hymn Poesy – One of the unique branches of Hungarian hymn poesy. Its development dates from the last third of the 16th century, when it became necessary to provide songs primarily for church services. It adopted many hymns of the Reformation with a few dogmatic alterations; however, they soon composed a few songs as well. The oldest known Unitarian Hymn Books date from the first decade of the 17th century. Besides religious songs, the 17th century witnessed the flowering of a special kind of didactic poetry: songs about the various trades, on the duties of women, etc. As well, they further developed the art form of Biblical storytelling. Due to its interrelation with contemporary bourgeois lifestyle, it is a valuable source of Hungarian cultural history. – B: 1150, T: 7617.

Unitarianism – The name “Unitarian” has its origin in the Latin word Unus est Deus – God is One. Unitarianism is a liberal religion free of dogma that could bind the soul, and that emphasizes the relationship between God and man. The major teachings of Unitarianism consist of the oneness of God; the importance of following the example of the human Jesus; the immortality of the soul; an unconditional respect for life and the surrounding world; and the development of man, a creature that Unitarians consider to be born with the ability to do good. Based on these teachings, education, culture and social life are of great importance to the Unitarian Church. Besides its centuries-old schools, the organizations of the Church, such as the Ferenc Dávid Association, Unitarian Literary Association, Women's Association, Youth Association and the Ministers' Association, and the church periodicals such as Christian Sower and Unitarian Journal are worth mentioning, the latter being among the oldest such publications in Transylvania.

Among the traditional Unitarian values, the most widely known are: the promotion and promulgation of religious tolerance, openness toward differences in religion, and a willingness to familiarize oneself with them, a respect for the freedom of conscience, and a national and social commitment. The teachings of the Unitarian Church are based on the Bible, that is to say, they cherish and respect the basic scriptures of Christianity; however, they don't take this text word for word, but rather interpret it with the help of the achievements of Biblical scholarship. In faith issues, they consider conscience and reason to be the ultimate authority. Their liturgical services are: baptism, marriage, funeral, Lord's Supper and confirmation. Their church architecture, the equipment used inside the churches, the vessels used for liturgical purposes and the ministers' garments are almost identical with those used by the Reformed Church.

The Unitarian Creed states: I believe in one God, the creator of life, our providential Father. I believe in Jesus, the best among the sons of God, our true master-teacher. I believe in the Holy Spirit. I believe in the mission of the Unitarian Church. I believe in repentance and eternal life. Amen.

From the words quoted above, it can be concluded that Unitarians consider themselves to be Christians. The original meaning of the word Christian is: follower of Jesus, a person living according to the teachings of Jesus. Those who deny that they are Christians should clarify once and for all whether the name Christian denotes the followers of Jesus, or those who accept the dogmas that gradually gained acceptance starting with the 4th century – such, as the one about the Holy Trinity. Unitarians do not believe in the Trinity; instead they see Jesus as a man worthy of being followed and the Holy Spirit as the helping power of God rather than separate persons within one deity.

Unitarian beliefs similar to the ones mentioned above also evolved in other parts of the world during the past two centuries (United States of America, England, The Czech Republic, India, The Philippines, etc.). The Unitarian organizations in the different nations do not belong to one unifying organization, though they maintain many partner-church relationships. As a consequence of the Treaty of Trianon (1920), there are two separate Hungarian Unitarian Churches today; however, Unitarians hold a single one in their hearts, and hope that “that which belongs together, will be joined” soon.

The Transylvanian Unitarian Church comprises 126 congregations organized into 6 districts, with approximately 65,000 church members; its high authorities and the bishop's office are located in Kolozsvár, and most of the inner organizations and institutions are also based in the same city. The Hungarian Unitarian Church has 11 member congregations with a few thousand churchgoers, and is centered in Budapest. Both these organizations are based on Synod-Presbyterian principles, their most important organs being the Synod and the Main Council of the Church.

Finally, the names of a few famous personalities are given here. Few may know that they were (among other things) Unitarians: John Sigismund, Gáspár (Gasper) Heltai, Miklós (Nicholas) Bogáti Fazekas, Sándor (Alexander) Bölöni Farkas, Sámuel Brassai, János (John) Kriza, Balázs (Blaise) Orbán, Béla Bartók Sr. and Béla Bartók Jr., László (Ladislav) Lajtha, Ferenc (Francis) Balázs, László (Ladislav) Szabédi, Gyula (Julius) László, Imre (Emeric) Mikó, György (George) Bözödi, as well as Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, Samuel Morse, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Alexander Graham Bell, Linus Carl Pauling [United States of America], Joseph Priestley, Robert Burns, George Stephenson, Charles Darwin, Charles Dickens [Great Britain]. – B&T: 1874.→Some of the names in the above article have their own entry.

*United States of America and Canada, Hungarian Books and Archival Collection in the Libraries of – Hungarian or Hungarian related books can be found in every large city of North America in public and university libraries and private collections. Archival material is also plentiful; letters of Lajos (Louis) Kossuth, records of the Hungarian Cabinet and Parliament, reports of accredited ambassadors in Budapest and Washington, diplomatic correspondence of the first and second World Wars, correspondence dealing with the affairs of the leaders of American/Hungarian organizations and persons in Hungary, English language newsletters and collections of old periodicals and reviews that no longer can be found in libraries, which were destroyed in Hungary, a genuine treasure of untouched original works.

Washington Library of Congress: It has a separate Hungarian section. Catalogued collections of Hungarian publications can be found here. The National Archives offers a particularly large collection for those, who wish to research Hungarian/American connections: collections of documents acquired from the Szálasi government by the American Army in 1945 in Southern Germany, discussions between Mussolini and Prime Minister Miklós Kállay on 1 April 1943, and minutes of meetings of the conferences in Teheran and Yalta.

New York Public Library: It contains more, than 20,000 volumes of Hungarian works. The Journal Division in 1972 subscribed to 165 journals and in 1973 to 159; since then they have increased the subscriptions for more journals. e.g. the issues of Hon, published in 1867 shed light on the times and circumstances of the 1867 Compromise with Austria.

Columbia Public Library: More than 10,000 volumes of Hungarian works can be found here. Approximately 4,000 works related to Hungarian matters written in English, German, French and other foreign languages are also available. In this large library numerous portraits of well-known American Hungarians are kept and also the statue of the great nationalist poet Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi is exhibited, a gift from the city's Hungarian community. A collection of newspaper articles related to Lajos Kossuth's American visit and other interesting documents are in the collection. Approximately 10% of the volumes are translated from other languages into Hungarian.

Stanford, CA. Hoover Institution: It has a substantial amount of documents, which cannot be found anywhere else, relating to the government of Béla Kun. They are composed of original government telegrams, hand written and typewritten government notes, minutes of the meetings of the People's Council and other interesting items. Here we find the National Council's official notes, documents of the Bethlen government, documents dealing with affairs of Hungary, and Gestapo documents. Chicago Public Library: It has more than 2,500 volumes of Hungarian works; approximately 110 volumes are catalogued each year.

Indiana Ball State University: It acquired more than 300 volumes dealing with Hungary. As a rarity, it has one volume from King Mátyás's Corvina Library (15th century), which constitutes a proud acquisition of this library.

Dartmouth College: Into the library János Perényi, Hungarian ambassador in Washington and confidant of Count Pál Teleki, are placed the so-called "break-away" documents.

University Library of Yale: Mr. Osborn – son-in-law of Montgomery, who in the 1930s was the American ambassador to Hungary, donated a portion of his father-in-law's diplomatic notes and noteworthy writings relating to the life-styles of the ruling class. The vast majority of Montgomery's documents are in a private collection. In that collection, one can find befitting characterizations sent to Washington of Regent Horthy and Cardinal Serédi, Tibor Ehardt, Prime Minister Pál Teleki and Otto Habsburg.

Corvinus Virtual Library: The Corvinus Library has operated for decades under the auspices of the Hunyadi Veteran Scouts Co-operative, Hamilton, Ont., Canada. Its aim is to ameliorate Hungary's image in the world by producing and distributing books and CDs in English about the true history and culture of Hungary. Unfortunately, there were very few - fair and objective – books available on Hungary. To help to fill the demand, the Library has distributed thousands of books and CDs on the subjects among university, research, media, and government libraries. The number of works appearing on the website is growing: <http://www.hungarianhistory.com>. – B: 1020, T: 7666.

United States of America, Hungarian Population of – The reason for Hungarians' emigrating to the US was either political or economical. They arrived sporadically and in waves. In 1831, Sándor (Alexander) Bölöni-Farkas had already founded a Hungarian colony in New Orleans, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and in other much smaller places.

(1) The first wave of Hungarian immigrants was made up of refugees after the War of Independence of 1848-1849. They were the Kossuth-immigrants.

(2) The great wave of Hungarian immigration began in the 1870s, and peaked just before World War I. The reason for this massive outflow of people was purely economic. It was instigated by the agricultural crisis at the end of the 19th century, the great vine phyloxera epidemic, and the struggle between the Hungarian and Romanian factions in Szeklerland in Eastern Transylvania (now in Romania). At the same time, there was a great need for laborers in the United States and the Americans were aggressively recruiting in Europe. The Hungarian immigrants were mostly day-workers and small landholding peasants. There was a Hungarian immigrant meeting at the Shakespeare Hotel of New York City on 3 November 1871. The first Hungarian insurance association was formed in 1882 in New York, and by 1910, they had several hundred insurance associations. Hungarian churches sprang up all over the US from the 1890s on. The number of Hungarians by the official census of 1880 was 11,526; by 1890 they numbered 62,435, and by the census of 1900, the number of Hungarian-born citizens in the US was 145,714.

(3) After World War I, the arriving Hungarians were planning to stay on for about five years, but only 37% returned to Hungary, the rest remained and settled down. The latecomers did not use any of the establishments of their predecessors. The majority of the new immigrants between 1925 and 1943 were merchants and some highly educated middle class people, among them such internationally recognized scholars as János (John von) Neumann, Leo Szilárd, Edward Teller, Jenő (Eugene) Wigner. By 1920, the Hungarian-speaking population numbered 473,538.

Statistically, their presence in the different states compared with the total population is as follows: in Indiana (South Bend), Massachusetts (Bridgeport) and Michigan (Detroit) 2-5%; in Illinois (Chicago) 6-10 %; in New Jersey (Trenton), New York (New York City), Ohio (Akron, Cleveland, Toledo) and Pennsylvania (Philadelphia) over 10%. By 1920, the 10 cities in the US with the largest number of Hungarian inhabitants were Akron, Bridgeport, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, New York, Philadelphia, South Bend, Toledo, and Trenton.

(4) There was yet another immigrant wave after World War II. The newcomers established themselves in cities already having a considerable Hungarian population. The statistics indicate that between 1941 and 1950 some 16 thousand new Hungarian immigrants arrived to the U.S.A. In spite of the McCarran-Walter bill of 1952 opening the door to thousands of new immigrants, Hungarian arrivals diminished considerably due to the 1949 sealing of the Hungarian borders by the Communist regime. There were only sporadic arrivals after that. In 1964 there were about 500 Hungarian researchers and scholars in the USA.

(5) After the crushed Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1956, there came another great stream of immigrants. From January 1957 the American authorities made several concessions towards the Hungarian refugees that made possible the arrival of more than 30 thousand Hungarians into the U.S.A. by June. "These Hungarians became valuable assets instead of a burden to America". Such praise was simply unknown until then, as the US immigration authorities usually were recognized to be more difficult than welcoming. By 1968, the number of Hungarians living in the United States was estimated to be around 800 thousand. There were some 120 thousand in New York City, 51 thousand in Cleveland, 42 thousand in Los Angeles, 37 thousand in Chicago, 33 thousand in Detroit, 29 thousand in Pittsburgh, and 25 thousand in Philadelphia. The 1980 census indicated there were 727,223 citizens claiming Hungarian as their mother tongue, while 1,049,679 declared a Hungarian origin.

The breakdown of their number classified by mother tongue/origin by the individual states: Alabama 1,678/2,416; Alaska 710/1,022; Arizona 8,034/11,569; Arkansas 1,021/1,470; California 71,428/110,285; Colorado 5,698/8,205; Connecticut 22,307/32,122; Delaware 1,218/1,485; Florida 47,444/68,319; Georgia 3,665/5,278; Hawaii 744/1,071; Idaho 717/1,032; Illinois 30,373/43,737; Indiana 18,382/26,470; Iowa 1,350/1,944; Kansas 1,581/2,277; Kentucky 2,088/3,007; Louisiana 2,628/3,784; Maine 835/1,202; Maryland 9,980/1,4371; Massachusetts 6,854/9,870; Michigan 48,396/69,690; Minnesota 3,970/5,719; Mississippi 559/805; Missouri 6,310/9,086; Montana 1,047/1,508; Nebraska 1,230/1,771; Nevada 2,413/3,475; New Hampshire 1,007/1,450; New Jersey 70,607/14,6411; New Mexico 1,248/1,797, New York 11,5981/16,7013;

North Carolina 3,298/4,749; North Dakota 935/1,346; Ohio 102,581/147,717; Oklahoma 1,552/2,235; Oregon 3,614/5,204; Pennsylvania 76,544/110,223; Rhode Island 842/2,213; South Carolina 1,537/2,213; South Dakota 623/897; Tennessee 2,149/1,094; Texas 10,173/14,649; Utah 809/1,165; Vermont 771/1,110; Virginia 8,225/11,844; Washington 5,540/7,978; West Virginia 5,159/7,429; Wisconsin 9,781/14,085; Wyoming 556/801. U.S. cities claiming the largest number of Hungarians classified by mother tongue/origin: New York City 63,826/91,909; Cleveland (Cuyahoga) 34,330/49,435; Los Angeles 33,709/48,541; New Brunswick (Middlesex) 20,085/29,210; and Detroit (Wayne) 19,056/27,441. – B: 1020, 1134, T: 3240. → Neumann, John von; Teller, Ede; Wigner, Jenő.

Universitas Istropolitana – Since the 16th century frequently – but incorrectly – it has been referred to as Academia Istropolitana (Greek: Istropolis-Danube City) in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). It was founded in 1465 by Pope Paul II, on the request of the Hungarian King Mátyás I, (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490). It was the first University in the territory of present-day Slovakia, and was the only University in the Kingdom of Hungary at that time, although historically not the first on Hungarian territory. Many well-known professors from Austria, Italy and elsewhere taught at the school, such as Galeotto Marzio and János (Johann, John) Vitéz. Regiomontanus was the Chair in Mathematics, while the court astrologer for the King, Martin Bylica was the Chair in Astrology at the University. The University ceased to exist after the death of King Mátyás I. The Renaissance university building still stands in Pozsony, housing the Academy of Performing Arts. – B: 1031, T: 7103. → Vitéz, János; Mátyás I, King.

Universities in Hungary are as follows:

Andrássy Gyula German Speaking University, Budapest (Andrássy Gyula Budapesti Német Nyelvű Egyetem – AUB). The Institution, named after Count Gyula (Julius) Andrássy, has four faculties: Comparative State and Law Studies, International Relations, Central European Studies, and Ph.D. Studies. The main building is the Festetics Palace in Budapest. The University opened in 2002, and is financed by the Hungarian Government, the Austrian Government and the German states of Baden-Württemberg and Bavaria. The first students completed their studies in 2005. László (Ladislav) Sólyom, Hungary's former President has taught there since 2002. About 130 students studied there in 2006; approx. 45% came from Germany and Austria, 45% from Hungary, and 10% from other Central European countries. There are partner universities in Heidelberg, Passau, Bayreuth, St.Gallen, Osnabrück, Linz and Göttingen. B: 1031, T: 7103. → Andrássy, Count Gyula (1).

Budapest University of Technology and Economics (Budapesti Műszaki és Gazdaságtudományi Egyetem - BUTE) – The predecessor of the University was the Institute-Geometrico-Hydrotechnicum (Institute of Engineering), established by Emperor József II (Joseph) in 1782, as part of the Liberal Arts Faculty at the University of Buda. The Institute's students were trained for three years. It was the first in Europe to award engineering degrees to students of land surveying, river control and road construction. Early 19th century development efforts and the demands by the National Assembly made necessary the establishment of a tertiary institution for training professionals for the industry. The foundation of the School of Industry (Ipartanoda) was endorsed by Emperor Ferdinánd V in 1844, and the school was named after Palatine Joseph. Many of its students and professors took part in the 1848 Revolution and War of Independence. In 1850, the Institutum Geometricum merged with the Joseph College and the new school was named “Royal Joseph Polytechnic” (József Nádor Politechnikum) in 1856. In 1871, Emperor Franz Joseph gave autonomy to the Royal Joseph University and right to issue engineering diplomas after five years of study. It was the first institution in Europe to train engineers on university level. In 1901, the University was entitled to grant doctoral degrees, the Doctor Rerum Technicarum. By then, with regard to the number of students, the University was third in rank among the higher technical institutes in Europe, after Berlin and Munich. The first woman student graduated in 1925. In 1934, the Parliament made significant changes in the organization of the University. The new institution was named the “Royal Joseph University of Technical and Economics”, and united in itself the Mining and Forestry Academy of Sopron, the Veterinary College and the Faculty of Economics of the University of Budapest. Five faculties were created: 1) Faculty of Engineering and Civil Engineering; 2) Faculty of Mechanical Engineering and Chemical Engineering; 3) Faculty of Mining, Metallurgical and Forestry Engineering; 4) Faculty of Agricultural Engineering and Veterinary College; 5) Faculty of Economics. With its 98 departments, the university became the biggest higher educational institute in Hungary. Around the end of the decade, the university had some 2,500 students out of 11,747 university students nationwide. In 1949, its name changed to “Technical University of Budapest”. The University has the following faculties: Civil Engineering, Mechanical Engineering, Architecture, Chemical Engineering and Electrical Engineering. In 1955, the Faculty of Transportation was added. In 1971, an experimental atom-reactor was put in service. Since 1984, the instruction has been in English, in addition to Hungarian. In 1987, the Faculty of Natural and Social Sciences was established. In 1992, the Faculty of Electrical Engineering became the “Faculty of Electrical Engineering and Informatics”. The Continuous Education of Engineers has been in operation since 1939 – the first in Europe. Among its renowned professors were Károly Zipernowsky, Donát Bánki, Zoltán Bay and Frigyes Schulek – to mention a few. The University has bilateral links with some 102 universities worldwide and its professors are office bearers of more than 200 international scientific organizations. – B&T: 0976.→Bánki, Donát; Bay, Zoltán; Schulek, Frigyes; Zipernovszky, Károly.

Central European University (Közép-Európai Egyetem – CEU, Budapest) – The idea of bringing together students and faculties from diverse regions to an international base for higher learning in Central Europe, was born in 1989 at Dubrovnik, in the former Yugoslavia. Among its founders were György (George) Soros, Miklós (Nicholas) Vásárhelyi and William Newton-Smith. Today, it is an internationally recognized institution of post-graduate education in social sciences and humanities. The University seeks to contribute to the development of open societies in Central and Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, and to expand worldwide to emerging democracies. The University draws students from 46 countries beyond its original regions, from North America, Asia and Africa. The University has some 14 academic departments, schools and programs, such as the Department of Economics; Gender Studies History; Legal Studies; Medieval Studies; Philosophy and Political Science – to mention a few. During the 2002-2003 academic year 926 students enrolled. About 100 professors from 25 countries teach at CEU. The Hungarian state recognized CEU in 1995. – B&T: 0987.

Corvinus University of Budapest – The forerunner of this University, the Faculty of Economics of the Royal Hungarian University, was established in 1920. In 1934, the faculty was merged with other institutions, including the University of Technology, to form the Hungarian Royal Palatine Joseph University of Technology and Economics (József Nádor Egyetem). In 1948, the University of Economics became an independent organization. In 1953 it was renamed Karl Marx University of Economic Sciences. In 1990, after the regime change, the University was renamed Budapest University of Economic Sciences. In 2000, with the integration of the College of Public Administration, the institution was named Budapest University of Economic Sciences and Public Administration (BUESPA). In 2003, the three faculties of the former University of Horticulture (then part of the St. Stephen University) were integrated into the BUESPA. In 2004 the University received its present name. The new name refers to King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490). The Corvinus University of Budapest has 7 different faculties. These can be grouped into three subject areas: Business, Public Administration and Horticulture. As of 2003, (before the merger with the horticulture faculties), the University had 620 professors and 16,537 students, with 2,721 students graduating. In 2006, it had a total of 17,000 students. Classes are offered also in English and German in addition to Hungarian. A growing number of the university's students come from foreign countries. – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Debrecen University of Reformed Theology (Debreceni Református Hittudományi Egyetem – DRHE) was founded as the Debrecen Reformed College in 1538 (Debreceni Református Kollégium). It trains ministers and teachers for the Reformed Church. An Academy of Law and a Teachers' Training College were established in the 19th century, and a Faculty of Arts in 1908. The three Faculties (Theology, Law and Arts) were united as the Hungarian Royal Count István Tisza University in 1912 (A Magyar Királyi Gróf Tisza István Tudományegyetem). In 1952, it was renamed Lajos Kossuth University (Kossuth Lajos Tudományegyetem). In 1951, the Faculty of Theology was deprived of its right to bestow a university degree and had to leave the main university building; it became the Theological Academy of the Reformed Church in Hungary. In 1990, DRHE was again authorized by the Higher Education Law to issue a university degree. It was a founding member of the Universitas Association and of the Debrecen University Federation in the integration process. As a church institution, it could not be integrated into a state university, but it is an associated member of the University of Debrecen. The rights of maintaining the Institute are exercised by the Trans-Tibiscan (Tiszántúli) Reformed Synod through the College Board, and the institute is closely integrated into the traditional educational system of the Debrecen Reformed College (secondary and elementary school, libraries, Office of Finances, boarding schools). The work of the Institutes of the College is coordinated by the College Board through the Principal's Office. In the areas of education and management, DRHE does have autonomy. The Rector is responsible for the preparation, execution and supervision of the decisions made by the Board of the Faculty. He can share these tasks with the Vice-Rector and, on occasion, with other members of the Board. The exchange of information and coordination is informal and needs more non-academic staff and a new structure to organize planning, decision-making and supervision. Members of the student government, the Council of Theological Students, participate in decision-making in an advisory capacity, except for entrance exams, where they decide over 25% of the points. The educational programs are based on the European Credit Transfer System (ECTS). Trainings offered: Master of Divinity, Master of Theology and Teacher of Religion (MA, BA). The DRHE ECTS Package is available via Internet ECTS Info. The Debrecen University of Reformed Theology, having worked through the integration process, is associated with the University of Debrecen. As a church institution, it cooperates with other Hungarian-speaking Reformed Theological Seminaries and Universities (Budapest, Sáropatak, Pápa, Kolozsvár/Cluj, Komárom /Komárno and Nagyvárad/Oradea) associated with Coetus Theologorum. There is a centuries-old system of church scholarships, through which several of the students can study in different U.S. and Western European Universities every year. Bilateral contacts have been established with the Theologische Universität in Kampen and the Austin Theological Seminary. – B&T: 0958, 1015.

Eötvös Loránd University of Science (Eötvös Loránd Tudományegyetem – University of Budapest, ELTE) – The foundation stones of today's ELTE University in Budapest were laid by Péter Pázmány (1570-1637), the Cardinal-Archbishop of Esztergom, at Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia) in 1635. At the time of its foundation, the University had only two faculties: Faculty of Theology and Faculty of Arts. There were almost a thousand students attending the University and the secondary school classes two years after its opening and there were also foreign students right from the start. In 1667, the University was expanded by the establishment of the Faculty of Law, and in 1769 by the addition of the Faculty of Medicine, and the total number of departments increased to 25. In 1777, the University was placed in the newly rebuilt royal palace in Buda.

The radical modernization of the University started and accelerated after 1860. New departments were established with well-equipped libraries. During these years, its academic sophistication and its stature rapidly increased, until it attained a level comparable to that of the well-established European universities. In 1921, the University was renamed the Péter Pázmány University of Budapest (Budapesti Pázmány Péter Tudományegyetem) in honor of its founder. The name was again changed to (Baron) Loránd Eötvös (Báró Eötvös Loránd Tudományegyetem), after the previous Rector and Professor of the University. In 1950, the Theology Faculty was separated from the main body. Today, it is Péter Pázmány Catholic University, Budapest. In 1951, the Faculty of Medicine became independent under the name of Medical University of Budapest (today Semmelweis Medical University; Semmelweis Orvostudományi Egyetem – SOTE). Since 1990, research and tuition in sociology have been pursued at the University's Institute of Sociology and Social Politics (Szociológiai Intézet és Társadalpmudományi Kar), which received University status. After the integration process of the Hungarian higher education institutions, the University of Budapest has six faculties: Faculty of Arts, Faculty of Sciences, Faculty of Law, Faculty of Teacher Training, Faculty of Special Education, and Faculty of Nursery and Elementary School Teacher Training. The University has links with some 30 universities worldwide and participates in many international programs. – B&T: 0973.

Evangelical-Lutheran Theological University, Budapest (Evangélikus Hittudományi Egyetem, Budapest) – The beginning of the Lutheran theological training goes back to the decades of the Reformation. In the Latin school of Sopron, the Old Testament Hebrew language was already taught in 1557, and this school, as the Theological Institute (Teológiai Intézet), became one among three other locations of 17th century Lutheran Theological training in Hungary. The Institute became independent in 1892 under the name of Evangelical Theological Academy of Sopron (Soproni Evangélikus Teológiai Főiskola). The Academy in Sopron became the Theological Faculty of the Royal Hungarian Erzsébet University of Science in Pécs in 1923 (Magyar Királyi Erzsébet Tudományegyetem). After the Communist take-over of 1948, theological faculties of all denominations were separated from their respective universities. The Lutheran Faculty became a Theological Academy and, because of the nearness of the Western border, it had to move to Budapest in 1951. First they were accommodated in a part of the building of the nationalized Fasor High School, and they had to move to the Lendvay Street building of the Church, which was afterwards taken over by the State Office for Church Affairs. Later, the Academy was moved to a wing of the Üllői Street Headquarters. In 1974, a new building in Zugló became its home. In 1989, the Institute moved to its modern building. Its legal status was unclear up to 1990. After the collapse of the Communist regime in 1990, the Hungarian Parliament recognized it as a University. The training of pastors takes 5 years (10 semesters), plus an additional year of practice in one of the parishes. The teachers of religion are trained for 5 years parallel to their full training as teachers of a particular subject at another university. The University offers a five-year program of theological studies concluding with a university degree.

At the University there is a Chair for the Old Testament, New Testament, Church History, Systematic Theology, Practical Theology, Religion and Society, and for Church Music. Sociology, Psychology and Pedagogy are represented by guest lecturers from other universities. In addition to Hebrew, Greek and Latin, German or English is also compulsory for every student. The Hungarian Law on Higher Education recognized the diploma as equivalent to an MA in Theology. Since 1992, a Protestant Postgraduate Course has been offered every summer for graduates. There are 220 young people studying at the Institute, most of them preparing for the ministry, and some of them are training to become teachers of religion. In addition to this regular training, there is also training for graduate teachers who wish to become teachers of religion. Beside this, the University runs regional college-level courses of Religious Education and Catechetics at Nyíregyháza, Győr and Kaposvár in 8 semesters. The length of the Ph.D. program consists of 6 semesters. In the main building, a library of about 50,000 volumes (most of them in German and English) and a reading room are available for teachers and students. The Lutheran Students' Home has a dormitory of 90 beds, as well as a dining room with kitchen. The University has a long tradition of having guest students at the Institute. – B&T: 0985, T: 7103.

Jewish University (Jewish Theological Seminary and University of Jewish Studies) (Rabbiképző Szeminárium és Zsidó Egyetem, Budapest) – Hungary has one of the largest Jewish populations in Europe. The Capital City of Budapest has up to 130 thousand Jews amounting to 95 % of their total number in Hungary. They consist of two groups: the Orthodox and Reformed Jews. The Jewish Theological Seminary was established in 1880, and has long been the only rabbinical training facility in Eastern Europe. Later it has been expanded into a Jewish University. This is the only Jewish institute of higher learning in Eastern and Central Europe. Its 250 students study in five faculties: the Jewish Teachers' College, Jewish Community Work Faculty, Rabbinical School, Liturgy Faculty (Cantorial School) and the Faculty of Jewish Culture. It works in close cooperation with Midreshet Yearushalayim and Schechter Institute Faculty. Hungarian student teachers also participate in a SIJS study program in Israel. The University has its own facilities, including a library and college, and foreign students exchange program. – B&T: 0986.

Károli Gáspár Reformed University (Károli Gáspár Református Egyetem, Budapest) – It was named after Gáspár Károli (1530-1591), Reformed Minister in Vizsoly and Bible translator. The Reformed Church in Hungary opened its first university of its own on 1 July 1990. The Parliament declared the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest a University, together with the Teacher Training College of the Danubian Reformed District in Nagykőrös, and with Faculty of Arts and Law School. The University consists of Faculty of Arts, Faculty of Law, Faculty of Theology, Teacher Training College, School of Librarianship and a Law Academy in Kecskemét. Departments of the Faculty of Arts include Hungarian Language; Hungarian Literature; Contemporary Hungarian Literature; Ancient History; Medieval Hungarian and Universal History; Early Modern Hungarian and Universal History; Modern Hungarian and Universal History; English Language, English Literatures and Cultures; German Language and Literature; Japanese Language and Literature; Psychology, and Communication. After many attempts to establish a Reformed University, it was finally realized. – B: 0910, T: 7103.

Liszt Ferenc University of Music, Budapest (Liszt Ferenc Zeneművészeti Egyetem, Budapest) – The beginning of the Institution dates back to 1840, when Ferenc (Franz) Liszt gave his first benefit concert for the Hungarian National Conservatory of Music, and after 18 months, this teaching institution of music was built. It was the first Hungarian Music School, and the birth place of Hungarian Music Education. This Music Institute has continuously served Hungarian Musical Art since 1841. In 1851, its name was Pestbuda Conservatory of Musicians Society (Pestbudai Hangászegylet Zenede). Its name changed to National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede) in 1867. Now the name of the new Old Academy is the Bartók Béla Secondary Music School (Bartók Béla Zeneművészeti Szakközépiskola és Gimnázium) and it is the Music Teacher Training Institute of the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music. In 1992, the Academy was promoted to the status of a State University.

The Institute originally offered courses in piano, composition, harmony and music esthetics. In the 1880s, two new departments - those of violin and cello - were added. Today, it has the following faculties and departments: Composition and Conducting; Musicology; Keyboard Instruments and Harp; Strings; Woodwinds; Brasses; Percussion; Singing and Opera; Repetiteur; Music Theory, Chamber Music and Church Music. Besides the Training School, there is a School for Exceptionally Talented Children, and a School for Instrument Repair. The Central Library has the largest musical collection in the country. Its 400,000 music scores, 70,000 books, 1,000 different periodicals and approximately 25,000 records provide the basic material used for teaching and research. The Academy has many international links.

The Academy has had such excellent professors as Ferenc Liszt, Ferenc (Francis) Erkel, Jenő (Eugene) Hubay, Béla Bartók and Zoltán Kodály to mention a few of the long list of world-famous musicians who have been educated at the Academy of Music of Budapest. – B&T: 0977.→Bartók Béla; Hubay, Jenő; Liszt, Ferenc; Erkel, Ferenc; Kodály, Zoltán.

National Public Service University (Nemzeti Közszolgálati Egyetem), Budapest - It was founded on 1 January 2012 with the amalgamation of the Zrinyi Miklós National Defense University (Zrinyi Miklós Nemzetvédelmi Egyetem), the Police Officer Academy (Rendőrtisztí Főiskola), Budapest and the Public Administration Science Faculty of the Corvinus University (Corvinus Egyetem Közigazgatás-tudományi Kara), Budapest. – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Partium Christian University (PCU) (Partium Keresztyén Egyetem, PKU; Universitatea Creştină Partium, Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania) – Hungarian-language University at Nagyvárad in the Partium area (the eastern strip of the Great Hungarian Plain), between truncated Hungary and Transylvania (Erdély), near the Hungarian border. This eastern, north-south strip of the Great Plain was formed and named Partium or “Parts” (Részek) in the times of the Turkish occupation of the central part of the Historic Kingdom of Hungary of the Carpathian Basin. This strip of flatland was between the Turkish-occupied area and the Principality of Transylvania. It was ceded to Romania after the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon-Versailles of 1920 and, as a result, the Hungarian population of Romania lost its University. However, after the political changes of 1990, the Reformed population of the Partium in the Church-District of Királyhágó initiated the establishment of the István Sulyok Reformed College, which was approved by the Romanian authorities in 1991, as an addition to the Reformed Theological Faculty at Nagyvárad, of the Protestant Theological Institute of Kolozsvár. It started with 238 students. For the 1994-1995 seasons a temporary work permit was granted for the departments of Religious Teachers; Social Work and Religious Teachers; German Language and Literature. From 1995 to 2000, the scope of instruction of the College was extended with the departments of Management, School of Music and Teaching of Foreign Languages. At the end of 1995, the College separated from the Protestant Theological Institute of Kolozsvár and transformed itself into an independent tertiary institution under the title of Christian University of the Partium. In 2000 it obtained its working permit. From 2000 to 2003, it was extended with the Departments of English Language and Literature, English, Romanian, Philosophy, Sociology, Social work, Touristics and Advertising Graphics. The Chairs of the University are: English Language and Literature, Philosophy, Hungarian Language and Literature, Modern Languages and Literatures, German Language and Literature, Romanian Language and Literature, Sociology and Theology. After a break of half a century, on 30 September 2008, it became a reality for Hungarians of Transylvania to have an independent Hungarian tertiary institution, recognized by the state: the Christian University of the Partium. – B: 2036, 2078, T: 7456.→Partium; Sapientia University.

Pázmány Péter Catholic University (Pázmány Péter Katolikus Egyetem, Budapest) – Founded by the Conference of Catholic Bishops on 30 January 1992, by extending the Catholic Theological Academy, founded by Cardinal Péter Pázmány in 1635 at Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia). In 1993, the Parliament endorsed it and, in 1999 the Holy See bestowed its foundation charter. With it, the University is one of the 800 Catholic Universities worldwide, and one of the 52 universities with the Holy See's foundation charter. It has some 8,000 students and has the right to issue the baccalaureat, licenciate and scientific doctoral degrees. Features of the Catholic University are: Catholic ideals and reflection upon the growing richness of human knowledge in the light of the Catholic faith. It is enriched with research, faithfulness to the Christian message conveyed by the Church, education to the service of God's people and humanity in a way which leads to the transcendental goal. The University cooperates with other Catholic universities and educational institutes at home and abroad. The Theological Faculty on its Budapest Campus has four departments: Theology, Teaching of Religion, Canonist and Doctoral schools. Main research areas are: Dogmatics, Biblical Studies, Christian Philosophy, Moral Theology, Church History and Patristics. Faculty of Humanities is on the Piliscsaba-Klotildiget Campus. It offers a variety of ancient and modern languages and literatures, and deals with teacher training and continuous education. Main areas of research are: Philosophy, Medieval subjects, Modern History, Arts History, Christian Arts, Sociology and Slovakology. The Faculty of Law and Political Sciences is on the Budapest Campus. It provides basic, also postgraduate and law studies. Areas of research: Legal History, Jurisprudence, International Law, Law and Economic Ethics, and Civil and Environmental Laws. The Faculty of Informatics and Technology is on the Budapest Campus. It started in 2001-2002. The Canonist Postgradual Institution (Kánonjogi Posztgraduális Intézet) is on the Budapest Campus. It provides training for clergy as well as for laity with a Degree in Law. Since 1 January 2008, the Vitéz János Roman Catholic Teacher Training College (Vitéz János Római Katolikus Tanítóképző Főiskola – VJRKTF) of Esztergom has been operating as the Vitéz János Faculty (Vitéz János Kar) of the Péter Pázmány Catholic University. The University has a number of scientific journals and magazines, such as Folia Theologica; Teologia; Studia Theologica Budapestinensia; Studia Orientalia; Verbum, etc. The chairman of the Hungarian Catholic Bishops' Conference is ex officio the Grand Chancellor of the University, who is the Head of the University's Government, representing the Holy See. – B: 0963, 1031, T: 7103.→Pázmány, Péter.

Polytechnic of Budapest*→Budapest University of Technology and Economics.*

Sapienta University, Transylvania, Romania (Sapienta Egyetem, Erdély/Transylvania, Romania) – The reasons for founding a Hungarian Private University in Transylvania lie in the fact that university education in Hungarian was gradually and systematically suppressed by the Romanian nationalist Communist policy, and that the negotiations with state authorities in regard to a Hungarian University led nowhere in the 1990s. In order to provide university level education for students of the 2-million strong Hungarian ethnic minority in Transylvania, on 14 April, 2000, the leaders of the “historical Churches”, i.e., the Catholic, Reformed, Evangelical-Lutheran and Unitarian Churches, expressed their intention to establish the Sapientia Endowment Fund for founding the Transylvanian Hungarian University (Erdélyi Magyar Tudomány Egyetem, EMTE). To this end, the Hungarian Government granted 2 billion Hungarian forints (HUF). Soon, the University was set up and was named “Sapientia University” with the late Sándor Tonk as its rector, and was inaugurated in October 2000. Its central administration is located at Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca); its faculties’ locations are: Nagyvárad (now Oradea) initially with the István Sulyok Reformed College, which developed into the Partium Christian University; Marosvásárhely (now Targu-Mures), with Hungarian schools, and Csíkszereda (now Miercurea Ciuc) in Szeklerland in three former hotels bought and transformed for educational purposes. The Faculty of Arts, the Law School, Business School, Communications School and the Central Library are at Kolozsvár. At Marosvásárhely, the Faculty of Sociology, Faculty of Technical Sciences, Informatics, Automation, Mathematics, and Music Teacher Training School are located. In Nagyvárad, besides the Faculty of Arts, there is the Teacher’s College. In Csíkszereda, there is the Faculty of Agricultural Sciences, Faculty of Food Sciences, etc. The University has a development plan, and the projected number of students was 5,500 in 2005. The University’s links with other universities are expanding. – B: 0984, T: 7103.→Partium Christian University.

Selye János University (Univerzita J. Selyeho) – The first independent Hungarian-language University in the outskirts of Komárom (Révkomárom, now Komarno) on the left (northern) banks of the Danube, now in Slovakia. It began functioning in September 2004. Its center is in the Officer’s Pavilion of the English (Angol) Park, near the Klapka Plaza. It consists of three faculties: the Theological, Economic, and the Educational Faculty for teacher training. The Reformed Theological Faculty was formed by the integration of the Calvin Theological Academy, founded in 1994, while the Faculty of Economics was originally a transferred faculty of the Corvinus University, Budapest. The need for the establishment of a Hungarian-language University already became clear in 1990. Members of Parliament, Miklós Duray (Nicholas), Zoltán Sidó and Gyula (Julius) Popély proposed it, but the Czechoslovak Parliament rejected it. The proposal of Edit Bauer in 1992, to establish a Hungarian Faculty within the Teachers’ College of Nyitra (Nitra) was also rejected by the Slovak Parliament. In 2001, the Slovak Government decided on the establishment of a Hungarian Faculty in the Konstantin University of Nyitra, but this failed because of the resistance of its staff. In the same year, lectures on Economics began in Komárom as a transferred faculty of the Corvinus University of Budapest. After the 2002 parliamentary elections, under pressure from the Hungarian Coalition Party, the Dzurinda Government agreed to the establishment of an independent Hungarian University. The celebration for the founding of the University took place in the Ceremonial Hall of the Officer’s Pavilion in the presence of the Hungarian and Slovak ministers of education on 17 January 2004. The first Vice Chancellor was Sándor (Alexander) Albert. Lectures started with 601 students in September 2004. The University became richer with the addition of a new building near Újvár. – B: 1031, T: 7456.→Sapientia University; Partium Christian University.

Semmelweis University of Medicine (Semmelweis Orvostudományi Egyetem, Budapest – SOTE) – The completion of the University of Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia) with a Medical Faculty took place late in the 18th century. It was the result of Empress and Queen Maria Theresa's Decree of 7 November 1769. A separate building was erected for the new Faculty, and was completed by May of 1772. Instruction started in 1770, at first with five institutes. Later, the University was moved to Buda.

The Civil Code of April 1848 included a separate article (1848: XIX) concerning the University. This declared the independence of the University and the principle of liberal freedom of education. After the Compromise with Austria in 1867, the Hungarian language was reestablished in its rights with the 44th Article of 1868. A large-scale construction started in the 1870s. As a result, the "Budapest Medical School" was established. It was here that the conscious prevention of operative infections was introduced, under the influence of Ignác (Ignatius) Semmelweis. In the 1860s, there were between 400 and 600 students, by the 1880s over 1,000. During World War I, most of the students and teachers were called up for military service and the number of beds in clinics was hastily increased to 2,000. In 1918 and 1919 there was some confusion, because of the developing revolutions. Personal changes and political screenings were instituted. Professors were dismissed, among others György (George) Hevesy, one of the founders of nuclear medicine, who became a Nobel-Prize winner abroad. The excessive number of students, as well as experience gained from revolutions, led to the Act of 1920: XXV, the notorious "Numerus Clausus Act" that restricted the conditions of admission on the entry of Jewish students. A ministerial order of 1924 opened the institutions for women. After World War I, the dismemberment of Hungary by the Versailles-Trianon Peace dictate on 4 June 1920 put the University in a difficult financial situation. The depression of 1929 resulted in increased unemployment even among the doctors. In 1922, a reform of medical training was introduced. The duration of studies was increased from 5 to 6 years. Up to 1944, World War II had not had much effect on the life of the Medical Faculty, apart from the care of the wounded and the military service of the teachers. As the front line drew nearer, the evacuation of the University commenced. The clinics were relocated to Visegrád, to Fót, and to villas in Buda, and moving the Faculty to Germany began, but was only partially accomplished. The damages to the buildings were enormous: 4 clinics were hit and most of the equipment was destroyed. The renovation was more or less completed only in 1949. After the war, political screening committees began their work, and this led to personal changes in the teaching staff again. After the Communists' takeover, the family background of the candidates became of primary importance. In 1948, a new educational reform was again introduced. Around this time, several hospitals were combined with the University and transformed into clinics. At the same time, specialization took place within the branches of medical sciences. On 17 September 1950, the University adopted the name of Loránd Eötvös to replace that of Péter Pázmány. In 1951, the Medical Faculties of the University were transformed into an independent Medical University. On 7 November 1969, in the year of the bicentenary of the Faculty of Medicine, the University took the name of Ignác Semmelweis. Medical research takes place mainly at the University. About 150 projects are in progress, partly with international cooperation. Among the Hungarian universities, SOTE produces the greatest number of publications, the percentage amounts to 40. The University is connected to 21 foreign (German, Austrian, Swedish, Swiss, French, Scottish, American, Italian, Dutch and Lithuanian) universities or other types of higher-level educational institutions.

Between 1970 and 2000, some significant developments took place. The Clinic of Dermatology, ruined in 1956, was rebuilt; in 1978, the high-rise block of Theoretical Subjects (NET) and the Clinic of Transplantation were finished. More than 3,100 clinical beds were included for medical treatment and education. Since the 1970s, increasing numbers of foreign students have been attending the University. Out of 4,000, every third student is from a foreign country. Since 1983, teachers have been giving instruction also in German, and since 1989, in English as well. With its 240,000 volumes, the Central Library of the University is the largest and best medical-biological collection in Hungary. Following the change of regime, a new constitution of the University was adopted. – B&T: 0971.→Semmelweis, Ignác

Széchenyi István University of Győr (Széchenyi István Egyetem, Győr) – Its foundation date was 1 January 2002. In its earlier form, it was the Jesuit Academy, which had operated since the 18th century, offering instruction in Theology, Philosophy and Law. During the period between 1776 and 1892, it operated as the Royal Academy of Győr. In 1963, it was under consideration for the establishment of a Builders' Technical and Architectural University. However, in 1968, what was already established became a College of Transportation and Telecommunication, which was built at Révfülszék (a northern suburb of Győr) in 1974. The town of Győr has been preparing to have its own University for 200 years. The College assumed the title after the name of the “greatest Hungarian”, Count István (Stephen) Széchenyi, in 1986. From the early 1990s, besides the engineering subjects, instruction and training in the field of economics and hygiene were also introduced. In 1995, because of the program transfer from the University of Budapest, the Law School also returned to Győr and, in 2002, it became the Faculty of Law of the Széchenyi University of Győr. It also received the extension of the Diploma of Education Institute of the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music of Budapest, integrated with the University of Győr. So, by the turn of the millennium, the University of Győr became an unusually multi-faceted teaching-institution, with a large number of students and a high scientific quality of its teaching staff. It deservedly received the rank of university on 1 January 2002. The Universitas-Győr Foundation played a determining role in its attaining this success. The University adheres to the national schooling program. The instruction in the University is presented in three faculties and two educational institutes. These are the Ferenc Deák Faculty of Political Science and Jurisprudence, the Gyula Kautz Faculty of Economics, and the Technical Science Faculty, comprising the Gábor Baross Building, the Traffic Institute, and the Ányos Jedlik Institute of Mechanical, Informational and Electrical Engineering; in addition, there is the Lajos Petz Institute of Public Health and Welfare, and the Tibor Varga Institute of Music. While in 1995 the University had only 1800 students, by 2007 the student numbers had increased to 6000. – B: 1031, 2041, T: 7456.→Széchenyi, Count István; Deák, Ferenc.

Szent István University (Szent István Egyetem – SZIE, Gödöllő) – Established by the Act LII. 1999 by the Hungarian Parliament, and started its mission on 1 January 2000, integrating several smaller institutions of high tradition and reputation, which were formerly independent universities and colleges. As a result, the Szent István Egyetem (St Stephen University) has now become the largest Hungarian University.

The University headquarters are located in Gödöllő. The University is a multi-campus institution. It has 10 different faculties in six different places in the central region of Hungary. It also includes several field stations for practical training and research. The BSc and MSc level of tertiary education is at the School of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences, Gödöllő; the School of Economics and Social Sciences, Gödöllő; the School of Food Technology, Budapest; the School of Horticulture, Budapest; the School of Landscaping, Environmental Preservation and Development, Budapest; the School of Veterinary Medicine, Budapest; Ybl College of Architecture, Budapest; the College of Architecture and Economics, Gyöngyös and the College of Teacher Training in Jászberény. Courses are offered in Hungarian, English, German, Russian and some in French. Tuition depends on the field of interest. The University offers 37 courses at the undergraduate level. Ph.D. courses are offered in different fields. The University has over 30,000 students including those on long-distance learning. The number of teachers is about 1,100. The number of foreign students is 800, from the USA, Germany, Scandinavian and the neighboring countries. The University has a wide range of international cooperation with more than 100 institutions from 52 countries all over the world. Main patrons of the University are the Soros Foundation, the Mellon Foundation and the American, French and German Embassies in Budapest. Szent István University is a member of many international organizations, such as CRE, ACRU, ICA, AIESEC, IAAS, etc. – B&T: 0957.

University of Applied Arts (Magyar Iparművészeti Egyetem, Budapest) – Its predecessor was the Royal Hungarian School of Applied Arts (Magyar Királyi Iparművészeti Iskola), founded in 1880. Gusztáv (Gustavus) Keleti was its founder and first director. The school offered training in furniture design, interior design, building sculpture, ornament-painting, ceramics, smithery, textile and graphic design. Between the two world wars, Director György (George) Dénes put his stamp on the Institution. He designed the noted pavilions for the World Exhibition in Toronto (1911), in Barcelona (1929), in Brussels (1935), and in Paris (1937). After World War II, the Institution was reorganized and it received the name Hungarian Academy of Applied Arts (Magyar Iparművészeti Akadémia) in 1949. The first Industrial-form Design Department in Europe was founded here in 1951, under the leadership of Farkas A. Dózsa. In 1991, the Academy received University status and achieved significant results in design-theory and research fields. In the 1990s, an institute development plan was realized and the Institute moved out of its Henger street location. Training takes place in nine faculties: Basic Training; Architecture; Form-Design; Silicate Design; Textile Design; Visual Communication; Manager Training; Theory and Teacher Training. There is a continuous education program as well. Among the titular professors of the Academy were such renowned artists as Amerigo Tot, sculptor, former student, Italy; Pierre Vágó, architect, France; Victor Vasarely, painter, France; György Kepes painter, USA. The Academy participates in bilateral contacts with other foreign institutes, and in programs such as the “Socrates/Erasmus”, the “UIAH” and the “CEEPUS” to mention a few. The Institute has its own library, gallery and publications. – B: 0980, T: 7103.→Tot, Amerigo; Vágó, Péter; Vasarely, Victor; Kepes, György.

University of Budapest→Eötvös Loránd University of Science.

University of Debrecen (Kossuth Lajos Tudomány Egyetem, Debreceni Egyetem, formerly known as the Gróf [Count] Tisza István Tudomány Egyetem) –

The beginnings of higher education in Debrecen go back to the Medieval period; the Reformed/Calvinist High School and College was founded in 1538. During the first half of the 20th century, the various faculties were parts of one University complex up to the end of World War II. After that, the complex University was split into separate universities. The political changes of the early 1990s brought about a structural change in higher education. The reunification of the separated Universities into a larger University structure in Debrecen has commenced. The Universitas Association (Association of Debrecen Universities) was founded in 1991 with the following member institutions: the Debrecen University of Agriculture (Debreceni Agrártudományi Egyetem – DATE); the University Medical School of Debrecen (Debreceni Orvostudományi Egyetem – DOTE); the Debrecen Academy of Reformed Theology (Debreceni Református Hittudományi Egyetem – DRHE); Kossuth Lajos University (Kossuth Lajos Tudomány Egyetem – KLTE) and the Institute of Nuclear Research of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (Atommag Kutató Intézet – ATOMKI). In 1991, the Debrecen Universitas Union (Debreceni Universitas Egyesület – DUE) was officially formed; this brought along a dynamic development in cooperative research and education among the institutions. Economic and business training were launched. Law training was reestablished on a faculty level. Training in Pharmacy and Molecular Biology was launched. The Management Center for Higher Education was formed with international cooperation under the auspices of DUE. The group of participant institutions was expanded at the end of 1997 with the addition of the Ferenc Kölcsey Reformed Teacher Training College (Kölcsey Ferenc Református Tanítóképző Főiskola – KFRTF); thus the founding members consist of all the six institutions of higher education of Debrecen, as well as ATOMKI, as an associated member. The member institutions of DESZ, further admitted the Debrecen Conservatory of the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music. By 1 January 2000, the University of Debrecen was formed, with 20,000 students. The Colleges and Universities of County Hajdú-Bihar have been integrated and, as a result, the University of Debrecen started out with five university- and three college-level faculties. The faculties of the legal predecessors – the three large Universities of Debrecen – that entered this union are: the Faculty of Agriculture (DATE), the Faculty of Medicine (DOTE), the Faculty of Science, and the Faculty of Arts (both the latter KLTE). Additional units that entered this monumental organization, not belonging to any faculty by 1 January 2000, are: Faculty of Economics (KLTE), the István Wargha Teacher Training College in Hajdúböszörmény, the College of Health in Nyíregyháza, and the Faculty of Engineering (KLTE). There are other research institutes at Karcag and Nyíregyháza, the Institute of Agro-economics and Rural Development in Debrecen, and the Institute of Agricultural Research and Development. Other departments, like the Department of Dentistry, the Department of Pharmacology and the Department of Law are planning to become faculties in the near future. The School for Public Health has been pioneering in preventive healthcare. Based on their predecessors, Agricultural, Medical and Health Centers have been formed. ATOMKI, and the institutes maintained by the Church (the Debrecen University of Reformed Theology and KFRTF) are affiliated institutions of Debrecen University. – B&T: 0974.

University of Economic Sciences and Public Administration, Budapest – BUESPA (Budapesti Közgazdaságtudományi és Államigazgatási Egyetem) – Founded as a separate, independent institution in 1948, and in 2000, it has been integrated with the College of Public Administration. It has four faculties: Faculty of Business Administration, Faculty of Economics, Faculty of Social Sciences and the College Faculty of Economics. It has more than 100 agreements with partner universities worldwide. It has been a member of the Community of European Management Schools (CEMS) since 1966 and, since 2001 the Program in International Management (PIM). Courses are offered in Hungarian, English, French and German by Hungarian and by native teachers. It also participates in the Central European Exchange Program for University Studies, the CEEPUS, with Austria, Bulgaria, Croatia, the Czech Republic, Poland, Romania, Slovakia and Slovenia.

The University has bilateral agreements with Universities in the United States, Canada, Latin America, Europe, South Africa, New Zealand, Australia and Asia. Such agreements offer student exchange possibilities, whereby students may spend one or two semesters at partner institutions. In the academic year of 2002 and 2001, the University had 5,891 full-time and 5,386 part-time students with an academic staff of 604, and an administrative staff of 438. There are about 250 non-Hungarian degree-seeking students from more than 20 countries, and exchange students from 40 universities, on the basis of bilateral agreements. The publication of the University is entitled Society and Economy. Professors of the University participate in publishing special issues on Managing Business in Hungary 1999, Back to Market Economy 2000, and The Small Transformation 2001. – B: 1013, T: 7643.

University of Fine Arts (Magyar Képzőművészeti Egyetem, Budapest) – There were unsuccessful attempts to organize the higher education of Fine Arts in Hungary from the middle of the 17th century. There were only some short-lived private schools of the arts. Those who wanted to be educated in Fine Arts went to Vienna, Munich or Paris. The origin of an Academy goes back to Pest of the 1870s, where the intertwined history of the Hungarian National Fine Arts Association (Országos Magyar Képzőművészeti Társulat), founded in 1861, and the Royal Hungarian National Drawing School and Art Teacher Training School (Országos Magyar Királyi Mintarajztanoda és Rajztanárképző) helped the formation of the Hungarian Academy of Fine Arts in Pest, which was founded in 1871. The central building was erected in 1876 on an elegant avenue (now Andrásy Boulevard) in Pest. The Academy's other main site is Epreskert (Mulberry Garden). It consists of five buildings, each containing studios. It was founded as a master painter school in 1882, and has been an integral part of the Academy since 1921. The Academy was promoted to University status in 1992. It offers five-year courses, leading to the award of Master of Arts University Degree in painting, sculpture, graphics, graphic design, stage and costume design, and restoration. The Academy also offers special courses and a doctoral program as well. It has studios, exhibition places, a library and an artist's colony in Tihany, and the Feszty House in Budapest. Within the Socrates/Erasmus program, the Academy has links with other art schools in Holland, Italy, England, Finland, Germany, Spain and Greece. – B&T: 0979.

University of Kaposvár (Kaposvári Egyetem, Kaposvár) – It was founded on 1 January 2000 by the Hungarian Parliament. The new University has a development program. It has the Faculty of Animal Science (Állattudományi Kar). Its main research and education fields are animal husbandry and related subjects: animal physiology, genetics, feeding, informatics, environmental issues, etc. It provides training for agrarian engineers, agronomists, agrarian engineer-teachers, husbandry engineers, to mention a few. It also offers a doctoral program. The Pedagogical Academy of Csokonai Vitéz Mihály (Csokonai Vitéz Mihály Pedagógiai Főiskolai Kar), the Teacher Training School in Kaposvár was founded in 1950. The Academy is now a part of the University. The Technical Chemistry Research Institute (Műszaki Kémiai Kutatóintézet, Veszprém) is also a part of the University. Its main task is research and creating new methods. The Fodder-Production Research Institute (Takarmánytermesztési Intézet, Iregszemcse) has the task of improving various fodder plants, education and developing contacts with similar institutes abroad. – B: 0967, T: 7103.

University of Keszthely (Pannon Egyetem. Georgikon Mezőgazdaságtudományi Kar; University of Pannonia, Georgikon Faculty of Agriculture). Georgikon, the first regular agricultural higher educational institution on the continent of Europe, was founded by Count György (George) Festetics of Tolna in 1797, and soon became the promoter of the capitalization process of the feudal estate system, and the supporter of scientific progress during the period of the Enlightenment and Reform Age in Hungary. After the Hungarian War of Independence in 1848-1849, the University resumed education in 1865 under the name of Higher College of National Husbandry and Forestry (Országos Gazdászati és Erdészeti Felsőbb Tanintézet). In 1869, the name of the Institution was changed to National Husbandry School, and changed yet again in 1869 to assume the name of Royal Hungarian High College of Agriculture (Magyar Királyi Mezőgazdasági Főiskola) Due to political reasons, from 1949, education was interrupted again in Keszthely for 5 years, and was resumed only in 1954 under the title of Agricultural Academy of Keszthely. In 1962, the Institution was reorganized as the College of Agriculture, and in 1970 as the University of Agriculture, with two faculties: one at Keszthely and one at Mosonmagyaróvár. Since 1989, the 200-year-old Institute as the Georgikon Faculty of Agriculture of the Pannon University of Agricultural Sciences, has been providing education, research, extension and other scientific activities. – B: 2035, T: 7103.

University of Kolozsvár (Kolozsvári Egyetem; Babes-Bolyai University, Kolozsvár now Cluj-Napoca, Transylvania-Erdély, Romania). It was originally Ferenc József University, later Bolyai University and, since 1949, when the Romanians nationalized this Hungarian University, it has been known as Babes-Bolyai University. – Transylvania became a part of Hungary in the 10th century, and was ceded to Romania by the Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate in 1920. The beginnings of higher education in Transylvania go back to the 16th century. Reigning Prince János Zsigmond (John Sigismund, 1541-1571) had already considered the foundation of an Academy. Reigning Prince and Polish King István (Stephen) Báthory (1571-1583), with the help of the Jesuits, founded the first University at Kolozsvár in 1581. It had three colleges: Theology, Philosophy and Law, and had the right to issue baccalaureate, doctoral and magister degrees. In 1583, two more colleges were erected. The University existed until 1603. Reigning Prince Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen (1613-1629), founded the Collegium Academicum in Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia) in 1622. This ceased to exist in the second half of the 17th century because of the Turkish-Tatar invasion, but resumed its operation in Nagyenyed (now Aiud) later on. Only in 1698 was a new University founded in Kolozsvár, run by the Jesuit Order, with the name of Academia Societatis Jesu Claudiopolitana. It had three faculties: Theology, Law and Philosophy. In 1776, the Jesuit College changed hands and came under the control of Piarist monks, with the addition of a Faculty of Medicine. The number of students grew considerably from 50 in 1703, to 493 in 1771. During the 19th century, a Surgery School and a Law School functioned in Kolozsvár, continuing the tradition of the former Collegium Theresianum, founded in 1777. In 1867, three Theological Institutes functioned at Kolozsvár: Catholic, Reformed and Unitarian. On 12 October 1872, the Hungarian University of Kolozsvár was opened under the name of Royal Hungarian Ferencz József I. University (Magyar Királyi I. Ferencz József Tudományegyetem). The University was founded by the Hungarian Parliament by Acts XIX and XX, 1872. At this time, the University had 42 teaching staff and 285 students. After the end of World War I, radical changes occurred in the life of the University. The armistice took place on 11 November 1918. On 1 December 1918, an ad hoc Transylvanian Romanian “National Assembly” at Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia), without the presence of the Hungarian, Szekler and Saxon partner nationalities, unilaterally declared the union of Transylvania with Romania. Following this declaration, the Romanian Army occupied Transylvania. On 21 May 1919, the University of Kolozsvár was taken over by new provisional Romanian academic authorities and, on 1 February 1920, the new Romanian University was inaugurated, although the Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate ceded Transylvania to Romania only on June 4, 1920 – more than a year later. As a result, the Hungarian University of Kolozsvár had to move to Szeged, Hungary. When the Second Vienna Award of 1940 returned Northern Transylvania to Hungary, the exiled Hungarian University returned from Szeged to Kolozsvár and the Romanian University moved from Kolozsvár to Nagyszeben (now Sibiu) and Temesvár (now Timisoara). However, the Romanian University returned to Kolozsvár again in 1945 under the name of Victor Babes University. In the same year a Hungarian University was established in Kolozsvár under the name of János (John) Bolyai. In 1949, the two universities merged under the name of Babes-Bolyai University (Babes-Bólyai Tudományegyetem; Universitatea Babeş-Bolyai), and provided teaching both in Romanian and Hungarian. Later on the teaching in Hungarian was gradually suppressed after 1959. Today, it is almost a fully-fledged Romanian University. – B: 0983, T: 7103.→János II, King; Báthory, Prince István; Bethlen, Prince Gábor; Bolyai, János.

University of Miskolc (Miskolci Egyetem) – In 1949, Act XXIII of the Hungarian Parliament decreed: “For the advancement of higher educational technical training, a Technical University for Heavy Industry (Nehézipari Műszaki Egyetem) is to be established in Miskolc. The University will contain faculties of Mining, Metallurgical and Mechanical Engineering” (Bánya, Kohómérnöki és Gépészmérnöki Kar). The University has a history of 250 years. The predecessors of two faculties were operating in Selmezbánya (now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia) until 1919 and then, until 1949, at Sopron. Between 1949 and 1959, the Departments of the Faculty of Metallurgical Engineering and the Faculty of Mining Engineering gradually moved to Miskolc. In 1735, the Court Chamber of Vienna had founded a School of Mining and Metallurgy in order to train specialists according to the requirements of the industrial revolution, and to upgrade precious metal and copper mining in Hungary. The school at Selmezbánya was the first school founded by Austria. Between 1762 and 1770, with the establishment of three departments, the organization of the three-year Academy of Mining and Metallurgy took shape. The first International Technical Association (Societät der Bergbaukunde) in the world was established in 1786 at Szklenó, near Selmezbánya, under the direction of professors from Selmezbánya. This Association had some 154 members from 13 European countries, as well as from Mexico and Bogota, and included such famous scientists as Antoine Lavoisier, Johann Wolfgang von Goethe and James Watt. In the first part of the 19th century, the Academy had some 500 students. In 1808, the Forestry School was linked to the Academy. In 1848 and 1849, the students from Hungary joined the War of Independence, while the other students left Selmezbánya. Owing to the unstable situation and the Austrian autocracy, teaching was delayed until 1850. Many of the professors and the students died during the Revolution and the War of Independence from Austrian rule, or were sent to prison, or were simply dismissed. In 1867, with the Austro-Hungarian Compromise, the Academy became a Hungarian state institution, named Hungarian Royal Academy of Mining and Forestry (Magyar Királyi Bányászati és Erdészeti Akadémia). The Hungarian language was gradually introduced into teaching between 1868 and 1872. By 1872, the structure and training of the Academy had been re-established. At the turn of the 19th century, the Academy was upgraded with new buildings and up-to-date laboratories. From 1904 it was operating as a College of Mining and Forestry. In the 1913-1914 academic years, the College had 20 well-equipped departments and 580 students. The training was free. World War I shattered hopes for the development of the College. Four-fifths of the students had to go to the front line; more than 50 of them died at several battlefields in Europe, and many more were seriously injured or became POWs.

In 1919, when Selmezbánya became part of the newly created Czechoslovakia, the College moved to Sopron in Western Hungary. The name of the Alma Mater from 1922 was The College of Mining and Forest Engineering (Bányászati és Erdészeti Főiskola). Teaching was under-way in Mining Engineering, Non-ferrous Metallurgical Engineering, Ferrous Metallurgical Engineering and Forestry Engineering. The Departments of Mining and Metallurgy operated in this organization until 1949, when they became the Faculty of Mining Engineering (Bányamérnöki Kar) and the Faculty of Metallurgical Engineering (Kohómérnöki Kar) of the Technical University for Heavy Industry (Nehézipari Műszaki Egyetem). In 1952, the departments of the metallurgical faculty moved to Miskolc. Until 1959, the mining engineering training was divided between Miskolc and Sopron in such a way that the first two years were taught in Miskolc, while the higher years were taught in Sopron. This was the case until 1959, when the Departments of Mining moved to Miskolc. At present, a University for Forestry and Timber Industry (Erdészeti és Faipari Szakiskola) was created at Sopron, and in 1953, 236 metallurgical and mechanical engineers received their degrees. At the same time, in Sopron, 59 degrees for mining engineering were awarded. After the crushed Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1956, almost all the personnel of Sopron University, with professors and students as one body, escaped to the West, and settled in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada, where they continued their studies in Hungarian and graduated. In 1959, the departments of the Mining Faculty moved from Sopron to Miskolc. At that time the three faculties of the University had 28 departments. The early 1960s saw the start of a drive toward an improvement and expansion of the University facilities. In 1969, the scope of the University increased with the creation of the College for Metallurgy (Kohóipari Főiskola) in Dunaújváros, and in 1970, with the College for Chemical Industry and Automation (Vegyipari és Automatizálási Főiskola).

In 1981 the training of lawyers was started and, in 1983, this became the Faculty of Law. The training of economists, which has been going on since 1987, was transformed into an independent faculty in 1990. The University received the name of Miskolc University in the same year. The Institute of Arts was established in 1993. With the establishment of the new faculties, the aim of the University of Miskolc was to broaden the scope of training to as many fields as possible by providing students with various new courses. The other main goals of the University are to continue its research with international reputation and prepare students for the requirements and needs of a new era with high academic standards, as well as to catch up with Europe and the latest scientific achievements of the world. The University has links with some 58 universities worldwide. Among other programs, the Center for European Studies, 1998, is prominent. – B&T: 0975. → University of Western Hungary.

University of Pannonia (University of Veszprém until 1 March 2006, Pannon Egyetem, formerly known as Veszprémi Egyetem) – Veszprém is one of the oldest towns in Hungary. In the 13th century it already had an Academy where the “seven free arts”, the Philosophy, Grammar, Rhetoric, Dialectic, Arithmetic, Geometry and Astronomy, already were taught. The University of Pannonia was founded in 1949, and worked as a regional faculty of the Technical University (Műszaki Egyetem) of Budapest. In 1951 it became independent under the name of University of Chemical Engineering (Vegyipari Egyetem) of Veszprém. Since 1991, the University has been called the University of Veszprém. The University first offered courses in four areas of Chemical Technology: Oil- and Coal Technology, Electrochemical Industry, Inorganic Chemical Technology and Silicate Chemistry; then, from the middle of the 1960s, an additional two courses: Nuclear Chemistry and Technology, Process Control and System Engineering became part of the Chemical Engineering Education in Veszprém. In 1970, new courses were introduced: Agrochemistry in 1970, Chemical Engineering Management in 1973, Higher Level Foreign Language Teaching in 1983, and Instrumentation and Measurement Techniques in 1984. The restructuring process in the following years resulted in additional courses in Information Technology and an Automation course being created. The University introduced Teacher Training courses for teachers of English, and then for teachers of German and French, and the education of philologists in different specialties. In the meantime, the education of Catholic Theologians began at the Theology College, and the Faculty of Teacher Training (Pedagógia, Pápa), now Faculty of Arts (Művészeti Kar), and the Faculty of Engineering (Mérnöki Kar) were established. The center of scientific and cultural life, the University of Veszprém, together with the 200-year-old Georgikon Faculty of Agriculture in Keszthely, turned into a 3-faculty University on 1 January 2000. On 1 September 2003, two new faculties were created: the Faculty of Economics (Gazdaságtudományi Kar) and the Faculty of Information Technology (Műszaki Informatikai Kar). The University hosts several conferences. The leaders of the institution strive to turn the University into the educational, intellectual, and research center of the Transdanubian (Dunántúl) Region of Hungary. – B: 1031, T: 7103.

University of Pécs (Janus Pannonius University; Pécsi Egyetem, Pécs) – The history of Hungarian higher education began in 1367, when King Lajos I (Louis the Great, 1342-1382) established the first university of the country in Pécs. How long it existed is not known; but historical findings suggest that by the 15th century its place had been taken by two separate Colleges, one for Divinity and one for Law. In 1785, Emperor Joseph II (1780-1790) transferred the Royal Academy from Győr to Pécs, where it operated until 1802, when it moved back to its original location. In 1833, Bishop Ignác Szepessy, in co-operation with the Town Council, established the Academy of Pécs with two faculties: Law and Arts. On 15 June 1921, an Act of the Hungarian Parliament transferred the Erzsébet (Elizabeth) University of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) to Pécs. In the period between 1923 and World War II, the University proved to be a dynamic and outstanding spiritual workshop, offering courses in the Humanities, Law, Medicine and Theology. The Institute of Minorities and the Institute of Hungarian Sociography at the Faculty of Law, together with the excellent researchers and teachers, made the University well-known all over Europe. In 1941, the Faculty of Arts was transferred to Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). After 1951, when the Medical School became an independent institution, the University subsisted with only the Faculty of Law. The Faculty of Economics, which had been opened here as the Pécs Branch of Karl Marx University of Economics in 1970, was established in 1975. The Teacher's College of Pécs merged with the University in 1982 and, in the same year, the University assumed the name of Janus Pannonius. In 1992, the Teachers' Training Faculty was divided into a Faculty of Humanities and a Faculty of Sciences, increasing the number of faculties to four. The fifth faculty was added in 1995, when the Pollack Mihály Technical College (Pollák Mihály Műszaki Szakközépiskola, Szakiskola és Kollégium) was integrated into the University. The Faculty of Fine and Performing Arts was established in 1996. The integration process was completed in January 2000 with the merger of Janus Pannonius University, the University Medical School and the Illyés Gyula College of Education, leading to the establishment of the present University of Pécs. The number of students is 25,000 with a 5,000-strong teaching staff. – B&T: 0970.→Janus Pannonius.

University of Science of Szeged (József Attila Tudomány Egyetem; Szegedi Tudományegyetem – SZTE, Szeged) – Its beginning goes back to the Versailles Trianon Peace Dictate, 4 June 1920, which divided up the Historic Kingdom of Hungary, and ceded Transylvania (Erdély) to Romania. Since it was impossible to run a Hungarian University in Romania, the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca) moved to Szeged in 1921. Between 1924 and 1930, new buildings were erected; despite the difficult circumstances, the University achieved a good reputation. It was here that Albert Szent-Györgyi received the Nobel Prize for his researches with regard to vitamin C. When, in 1940, Northern Transylvania was returned to Hungary, the I. Ferenc József University – actually its Law School – moved back to Kolozsvár. In Szeged, a new University was founded and received the name of Regent Miklós Horthy (Horthy Miklós Tudományegyetem). During World War II, when the Eastern front moved through Szeged, activities resumed in the University in October of 1944. In 1962, the University assumed the name of Attila József, the late Hungarian poet (József Attila Tudományegyetem – JATE). From 1937 to 1945, there were three faculties with 36 departments. This number increased to 72 during 1993-1994. The number of students was 744 between 1937 and 1945 and, between 1993 and 1994, it was 5500 with 627 teaching staff. The last decades have witnessed the expansion of the University in respect to new faculties and new buildings. In 1999, the Hungarian Parliament accepted the law of the integration of universities. As a result, the Scientific University of Szeged (Szegedi Tudományegyetem) was created in 2000. Under its aegis belong not only the faculties of the former József Attila University, but also new ones, such as the Medical University of Szeged. The University has 11 faculties and colleges. These are: the College of Agriculture, College Faculty of Food Engineering, Faculty of Arts, Faculty of Economics and Business Administration, Faculty of Health Sciences, Faculty of Law, Faculty of Medicine, Faculty of Pharmacy, Faculty of Science, Juhász Gyula Teacher Training College and the Conservatory of Music. The University has growing contacts with universities abroad and an intensive publishing activity as well. – B: 0972, T: 7103.→University of Kolozsvár; Szent-Györgyi, Albert; József, Attila; Juhász, Gyula.

University of Western Hungary (Nyugat-magyarországi Egyetem – NyME, Sopron) – Its origin can be traced to the Academy of Selmecebánya (now Banské Štiavnica, Slovakia), founded in 1735 by King Károly III (Charles). Its mandate was the training of mining-engineers. In 1762, Empress and Queen Mária Terézia (Maria Theresa) created three departments, and in 1770, she elevated the institution to Academy. In 1807, the Forestry Institute (Erdészeti Tanintézet) was established. In 1846 it became a Mining and Forestry Academy (Bányászati és Erdészeti Akadémia). In 1918 the Czech army occupied Selmecebánya and the Academy moved first to Budapest, and then, in 1919, to Sopron. In 1921 the students of the Academy helped to expel the Austrian gendarmerie from Sopron and, thereafter, a plebiscite decided the fate of Sopron. It remained in Hungary. In 1949 the Faculties of Mining Engineering and Metallurgical Engineering (Bányamérnöki és Kohómérnöki Karok) were transferred to Miskolc, where they became part of the University of Miskolc. After the fall of the 1956 Revolution, the professors and the students en bloc emigrated to Canada, where they settled in Vancouver BC and, within the University of Vancouver, they formed the Sopron Division and continued their higher studies in Hungarian and obtained diplomas in Forestry Engineering. In 1962, the University of the Forestry and Timber Industry (Erdészeti és Faipari Egyetem) was founded in Sopron. In 1999, the Hungarian Parliament Act LII created the University of Western Hungary, to be opened by 1 January 2000. The University encompasses a number of academies. Faculties of the University are: Benedek Elek Pedagogy Academy (Benedek Elek Pedagógiai Főiskola); Faculty of Forestry Engineering (Erdőmérnöki Kar); Faculty of Timber-Industry Engineering (Faipari Mérnöki Kar); Faculty of Economics (Közgazdaságtudományi Kar); Apáczai Csere János Teacher Training Academy (Apáczai Csere János Tanítóképző Főiskolai Kar) of Győr; Academy of Geoinformatics (Geoinformatikai Kar) of Székesfehérvár, and Faculty of Agriculture and Food Sciences (Mezőgazdaság- és Élelmiszeretudományi Kar) of Mosonmagyaróvár. In 2008, three Academies of Szombathely joined the University of Western Hungary. The University has endowments, international links with foreign universities and its own library as well as faculty libraries. – B: 0981, 1031, T: 7103. → University of Miskolc.

Zrinyi Miklós National Defense University (Zrinyi Miklós Nemzetvédelmi Egyetem – ZMNE) – In the age of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, training of military officers took place in the School of Engineering in Vienna. In 1788, the Academy of Military Engineering was organized in Vienna. The first higher military academy in Hungary was founded in 1872, by Act XVI, under the name of Royal Hungarian Ludovika Military Academy (Magyar Királyi Honvéd Ludovika Akadémia), Budapest. In 1931, the II. Main Group of the Ludovika Academy was established (A Ludovika Akadémia II. Főcsoportja). In the beginning of the 1940s, this group was divided. One part became the Air Force Officers' Training School in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), named after Regent Miklós Horthy, after 1942 renamed to István Horthy Air Force Officers' Academy (Horthy István Honvéd-repülő Akadémia). Between 1940-1944, the Royal Hungarian Bolyai János Military Academy (Magyar Királyi Bolyai János Honvéd Akadémia) trained officers for the engineering corps of the army. Army officers' training was suspended for two years after World War II, and resumed only in 1947 in three academies: the Kossuth Military Academy (Honvéd Kossuth Akadémia) and the Military Commissary Academy (Honvéd Hadbiztos Akadémia). The Army Military Academy (Honvéd Hadi Akadémia) was for the training of officers for the General Staff. After 1949, additional military schools were established such as the Kossuth Lajos Artillery Engineering Officers' School (Kossuth Lajos Tüzér Technikus Tiszti Iskola) and the Signal Corps and Engineering Officers' School (Híradó és Műszaki Tiszti Iskola). However, in 1957, these two schools were merged under the name of United Officers' School (Egyesített Tiszti Iskola). Its successor was the Zalka Máté Military Engineering Academy (Zalka Máté Katonai Műszaki Főiskola) in 1967. Since 1990, its new name has been Bolyai János Military Engineering Academy (Bolyai János Katonai Műszaki Főiskola). On 1 January 2000, the Zrinyi Miklós National Defense University (Zrinyi Miklós Nemzetvédelmi Egyetem) was founded with three faculties: the Faculty of Military Science (Hadtudományi Kar) with 12 departments, the Faculty of Leadership and Organizational Science (Vezetés- és Szervezéstudományi Kar) with 12 departments and the Bolyai János Military Engineering Academy as a faculty (Bolyai János Katonai Műszaki Főiskolai Kar). The University has doctoral, language and scholarship programs; and a Central Library with some 450,000 volumes and 350 periodicals, and publishing activities. Since Hungary is now a NATO member, the importance and responsibility of the University have grown considerably. The University was amalgamated into the National Public Service University on 1 January 2012. – B: 0982, T: 7103. → Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy; Horthy, István; National Public Service University.

University Press – The original features of this Press were purchased by Miklós Telegdi, Monseigneur of Esztergom, from the Jesuits in Vienna in 1577. In 1604, this was combined with the Press of the Cardinal of Esztergom. From Esztergom, this Press was transferred to Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia) in 1655 to the Jesuit College and University. It was moved to Buda with the transfer of the University in 1777. Initially, this Press was involved with the production of textbooks and Catholic religious documents. Since the mid-19th century, it has produced a whole range of scientific material. At the beginning of the 20th century, it produced numerous bibliophile texts. It was moved to the Pest side of Budapest in 1925. It was united with the Forrás Press in 1950, and was separated from the University. – B: 1150, 1153, T: 7656.

Unwed Girl (Hajadon) – The verbatim meaning of the Hungarian expression means bareheaded. As long as anthropology can detect, the Hungarians distinguished the wed and the unwed females by costume. The unwed female walked without a head cover. When she married, she covered her head, and had the right from that moment on to wear the head cover. The unmarried female who became pregnant had only a kerchief for head cover. The origin of that custom reaches back far beyond the time of the Hungarian settlement in the Carpathian Basin in the 9th century. – B: 1020, T: 3233.

Upper Nobility (Higher Nobility) – The name of the privileged upper strata of the nobility, owners of huge estates in feudal Hungary. With their enormous wealth, they wielded great political influence. From their ranks came the highest dignitaries of the realm. Until 1848, by birthright, they were members of the Upper House of the General Assembly. After 1867, from their ranks came the majority of the members of the government. – B: 1231, T: 3233.

Urai, László (Ladislav) (Budapest, 1920 - Budapest, 5 April 1987) – Physician and angiologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1946, after which he was an associate at No.1 Clinic; from 1950 in No. 3 Clinic and, from 1960, in No. 4 Clinic of the Medical School of Budapest. From 1981 on, he was Professor of Angiology. He dealt mainly with angiology and illnesses of auto-immunity. He wrote some studies in journals in Hungary and abroad. He was member of the editorial board of several journals, and secretary of the Hungarian Angiological Society from 1966. He was also Head of the Editorial Board of the periodical, Peripheral Circulation from 1984 to 1986. He obtained his Medical Doctorate in 1975. His main work was: On Certain Visceral Connections of the Diffuse Scleroderma 'Progressive Systemic Sclerosis' (Masters Degree thesis, 1960; in Hungarian). He was awarded the Soltész Memorial Medal in 1985. – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Ural-Altaic Languages (yur'-ul-ahl-tay) – The numerous Ural-Altaic languages extend from Scandinavia, Hungary, and the Balkans in the west, to the easternmost reaches of the Amur and the Island of Sakhalin, and from the Arctic Ocean to central Asia. According to some investigators, Japanese and Korean should also be classed with the Altaic languages. Nowadays these two large language groups are considered sufficiently different in nature to be treated as two distinct and independent linguistic groups.

Linguistic Features – All the Ural-Altaic languages share some characteristics of syntax, morphology, and phonology, but not all characteristics. The languages use constructions of the type “the-by-me-hunted bear” rather than “the bear that I hunted,” and “a-singing I went” rather than “I sang as I went.” There are few if any conjunctions. Suffixation is the typical grammatical process – that is, meaningful elements are appended to stems, as in “house-my” – “my house”; “I went house-from” – “I went from the house”; “go-in-while” – “while (in the act of) going” and “house-(plural)-my-from” – “from my houses”. Many Ural-Altai languages require vowel harmony; the vowels that occur together in a given word must be of the same type. Stress generally falls on the first or last syllable; it does not move about, as in the English word-series family, familiar, familiarity. Typically, the Ural-Altai languages have no verb for “to have.” Possession is expressed by constructions, such as the Hungarian nekem van – “to-me there-is”. Most of these languages do not express gender, do not have agreement between parts of speech (as in French les bonnes filles – “the good girls”), and do not permit consonant clusters, such as pr-, spr-, -st, or -rst, at the beginning or end of words.

Family Status: according to the linguistic standards, languages that make up one family must show productive-predictive correspondences. The shape of a given word in one language should be predictable from the shape of the corresponding word, or cognate, in another language. Thus Hungarian -d at the end of stems, as in ad – “he/she gives,” is known to correspond to the Finnish consonant sequence – nt – in the interior of words, as in Finnish anta – “give”. All of the Uralic languages have been shown to be related – the vocabulary and grammar of each member language can be examined in the light of correspondences, such as that which are between Hungarian -d and Finnish -nt-. But Altaic is not a language family in the same sense that Uralic is, for laws of correspondence, such as those available for Uralic have yet to be discovered in Altaic. Altaic does have three branches, however – Turkic, Mongolian, and Manchu-Tungus, each of which forms a subfamily. Turkic and Mongolian on the one hand, and, to a lesser extent, Mongolian and Manchu-Tungus on the other, exhibit many striking resemblances. But the shared features may reflect only borrowing, and not a common origin.

Uralic Languages – The Uralic languages are traditionally divided into two major branches, Finno-Ugric and Samoyed. Finno-Ugric in turn contains two subgroups: Finnic and Ugric. The former is divided into the Baltic-Finnic, Volga-Finnic, and Permian languages; the latter comprises the Ob-Ugric languages.

Baltic-Finnic. Finnish, with 5 million speakers, and Estonian, with 1 million, are the best known of the Baltic-Finnic languages. Others are Karelian, spoken by 175,000 people in northwestern Russia and eastern Finland; Veps, spoken by 8,000 people between the Dnepr and the Volga; Votian, spoken by 700 people of the Udmurt Autonomous Republic of the former USSR; and Livonian, spoken by 500 people in the Livonia district of Latvia. Lapp is similar in structure to Finnish, but the various Lapp dialects, spoken by 40,000 people, spread over Norway, Sweden, Finland, and the Kola Peninsula of Russia, diverge greatly from each other in phonology and even to some extent in grammar. Finnish is famous above all for its many cases, 12 of which are productive – that is, any Finnish noun can be followed by one of the 12 case suffixes. Another pervasive feature of the language is consonant gradation, such as the t/d alternation found in the declination of the Finnish word for “hundred”: nominative sata, genitive sadan, ablative sadalta, partitive sataa, and so on. Finnish is also distinctive in having a verb that, translated roughly, means “not to”. Compare ulvon, “I howl”, with en ulvo, “I do not howl”, and ulvo, “you howl”, with et ulvo, “you do not howl”, where en and et mean, respectively, “(I) do not” and “(you) do not”.

Volga-Finnic and Permian. Mordvinian, spoken by 1,262,000 people along the middle Volga, and Cheremis, spoken by 600,000 people in the district where the Kama joins the Volga, constitute the Volga-Finnic language group. Both of them, but especially Mordvinian, are close to Finnish in grammar and vocabulary. Less like Finnish are the Permian languages – Zyrien with its 628,000 speakers, and Votyak with its 704,000 in northeastern European Russia. All of the Volga-Finnic and Permian languages have a negative verb and a large number of cases.

Ugric – The Finnic languages are more or less geographically contiguous. The Ob-Ugric languages, Vogul and Ostyak, occupy the extreme east. Vogul's 8,000 speakers and Ostyak's 21,000 live east of the Urals, in the Ob Valley. One of the most striking Ugric linguistic features is the so-called objective conjugation. Vogul and Ostyak are very precise. In these languages the objective conjugation has three distinct forms, to indicate whether the object is “it”, “them” (plural), or “the two things” (dual). Furthermore, Vogul and Ostyak can also express the subject in the singular, plural, or dual. Vogul and Ostyak have only from four to seven cases, depending on dialect. The Ugric languages have no consonant gradation.

Samoyed – The Samoyed languages are the easternmost representatives of Uralic. Presumably they were the first to separate, as a group, from the original, proto-Uralic language. They are spoken in the northeastern corner of Europe, near Zyrian, and in north-central Siberia. Yurak, with 28,000 speakers, Tavgi, with 1,000, and Yenisei, with 500, form a North Samoyed group, and they can be distinguished from the South Samoyed language, Selkup, with 4,000 speakers. Other Samoyed languages, now extinct, are known only from 18th and 19th century records, Loan Words and Early Records. In the course of their histories, the individual Uralic languages have come into contact with a great many languages from other families – Turkic, Germanic, Baltic (an earlier form of Latvian and Lithuanian), and Slavic. Finnish kuningas, “king”, is an early loanword from a Germanic language, hence its resemblance to English king and German König. Finnish vapaa, “free”, was borrowed from a Slavic language – compare with the Slavic root svobod-. The same Slavic root found its way, independently, into Hungarian, as evidenced by the word szabad. The oldest significant text written in the Hungarian language is a funeral sermon from about 1195. Finnish and Estonian texts survive from the Protestant Reformation, which swept over Scandinavia and much of the Baltic in the 16th century; the reformer of the Finns, Michael Agricola (1512-1557), also translated the Bible into Finnish. Zyrien was recorded in the 15th century by Saint Stephen of Perm, apostle of the Zyriens, who fashioned a special alphabet for the language.

Altaic Languages – The Altaic languages are spread over an area that is even larger than that covered by Uralic. Of the three branches of Altaic, Turkic ranges from Anatolia to the Volga basin and central Asia; Mongolian extends from China and Mongolia as far west as the lower Volga and Afghanistan; and Manchu-Tungus occupies the northern coast of northeastern Siberia, and runs as far south as the Amur and as far west as the Yenisei, which divides Siberia into its eastern and western halves.

Turkic – Written evidence of the Turkic languages begins with the Orkhon inscriptions of the 8th century AD, found near the river Selenga in Mongolia, and continues wherever and whenever a Turkic population came into contact with one of the higher religions, such as Islam, Judaism, Christianity, or Manichaeism. Linguistically, the Turkic languages form a tightly knit group. Knowledge of one Turkic language usually enables an investigator to analyze words and simple sentences in any other Turkic language, except Chuvash. To explain this, it is hypothesized that an original, proto-Turkic language split into two branches: West Turkic and East Turkic. West Turkic went its own way, both phonetically and in terms of contact with other languages, and eventually became Chuvash, now spoken by 1,700,000 people living in the Volga Basin in the Chuvash Autonomous Republic of the former USSR. The early speakers of East Turkic must have remained together for a longer time and split up only comparatively recently into the many present-day languages. Still, the East Turkic languages are usually classed into five subdivisions: Oghuz, mainly represented by Turkish, the language of Turkey; Kipchak, which has over a dozen representative languages, including Kazan Tatar, Kazakh, Kirghiz, and Bashkir; Sayan Turkic, represented by Tuvan, Altai, Shor, and several other languages; Turki, represented primarily by Uygur and Uzbek; and Yakut, which comprises Yakut Proper, Khakas, and Dolgan. Turkish, like Finnish, has vowel harmony. It also uses cases and possessive suffixes, which can combine as in ev-ler-im-in, “of my houses”, made up of the word elements found in ev-ler, “houses”, ev-im, “my house”, and ev-in, “of the house.” Such agglutination is also characteristic of Turkish verbs: compare gel-mek, “to come”, “gel-ir-im, “I come”, gel-iyor-um, “I am coming”, gel-di-m, “I came”, gel-me-mek, “not to come”, and gel-me-d-in, “I did not come”.

Mongolian – Despite their considerable geographical distribution, the present-day Mongolian languages or dialects are all closely related and all descend from a common proto-Mongolian parent language. The vigorous but short-lived military conquests of Genghis Khan in the 13th century brought the Mongols well into Europe and, to this day, traces of Mongolian may be discovered in a few provinces of Afghanistan, and over 100,000 Kalmyk-Mongols live in the Kalmyk republic of the former USSR. Khalkha is the language of the Mongols of Mongolia, with its capital at Ulan Bator. Buryat (Buriat) is spoken in the Buryat Autonomous Republic of Russia. Other Mongolian languages include Dagur, with 24,000 speakers in northwestern Manchuria and the Chinese province of Xinjiang (Sinkiang); Monguor, in Qinghai (Tsinghai) province; Kalmyk; Oirat; Moghol; Santa; Paongan; and Yellow Uigur. The grammatical processes encountered in the Mongolian languages are similar to those of Turkic. The Mongolian languages have many cases and in that respect they resemble some of the Uralic representatives, notably Finnish and Hungarian.

. Manchu-Tungus – Just as the Turkic languages can be thought of as the western wing of Altaic, the Manchu-Tungus – also known simply as the Tungus – languages constitute the eastern wing. Most of these languages have been known only since the 19th century, but two of them, Manchu and Jurchen, are preserved in historical records that go back much further. Manchu, now spoken by only a few thousand people, was the original language of the tribe of horsemen that became the Qing (Ching) dynasty and occupied the Chinese throne from 1644 to 1912. Similarly, Jurchen, now extinct, was the language of the tribes that became the Jin (Chin) dynasty, ruling from 1115 to 1234. The Manchu-Tungus languages fall into two groups. South Tungus includes Manchu, Goldi, Olcha, Orok, Udihe, and Orochon; and the North Tungus languages are Eveneki, or Tungus Proper, and Even, also known as Lamut.

The relation between Uralic and Altaic – The grammatical structures of Uralic and Altaic are quite similar, and about 70 words in each group – such as the Finnish kaly, “sister-in-law”, and Uigur kalin, “bride” and “daughter-in-law” – appear to be cognates.

But the correspondences between the two groups of languages are unsystematic; they could be the result of borrowing or chance. No precise predictive-productive sound laws, for instance, have been established. Alternatively, it is argued that the parallels between Uralic and Altaic are slight, because the two groups split apart a long time ago. In addition to the Ural-Altaic hypothesis, which is that Uralic and Altaic form a super-family of languages, there is also an Indo-Uralic hypothesis, in which Uralic is linked with the Indo-European languages; a Uralic-Yukagir hypothesis, according to which Uralic and Yukagir, a Paleo-Siberian language, are related; a Uralic-Chukotko-Kamchatkan (another Paleo-Siberian language or language family) hypothesis; a Uralic-Eskaleut (Eskimo and Aleut) hypothesis; an Altaic-Korean hypothesis; an Altaic-Japanese hypothesis; and an Altaic-Ainu hypothesis – Ainu being the language of the prehistoric inhabitants of the northern islands of Japan. – B: 2025, T: 7456.

Ural-Altaic People of Turan – From the most ancient times members of this large group, ethnically considered, always lived on the steppes of Inner and Central Asia bordered by the Nan-san, Tien-san, Altai and Ural Mountains. Their common characteristics are: medium build with round head, black hair, small, dark eyes, yellowish skin color and protruding cheekbones. Groups living in the border areas are somewhat different, having blue eyes and blond hair and are taller. Anthropologists divide them into two groups and six sub-groups. Group I: (1) Western sub-group or Uralic-Altaic race; (2) Lapp-Samoyed type; (3) Ugrian type; (4) Turk type Group II: (5) Mongol type; (6) Tunguz type. Most clearly the Mongols kept all ancient Uralic-Altaic characteristics, while the Hungarians mixed with the brown Caucasian race; they are classified as Turkic type. The number of the Uralic-Altaic people is estimated to be about 160 million today. – B: 1078, 1020, T: 3240.

Uralic Languages – The family of languages comprising the Finno-Ugrian and Samoyed languages and peoples. Their place of origin, Urheimat, is considered to have been probably in the area of the Ural Mountains, hence the name Uralic. Its linguistic unity lasted until about 4000 BC, when it split up into a western branch, forming the Finno-Ugrian language family, and an eastern branch, forming the Samoyed language. The place of origin must have been on the southern and middle part of the Ural Mountains, on both the eastern and western slopes: a relatively small area, compared with its later expansion westwards, and especially eastwards. Some 2000 years ago, the peoples speaking Uralic languages occupied about 1/3rd of the European continent, forming a more significant ratio compared with the present situation.

The Uralic languages form two major branches: the Finno-Ugric (consisting of the Finnic and the Ugrian subgroups) and the Samoyed. The Finnic subgroup contains the Finnic (with Finnish) and Baltic (with Estonian) languages and the Volga-Finnic (with Mordvinian and Cheremis, both very close to Finnish) and Permian languages, comprising Zyrien and Votyak. The Ugrian subgroup comprises the Ob-Ugrian languages: Vogul and Ostyak, living at the opposite end of the Finno-Ugrian area and the Magyar (Hungarian).

The ancestral vocabulary (lexical stock) reveals the way of life of these peoples speaking Uralic languages, as shown by the Hungarian words on fishing (hal, tó, víz, etc.), hunting (nyúl, íj, ideg, nyúl), plant-geography (fa, fenyő, szil, kereg), food (íz, főz, tűz, lé, kenyér, méz, só), climate (hó, köd, jég, fagy), clothing and dwelling (öv, mos, fon, ház, lak, ágy, ajtó), domestic utensils (fűr, fest, kés, fejsze, vés, kő, arany, ón), counting (olvas, két, három négy, húsz, száz), orientation (hol[d]-nap, év, tél, tavasz, éj, menny, bal), family connections (eme=anya, fél=feleség, nő=asszony, vő, meny, ángy, ipa, had, fiú, férj, árva), religion (lélek, révül). All these demonstrate that not only their language was related, and common to them, but also their material and spiritual culture and social organization.

The most striking linguistic feature of all the Ugric languages is the objective conjugation. Vogul and Ostyak have three distinct forms, to indicate whether the object is “it”, “them” (plural), or “the two things” (dual); furthermore, Vogul and Ostyak can also express the subject in singular, plural, or dual. Vogul and Ostyak have only up to seven cases (depending on the dialect). Another aspect of the Ugric languages is the lack of consonant gradation. – B: 1068, 1582, 1789, 1871, 7456, T: 7456. → Altaic Languages; Finno-Ugrian Language Group.

Ural Mountains – A 2560-km long mountain range forming the border between Europe and Asia. Its NW-extension is the Pajchoj Range; south of this, as far as 60° N-latitude, the Stony Ural Mountains rise, reaching a height of 1600-1800 m, with the highest peak being Narodnaya, 1894 m, covered by three small glaciers. South of this is another peak, Tolpos-Iz, 1680 m. The middle section of the Urals is the Metallic Urals, which broadens into two, and later into three mountain ranges, extending southwards and, around the source of the Tura River, they flatten into a set of hills not exceeding 400 m. Further south the Wooded Urals follow, dividing into a number of branches, such as Ural-Tau, Urenga, Jaman-Tau, Ilmen Range, Mugodzhar Range, reaching heights of 1500-1600 m.

Geologically, the Ural Mountains became folded in the Paleozoic Era (55 to 47 million years ago). The western part consists of Paleozoic sedimentary beds, while the ranges of the middle part, forming the watershed, are made up of metamorphic rocks, mainly crystalline schists; the southern section of the Ural Mountains consists of plutonic and volcanic rocks. To these a granitic and gneissic belt is joined and on the eastern side, there is a series of younger folded strata.

The climate of the mountain system is of continental character; the median value is low, at Zlatoust it is 0.2°C, and usually fluctuating greatly. The annual precipitation amounts to 500-600 mm. The northern part of the mountain range belongs to the Tundra region, while south, from latitude 64°, the pine forests appear, but only below the altitude of 550 m. The valleys used to have a cover of swamp and scrub in their original state. The central Urals are covered by deciduous forests; the southern part is dominated by grassland and shrubs. The natural original animal life had wolves, bear, sable, hamster, species of squirrels, stag and deer, with a rich avifauna.

The northern Urals are only inhabited by the nomadic Samoyeds and Zyrians (Zuryens). Russians and Cheremis live further south. The population is generally sparse; it began to be denser only since the rise of the mining industry; the first ironworks were built in 1623 and the first gold-mine opened in 1754. The Ural Mountains became Russia's most important and diversified mining and industrial region, with mining centers like Jegorsino, Orsk, Troick, Chelyabinsk, Bogoslovsk, engaged in extracting anthracite, black coal and lignite. There are iron-ore mines at Magnitogorsk; copper-ore occurs at Bogoslovsk, Nerjansk and in the Ural River valley; important platinum mines are in the Tagil, Iz, and Tura River areas; and there are also some bauxite mines. Ore-deposits of other metals (zinc, lead, nickel, antimony, manganese, wolfram) are considerable. Oil fields and refineries in the Kama and Belaya River valleys of the western Urals are the most important in Russia. Many valuable precious stones occur, like emerald, ruby, sapphire, topaz, garnet and tourmaline. The centers of the smelting and metallurgical industry are: Magnitogorsk, Bjelorjeck, Zlatoust and Sverdlovsk. The food, timber and textile industries are of secondary importance. During the Communist era, the Ural Mountain area experienced an enormous industrial development, based on the iron ore and coking coal transported by rail from the Kuznetsk Basin, and more recently, from the Karaganda Basin. Nuclear power will supplement the power resources of the Ural area.

The Russians, speaking a Slavic language, form the overwhelming majority of the people of the Urals. The area west of the Ural Mountains is considered to be the original home (Urheimat) of the ethnic groups speaking the Uralic languages, which were unified by 4000 B.C., thereafter splitting into two major branches: the Finno-Ugrian (e.g. the Permyaks and the Votyaks or Udmurts) and the Samoyed branches. The Altaic language group is represented in the Ural region by the Tatars and Bashkirs, speaking Turkic languages.– B: 1068, 1789, 7456, T: 7456.→Ural-Altaic Languages; Uralic Languages

Urai, Erika (Budapest, 30 March 1930 - ) – Graphic artist. Between 1945 and 1950, she attended the private school of Álmos Jaschik. From 1948, for a year and half, she took Art History, Folk Art and Archeology at the University of Budapest; but she was not able to finish her university studies. Between 1950 and 1955, she worked as a graphic artist at the Geological Institute. Thereafter, the Academy Publisher contracted her, and she started working with book design. Soon after, she started creating book illustrations, book covers and complete book designs for the more significant Hungarian publishers (Europa, Móra, Corvina, etc.). Her design art and her whole work and success were greatly indebted to the educational method and personality of her above-mentioned teacher, Álmos Jaschik. She designed the title page of more than 1200 books. Among her more significant illustrations are: volumes of The Diver's Notebooks (Búvár Zsebkönyvek) of Móra Publishers; Mahabharata (1965); Cushion Book (Párnakönyv) (1966); K. Kóhalmi's Shaman Drums, Sound (Sámándobok szóljatok) (1973); Weöress-Károlyi's The Whole Wide World (Hetedhétország) (1975); Hungarian Folk Costumes (Magyar népviseletek), with the text of Mária Florian; and The Book of Cars (Autók könyve) (1986). Her books were published, among others, by the German Dausien and the English Pergamon Presses. She prepared a series of illustrations, depicting ancient Japanese customs, ordered by the city of Akita of Japan. Among her many exhibitions were at Vár, Tata (1979), Gallery of the Castle Theater, Budapest (1998), Estonian National Library, and Tallinn (2001). She appeared several times on the International Children's Books show in Bologna, and at the book fair of Frankfurt. Some of her group shows were: The 10th Hungarian Exhibition of Fine Arts, Art Gallery, Budapest (1965), Grafikai Biennale of Brno (1966), Premi Catalònia D' Illustracio, Barcelona (1984, 1990), Livres-Objects, Vasarely Muzeum (1998), the Free School of Almos Jaschik, and the Oak-tree Gallery, Budapest (2000). Through her work as a graphic artist, Erika Urai is one of the most significant Hungarian book illustrators. Her prizes include the Most Beautiful Book Prize, Nivo Prize (17 times), and the Prize of the Hungarian Culture Foundation (1993). – B: 1654, T: 7684.

Urányi, János (John) (Balatonboglár, 24 June 1924 - Budapest, 23 May 1964) – Kayaker. He competed in races from the late 1940s to the late 1950s. In 1946, he was the National Champion. In 1957, he won the European Championships. In 1958, he won the World Championships in Prague. He competed in three Summer Olympic Games. He won a gold medal in the K-2 10,000 m event at the Melbourne Summer Olympics in 1956. In 1961, he retired from active sports and became the manager of the Dózsa Shipbuilding Works. The Sport and Leisure Time Center in Balatonboglár bears his name. T: 0883, 1031, T: 7103.

Uray, Tivadar (Theodore) (Munkács, now Mukacheve, Ukraine, 9 November 1895 - Budapest, 22 June 1962) – Actor. For one year he studied at the Budapest, 22 June 1962) – Actor. For one year he studied at the Medical School of the University of Budapest; following that he studied at the College of the National Actors' Association, where he received his diploma in 1915. The following year, he received a contract with the Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház), Budapest and, in 1917 with the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest; in 1919, with the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház), and in 1923, with the King Theater (Király Színház). Later he returned to the National Theater. In 1950, he became a member of the Madách Theater (Madách Színház). He had great character-portraying abilities, was multi-faceted and colorful in acting, with elegant appearance and delivering his lines in impeccable Hungarian. He had an unerring feeling for style. His roles comprised everything from an amorous lover to a tragic hero, and he was able to portray excellent character figures. He played equally convincing roles in classical dramas, and in pieces with modern themes. His roles included the Shakespearean title roles of Hamlet, Julius Caesar, Antony in Antony and Cleopatra; Prospero in The Tempest; Biberach and Otto in Katona's Bánk bán. He also appeared in feature films from 1917, including The Quack-doctor (A kuruzsló) (1917); Petőfi (1921); Semmelweis (1939 and 1952); Dollar Dad (Dollárpapa) (1956), and The Last Supper (Az utolsó vacsora) (1962). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize (1955), and given the Merited Artist (1953), and the Outstanding Artist (1954) titles. – B: 0883, 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Uray, Vilmos (William) (Budapest, 10 May 1914 - Miskolc, 11 April 1977) – Mechanical engineer. He completed his high school studies privately in Pápa and Budapest, and obtained his Engineering Degree from the Budapest Polytechnic in 1942, where he worked as a trainee in the Department of Electrical Engineering. From 1946 to 1950, he taught at the Electrical Industry High School of Budapest. Late in the year, he was moved to the Precision Engineering Industrial Research Institute, where he was engaged in the motion-equation of cursor instruments and the problem of tachometric measurements. From 1951, he was Associate Professor and Head of Department of Electrical Engineering at the Heavy-Industrial Technical University of Miskolc, a newly established tertiary institution, where his first task became the creation of basis of instruction. Here he carried out his teaching and research work beyond his retirement in 1976, until his death. His scientific work is hallmarked by 11 books, 4 patents, and numerous publications in technical journals in Hungary and abroad. He achieved significant results in his problems of energetic and arc-formation connected with the manufacture of electro-steel. He carried out some scientific research on the running of rolling mills with asynchronous motors of cascade connection. He was a member and committee-member of the Hungarian Electro-technical Society, which honored him with the 1975 jubilee prize. His works include Electrical Engineering (Villamosságtan) (1962); Die Untersuchung der Betriebskenngrösse von Lichtbogenhofen auf Grund des Kreisdiagramms, in Acta Technica, 1962.No.1–2, Electro-technology (Elektrotechnika), with Szilárd Szabó (1974). – B: 0883, T: 7456.→University of Miskolc.

Urban, Aladár (Csorvas, 17 April 1929 - ) – Historian. He studied History at the University of Budapest (1947-1952). Following that, as a teaching assistant, he taught Modern Universal History at the same University. Between 1989 and 1992 he was a University Professor and, between 1992 and 1994, he was Head of Department. He retired in 1999. During the years between 1994 and 1997, he was a representative at the General Assembly of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and also of the mixed board of the Science of History Committee and the Hungarian-American Historians. From 1975, he was one of the editors of the illustrious journal Centuries (Századok). His area of research is Hungarian and European History, 1848-1849, and the 18th-20th centuries US History. He obtained a Ph.D. in 1985. Among his works are Europe in the Whirlwind of Revolution 1848-1849 (Európa a forradalom forgószélében 1848-1849) (1970); Studies About 1848 (Tanulmányok 1848-ról) (1981); Lajos Batthyány's Prime Ministership (Batthyány Lajos miniszterelnöksége) (1986); Republic in the New World (Köztársaság az új világban) (1994); Text Collection to the History of the United States of America (Szöveggyűjtemény az Amerikai Egyesült Államok Történetéhez), co-author (2001); Count Lajos Batthyány... (Gróf Batthyányi Lajos...) (2007), and From Batthány to Kossuth (Batthyánytól Kossuthig ...) (2009). He received the Prize of the Academy in 1989. – B: 0874, T: 7684.→Batthyány, Count Lajos; Kossuth, Lajos.

Urbán, Ernő (Ernest) (Sárvár, 4 September, 1918 - Budapest, 19 September, 1974) – Writer and journalist. He earned a Degree from the University of Budapest specializing in Hungarian and French Literature. His first writings were published in the paper, Pester Lloyd in 1939. Further poems and essays appeared in the papers Life (Élet); Dawn (Napkelet); Festival (Ünnep); The Bridge (Híd), and Our Destiny (Sorsunk). A collection of poems entitled Songs from the Danube Promenade (Ének a Dunakorzón) was published in 1942. In 1945, he participated in the land distributions and joined the Communist Party. In that year he published The Legend of the Red Star (A piros csillag meséje). As a journalist he acquired extensive knowledge of the effects of social changes on rural life, a theme that occupied him throughout his literary career. His initial stage works reflect dogmatism, from which he later distanced himself, as is evident in the stage satire The Cucumber Tree (Uborkafa) of 1953. He wrote several successful movie scripts such as Baptism by Fire (Tűzkereszttség); Storm (Vihar), and Love Travels on Carriage (Hintónjáró szerelem). Near the end of his life he directed several innovative television documentaries. As a journalist, he was interested in the great shifts in the fate of humanity. He was a follower of the Hungarian storytelling tradition. His main works include Anna Gál's Victory (Gál Anna diadala) (1951); (Whirlwind) (Forgószél) (1958); Golden Smoke (Aranyfüst) (1960); The Big Adventure (A nagy kaland) (1963); The Heart of the Sahara (A Szahara szíve) (1969); With the Chronicler's Pen (A krónikás tollával) (1964); The Magic Of Our World (A világunk varázsa) (1974), and Living History (Eleven történelem) (1975). He was a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1952) and the Attila József Prize (1971). – B: 0883, T: 7667.

Urbán, György (1) (George) (George R.) (Budapest, 1921 - London, 9 October 1997) – Literary historian, political writer. He completed his studies at the Faculty of Arts of the University of Budapest in 1947. In 1948 he went to England on a scholarship and settled in London, where he obtained a Ph.D. from the University of London in 1956. Between 1948 and 1960, he worked at the Hungarian section of the BBC; from 1960 to 1965 he conducted his own program of the Free University of Radio Free Europe. Thereafter, he became a consultant there, directing the programs of various nationalities, supplying them with well-known western thinkers, scientists, politicians, writers, and interviews with diplomats. In the meantime, he carried out research work at the Universities of Indiana, South-Carolina, Harvard and Sussex. From 1983 to 1986, he was Director of Radio Free Europe in Munich. In the late 1980s he was a counselor for Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher in foreign policy. He published his works in several volumes. His writings were also published in the journal Encounter, and some English and American dailies, weeklies and magazines. His works include Talking to Eastern Europe, interview (1964); Toynbee on Toynbee, interview (1973), and Gespräche mit Zeitgenossen, Acht Dispute über Geschichte und Politik (1982). – B: 1440, 1672, T: 7456.

Urbán, György (2) (George) (Sátorajújhely, 12 June 1936 - ) – Painter. His higher studies were at the Academy of Industrial Art (1954-1957) and at the Academy of Applied Art, Budapest, under the direction of Géza Fónyi and Bertalan (Bartholomew) Poór. (1957-1961). He was on a Derkovits scholarship between 1964 and 1967. He lives and works in Budapest and Munich. From 1993 to 1997 he was a teacher at the Óbuda Artists' School. With his pictures, he assisted at the opening of the Ibrányi Gallery in 1986. He started off as a realist-painter with traditional themes: still life paintings, life-scenes, and portraits. In the 1970s, he was inspired by abstract themes, such as movements, rhythm, light and dynamics; he was influenced by the Bauhaus Masters. In the 1980s and 1990s, he created reliefs and plastic arts. He worked with glass, plexi-glass, metals, and color fluorescent tubes. His characteristic themes include ball-plastics, mirrors and music works, particularly those of Vivaldi; and poems, mainly those of Sándor (Alexander) Weöres. His paintings include Planets (Bolygók); Brown Rocks (Barna sziklák); Brown Mood (Barna hangulat), and Music. He also designed stage settings, e.g. I. Eck's Descent to the Underworld (Pokoljárás) (1968), and I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája) (2000). He has been exhibiting since 1961. His works are in the Art Collection in Budapest, country towns and abroad as well. He is a recipient of the Pro Urbe Sárospatak Prize (1996), and the Knight Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1996). – B: 1653, T: 7103.→Poór, Bertalan; Derkovits, Gyula; Weöres, Sándor.

Urbanek, János (John) (Fiume, now Rijeka, Croatia, 6 March 1905 - Barcelona, 9 September 1971) – Mechanical engineer. He obtained his Degree in Mechanical Engineering from the Budapest Polytechnic in 1927. From 1927 to 1930, with a state scholarship, he conducted research at the Institut d'Optique of Paris, in the field of practical spectral optics; in 1930, at the University of Paris (Sorbonne), he obtained a Ph.D. in Technical Studies. From 1930 to 1944, he lectured on theoretical electrical engineering, electro-technology and illuminating engineering, at first as a demonstrator, later as an assistant lecturer, and from 1941, as an honorary lecturer. From 1944 to 1949, he was Head of the Test-Hall of the Ganz Electrical Works in Budapest. In 1949 he founded the Electrical-Industrial Research Institute, whose director he was until his retirement in 1969. He became a titular professor in 1960. He published a number of studies in French, English and Hungarian journals, and took part and lectured at several international conferences. His works include Sur la diffusion de la lumière par les surfaces polies (1930), and Ideal Material Structures in the Electronics (1979). He was a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1953). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Urbányi, László (Ladislav) (Rákosszentmihály, 29 January 1902 - Budapest, 7 May 1974) – Chemical engineer. He obtained his Degree in Chemical Engineering from the Budapest Polytechnic in 1926. He was a research chemist at the Veterinary Academy from 1926, where he took part in the research on rickets, as an associate of József (Joseph) Marek and Oszkar (Oscar) Wellmann. In 1930, he received an internal scholarship for research. After obtaining a technical Ph.D. in 1928, he worked as a demonstrator at the Polytechnic (1931), later becoming the Head of the Biochemical Laboratory (1935), and an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) and Associate Professor in 1937, Professor of the University College in 1941; later full Professor, giving lectures in chemistry and biophysics in 1943. In the Veterinary Department of the University of Agricultural Sciences, he was Director of the Chemical Institute (1947), Professor and Deputy Vice-Chancellor in 1950. Subsequently, he was Director of the Independent College of Veterinary Sciences in 1956-1957. He obtained a Ph.D. in Agricultural Sciences in 1952. He was a correspondent for the Research Institute of Animal Husbandry from 1957 to 1967. From his retirement in 1967 until his death in 1974, he worked as a scientific consultant. The result of his specialist work, mainly in biochemistry, as well as physical and analytical chemistry, is shown by the more than 200 published studies in such fields as the mineral supply of the animal body and the biochemistry of foraging. He was the recipient of several memorial medals, including the Wellmann Medal (1973). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Urbányi, Pál (Paul, Pablo) (Ipolyság, now Šahy, Slovakia, 1939 - ) – Writer and journalist. He emigrated with his parents to Argentina in 1947. He completed his secondary education in Spanish, after which he studied Medicine, Psychology, Mathematics, Physics and History of Literature on university level but, instead of a teacher's career, he chose commerce. He gave lectures and became the owner of a business. From 1970, he became engaged only in literature and he wrote in Spanish. Two of his books appeared in Buenos Aires. Later he became a journalist. As a correspondent of the liberal paper La Opinion, he experienced political difficulties when Peron's dictatorship was introduced in Argentina; therefore he moved to Canada; he taught Spanish at a private university in Montreal, and worked at the transmission in Spanish of the CBC Radio Station. His works include La noche de los revolutionaries, short story (1972); En ninguna parte, novel, also in English and French (1981); The Bequest (A hagyaték), satire (1992); Sunset-syndrome (Naplementeszimptóma), in Hungarian (2004), and God's Zoo (Isten állatkertje) (2007). He was made Freeman of Ipolyság in 2004. – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Uri, János (John) (Nagykőrös, 27 December 1724 - Oxford, 18 October 1796) – Orientalist and librarian. His higher studies were at the Universities of Debrecen, Harderwijk and Leyden, where he was engaged in the study of Semitic Philology. From 1770, he catalogued the Oriental material of the Bodleian Library of Oxford, published various manuscripts, and gave lectures at the University of Oxford; but he did not return to Hungary. Ézsaiás Budai visited him in Oxford in 1794. His works include Bibliothecae Bodleianae codicum manuscriptorum orientalium, Catalogus... (1787). – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Budai, Ézsaiás.

Urmánczy, Nándor (Ferdinand) (Maroshéviz, now Toplița, Transylvania, Romania, 1 October 1868 – Maroshéviz, 31 October 1940) – Politician and journalist. He completed his legal studies at the University of Budapest. In 1902 he was elected Member of Parliament representing the Liberal Party of Szászrégen (now Reghin, Romania). In 1905 he crossed over to the Independence Party and then to the 1848 Party. In 1906 and 1910 he was again elected Member of Parliament. In 1919 he moved to Budapest from Transylvania (Erdély) because of its Romanian occupation. He was one of the spokesmen of the Irredentist Movement. In 1928 he led a delegation to the English newspaper entrepreneur and minister Lord Rothermere, who in his papers advocated the revision of the Treaty of Trianon. The so-called national-flag movement was linked to his name. He urged the territorial revision of the Treaty in the leading Hungarian newspaper Pest News (Pesti Hírlap). – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Trianon Peace Treaty; Rothermere, Lord Harold Sidney Harmsworth; Revisionist Movement in Hungary.

Ürményi, Lajos (Lewis) (Jászkisér, 3 October 1837 - Szerencs, 29 January 1927) – Actor and playwright. He was a piano teacher at first, but adopted acting as a career, joined Jusztin Kocsisovszky's Group, and somewhat later he found the best provincial opera company in István (Stephen) Reszler's ensemble of Debrecen and Pécs. By the mid-1860s, he was employed as character actor and opera singer. As a playwright he made his debut with his work King Samuel (Sámuel király) on 22 February 1862. With his work Oath and Duty (Eskü és kötelesség), he received Academic Commendation in 1864. From the fall of 1871 he received father roles. After these early successes, from 1872, he faced unmerited neglect and, in 1882, he retired from public appearances; later he contracted to a different company for every season. In 1892 he went into retirement. In the fall of 1880 he directed a musical company in Baja. His roles included László Hunyadi in F. Erkel's George Brankovics (Brankovics György), and Gloucester in Shakespeare's King Lear (Lear király). His published works include Borbála Ubrik (1869), George Rákóczy II (1871), and Apostle Hunn (1900). – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Ürmössy, Anikó (Mrs. Lajos Gellért) (Selmecebánya, now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia, 30 August 1892 - Budapest, 27 February 1968) – Actress and elocutionist. She completed her studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, in 1916. She played at theaters in Budapest: the Modern Stage (Modern Színpad), then the Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház); in 1918 at the Fásor Avenue Cabaret (Fásor kabaré) and, from 1918, at the Andrásy Boulevard Theater (Andrásy-úti Színház); from 1924 to 1926 at the Renaissance Theater (Reneszánsz Színház); in 1926-1927 again at the Inner City Theater. Thereafter, she only had contract with the Bethlen Plaza Theater (Bethlen-téri Színház). From 1951 to 1955, during the Stalinist-Communist era, she was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, but she received very few roles. She excelled as a recitalist. She presented poems of Endre (Andrew) Ady, Dezső (Desider) Kosztolányi and Attila József. Her roles include Toncsi in Gellért-Szánthó's The Great Report (A nagy riport), and Auntie Rézi in L. Gellért's Timosa. – B: 1445, 0883, T: 7456. → Ady, Endre; József, Attila; Kosztolányi, Dezső.

Ürögdi, György (George) (Moskovits) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 8 July 1904 - Budapest, 14 January 1987) – Historian. He studied at the Universities of Freiburg, Munich and Bern from 1922 to 1926. He obtained a Ph.D. in Economics in Bern, in 1926, and a Ph.D. in Arts, majoring in ancient history, at the University of Pécs, in 1938. From 1926, he worked as an official for the Hungarian Commercial Bank of Budapest in Nagyvárad; from 1928 at Pécs and, from 1942 in Budapest. Until 1948, he was a managing clerk and, between 1945 and 1948, President of the Works Committee of the Bank. In 1948 and 1949, he was section head of the National Book Bureau of the Prime Minister's Office; from 1949 to 1952 he was Head of Section in the Ministry of Adult Education. From 1953 to 1958 he was Section Head at the School of Arts. From 1958 until his retirement in 1965, he was in charge of the Roman Age Section of the Historical Museum in Budapest, and also that of the Aquincum Museum. He received a Master's Degree in History in 1966. He was engaged in the economic and political history of Roman times. Significant are his scientific and popularizing works, which include Lucius Cornelius Sulla (1938); The Old Rome (A régi Roma) (1963); Cleopatra (1972), and Nero (1977). – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Aquincum.

Urr, Ida (Kassa, now Košice, Slovakia, 24 November 1904 - Budapest, 2 August 1989) – Physician and poet. She obtained her Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1929. She worked as an internal pathologist in Kassa from 1927. In 1941 she settled in Budapest. During World War II, as a physician of the Swedish Red Cross, she aided in the escape of politically persecuted persons. After the War, she worked as Senior Physician and Gerontologist. Her poems of contemporary tone appeared in anthologies and in independent volumes. Her works include Sobbing (Zokogások) poems (1923); There Is No Bread (Nincs kenyér) poems (1936); Herewith the Writing (Itt az írás) poems (1940); Magic of the Light-screen (A fényrács mágiája) poems (1980), and Hymns on the Banks of the River Hernád (Hernádparti himnuszok), poems (1985). – B: 1730, 1890, T: 7456.

Uruguay, Hungarians in – Approximately 13 to 14 thousand Hungarians lived in Uruguay at the beginning of the 1910s. Without government constraints, about half of them looked upon the country only as a temporary stop. Eventually they moved to Argentina, but newcomers replaced them. This lasted until the government changed its immigration policy in 1930.

Around the mid 1920s, many Hungarians emigrated to Brazil, especially from Transylvania (Erdély, now Romania) and when their temporary visa expired, faced with economic problems, many of them moved to Uruguay. They were mostly farmers and craftsmen. Their newspaper, the Hungarian Courier of Uruguay (Uruguayi Magyar Kurir) was published in 1927. In 1941, a group from the Hungarian colony formed the Antifascist Committee with the help of leftist establishments. Also in 1941, they set up the Committee for a Free Hungary, and it organized a collection campaign for the Allied Powers. Between 1941 and 1946, they had regular radio broadcasts on Sundays, and later established their newspaper, the New Hungary (Új Magyarország), and printed it in 1500 copies. At the same time, as the establishment of the Hungarian National Independent Front, there was a call in the Latin-American countries for a meeting of the First Latin-American Congress of Free Hungary that actually opened on 25 September 1943. Its first honorary president was Count Mihály (Michael) Károlyi.

On the initiative of Rev. Dezső (Desider) Balázs Nagy from Argentina, there was a movement among the Hungarian Reformed people to establish a congregation in 1958. It was finalized in 1960 with Rev. Pál (Paul) Kovács. The congregation grew and was active. After the pastor moved to the USA, the congregation declined; from 1975, Rev. Imre (Emeric) Szabó served them from Argentina. Some ten thousand Hungarians live in the country with 2-3 thousand in Montevideo. – B: 1020, 1875, T: 3240, 7103. → Károlyi, Mihály; Nagy, Balázs Dezső; Kovács, Paul.

Uruguay's National Anthem – The music of Uruguay's national anthem, based on a poem by the poet Francisco Acuna de Figueroa, was composed by the Hungarian Ferenc József Debály in 1841. – B: 1020, T: 7617.

Usztics, Mátyás (Matthew) (Penészlek, 9 April 1949 - ) – Actor and stage manager. In 1969 and 1970, he was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest; from 1973 to 1975 of the Szigligeti Theater (Szigligeti Színház), Szolnok and, between 1975 and 1977, of the No. 25 Theater (25. Színház). In 1977 he was contracted to the Hungarian Film Manufacturing Company (MAFILM), and thereafter, he became a freelance artist. He was one of the founders of the Rock Theater (Rock Színház). In 1962 he had great success in the rock-opera Star-makers (Sztárcsinálók). He is a multi-faceted actor with a fine technique, who is equally at home in cabarets, comedies and heavier genres. He often appears on radio, television and cabaret shows. Since 1990, he has been Director of the Sándor (Alexander) Bodnár Drama Academy, and that of the National Chamber Theater (Nemzeti Kamara Színház). He was one of the founders of the Magor Movement (Magor Mozgalom), and that of the Hungarian Guard Society (Magyar Gárda Egyesület). His roles include Seneca in M. Várkonyi - T. Miklós' Star-makers (Sztárcsinálók); Rochefort in A. Dumas Sr.'s The Three Musketeers (A három testőr); Verro in Shakespeare's Timon of Athens (Athéni Timon), and Lomov in Chechov's A Marriage Proposal (Leánykérés). He played more than 40 films, including Petőfi (1977); Ángi Vera (1979); Requiem (1981); Wagner (1983); Mata Hari (1985); Sztalin (1992), and Country Town (Kisváros) (1993-1999). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Utasi, Csaba (Vörösmart, 15 January 1941 - ) – Literary historian, critic and translator of literary works. He completed his high school studies at Újvidék (1955-1959). He obtained a Degree from the Faculty of Hungarian Language and Literature at the University of Újvidék (now Novi Sad, Serbia). He obtained a Ph.D. from the same University in 1983. His area of interest is Hungarian literature of Vajdaság (now Voivodina). He was editor of the Forum Publisher (1965-1972), then he was a teaching assistant (1972-1984), and docent (1984-1990); thereafter, he was a special professor (1990-1995), and finally Professor at the University of Újvidék from 1995 in the Faculty of Hungarian Language and Literature. He teaches the History of 20th century Hungarian Literature. He was Director of the Institute of Research in Hungarian Language and Literature, and that of Hungarology (1983-1987), and was Assistant Dean of the Faculty of Humanities of the University of Újvidék (1987-1989). He has been a member of the Society of Hungarian Writers, the Hungarian Scientific Association of Voivodina, the International Society of Hungarian Philologists, and a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. His major works are After Ten Years; Essays, Critiques (Tíz év után; esszék, kritikák) (1982); Our Literature and the Kalangya; Monograph (Irodalmunk és a Kalangya; monográfia) (1984); Blood and Wounds; Studies and Critiques (Vér és sebek, tanulmányok, kritikák) (1994); People Only; Fifty Poems, Fifty Critiques (Csak emberek, ötven vers, ötven kommentár) (2000), and Far from Everything (Mindentől messze) (2002). He has also prepared translations of literary works. His awards are the Híd Literary Prize (1982) and the Szenteleky Kornél Literary Prize (1993). – B: 0874, 0878, T: 7684.

Utasi, Mária (Vörösmart, 11 November 1943 - Újvidék, now Novi-Sad, Serbia, 20 February 1985) – Poetess. She obtained a diploma of education from Szabadka (now Subotica, Serbia), and continued her studies in Hungarian Language and Literature at the University of Újvidék. Thereafter, she taught at Kopács (now Kopačevo, Croatia) and Laskó (now Lug, Croatia), then resumed her studies at the University of Budapest, obtaining an arts degree, majoring in Hungarian. For a short time she worked as a translator at Szabadka. In 1979 she settled in Újvidék and worked for the daily New Word (Új Szó); she worked in its translating section until her death. Her works include Bier at Sunrise (Hajnali ravatal) (1970) and Water-worn Sign (Vízmosta jel). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Utassy, József (Joseph) (Utasi between 1965-1968) (Ózd, 23 March 1941 - Zalaegerszeg, 27 August 2010) – Poet and literary translator. He completed his high school studies at the Dobó High School, Eger, from 1955 to 1959. He completed his higher studies in Hungarian Ethnography at the University of Budapest between 1961 and 1967. Between 1959 and 1967, he worked as a clerk at the National Savings Bank (Országos Takarékpénztár – OTP); thereafter he worked as a reporter of art at Pétervára. Between 1963 and 1964, he was a laborer at the Sheet Metal Manufacturing Plant (Lemezgyár) of Borsodnádásd. Between 1967 and 1972 he was a boarding school teacher of the Students' Hostel, an institute of vocational training. In 1969 Utassy was one of the founders of the group of poets called the Ninths (Kilencek). In 1970, he became a member of the Hungarian Writers' Association (Magyar Írók Szövetsége). From 1972 he was a freelance writer. From 1995 he was a member of the Society of Hungarian Writers (Magyar Írók Egyesülete). Since 2002 he has been a member of the Academy of Hungarian Artists. Among his numerous works are My Fire, My Flag (Tüzem, lobogóm) poems (1969); Orphan of the Stars (Csillagok árvája) poems (1977); On the Way from Hell (Pokolból jövet) poems (1981); Light on the Shackles (Fény a bilincsen) poems (1994); Fifty-five Devils (Ötvenöt ördög) childrens' poems (1997); The Questioning of God (Isten faggatása) (2000), and Fire of Fires (Tüzek tüze) (2001). The publishing of some of his books met the objection of the regime. Despite his illness, he created a valuable life work. He was the recipient of a number of distinctions, among them: the Attila József Prize (1978), the High-level Prize (1981), the Prize of Pro Hungarian Art (1989), the Tibor Déry Prize (1989, 1996), the Officer's Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1994), the Pro Literature Prize (1997), the Laurel Wreath (2001), the Kossuth Prize (2008), and the Gábor Bethlen Prize (2009). – B: 0874, 0878, 1257, T: 7684.

Ütő, Endre (1) (Andrew) (Nagykanizsa, 11 October 1903 - ?, 13 December 1978) - Actor and stage designer. He studied at the Academy of Applied Arts, Budapest. In 1925 he graduated from the Academy of Acting in Budapest and joined the National Theater of Pécs. His most famous performances on rural stages include Horatio in Hamlet, Otto in Bánk bán, and Bubenyik of the Nosztty Boy's Case with Mari Tóth (A Nosztty fiú esete Tóth Marival). He began as a stage designer in 1930 in the theater of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), commissioned by Árpád Horváth, where he produced about 40 stage illustrations each year. He was the first to paint a linoleum poster for the National Theater of Pécs. From 1945 he was a member of the theaters of both Pécs and Miskolc, where he applied his talent practically to all kind of theatrical art forms. On his retirement in 1967 he was distinguished with a permanent membership in the Miskolc Theater. In 1987 an exhibition of his work was held at the Cultural Center of Berettyóújfalu. His main stage designs include E. Kästner's Three Men In The Snow (1953); Lope de Vega's The Dog in the Manger (1949); Ferenc Molnár's Olympia (1957); Gorky's Vassa Zheleznova (1961); Jenő Heltai's The Dumb Knight (A néma levente) (1962), and Miklós Gyárfás' Joanna's Night (Johanna éjszakája), 1966. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7667.

Ütő, Endre (2) (Andrew) (Budapest, 2 June 1937 - ) – Opera singer (bass), producer, theater director, ceramic-pottery artist and sculptor. He was born into a Szekler (Transylvanian Hungarian) family, from where his talent originated. The family moved to Budapest in the early 1940s. After an early, brief, but promising sports career in basketball, he found his career in opera. In 1967 he studied at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, under Maestro Andor (Andrew) Lendvay and graduated in Italy from the St Cecilia Music Academy in Rome, where he was a scholarship winner, under Maestro G. Favaretto. Soon after winning two international singing competitions in Italy, he appeared and sang with Luciano Pavarotti in Verdi's Rigoletto. In 1963, he had his debut at the Opera House, Budapest in the role of King Arkel in Debussy's Pelléas and Mélisande. In 1964 he became a soloist at the Opera House. He sang 50 leading base roles of classic operas, but he successfully presented character figures of modern operas as well. His roles include the title role in B. Bartók's Bluebeard's Castle; Seneca in Monteverdi's Coronation of Poppea (Poppea megkoronázása); Timur in Puccini's Turandot; Colline in Puccini's La Bohème (Bohémélet); Gremin in Tchaikovsky's Eugene Onegin; Zakarias in Verdi's Nabucco; Mephisopheles in Gounod's Faust; Hagen in Wagner's Twilight of the Gods (Götterdämmerung – Istenek alkonya), and Doktor in Berg's Wozzeck. Since 1998, he has produced 5 successful open-air opera productions at the Cziráky Castle in Lovasberény, and at the Nádasdy Castle in Nádasladány. He has often appeared as a soloist in oratorios. In July 1990 he was appointed Director of the Opera House of Budapest. In this capacity, even in more difficult conditions, he wanted to maintain the standard and the rejuvenation of its ensembles and artistic standard. Since his retirement in 1996, he has lived with his wife and creative partner in Lovasberény, County Fejér, where he established his Art Gallery and Studio. His figurative, visual art career started in 1983. His artistic woodcarvings and the glazed pottery composition could be called vitrified or faïenced wood. So far he has had 23 local exhibitions and one in Italy with great success. The artist's 200 year-old home, a thatched cottage, is a historic site, housing the Lenke Gallery, the artist's permanent exhibition. He also uses his figurative art experiences in theatrical scenery, as a stage designer, producer and director. He was awarded the Ferenc Liszt Prize in 1970. – B: 1445, 2107, 1031, T: 7456, 7103.

Uyghurs (Uigurs, Jugars, in Hungarian: Ujgurok)

– The Uyghurs (in their language Yugars) are a Turkic ethnic people, living in 10 tribes, followers of Islam. Their country is in Eastern and Central Asia, primarily in the Xinjian (Sinkiang) Uyghur nominally Autonomous Region, (in China since 1955), covering an area of 1,646,000 km<sup>2</sup> with a population of some 15 million (1982) and its capital Urumqi (Urumchi, Ürümqi or Tihwa), pop. 677,000 (1975) situated south of the Junggar (Dzungar) Basin and on the northern slopes of the Tian Shan Mountains. Large Diasporas of Uyghurs exist in the Central Asian countries of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, and Uzbekistan. Smaller communities are found in Mongolia, Pakistan, Afghanistan, Turkey, Russia, and Taoyuan County of Hunan Province in south-central Mainland China. Uyghur neighborhoods can also be found in major Chinese cities like Beijing and Shanghai. Actually, they are living in 32 countries in the world.

During their history, there have been many upheavals against foreign domination, and there has been an independence movement since 1933 to create a new sovereign state, Uyghurstan or East Turkistan.

Historically the term “Uyghur” (meaning “united” or “allied”) was applied to a group of Turkic-speaking tribes that lived in what is now Mongolia. Along with the so-called Kökturks (a.k.a. Gökturks) the Uyghurs were one of the largest and most enduring Turkic peoples living in Central Asia. They existed as a tribal federation ruled by the Juan Juan from 460 to 545, and then by the Hephthalites (White Huns) from 545 to 565, before being taken over by the Göktürk Empire (Khaganate).

Before the Uyghur Empire was founded, the Turkic Empire ruled the Steppes from Mongolia to Central Asia. In 744, the Uyghurs, together with other subject tribes, Basmil and Kharlukh, defeated the Turkic Empire and founded the Uyghur Empire.

Their empire stretched from the Caspian Sea to Manchuria, and lasted from 745 to 840, when they were overrun by the Kyrgyzs, another Turkic people. The result was that the majority of tribal groups formerly under the umbrella of the Uyghurs migrated to what is now modern Xinjiang. Joined by other Turkic tribal groups living in Dzungaria and the Tarim Basin, they established the Idikut kingdom, which lasted until 1209, when they submitted to the Mongols under Genghis Khan.

Throughout history, the term Uyghur has taken on an increasingly expansive definition. Initially a small coalition of Tiele tribes, it later denoted citizenship in the Uyghur Empire, and finally, it was expanded to an ethnicity, which includes ancestry to two genetically distinct populations: Turkic and Tocharian.

The Uyghurs claim to be the descendants of the Huns. They also claim to be related to the Hungarians. Their legends know that their ancient brothers set out and moved to the distant west. Recent DNA research has proved that they are genetically close to the Hungarians. In their legend a once great emperor had two sons called Tartar (Hunor) and Mungli (Maugor), who became the ancestors of the Tartars and the Mongols [see: Abul Ghazi Bahadur, a 17th century historian of Khiva]. Hungarian and Uyghur folk-tales, even customs and folk music also show similarities, the music of both peoples is based on the pentatonic, or five-note scale system. They were horse-riding archers, like the Magyars, who similarly used to be horse-riding archers: their horsemen using the crossbow. On their graves they erect wooden headboards (kopjafa), an ancient Hungarian custom. Where and when the Magyars and Uyghurs lived next to each other in the Asian steppes is still not clear. There is a sufficiently close physical, racial relationship between them. The Uyghurs usually have light skin, hair and eyes, along with facial characteristics varying from mongoloid to north European. The 19th century Hungarian traveler and linguist, Alexander (Sándor) Csoma de Kőrös originally set out to find the ancestral home of the Hungarians among the Uyghurs. However, he was detained in Tibet, as he was considered to be a British spy and was denied entry. An expedition was organized to the Uyghurs by the Hungarian World Federation and led by the human biologist and anthropologist, Dr. Zsolt Biró during 2007. To this day the Uyghurs show keen interest in their Magyar relatives in the distant west and occasionally visit them.

The literature on the Uyghurs includes: Ármin Vámbéry: Uigurische Sprachmonumente und das Kudatku Bilik (1870); Das Türkenvolk (1885); At the Cradle of the Magyars (in Hungarian) (1914); Ervin Baktay: On Top of the World (A világ tetején) (1930); T. Duka: Alexander Csoma de Kőrös (1885); H. Nath Mukerjee: Csoma, The Hermit-Hero from Hungary: The Great Tibetologist (1984); W. Schott: Zur Uigurenfrage (Parts I-II) (1874-1876); W. Radloff: Das Kudatku Bilik in Faksimile, Transkription und Übersetzung. Parts I-III (1890-1910); F.W.K. Müller: Uigurica I-IV (1908-1931); M. Hartmann: Chinesisch-Turkestan (1908); Károly Czeglédy: Wandering of Nomad Peoples from Orient to Occident (in Hungarian) (1969) and D. Osetzky: The Turkic Ancestors of the Magyars (1977). – B: 1031, 1068, 1789, 1816, 1904, T: 7617, 7456.→Urumqi; Kőrösi Csoma, Sándor; Vámbéry, Ármin; Kiszely, István; Yugars; White Huns.

Uzbeks – (1) A group of the Turkic ethnic peoples in Central Asia; they lived on the territories of Bokhara, Ferghana and Khiva. The name of the highly cultured Uz peoples of the Uygur-Turk branch is not ethnographic but political, and originated in the 10th century. They took this name during the rule of the great conqueror, Mohamed Seibani. It originated from Özbég, nickname of prince Ghajas-ed-Din, meaning “illustrious gentlemen”. They are mostly farmers and number over 2 million. (2) In one of his oldest laws Hungarian King László I (St. Ladislás) (1077-1095) called the liberated slaves Uzbeks among other castle guards and servants. – B: 1078, T: 3240.

Uz Ethnic Group – A group of the Turkic people, allies of the Khazars, who lived in the 9th and 10th centuries between the River Volga and the Ural Mountains, at the inner territory of the Kazakh-Kirgiz peoples. The Greeks called them Uz, while the Arabs named them Ghuz. They quarreled with the Pechenegs (Besenyők) before 835, and around 888, they totally displaced them. Later, they lived in the neighboring territory of Lake Van in Asia Minor, among the Magyars. Eventually the Szeklers (Hungarians of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) assimilated most of them, while others lost their language and ethnicity among the later arriving Vlach settlers. – B: 1078, 1666, T: 3240. → Khazars; Pechenegs; Vlachs; Szeklers.

V

Vác – Town north of Budapest on the Danube Bend, on the left bank of the river, at the foot of Mount Naszály in County Pest, seat of a Catholic Bishopric. Most of its attractive buildings are in Baroque style, such as the Bishop's palace, the Cathedral with its cupola, and the Holy Trinity monument. There are numerous civic, church and military offices; a number of schools, libraries, like the Episcopal Library with 60,000 volumes, as well as several museums. The town has a population of 33,223 (2008), mostly Hungarian: There are 94.9%. 59.4% Roman Catholic, 9.3% Reformed, 3.1% Lutheran, and 14.4% non-religious denominations. Their occupation includes 13% agricultural workers, 43% tradesmen, 13% merchants, 9% in public service and 9% retired (1941). The industry of Vác includes mills, spinning-weaving works, iron-foundries, tanning, building materials, tool-making and photographic firms. It is also a popular summer resort for citizens of Budapest. It has a lively commercial life. It is an important railway junction. Its bishopric was founded by the first king of Hungary, King István I (St. Stephen, 997-1038), and its cathedral was built during the reign of King Géza I (1074-1077). The town was destroyed during the Tartar invasion (1240-1242), but it was rebuilt again. The diet of 1485 was held here. Vác was under Turkic occupation during 1544-1595, and again during 1684-1685. It was attached to County Pest in 1686. Its railway line leading to Pest was opened in 1864. During the War of Independence, on 10 April 1849, it was the site of a victorious battle by the Honvéd army units against the Habsburg forces. – B: 1064, 1031, T: 7456.

Vác, Bishopric and Chapter of – The diocese created in 1008 by King István I (Stephen I) (997-1038), the first King of Hungary. He built the first church on the site, destroyed by the Mongol-Tartars during their invasion in 1241; but it was rebuilt by King Béla IV (1235-1270). The Turks occupied Vác in 1544, and the church was turned into a mosque. After the expulsion of the Turks, the church was rebuilt from 1686 on. The Cathedral Chapter ceased to exist, but was re-established in 1700. The Chapter had twelve canons and six titular canons. The number of parishes was 123, with 266 clergy. The diocese included 7 monasteries and 12 nunneries, with altogether 232 monks and nuns. The Catholic population of the Diocese was 757,827. – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Vachott, Sándor (Alexander) (Gyöngyös, 17 November 1818 – Buda, 9 April 1861) – Poet. While still a law student in Eperjes (now Prešov, Slovakia), along with fellow students, he edited and distributed the mimeographed copies of a newspaper, demanding political reforms, resulting in a near expulsion from the school. Vachott's poetry appeared in the journal Athenaeum from 1838 on. In 1841 he received his legal qualifications, but occupied himself only with literary pursuits. In 1852 he was one of the founding members of the Kisfaludy Society. In 1843 he became a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. Later, he became acquainted with poet Sándor (Alexander) Petöfi. In 1848, Vachott became secretary to Lajos (Louis) Kossuth (to whom he was related). As a consequence, he was arrested after the defeat of the War of Independence in 1849, and was released in the fall of 1850. Then they jailed him again in the New Building (Újépület) prison in Pest, because he gave asylum to the revolutionary poet Gyula (Julius) Sárosi. However, after a few months' confinement, Vachott became mentally deranged and was released. The great poets Mihály (Michael) Vörösmarty and Sándor Petőfi influenced his poetry. He spoke with the voice of the simple folksong. In his poetry he intertwined the fate of the country, the poverty of the people, and the sentiments of love. He sang about the various episodes of the revolution, but also expressed hope in the future. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7617.→Petőfi, Sándor; Kossuth, Lajos; Vörösmarty, Mihály; Vahot, Imre; Sárosi, Gyula.

Vadas, Ernő (Ernest) (Nagykanizsa, 17 December 1899 - Budapest, 30 May 1962) – Photographer and photographic artist. He was a correspondent for the Hungarian Telegraphic Agency (Magyar Távirati Iroda – MTI). He began his career as an amateur. In 1929 he became a member of the Hungarian Photographers' National Association. Early in his career, he scored great success worldwide with his idyllic, romantically conceived pictures; they appeared in the National Geographic Magazine, Vanity Fair, Seven Seas, Harpers Bazaar, Illustrated London News, and L'Illustration. After 1945, his field of themes widened and assumed a more realistic coloring, including themes of work, workers' portraits, and the new industrial establishment. He played an important role in amateur movements. In 1936, he formed the Modern Hungarian Photographers' Society. After the authorities banned their activity, they continued their activities as members of the Photo-section of the Tourists' Society of Inóc. He received numerous honors in Hungary and abroad. In 1957, the International Photo-Artists' Association (FIAP) awarded him the highest distinction, Honoraire Excellence. From 1956, he was President of the Hungarian Photo-Artists' Association. In 1960, he presented his works at a one-man-show in Budapest. He set forth his artistic ideas in his book: So fotografiert man das Leben (Thus is life photographed) (1959). – T: 0883, 1654, T: 7456.

Vadász, Elemér (Elmer) (Székesfehérvár, 1 March 1885 - Budapest, 30 October 1970) – Geologist. He studied at the School of Art of the University of Budapest. After his trip to Asia with Gyula (Julius) Prinz, he earned a Ph.D. in 1907. By 1913, he was an assistant lecturer at the Faculty of Geology and Paleontology of the University of Budapest, specializing in coal deposits. He had to leave his university position after the demise of the Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary on 1 August 1919, and found work as a geologist with the Hungarian General Coal Mining Co. (Magyar Általános Kőszénbánya Rt. – MÁK) until the end of World War II. From 1920 to 1945 he was engaged in bauxite research in Hungary, Greece and France, etc. From 1949 to 1958, he was President of the Geological Society, and later an honorary president for life. From 1958 to 1963, he was President of the Nature Conservation Council (Természetvédelmi Tanács) and, from 1958 to 1961, of the Hungarian-Soviet Friendship Society (Magyar-Szovjet Baráti Társaság). Until his final retirement in 1965, he was Professor of Geology at the University of Budapest. For a year, he was Dean and later Vice-Chancellor of the same University. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1948, ordinary 1954). His works include Echinoderms of Mediterranean Age in Hungary (Magyarország mediterrán tüskésbőrűi) (1914); Geology of Coal (Kőszénföldtan) (1951); Analytical Geology (Elemző földtan) (1955), and The Geology of Hungary (Magyarország földtana) (646 pp., 1960). He received the Kossuth Prize twice (1948, 1952) – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Prinz, Gyula; Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary.

Vadász Miklós Compendium – An outstanding example of the “textbook” literature of the Middle Ages in manuscript form, made up of 24 chapters. The work was commissioned by Miklós (Nicholas) Garai, Palatine of Hungary, and compiled between 1413 and 1428 by Miklós (Nicholas) Vadász, Bishop of the Pauline Monastery of the Bishopruc of Szeret in Moldavia. The work, intended for the use of Hungarian priests in Wallachia (Havasalföld) and Moldavia, contains the two most important tenets for the officiating priest: the indispensable knowledge of Biblical Theology, and Theological Ethics. The larger part of the Compendium, especially the introduction and conclusion, discusses the Sacrament of Confession. The manuscript is held by the Bavarian National Library. – B: 1020, T: 7617.

Vadi Sura, Egypt – The Egyptian Prince Kemal el Din, who devoted his life and material possessions to the study of the Libyan Desert, discovered in 1926, near the border between Libya and Sudan, a sandstone plateau of enormous extent at 600-700 m altitude, to which he gave the name Gilf Kebir (Great Wall). An awe-inspiring rock wall, known by the local Bedouins as Djebel el Salamis, surrounds this plateau of about 30,000 km<sup>2</sup>, the size of Sicily.

In 1933, László Ede (Ladislas Edward) Almásy traversed the Gilf Kebir and the Vadi Sura (Valley of Pictures) with the assistance of Kemal el Din, and came upon cave paintings, which have become world famous since then. “I hit upon four caves, the walls of which were covered by beautiful paintings... This vadi once must have been a lake, and indeed, in one of the caves, I found the illustration of swimming humans” – wrote Almásy in 1933. His writings on his discovery were published in the paper of the Egyptian Geographical Society in 1936.

The Gilf Kebir Desert Expedition, organized by the Hungarian Geographical Museum, (Magyar Földrajzi Múzeum) visited the caves in Vadi Sura in March 1993. The unknown “artists” illustrated such animals as ostrich, cheetah, gazelle and antelope in large numbers, as well as cows, which have not lived in the Sahara for thousands of years. The prehistoric man at that time must still have seen palm trees, savannah vegetation and indigenous animals at the site. The expedition noted that the thick crusty layer, a few millimeters thick, which served as the base for painting the pictures on the cave walls, had been decaying for quite some time, and together with it some of the paintings have perished. – B: 1020, 1105, 1482, T: 7456.→Almásy, László Ede; Zarzura Oasis, Egypt.

Vadkerty, Katalin (Catherine) (Érsekújvár, now Nové Zámky, Slovakia, 21 April 1928 - ) – Historian. Her higher studies were at the University of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) where she obtained her Degree in History in 1955. From 1953 to 1958, she taught at the Academy of Pedagogy of Pozsony. For a while she was Cultural Columnist for the paper Working Woman (Dolgozó Nő). Between 1960 and 1987, she was an Associate at the Slovak Academy of Science. Her field of research was Economic History of Hungary in the 19th century, and after 1867. Since 1990, her interest has been the persecution history of Hungarians in Slovakia between 1945 and 1948. Her works include The Economic History of the Czechoslovak Republic (1918-1938) (A Csehszlovák Köztársaság gazdaságtörténete (1918–1938)); The Re-Slovakization (A reszlovakizáció) (1993); The Deportations (A deportálások) (1996); Interior Deportations and the Population Exchange (A belső telepítések és a lakosságcsere) (1999), and From Deportation to Re-Slovakization (A kitelepítéstől a reszlovakizációig) (2001), in Slovakian: (Maďarská otázka v Československu 1945–1948) (2002). She is a recipient of the Fábry Prize (1996), the Dominik Tatarka Prize (2003), the Bethlen Prize (2003), the Golden Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2008), and the János Arany Prize (2010). – B: 1890, T: 7103.

Vadnai, Károly (Charles) (Vadnay), (Miskolc, 28 April 1832 - Budapest, 27 July 1902) – Writer, journalist and member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He studied in Miskolc, and in 1848 he joined the army. After the Armistice of Világos on 13 August 1849, he was in hiding for a while, after which he was sent to join the Austrian army. After his return home in 1851, he was active as a writer and journalist in Pest. From 1856 until 1865, he was Editor of the Lady's Messenger (Hölgyfutár) and, from 1864 until 1892 he co-edited the Capital City Pages (Fővárosi Lapok) with Kálmán (Coloman) Tóth. From 1876 he was a member of the Kisfaludy and Petőfi Societies. From 1878 he was Secretary of the Relief Society for Hungarian Writers (Magyar Írók Segélyegylete). His main works are The Little Fairy (A kis tündér) (1860); Esther the Beautiful Chorister (Eszter, a szép kardaloknő) (1861); Times Past (Elmúlt idők) (1886); Eva's Daughters (Éva leányai) (1892); Countess Immaculata (Immaculata grófné) (1896), and Literary Memories (Irodalmi emlékek) (1906). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7667. → Világos, Armistice at; Tóth, Kálmán.

Vadnai László (Ladislav) (Vadnay) (Budapest, 21 March 1904 - Budapest, 18 April 1967) – Writer and playwright. Initially, he worked for the paper Morning News (Reggeli Újság) and, for a year he was Director and Announcer for the Terézkörút Stage (Terézkörúti Színpad). In the early 1920s, he emerged as a successful comic writer. He was the creator of the characters Hacsek and Sajó, the two most popular figures of the Budapest Cabaret. From 1927 he was a screenplay writer with a number of very successful films to his credit. In 1938 he emigrated to the USA, where he wrote scripts for television shows. In 1967, while visiting Hungary, he died suddenly. His main works include Where Were You in the Night? (Hol jártál az éjszaka?) (1926); Kati's Soldier (Kati katonája) (1927); The Ugly Girl (A csúnya leány) (1930); Money Talks (Pénz beszél) (1933); Vica the Canoeist (Vica a vadevezős) (1933); Hacsek and Sajó (Hacsek és Sajó) (1933); A Dream Car (Meseautó) (1934); An Income of 200 a Month (Havi 200 fix) (1936); Hotel Sunrise (Hotel Kikelet) (1937); The Story of a Tailcoat (Egy frakk története) (1942); In My Father's House (Apám házában) (1946); The Stronger Sex (Az erősebb nem) (1956); Passport to Life (Útleveél az élethez) (1957); László Vadnai's Most Famous Hacsek and Sajó Dialogues (Vadnai László leghíresebb Hacsek és Sajó párbeszédei) (New York, 1959), and The Marathon Runner (A maratoni futó) (1961). Vadnai was one of the most successful comedy playwrights. – B: 0883, 1445, 1672, T: 7667. → Békeffy, István.

Vadnay, Vilma (Szepán) (Sátoraljaújhely, 1862 - Budapest, 6 June 1918) – Coloratura soprano, singer of operettas and musical folk plays. Gyula (Julius) Káldy, the conductor of the Folk Theater (Népszínház) of Pest, discovered her talent and trained her voice. It was in 1880 that she first appeared on stage at the Popular Theater (Népszínház). From 1882 to 1893, she sang in country theaters with her husband, Sándor (Alexander) Somló.

When he was given a contract with the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, she relinquished her career but, from time-to-time, she appeared as a guest artist, as in 1894 in the Buda Theaterette (Budai Kis Színház). She was a well-known prima donna in country theaters, with her sonorous high coloratura soprano voice. Her playing was clever and attractive. She reaped great success as a singer of folk plays and folksongs. Her roles included Fiametta in Suppé's Boccaccio; Klári in G. Csiky's The Run-away Woman (A szökött asszony); Zsófi in F. Csepreghy's The Red Purse (A piros bugyelláris); Adél in J. Strauss' Die Fledermaus (Denevér); Szaffi in J. Strauss' The Gypsy Baron (Cigánybáró), and Lidi in A. Deréky's The Cornflower (Búzavirág). – B: 1445, T: 7456.→Somló, Sándor, Káldy, Gyula.

Vadnay, Zsuzsanna (Susan) (Zsuzsanna Rospigliosi-Pallavicini) (Budapest, 23 June 1924 - ) - Writer and journalist. She completed her high school studies in Budapest. During World War II, Raul Wallenberg, the Swedish Diplomat, sheltered her and her family. After 1945, she was Associate Editor for the papers, Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet), and Present Day (Mai Nap). Late in 1949, she fled from Hungary and via Vienna she went to Rome, where she worked as tourist guide and journalist. Her reports were heard on the Hungarian broadcast of Voice of America and Radio Free Europe. At first, she worked for papers, such as Western Courier (Nyugati Hírnök), later for Illustrated Hungarian Magazine (Képes Magyar Hírlap), Literary News (Irodalmi Újság) and National Guard (Nemzetőr). She was a correspondent for Reader's Digest, and also for American, Italian, Dutch, French and Belgian papers. In 1977, with her writer husband, Prince William Rospigliosi-Pallavicini, she moved to Locarno. For years, her writings were heard on Radio Free Europe, and also appeared in the National Guard and Chronicle (Krónika) of Toronto. Most of her books are travel guides. Her works include Sagernas Rom, travel guide, in Swedish (1960, in Danish 1961); Sagneses Athen, travel guide, in Danish (1963); Damernes Rom Guid, travel guide, in Danish (1966); Interesting People, Western Hungarian Portraits, with Éva Saáry (1981), and Story-telling Stones of Athens (1988). She is a recipient of the Politeness Prize and Diploma of Rome (1961), the Medal of the Hungarian Association of Cleveland (1982), and a member of the Árpád Academy (1982). – B: 0878, 1672, T: 7456.→Saáry, Éva; Wallenberg, Raul.

Vagabund Sorcerer→Garabonciás.

Vágó, József (Joseph) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 23 December 1877 - Paris, 7 June 1947) – Architect. He completed his studies at the Budapest Polytechnic, obtaining his Degree in 1900. In 1902, he won the silver medal of the Hungarian Engineers' and Architects' Association (Magyar Mérnök és Építész Egylet) for his theater plan and, in 1903, he won the Gold Medal for his railway station plan; he also won the First Prize in the competition of the Museum of the Martyrs of Arad (Aradi Emlékmúzeum). Early on in his career he was mainly under the influence of Ödön Lechner. Later on, his works were characterized by seeking neoclassic solutions. With Ignác (Ignatius) Lapár, he participated in the construction of the Stock Exchange (Magyar Tőzsde), the National Bank (Nemzeti Bank) and the Agricultural Museum (Magyar Mezőgazdasági Múzeum), Budapest, and with Zsigmond (Sigismund) Quittner, he took part in the construction of the Gresham Palace, Budapest. For some time he, together with his brother László, designed his buildings, such as the National Salon (Nemzeti Szalon), the Petőfi House (Petőfi Ház), Gutenberg House, the Town Park Theater (Városligeti Színház), Arcade Bazaar (Árkád Bazár), and several blocks of flats. After 1910, he became self-employed and mainly built villas. In 1919, he was the Head of the Architectural Directorate of the Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary. As a result, he had to emigrate. From 1920 he lived abroad, mainly in Switzerland, later in Italy. In 1926 he won the Divided First Prize in the application invitation for a plan of the League of Nations' Palace (Népszövetség). During the following year, together with his four prize-winning companions, he completed the final plans, on the basis of which the slightly anachronistic work was built. His published works include Through Towns (1930), The Tabán Being Rebuilt (1934) and A travers les villes (Through the town) (1939). – T: 0883, T: 7456. → Arad, Martyrs of; Lechner, Ödön; Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary.

Vágó, Nelly (Budapest, 5 September 1937 - ) – Costume designer. She completed her higher studies at the Costume-designing Section of the School of Applied Arts as a student of Judit Schäffer, receiving her diploma in 1962. She began her career at the Szigligeti Theater (Szigligeti Színház), Szolnok, in 1962 and 1963 and, at the same time, she became a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. In a guest-artist capacity, she designed costumes for virtually all the metropolitan and country theaters, e.g. the Opera House, Erkel Theater, Madách Theater, Attila József Theater and the Microscope Stage, and for the theaters of Kaposvár, Pécs, Veszprém, Győr, Miskolc, Szolnok, the Open Air Theater of Szeged and the theater of Szentendre. She was associated with the leading and most modern theatrical workshops and managers. She was also the costume designer of numerous TV and film productions and, as a guest designer, she worked abroad for the Opera Houses of Graz and Berlin, and the National Theater of Tbilis. She was the outstanding representative of the so-called Hungarian School of Designing. Her costumes serve the anatomy of action and character, with strong feeling for style and taste, formed by the knowledge of material and modern technical resources. She has often appeared in collective and individual exhibitions, as in Budapest, Miskolc, Prague and Újvidék (now Novi Sad, Serbia). Her costume-designs include Shakespeare's King Lear, Timon of Athens; Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája); Bulgakov's Hypocrites (Álszentek összeesküvése); Chekhov's Three Sisters (Három nővér); M. Füst's Unfortunates (Boldogtalanok); Molière's Tartuffe; Schiller's Maria Stuart; Á. Tamási's Singing Bird (Énekes madár), and Chekhov's Platonov. She was awarded the Mari Jászai Prize and the Pirandello Prize in 1972, and received the Merited Artist title in 1985. – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Vágó, Pál (1) (Paul) (Jászapáti, 6 June 1853 - Budapest, 15 October 1928) – Painter. He studied Law but chose painting. He was a student of Sándor (Alexander) Wagner and Gyula (Julius) Benczúr. At the Julian Academy of Paris, he studied under the direction of J. P. Laurens. First, he painted life-scenes, such as the Lizard (Gyík), Old Woman Reading (Olvasó öregasszony), and Scenes of Jászapáti (Jászapáti jelenetek). Later, he followed the styles of Bertalan (Bartholomew) Székely and Viktor Madarász, and painted large historical tableaus, such as Hungarians at Kiev (Magyarok Kiev előtt) (1882); the Feszty Cyclorama, with others (1893-1894), and the Taking of Buda Castle in 1849 (Budavár bevétele 1849-ben) (1906). His picture entitled The Flood of Szeged (A szegedi árvíz) (1881) made his name famous. He painted a picture for the World Fair of Paris entitled The Triumphal March of the Hussars (A huszárság diadalútja), which earned him the Lotz Prize (1899) and the French Legion d'Honneur (1900). He painted frescos for the Church of Jászapáti. He also made illustrations for the poems of Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi, and for the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy in Writings and Pictures, vols. i-xxi (Az Osztrák-Magyar Monarchia Írásban és Képben, I-XXI) (1887-1901). He won a Grand Prix with his work String Quartet (Vonósnégyes). A number of his paintings are in the National Gallery, Budapest. There is a Pál Vágó Commemorative Committee (Vágó Pál Emlékbizottság). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7103.→Benczúr, Gyula; Székely, Bertalan; Madarász Viktor; Feszty Cyclorama; Wagner, Sándor.

Vágó, Pál (2) (Paul) (Literáti) (Budapest, 24 May 1889 - Buenos Aires, 10 November 1982) – Engineer, publicist and politician. He obtained a B.Sc. Degree in Mechanical Engineering from the Budapest Polytechnic in 1911, and a Ph.D. in 1929. From 1927 to 1939, he designed engines for electric power stations; from 1942 to 1944, he worked for the Hungarian Optical Works (Magyar Optikai Művek). During 1939 and 1940, he was a Member of Parliament with the right-wing Arrow Cross Party (Nyilas Párt) program. In October of 1944, he became the economic expert of the Arrow Cross Party. In the Szálasi Government he was Price Commissioner and Undersecretary of State for Public Food Supply from late November 1944. He settled in Austria with the Arrow Cross Party Government in the spring of 1945. Later, he emigrated to Argentina, where he worked as an engineer. During 1953-1954, he worked for the Argentine National Energy Directorate. His publications appeared in South American émigré papers. In the late 1950s, he published articles on the relationship between Hungarian National Socialism and Maoism; he recommended co-operation between the Chinese Communists and the “national” émigré community. His works include Open Letter to Professor C.A. Macartney (1960); Ein europaischer Friede im Karpathenraum (1960), and Strength of the Blood Covenant (A vérszerződés ereje), (Buenos Aires, 1976). – B: 1672, T: 7456.→Szálasi, Ferenc.

Vágó, Péter (Pierre Vago) (Budapest, 30 August 1910 - Noisy-sur-École, 1 February 2002) – Frenchman with Hungarian roots, architect, town planner and editor. In 1919, after the fall of the Hungarian Soviet (Council) Republic, he found himself in the West, when his parents were forced to emigrate. He completed his high school studies in Rome. Between 1928 and 1932, he studied at the École Speciale d'Architecture of Paris, and he received his diploma in 1932. In the same year, he became Editor for the architectural journal L'Architecture d'Aujourd'hui, continuing the editing of this distinguished organ until 1948, after which he was President of its editorial committee until 1975. In 1932 he established the Réunions Internationales d'Architectes (RIA) (Architects' International Association), working in it as a secretary. From 1948 to 1969, he was also secretary of what became the Council from the Association. During World War II, he fought on the side of General De Gaulle; in 1945, he received the Resistance Medal. Between 1948 and 1956, he took part in the post-war reconstruction as a senior architect. As an architect and town planner, he worked in several European, American, Asian and African states. The establishment of some famous buildings is linked with his name including St. Pius X Basilica Lourdes (1956-1958), Churches (Vanves, Arles, Marseille, Le Mans), University Library (Bonn), and the University of Lille. His works include l'Architecture d'aujourd'hui, revue internationale d'architecture contemporaine, (Paris, 1971);

Architektur-Experimente in Berlin und anderswo. Für Julius Posener, with others (1989), Pierre Vago, une vie intense (2000) and A Life Full of Movements (Egy mozgalmas élet) (Budapest, 2002). He was member of the Hungarian Academy of Arts from 1994, the Royal Institute of British Architects (RIBA), the German Bund Deutscher Architekten (BDA), and the American Institute of Architects (AIA). He was a recipient of a number of distinctions including Medaille de la Resistance (France, 1945), Commandeur des Arts et des Lettres (France), Comm. Grégoire le Grand (Vatican); French Knight of the Legion d'Honneur and the Star of the Order of Honor of the Republic of Hungary. – B: 1672, 1031, T: 7456. → Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary.

Vág Valley Szekler Border Guards – The region is in the Northland of Historic Hungary, (Felvidék, now Slovakia). Many names point to the former settlements of the Szekler border guards, like Dócs, Gázlós, Gimes, Jókő, Jókút, Kopcsány, Morvaőr, Nyitranyagkér, Nyitratormás, Sasvár, Végvecse, Várkős and Üzbéd. – B: 1304, 1020, T: 3240. → Szeklers.

Vahot, Imre (Emeric) (Vachott) (Gyöngyös, 25 February 1820 - Budapest, 21 February

1879) – Writer, playwright. During his student years in Eperjes (now Prešov, Slovakia), he was imprisoned for a short time for organizing a torchlight procession of protest against the conviction of László (Ladislav) Lovassy and his associates. His first writings appeared in Outlines (Rajzolatok) in 1837. In 1838, he moved and settled in Pest, and his works were published in the papers Athenaeum and Observer (Figyelő). During 1842 and 1843, he led the Novelties (Újdonságok) and Art (Művészet) columns in Kossuth's Pest News (Pesti Hírlap). In his articles, he advocated the cause of a National Theater and Hungarian theatrical works. In the service of Kossuth's political aspirations, he published the Parliamentary Gazette (Országgyűlési Almanach) in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) in 1843. From 1844 on, he took over the editing of the Story-telling Fashion Magazine of Pest (Regélő Pesti Divatlap), continuing its publishing under the title of Pest's Fashion Magazine (Pesti Divatlap). He supported the young writers; the great poet Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi was the assistant editor of the magazine for a year, though he came up against Vahot later. Vahot continued publishing the magazine until the end of 1848 already entitled Budapest Fashion Magazine (Budapesti Divatlap). In the form of a supplement, he edited the political weekly National Guard (Nemzetőr) from July to December 1848, in which he openly opposed the radical-plebeian views of Petőfi. After the downfall of the War of Independence against Habsburg Rule (1848-1849), he was briefly imprisoned. In 1851-1852, he published a 3-volume work, The Phoenix of Losonc (Losonci Phönix), written for the benefit of the City of Losonc (now Lučenec, Slovakia), burned down by the Austrian Imperial troops. In this work, he provided a platform for all significant writers of the era. From 1857 to 1862, he edited the weekly Sunrise (Napkelet). Between 1848 and 1863, he was a member of the drama-critic committee of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. His Memorial (1880), as well as his Petőfi biography: Life and Works of Sándor Petőfi (1884), was published by his son after Vahot's death. His works include Selected Theatrical works of Imre

Vahot, 1840-1848 (V. I. válogatott színházi írásai, 1840–1848), edited by G. Szigethy, facsimile edition (1981). – B: 1445, 1257, T: 7456, 7617.→Kossuth, Lajos; Petőfi, Sándor; Lovassy, László; Vachott, Sándor.

Vajay, Szabolcs (Budapest, 9 October 1921 - Vevey, Switzerland, 6 July 2010) – Writer, historian and journalist. He obtained his Ph.D. in Law and Political Science at the University of Budapest in 1943. In the same year he moved to Switzerland and, in 1945 he settled in Argentina and became a correspondent for the paper the South American Hungarians (Délamerkai Magyarság). He continued his studies at the Institut Universitaire de Hautes Études Internationales of Geneva in 1946. He was the secretary of the Institute of Modern Art Foundation in Buenos Aires from 1939 to 1953. He moved to Paris in 1953, and lived from journalism. In the meantime he studied Economics at the University of Paris (Sorbonne), and Protestant Theology at the University of Franeker in Holland. From 1959 to 1983, he represented Argentina at the UNESCO Center in Paris, and was Head of the Latin-American section of its Sociological Division. After his retirement, he settled in Vevey, Switzerland in 1983. As a historian, he was interested in ancient Hungarian history, e.g. the Arpád Dynasty (1000-1301). He wrote novels, short stories, essays and studies. His literary and historical works appeared in the papers As Possible (Ahogy Lehet); the South American Hungarians (Délamerkai Magyarság); the New Hungaria (Új Hungária); New Hungarian Path (Új Magyar Út), South American Hungarian Courier (Délamerkai Magyar Hírlap); Literary News (Irodalmi Újság); New Horizon (Új Látóhatár); Ungarn-Jahrbuch (Magyar Évkönyv), and the Catholic Review (Katolikus Szemle). Vajay was a correspondent for a number of European scientific journals. In his historical research, he was engaged in genealogical and heraldic problems and dealt with ancient Hungarian history. From 1965 to 1976, he was Vice-President of the International Heraldic Academy; from 1982 to 1986, President of the International Association of the Genealogical and Heraldic Societies. He was an Honorary Doctor of the Gáspár Károli Reformed University of Budapest, and Professor of the Péter Pázmány Catholic University. His works include L'aspect international des tentatives de restauration Habsbourg en Hongrie (1946); Der Eintritt des Ungarischen Stämmebundes in die europäische Geschichte, 862-933 (1968); Knights of the Johannite Order 1854-1987 (1987), and I, Anonymus (Én, Anonymus) (Hungarian, 2000). Among his distinctions are the Madách Prize (1956), the Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1991), and the Széchenyi Prize (1995). – B: 1672, 1257, T: 7456.→Árpád, House of; Anonymus.

Vajda, Albert (Budapest, 9 September 1919 - Sarasota FL. USA, 10 April 1991) – Writer and journalist. From 1939 he was a correspondent for the papers Fresh News (Friss Újság) and Treasure News (Kincses Újság). In 1945 he was a columnist for the paper, Independent Hungary (Független Magyarorszá), later Press Head of the Ministry of Commerce. In 1948 he was Editor for the paper World Daily of Workers (Dolgozók Világlapja). He also worked for the comic weekly Crafty Matt, the Goose-herd (Ludas Matyi). He also appeared as an M.C. and, together with Dénes (Denis) Kovács, under the name Vajkó, he wrote theatrical satires, musical radio plays, picture plays, and also puppet shows. After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he fled to the West and settled in London. Until 1964, he edited and published the humorous paper Wooden Dog (Fakutya). In late 1958, he became the London reporter for Radio Free Europe and, from June 1967 until his retirement in March 1984, he worked at its editorial office in Munich. Finally, he settled in Sarasota, Florida. His humorous writings appeared in the Literary News (Irodalmi Újság), the American Hungarian People's Word (Amerikai Magyar Népszava), the New Europe (Új Európa), the Hungarians in Canada (Kanadai Magyarság), the New World (Új Világ), and the National Guard (Nemzetőr). Some of his books also appeared in English, German and Swedish. His works include How to be a Communist, with Dénes Kovács, under the name Vajkó (London, 1958); The Origin of Monkeys, a New Discovery: Apes Are Descendants of Man (London, 1964); Lend Me an Eye (Vakulástól látásig) (London, 1972), in 1974 in German and in Swedish; Remade in England (Edinburgh, 1981), and The Eastern Triangle (Toronto, 1986). – B: 1672, 1257, T: 7456. → Kovács, Dénes.

Vajda, István (Stephan) (pen name: András Örvélyes) (Budapest, 19 March 1926 - Vienna, 18 March 1987) – Writer and journalist. He studied Law at the University of Budapest and became a journalist. Between 1945 and 1949, he worked for the periodical, Light (Világosság), from 1951 to 1953 for the paper, Independent Hungary and, between 1953 and 1956, for the periodical, Peace and Freedom (Béke és Szabadság). One of his novels led to the film Running Over (Gázolás). He also wrote radio plays. During the 1956 Revolution, he was the internal Political Editor of the paper, Truth; later, Editor for the cultural column of the Evening News. In February 1957 he fled Hungary and settled in Vienna. Until early 1960s, he published in Hungarian. Under his pen name, he wrote reports for the Literary News (Irodalmi Újság). Thereafter, he wrote only in German. He was an associate of the Europe Studio in Salzburg – an international theatrical venture; then he worked for the economic-political journal, Trend, Vienna, and became its Eastern European expert. He wrote novels, plays, radio plays, historical studies and TV-plays. His works include Ungarn, with Hella Pflanzler (1986); L'Accident, novel (1960, in English 1963); Felix Austria (1980), and Reisen Anno 1900 (1981). In 1963, he received the Mackensen Prize, and was also given an honorary doctorate. – B: 1672, 1257, T: 7456.

Vajda, János (John) (Pest, 8 May 1827 - Budapest, 17 January 1897) – Poet and publicist. He completed his high school education in Székesfehérvár and Pest. His first poem appeared in the paper Life Scenes (Életképek) in 1844. He became a strolling actor in 1845. From the summer of 1846, he was a private tutor, then a trainee farm manager at Alcsút. In 1847 he worked as an official at Pest, his poems regularly appearing. He was accepted into Petőfi's circle of friends, and into the writers' society of the Pilvax Coffee House. He took part in the March 1848 events in Pest; in August he joined the army and later became a Second-Lieutenant. After the collapse of the 1848-1849 War of Independence against Habsburg oppression, in December 1849, he was drafted into the Imperial Austrian Army, where he served for one year. After his return to Hungary, he worked in Kiskunhalas and Buda. He was hopelessly in love with Georgina Kratochwill, who however, became the sweetheart of a rich count. This experience became the source of the Gina poems that played such an important role in his lyric poetry. From 1855, he was a correspondent for the journal Hungarian Press (Magyar Sajtó). Between 1857 and 1863, he was Editor of the weekly Women's World (Nővilág); in 1861 and 1862, he was Editor of the popular political bi-weekly Fighter (Csatár), then Editor of the Hungarian Press in the first half of 1863. In his pamphlets, Vajda fought for the development of the bourgeoisie. From 1864 to 1866, he worked at the Press Office of the Chancellery in Vienna. He strongly condemned the 1867 Compromise, both in his poems and in his political writings. In 1867 he became a correspondent for the Hungarian News (Magyar Újság), affiliated with the Kossuth Party; in 1868 he was a correspondent for the weekly The Flag of the Nation (A Nép Zászlója). In 1870 he became a member of the Kisfaludy Society. From 1870 until his death, most of his writings appeared in the paper, Sunday News (Vasárnapi Újság), and its supplement Political Novelties (Politikai Újdonságok). The nicest creations of his political and love poetry came from the 1870s and 1880s. It was in 1880 that he married; however, divorce shortly followed. From the 1880s, he suffered from various illnesses. In 1896 he was a correspondent for the journal Present Age (Jelenkor). Deep sorrow radiates from his poems, but they are concise and forceful with bold inventiveness. At the depth of his somber solitude, he longed for a popular and national renewal, as did the poet Endre (Andrew) Ady, who regarded Vajda as his "sacred predecessor". Vajda was a significant poet of the second half of the 19th century. His works include Poems (Költemények) (1856); Alarm Bells (Vészhangok) poems (1860); From the Diary of a National Guard (Egy honvéd naplójából) (1869); More Recent Poems (Újabb költemények) (1876); Complete Poems vols. i,ii (Összes költeményei I-II) (1881), and Morbid Currents (Kóros áramok) (1896). – T: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Ady, Endre; Petőfi, Sándor.

Vajda, Lajos (Louis) (Zalaegerszeg, 6 August 1908 - Budakeszi, 7 September 1941 – Painter. He was a student of István (Stephen) Csók at the Academy of Applied Arts of Budapest from 1927 to 1930. First, he appeared with a still life at the 1928 exhibition of the National Salon. He joined the young constructive artists of the paper Work (Munka), edited by Lajos (Louis) Kassák. Between 1930 and 1934, together with Dezső (Desider) Korniss, he studied under Léger in Paris. There he became acquainted with cubism, surrealism and the avant-garde cinematic art. From 1934 in Szentendre and Szigetmonostor, he studied folk-art motives following the method of Bartók's folk music collecting. On a number of his drawings, a metamorphism took place between the peasant art of Szentendre and the material culture. In his style, the folk motives became fused with abstract and surrealistic marks and symbols. He also absorbed the style of the Serbian church art. His pictures include Self Portrait (Önarckép) (1925); Girl Icon (Leány Ikon) (1936); Mask with Moon (Maszk holddal) (1938), and Horses (Lovak), pencil-drawing (1935). The Artists' New Society (Képzőművészek Új Társasága – KUT) rejected his works. He organized his one-man shows in the early 1940s. He died of tuberculosis in 1941, at the age of 33. In 1943, a memorial exhibition was organized for him in the Hall of Art (Művészcsarnok), Creation (Alkotás), followed by exhibitions in several galleries as well. His art is the most original fruit of Hungarian avant-garde painting; rationalistic structural principle is combined in his art with surrealistic visionary effect. The European School exhibited his works in 1948, and in a one-man memorial show in Szentendre in April 1966. – T: 0883, 0934, T: 7456.→Csók, István; Kassák, Lajos; Korniss, Dezső; Szentendre Artist Colony; Bartók, Béla.

Vajda, László (1) (Ladislav) (Budapest, 3 February 1923 - ) – Ethnographer and Africa researcher. His higher studies were at the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest, where he obtained a Ph.D. in 1947. He worked as an assistant professor at the Institute of Ethnography, Budapest. From 1955, he was an Associate at the same Institute. After the 1956 Revolution, he fled to West Germany. He settled in Munich and, from 1957, he worked as an assistant for the Ludwig-Maximilian-Universität für Völkerkunde und Afrikanistische Department. In 1968 he became Professor of Ethnography at the same University. He retired in 1988. His special field of study was the formation and history of the African and nomadic cultures. Among others, his works include Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der Hirtenkulturen I-II (Research into the History of Shepherd-cultures I, II) (1968). On the occasion of his 75th birthday a selected volume of his works was published (1999). – B: 1672, 1105, 1970, T: 7456.

Vajda, László (2) (Ladislav) (Budapest, 1878 - Berlin, 10 March 1933) – Film-script writer, actor, theater manager and theater director. He began his acting career in the countryside. Later, he worked as the Editor for the Tolnai World Paper (Tolnai Világlapja), and Theater and Life (Színház és Élet), during 1905 and 1906. From 1908, he was Manager of the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház). During World War I, he worked as a dramaturge at the Corvina Film Works. He wrote a number of theater plays with Tamás (Thomas) Moly, István (Stephen) Bródy, Aurél Kárpáti, etc. From 1922 he lived in Vienna, and later in Berlin. He wrote silent film-scripts in Hungary and abroad, and directed quite a few successful feature films. He was a colleague of D. W. Pabst and was well known Europe-wide. His outstanding feature film was the Beggar's Opera after Brecht's stage work in 1931. His feature films include Rogue of the Village (Falu rossza) (1915); The Son of Nobody (A senki fia) (1917); Ave Caesar (1918); White Rose (Fehér Rózsa) (1919); Nameless Castle (Névtelen vár) (1920); Czardas Princess (German, 1927); Western Front: 1918 (Nyugati front: 1918) (German, 1930), and Love-express (Szerelemexpress) (German, 1931). His plays and translations of plays are often staged. His stage-management works include G. B. Shaw's Mrs. Warren's Profession (Warrenné mestersége), and Zapolska's The Czarevich (Cárevics). His dramas include Actors (Színészek) (1905), and May-fly (Tiszavirág), co-authored with Bródy, music by A. Rényi (1915). His translations include Tolstoy's The Living Corps (Az élő halott) (1911), Zapolska's Warsaw Citadel (Varsói citadella) (1917). – B: 1445, 0883, T: 7456. → Bródy, István; Kárpáti, Aurél; Moly, Tamás.

Vajda, Mihály András (Michael, Andrew) (Budapest, 10 February 1935 - ) – Philosopher. He began his studies at the Lenin Institute, Budapest, and was taken on by the distinguished Marxist philosopher György (George) Lukács as his student in 1953. He continued his studies at the University of Budapest (1957-1960). He began work as a primary school teacher (1958-1961). From 1961 he was an Associate of the Philosophical Institute of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. In the meantime, he was gradually estranged from Marxist ideas; he was dismissed from the school in Budapest in 1973, and lived from teaching languages, and from translations. He was a guest professor at Bremen from 1977 to 1980. In the 1980s, he was a guest professor on several occasions in New York. Later, he worked as a teacher in Siegen (1991-1992) and in Kassel in 1994. Finally, he was rehabilitated in 1989. From 1990, he became Head of the Philosophy Department at the University of Debrecen. Between 1996 and 2000, he was Director of the Philosophical Research Institute of the Academy of Sciences. Since 1992, he has been Editor-in-Chief of the journal Trouble (Gond). He earned his Ph.D. in 1992. He is engaged in problems of theory of science and history, and also deals with phenomenology, German philosophy of the 20th century, and the theory of totalitarian societies. He was one of the translators of Martin Heidegger's work Existence and Time (Lét és idő), and researched his role in the history of philosophy. He became a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 2001, ordinary 2007). His works include Critique of the Scientific Approach of Husserl's Phenomenology (1968); Fascism as a Mass Movement (1976); The State and Socialism (1981); Russian Socialism in Central Europe (1989, 1992); Post-modern Heidegger (1993); No for Eternity (Nem az örökkévalóságnak) (1996), and In the Draft of Socrates (Szokrateszi huzatban) (2009). His distinctions include the Alföld Prize (1993), the Széchenyi Prize (1999), the Officer's Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2005), and the József Hevesi Prize (2008). – B: 1031, 1257, T: 7456.→Lukács, György.

Vajda, Péter (Vanyola, 20 January 1808 - Szarvas, 10 February 1846) – Poet, pedagogue and naturalist. He studied in Sopron and Győr and later he studied Medicine; however, during the cholera epidemic in 1831, he was removed from the University because the charge of organizing a student demonstration was brought against him. For years, he lived from his own writings and editorial work. In 1838 he became an assistant editor for the paper Useful Amusements (Hasznos mulatságok) while, in 1834, he initiated the first educational journal in Hungarian, the Penny Magazine (Garasos Tár) in Leipzig and, in 1838, he founded together with Endre (Andrew) Kunoss, the journal Nature (Természet). He was the author of a number of scientific works and carried out translations; he also translated into Hungarian Cuvier's Zoology (Állattan). In 1842, he became a member of the Kisfaludy Society, and the first secretary of the Natural Scientific Society (Természettudományi Társaság), but left it when the Society adopted the epithet "Royal". From 1835, he taught in Szarvas, where he also organized song-days. Because of his moralistic speeches in the school, summarizing his plebeian democratic views, the government committed him for trial. His works include Correspondence in Pest, vols. i,ii (Pesti levelek I-II, (1835-1837)); Botany (Növénytudomány (1836)); Songs of the Homeland, vols. i-iv (Dalhon, I-IV) poems, short stories (1839-1844), and Death of Buda (Buda halála, drama (1867)). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Kunoss, Endre.

Vajdaság, Hungarians in – Hungarians in the Délvidék, the Southern region of Historic Hungary. Today, under the name of Vojvodina, it is part of Serbia. During the Turkish occupation (1526-1686), it was devastated and depopulated. After the expulsion of the Turks, the Austrian Government repopulated the area with Serbs and Germans. Hungarians, who had escaped to the northern region of the country, were not allowed to return, but many of them managed it anyhow. At the end of World War I, the Versailles-Trianon Peace Treaty carved out this territory from Hungary, with 420,000 ethnic Hungarians – 32.5 % of the population – and ceded it to Serbia/Yugoslavia together with Croatia. The German population was approximately the same as the Hungarian, only 1/3rd made up the rest (Bosnian, Serb, Gypsy, Ruthenian, Coation and Jew). Then started the settlement of a great number of Serbs in this region. Ethnic Hungarians were exploited and oppressed, and their number has been constantly diminishing since then. Following World War II, with the consent of the Yugoslav Communist leader Josip Tito, the partisans indiscriminately massacred about 40,000 Hungarian men, women, and children. Before murdering them, the partisans usually tortured and mutilated their hostages with indescribable savagery. Several Hungarian villages disappeared at this time, such as Csurog, Mosorin and Zsablya, where the inhabitants were collectively declared criminals simply for being Hungarians. Survivors, who gave revealing eyewitness accounts in a document addressed to the Hungarian Minister of External Affairs at the time, described in detail the genocide unique until then in this part of Europe. Most probably, due to Soviet interference, there was no follow-up action. Even Prince-Primate Cardinal József Mindszenty's petition about them – addressed to the same minister – was never answered. According to the 1981 census, 2,028,239 was the number of the population of the Autonomous Province of Voivodina, the number of Hungarian ethnic minority was 382,820, i.e., 18.9 %.

During the years following World War II, under the guise of the program “Fraternity and Unity”, invented only to blind the eyes of the Western world, the Tito regime methodically carried out ethnic cleansing that were substantiated by a rapidly diminishing Hungarian population. Increasing number of Serbs settled among the once significant unit of 11-12,000 Hungarians of Temerin. The new Serbian settlers armed with their assigned house credits and secure jobs, slowly pushed the local Hungarians to the fringes of everyday life. By revising the city limits and annexing the neighboring Serbian villages, the local government doubled the Serbian population, and the Serbs became the administrative decision makers, ruling, without exception, unfavorably toward the Hungarian inhabitants. They applied the same tactics in other Hungarian centers as well. The 1991 census showed another loss of 46,000 Hungarians in the former Yugoslavia. Their number dwindled, partly due to mixed marriages, and partly to their submission, based on fear. The horrors of war still terrify the Hungarians living in the Vajdaság, resulting in an exodus of predominantly young people, mainly to dodge military service and participation in the civil war of the disintegrating Yugoslavia. – B: 1031, 1020, T: 3240.→Atrocities against Hungarians.

Vajk (Bajk) (Esztergom, ca 975 - Székesfehérvár, 15 August 1038) – Hungarian Reigning Prince. Ancient name of the son of Prince Géza-István and Saroldu, who later became King István I (St. Stephen) after conversion to Christianity. The chronicles of contemporary Bishop Thietmar of Mersenburg, record him by the name of Vajk. The name appears in many regions: a village name in the county of Nyitra (Lúcica and Zitvon), county of Bratislava (Pozsony now in Slovakia) as Vajka (Vojka nad Dunajom) and in the county of Tolna as Vejke. In documents of the Árpád era there is a Vojk clan mentioned, from which the Voikffy family name originates. – B: 0942, 1078, 1138, T: 7658.→István I, King.

Vajna, Andrew George (born Vajna András György) (Andy) (Budapest, 1 August 1944 - ) – Film producer. In 1956, he left Hungary alone – at the age of 12. He appeared in America and completed his studies in Los Angeles, California, USA. He started working as a hairdresser, then as wig maker, and later as a blue-jeans manufacturer. Then he became a film producer in Hong-Kong, where he made the world's first Kungfu film, the prototype of a very successful series. His idea was the production of the Rambo Series with Sylvester Stallone, then the Terminator Series with Arnold Schwarzenegger. The next success was the Basic Instinct with Sharon Stone, created from the script of the Hungarian Joe Eszterhás. Recently, Vajna has produced some of his films in Hungary, such as Music Box, Evita, Spy Games, and the I Spy. The film, The Collateral Damage is about the tragedy of 11 September 2001. His latest film is Freedom Fury in 2006, made in memory of the Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1956. His Hungarian firm is the InterCom, founded in 1989. He is a world-renowned film director, with more than 40 feature films to his credit. On 15 January 2011, the Hungarian government appointed him Government Commissioner in charge of the Hungarian film industry. – B: 1031, 1037, T: 7103.→Eszterhás, Joe.

Vajna, Gábor (Gabriel) (1891-1946) – Politician. After World War I, he served at the Viennese Embassy, later at the Ministry of Defense. In 1924 he retired from the Army as a Major, and became Director of the Gunpowder Factory of Füzfő. In 1939 he became a Member of Parliament with a National Socialist program. He exposed several sabotage actions of the Resistance, and introduced anti-Jewish measures. He was one of the leaders of the right-wing Arrow Cross Party, and close adherent of the national-socialist leader Ferenc (Francis) Szálasi. From 16 October 1944, he was Minister of the Interior in the Szálasi Government. After World War II, in Communist Hungary under Soviet military occupation, the “People’s Court” sentenced him to death as a “war criminal”, and was executed. – B: 1984, T: 7456.→Szálasi, Ferenc.

Vajna, Vilmos (William) (Dés, now Dej, Romania, 3 December 1854 - Budapest, 18 April 1932) – Physician and dentist. He received his Medical Degree from the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) in 1879. He was a demonstrator there in the Dermatological Clinic from 1879 to 1884; thereafter, he was a research student in the Dental Institute; he became Professor of Dentistry at the University of Budapest in 1891. From 1894, he was a private practitioner in the Hungarian Capital, and the designer of numerous instruments such as lever and protector. His works include On Tooth Extraction (A foghúzásról) (1893). – B; 1730, T: 7456.

Vajta, Vilmos (William) (Kecskemét, 15 June 1918 - Alingsas, Sweden, 20 October 1998) – Lutheran theologian and writer. He studied Theology at Sopron University and at the Universities of Stockholm, Uppsala and Lund. He was ordained in 1940. In 1941 he became Pastor for the Hungarian settlers in Sweden. He obtained his Ph.D. from the University of Lund. His dissertation title was: Die Theologie des Gottesdienstes bei Luther. From 1953 to 1964, he was Head of the Theological Section of the Lutheran World Federation in Geneva. He was its Representative at the II Vatican Council (1963-1965). From 1964 on, he was Founder and Director of the Ecumenical Research Institute at Strasbourg, then a research professor until 1981. He taught Lutheran Theology at the University of Lund. He was a specialist in the Theology of Diacony (A Diakónia Teológiája). Among his numerous works, several appeared in Hungarian. He regularly wrote in the Traveling Companion (Utitárs); Christian Religious Life (Lund 1946); Christian Belief (Keresztyén hitélet) (1946), and Communion of Christ and the Community of Saints in Luther's Theology (Communio Krisztus és a szentek közössége Luther teológiájában) (1993), and also his selected writings: While We Have Time (Amig időnk van) (1998). His other works include Luther on Worship (1958); Die Theologie des Gottessdienstes bei Luther (1958); Die evangelisch-lutherische Kirche, Vergangenheit und Gegenwart, edited by him (1977, 1983); Luther on Worship (Philadelphia 1958); Interkommunion mit Rom? (1969), and Évangile et sacrement (Paris, 1973). He was awarded an honorary doctorate by the Theological Faculty of the University of Kiel, and by the Lutheran Theological Academy of Budapest. He was one of the leading and influential Lutheran theologians in modern times. – B: 1050, 1672, T: 7456.

Vak Bottyán→Bottyán, János (1).

Vál (middle of 10th century) – According to the 40th chapter of On the administration of the Empire (De administrando imperio) by Byzantine Emperor Constantine VII, Porphyrogenetos, “Born in purple” (913-959), Vál was the grandson of Árpád, son of Jutas. By 949-952, the chronicles record Vál as the “present” ruler, while he may actually have been the guardian of the young Taks who, according to the Hungarian chronicles, was the direct descendant of Zoltán. They do not even mention Vál. His name may have been synonymous with Bulcsú, as noted in the Hungarian chronicles. Vál was preserved as the name of a village in County Fejér. – B: 0942, T: 7658.

Válaszút Comedy – (Comoedia Válaszutiana) drama about a fictitious religious dispute. It was written around 1572, and dealt with the Reformed-Unitarian disputes, probably in the town of Válaszút, situated between Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and Dés (now Dej, Romania). Its historical basis was a polemical writing sent by a Unitarian congregation via Ferenc (Francis) Dávid to Péter Méliusz Juhász. David was invited to the Debrecen Reformed Synod in 1567. Thus the characters portrayed in it are easily identifiable. – B: 1136, T: 7617.→Dávid, Ferec; Méliusz Juhász, Péter.

Val d'Anniviers, Myth of Hun Origin, Switzerland – Local tradition believes that Attila's Huns founded some villages in the Anniviers Valley, Canton Wallis, and South Switzerland. The citizens of Hüniken, Viscoye, Pinsec, St Luc, St Jean and Grimentz, about 2,000 persons, profess to be Hun descendants. Their present language is French mixed with Italian, in which there are also apparent similarities to Hungarian language peculiarities. Their mongoloid features – of which even last century's globetrotters wrote – are barely visible today. The ancient custom of the funeral feast, the cult of the dead, are extinct already, but their folk art, especially the Alpine chapels and the ornaments on the gables of houses show many identical features to those of the Szeklers.

This question has greatly preoccupied European history researchers. A whole literature arose on this theme, such as Ferenc (Francis) Toldy: Hun Myths in the Helvetian Snowy Mountains (Hun mondák a Helvetian havasokban), an essay published in 1834; Anton Karl Fischer: Die Hunnen in schweizerischen Eifisch Tal und ihre Nachkommen bis auf die heutige Zeit (The Huns in the Swiss Eifisch Valley and their Descendants to the Present Time), published in 1896; Bernard Savioz, the French writer, native of Pinsec village, published a book: Valaisans, descendants d'Attila (The Wallis People, Descendants of Attila). In the 1960-s Jenő (Eugene) Muzsnay published several books on this question.

In addition to the results of etymological research, runic signs found in Pinsec not long ago, as well as blood tests carried out by the Japanese, indicate a definite Asian origin. – B: 1078, 1020, T: 7669, 7617.→Eifischthal, Hun Runic Writing at; Toldy, Ferenc; Muzsnai, Jenő; Hungarian Runic Script.

Valentinus Ungarus (Bálint Hadnagy) (15-16th century) – Pauline monk. He was educated in the monastery at Budaszentlőrinc. His interest was Theology and Astronomy. From his works only a part of his astrological work and a church historical excerpt survived. The latter is entitled: Prodigia Sancti Pauli primi eremitae (The Miracles of St Paul the Hermit). It reached two publications, one at Krakow in 1501, and another in Venice in 1511. This was bought by Hungary in 1935, and it is in the possession of the Ervin Szabó Library, Budapest. – B: 1136, T: 7103.

Váli, A(lbert) Ferenc (Francis) (Budapest, 25 May 1905 - Amherst MA, USA, 19 November 1984) – Lawyer, historian and author. He obtained his Doctorate in Law from the University of Budapest in 1927, and a Doctorate in Political Sciences from the University of London, in 1932. From 1935, he was on the teaching staff of the Law School of the University of Budapest. During World War II, the Government posted him to Istanbul, Turkey, on a secret mission to make contact with the Allied Powers. From 1943 to 1946, he lectured on International Law at the University of Istanbul. After the War, he returned to Hungary, where he was an International Law adviser to the Ministry of Finance, and taught at the University of Budapest. In early 1949, both of his works were banned by the Communists. In 1951, he and his wife were arrested for his western connections. His wife remained in prison for three years. Vali was provisionally released on 18 October 1956. During the Revolution, he was recalled to the University, and helped reorganize the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. After the crushed Revolution, Váli and his wife escaped to Austria, and later, to England. He did research work in London, Paris and The Hague, and after the end of 1957, in New York and Washington. From 1958 to 1961, Váli was a Research Associate at the Harvard Center for International Affairs. From 1962 to his retirement in 1975, he worked for the Government Department at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, USA. In 1957 and 1958, he took an active part in the work of the Hungarian Committee, and in the clarification of the international legal bearings of the Hungarian question. In his studies in English, he dealt with international law and on problems connected with Hungary. He published several books in Hungarian, German and English. His works include The Hungarian Revolution and International Law (New York, 1959); Rift and Revolt in Hungary (Harvard, 1961); Nationalism Versus Communism (Cambridge, MA, 1961); The Future of Germany (Germany, 1967), and Bridge Across the Bosphorus, (The Johns Hopkins Press, 1971). – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Váli, Mari (Mrs. József Peti) (Komárom, 17 November 1840 - Pápa, 17 May 1915) – Writer of memories. As niece of the great writer Mór (Maurice) Jókai, after the early death of her husband and child, she moved to the Jókai household and helped in the housekeeping. During her uncle's lifetime, she began writing her reminiscences, in which she immortalized Jókai's everyday life, his relationship to members of his family with a keen capacity for observation. The voluminous manuscript is kept in the National Széchenyi Library, Budapest; only selections of it have so far been published. Mari Váli's work is entitled My Memories of Mór Jókai, published by Sándor (Alexander) Lukácsy (1955). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Jókai, Mór.

Valkó, Imre (Emeric) (Abony, 1 September 1902 - Boston, USA, 2 March 1975) – Chemist. He completed his secondary school studies at the Ferenc (Francis) Kölcsey High School, Budapest; his higher studies were completed at the University of Vienna. During 1928 and 1929, he worked as the research engineer at the Hungarian Rubber Factory in Budapest. From 1929 to 1938, he was a research scientist at the laboratory of the I.G. Farbenindustrie of Ludwigshafen, Germany. During these years of research work, he published the study on colloid chemistry with Wolfgang Pauli, while in 1937, he published an independent work on the colloid chemical basis of textile-improvement. In 1939, after a brief visit to Hungary, he moved with his family first to Canada, and then to the USA. During his years in the USA, he was mainly engaged in textile chemistry; at first he led the research laboratory of Drew Co. and a little later he became a professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT). His name became widely known through his article in the 1932-volume Kolloidzeitschrift; his article is co-authored with K.H. Meyer and G. von Susich, in which they solved the riddle of the elasticity of rubber. The three authors showed that the large molecular structure of rubber allows stronger rearrangement when being stretched; it shifts into a state of lower entropy and lower transforming capability; on passing through this action, it tries to return into its original state according to the second law of thermodynamics. Valkó's inventions in the fields of textile improvement and fabric dyeing are also considered important. In his later works he pioneered the use of natural fibers in place of synthetic fibers. He was awarded a number of scientific distinctions and he was a member of the New York Academy. – B: 1031, 1105, T: 7456.

Valkó, László (Ladislav) (Budapest, 18 June 1901 - Spokane WA, 1982) – Economist and agronomist. He obtained his Ph.D. in Agronomics from the University of Budapest. He published several books and studies on problems of agriculture, American and international cooperatives, and social politics. He was an Associate of the National Social Inspectorate. After World War II, he emigrated to the USA. In 1949, he worked as an assistant professor at Washington State University in Pullman, WA, where, in 1957 he became Professor of Cooperative Law. His works include The First Cooperative Law (Pullman, 1952); International Handbook of Cooperative Legislation (Pullman, 1954), in German: Handbuch für Genossenschaftsgesetzgebung (1960), and Cooperative in the U.S. Federal Legislation 1890-1980 (Pullman, 1981). – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Vállas, Antal (Anthony) (Pest, 18 May 1809 - New Orleans, LA, USA, 20 July 1869) – Engineer and mathematician. He studied in Pest and Vienna, where he obtained his Ph.D. in 1831. By age 17, he was a teacher in Sátoraljaújhely, and temporarily a member of the Holy Teaching Order; later a private tutor of Hungarian families in Vienna. In 1837, he was invited to become a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He taught at the School of Farming in Rohonc (now Rechnitz, Burgenland, Austria) (1838-1841), and was an Associate Editor of the paper Rohonc Gazette (Rohonci Közlemények) (1840-1841). In 1841, he published his very influential pamphlet entitled On the Hungarian Central Polytechnic, about the economical-technological aspirations of the Reform period, which served as the basis of a future legislative bill. He participated in the organization of the Industrial Association. On the occasion of the 1841 World Fair in Paris, he made extensive tours of the western countries. He was Editor of Weekly (Hetilap) in 1845, and he was appointed a university professor in 1848. In 1850, the Habsburg absolutistic rule stripped him of his position. In 1851, he emigrated to the USA, and in 1854, he established a Naval School, in 1858 a Scientific Academy in New Orleans, and he served as its secretary until his death. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Vályi Nagy, Ervin (Budapest, 11 November 1924 - Budapest, 4 December 1993) – Minister of the Reformed Church and theologian. His father was a Major in the Royal Hungarian Defense Forces; his mother was the descendant of a farmer's family. In 1944 he completed his studies at the Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy, Budapest, after which he was sent to the front and, for a short time, he fell into captivity. In 1945 he worked as a military counselor. In 1946 he registered at the Reformed Theological Academy of Pápa. In 1947-1948 he studied Theology at Strassbourg on a scholarship from the World Council of Churches. From 1948 to 1957, he was a parish minister in Csurgó. As a member of the National Committee of the Csurgó district, he was arrested in 1957, spent 2 months in detention on remand, and was interned at Balatonlelle. From 1957 to 1964, he was the minister in Balatonlelle. In 1965 he obtained his Theological Doctorate from the University of Basel, with the dissertation entitled: The Dialogical Essence of the Church (Az egyház dialogikus lényege). In 1967 he published his doctoral thesis in form of a book entitled Kirche als Dialog, also in English: Church as Dialogue (Fortress Press). At first, he was a research fellow, later a research professor at the Institute of Denominational Science of the Hungarian Reformed Church (1965 - 1980). From 1968 to 1975, he was a member of Faith and Church Committee of the World Council of Churches. From 1973 to 1974, he was a visiting professor at the University of Mainz, Germany. From 1979, he was a member of the organization Scientific Society for the Study of Protestant Theology (Tudományos Társaság a Protestáns Teológia Művelésére). In 1980, he wrote an essay in the Bibó Memorial Volume. From 1980 to 1985, he was Professor of the Theological Chair of the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest. His book, Western Theological Trends in Our Century (Nyugati teológiai irányzatok századunkban), was published in 1984. From 1980 (and from 1985 as a pensioner) he was the minister of the German-speaking Reformed Congregation in Budapest. By 22 November 1993, he completed the preview of his book, At the Edge of All Times. Selected writings (Minden idők peremén. Válogatott írások.) (1993). Vályi Nagy was an outstanding theologian and educationalist. – B: 2039, T: 7456.

Vályi Nagy, Ferenc Francis) (Felsővály, 30 September 1765 - Sárospatak, 15 January 1820) – College teacher, philologist and poet. From 1783 to 1793 he worked as a teacher in Miskolc, and then, after his study trip abroad, in Sárospatak from 1798. He wrote fables, lyric poems and poems in the style of István (Stephen) Gyöngyösi; later, under the influence of the eminent Ferenc (Francis) Kazinczy, he also wrote epic poems. More valuable are his translations, e.g. Homer's Iliad (1821), urged by Kazinczy, and certain of its sections were used in Ferenc (Francis) Kölcsey's translation; it is the first complete translation into Hungarian and it gave an opportunity for the first Hungarian plagiarism.

trial: the so-called Iliad Trial. His works include Stories of László Hunyadi (Hunyadi László történetei, 1793); Odes in Horace's Meters (Ódák Horátz mértékein) (1807), and Polyhymnia, his collected poems (1820). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Kazinczy, Ferenc; Kölcsey, Ferenc; Gyöngyösi, István.

Vámbéry, Ármin (Hermann Wamberger, Ármin Wamberger) (Dunaszerdahely, now Dunajská Streda, Slovakia, 19 March 1832 - Budapest, 15 September 1913) – Orientalist, Turkologist and linguist. He attended school in his birthplace and Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), but because of difficult family circumstances, was able to finish only six of the eight years of high school. Later, he worked as a home tutor in several cities, during which time he became acquainted with many outstanding persons in Hungarian cultural life. At the age of 25, he was familiar with more than twenty languages; and because of his excellent linguistic talent, scientific circles followed his life with interest.

In 1857, he traveled to Turkey, where the Turkish Government offered him a position and citizenship in recognition of his many years' scientific work. However, he refused the honor. Between 1862 and 1864, he made his second famous Oriental journey to such territories of which Europe at that time had only scant knowledge. Being very conversant in Oriental languages and customs, he made many dangerous trips under the name of Reshit Effendi. The purpose of his journey was to discover the origin of the Hungarians by researching the numerous connections with the Turkish people, as well as by examining the life of the Central Asian peoples. Through his travels, he earned Hungarian and international approbation for himself, and even the English Government sought his advice on several issues on Asia.

From 1865 he was Professor of Oriental Languages at the University of Pest. In 1894, with the special permission of the Sultan, he carried out research work in the Treasury of the Sultan's Palace, and in the closed storehouses of the museums and mosques in Istanbul. He discovered and listed many relics of the Hungarian nation's past. Vámbéry argued that the similarities between Turkish and Hungarian pointed to a common origin for the two languages in Northern Asia. This theory was opposed by followers of the Finno-Ugric theory on the origins of Hungarian, who gradually triumphed in Hungary, but not in Turkey. He wrote some 25 important works including "Abuska", a Turkish-Chagatai dictionary (1861); Meine Wanderungen und Erlebnisse in Persien (1867); Uigurisch-Türkische Wortvergleichungen (1870); Der Ursprung der Magyaren (1882) and the Story of Hungary (1887). The outstanding results of his life's work included the pioneering work on ethnography, geography and linguistic features of Asia Minor, as well as the founding of the world-wide recognized Hungarian Orientalist School. His works, published in Hungarian and in German, were translated into ten languages. A High School in Dunaszerdahely bears his name. – B: 0883, 1031, 1752, T: 7669.

Vámos, György (George) (Budapest, 21 November 1946 -) – Dancer and choreographer. He completed a course at the State Ballet Institute in 1967, after which, until 1972, he was a member of the Opera House, Budapest. From 1972 to 1985 he was a solo dancer of the Opera House of Munich; then, for three years, he was the leading choreographer of the Dortmund Ballet. From 1988 he was Director of the Ballet Company of Bonn. From 1991 he also took over the directorship of the Ballet Company of Basel. He is a dancer of outstanding technique and evocative ability; as a choreographer, he had international success especially in composing dancing dramas. Of his one-act ballets, one was taken over by the Ballet Company of Győr, and one by that of Szeged. His works include Carmina Burana, Lucidor, Spartacus, Red and Black (Vörös és fekete). – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Vámos, Imre (Emeric) (Mezőhegyes, 11 February 1927 - Budapest, 17 January 1993) – Writer and journalist. He completed his High School studies in Csongrád. From 1945 to 1947 he studied at the Academy of Cultural Policy and Diplomacy (Kulturpolitikai és Diplomáciai Akadémia), Budapest, and concurrently he was a functionary of the National Peasant Party (Nemzeti Paraszt Párt). Later, he worked as journalist for the paper Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet) and Hungarian Sunday (Magyar Vasárnap). In 1948 he was arrested for a short while and tortured. In November 1948, he fled to the West, and settled in Zürich. Some of his writings appeared in the paper Western Herald (Nyugati Hírnök), and New Hungarian Road (Új Magyar Út). Late in 1951, he moved to Munich. Between January 1952 and June 1957 (under the name Janus), he was a correspondent for Radio Free Europe. During the fall of 1950, he played an important part in the launching of the journal Horizon (Látóhatár); between 1950 and 1952 he was its Editor, later its Managing Editor and Publisher. After the Hungarian Revolution in 1956, the editorial board of Látóhatár split into two. From July 1958 to February 1962, the Horizon was edited and published by Imre Vámos and Béla Horváth. However, he had no part in the New Horizon (Új látóhatár), which appeared until 1990. For a while he was Secretary of the Council of Hungarian Writers Abroad, and a correspondent of the paper, Literary News (Irodalmi Újság). In February 1962, he returned to Hungary and became one of the editors of the periodical, Horizon, and he also became an Associate Editor of the periodical, Hungarian Nation. In his books, published after his return, he featured mainly short stories, his memories abroad, and his travelogues, including European Travels (Európai utazások) (1965); On Historical Battlefields (Történelmi csatatereken) (1968), and Village in the Orchard: History of the SOS Kinder-village of Battonya (Falu a gyümölcsösben: A battonyai SOS-Gyermekfalu története). – B: 1672, 1031, T: 7456.→Horváth, Béla.

Vámos, László (Ladislás) (Budapest, 30 January 1928 - Budapest, 3 February 1996) – Theater manager. After completing the manager's course at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, he was contracted by the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. From 1952 he worked as Manager for the Csokonai Theater (Csokonai Színház) Debrecen, and from 1955 until 1973, he was Manager for the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), Budapest. From 1967 to 1980, he was also the Manager of the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház), Budapest. Between 1982 and 1990, he became Theater and Artistic Manager for the National Theater, Budapest. From 1981 to 1990, he was Secretary of the Hungarian Theatrical Association. He worked as a teacher of theater management from 1960. He worked also as a manager of plays, operas, operettas and musicals. Vámos was an artist always ready for a task, solving the most complex problems of the theater with great professional expertise, musicality, and sensitive to the aspect of spectacle on stage. His stage-management of Hamlet in 1962 created an international response. He appeared as guest artist of theater management in Austria, Germany, Poland, France and the USA. His managements include works such as P. Bornemisza's Hungarian Electra (Magyar Elektra); V. Hugo's Ruy Blas (A királyasszony lovagja); Shakespeare's As You Like It (Ahogy tetszik), A Winter's Tale (Téli rege), The Tempest (A vihar), Hamlet, Richard III; Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája) (also as an opera); Molière's Learned Ladies (Les Femmes savants – Tudós nők); Katona's Bánk bán; S. Márai's Adventure (Kaland); Verdi's Il Trovatore; B. Britten's A Midsummer Night's Dream; B. Bartók's Bluebeard's Castle (Kékszakállú herceg vára); Kodály's Háry János, and Verdi's Falstaff. He was awarded the Kossuth Prize (1970), the Mari Jászai Prize (1955, 1962), received the Merited Artist title (1967), and the Outstanding Artist title (1980). There is a memorial plaque of him in District XIII of Budapest. – B: 1445, 1122, T: 7456. → Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán; Márai, Sándor; Katona, József.

Vámos-Tóth, Bátor (Köröstarcsa, 1928 - Washington State, USA, ca. 2005) – Geographer, linguist. He lived in Honolulu (Hawaii) for nearly 24 years. In 1998, he settled in Washington State. On behalf of UNESCO, he taught pedagogy at Freetown, the capital of Sierra Leone, as leader of the UNESCO group. At first, he thought it was strange; later, he was startled by the similarity of local names and tribes with Hungarian, as e.g. Bán, Daru, Kaba, Kasza, Szanda, Szittyá, Turai etc. In 1975, when he moved to Hawaii, he was again surprised when he realized that there were six Hungarian locality names in Sierra Leone, and nine in Hawaii, all of the form Káma+ló. In the USA he was able to study the geographic register published by the CIA. In the registers of 184 countries, he compiled 7,000 name structures of 3-4-5 elements, the corresponding form-structural pairs all occurrences also in the Carpathian Basin, and 60% of which constitute Hungarian family and personal names. All these names of 1-2 elements in their 3-4-5 structural compositions, surprisingly, may be found in all the five continents. All these findings led him to the creation of the Tamana method, i.e. the formation of geographic name-research, the basis of which Vámos-Tóth laid down in the 1980s. He reasoned that it is a useless undertaking to study words and names of the present time semantically, and trace them back beyond ten-thousand years in the past; however, investigating the structural layout of names may lead to useful results; the Tamana research is not based on linguistic results; in fact it is not linguistics, but what he calls “nomenology” (névészet), something like onomastics, providing a new direction for the study of names, not searching for the “original” meaning of geographic and personal names as e.g. in: Aszó, Buda, Csaba, Duna, Garam, Hun, Jó, Kaba, Kend, Keszi, Lak, Léva, Mátra, Onga, Pata, Rima, Száva, Tisza, Úr, Varga, Zalán. According to Vámos-Tóth, his 24-year Tamana research shows also that, surprisingly, the above Hungarian geographic and family names have worldwide distribution. By going still further, he suggests that in the distant past an all-embracing, uniform and universal global culture must have existed, in which the Hungarian culture must have taken a leading role. The result of his research has been published in the USA in a study entitled Tamana (7300 pp.) in 2002. – B: 2034, T: 7456.

Vámosi, János (John) (Bicske, 2 August 1926 - Budapest, 18 September 1997) – Dance-song vocalist. At first he worked as a machine technician; then, from 1949 as a singer.

His first hit was the song: When Apricots Are in Full Bloom (Baracknyílás idején). He appeared together with his wife, Márta Záray in Radio and TV performances in Hungary and abroad. His pieces include Treading My Path (Járom az utam; In the Inn of Pedro (Pedro kocsmájában)), and Don't Ever Leave Me (Ne hagyd el soha). Their duets include One Atmosphere, A Frame of Mind, and the Duck Dance (Kacsatánc); recordings include Hungaroton Favorit, Hungaroton Worry, and Hungaroton Pepita. In 1977, he received the SZOT Prize from the Council of Hungarian Trade Unions. – B: 1980, T: 7456.→Záray, Márta.

Vámosy, Zoltán (Pest, 15 December 1868 - Leányfalu, north of Budapest, 26 December 1953) – Physician and pharmacologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1893. From 1893, he was a lecturer at the Pharmacological Institute of the University; in 1898, he became an honorary lecturer and Titular Professor of Toxicology and, from 1914, a full professor. From 1917 until 1939, he was Professor of Pharmacology. He was Editor of the Hungarian Medical Archive (Magyar Orvosi Archivum) from 1909 and, from 1924 to 1944, that of the journal Medical Weekly (Orvosi Hetilap). He discovered the laxative effect of phenolphthalein, investigated the detoxicating function of the liver; he experimented with opium-alkaloids, and a forensic medical investigating method. His works include About a New Laxative Medicine (Egy új hashajtószerről) (1902), and On Poisonings (A mérgezésekről) (1907). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Vándor, Györgyi (Georgina) (Budapest, 7 April 1923 - Vienna, 5 March 2000) – Writer and journalist. She obtained her Dip. Ed. in Education, Majoring in French and Italian, from the University of Budapest. She became a language teacher and journalist. Her articles appeared in the daily, People's Word (Népszava). In 1949, in connection with the Rajk-trial, she was arrested with trumped-up charges and imprisoned. She was freed in 1956, during the Revolution and Freedom Fight, and she became an Associate of the natural-scientific journal Delta. In 1970, she emigrated to Israel. Early in 1973, she moved to Vienna, where she made a living from writing and language teaching; earlier on she taught Italian, from 1980 she taught Hungarian. She was an exterior consultant of Radio Free Europe. Her writings appeared, among others, in the New Horizon, the Literary News and the Hungarian News in Vienna, the Viennese Courier, the Rainbow, the New Age, and the New Europe. She wrote short stories, novels and feuilletons. Her works include The Nights of Terror (A rémület éjszakái) (1974, 1984, 1990); Letters From Vienna (Bécsi levelek), radio pieces (1981), and The Hangman of Betar (A betári hóhér) (1989). – B: 1672, 0878, T: 7456.→Rajk, László.

Vándor, Lajos (Louis) (Budapest, 27 June 1913 - Wels, Austria, 5 May 1945) – Poet and writer. While obtaining a Doctorate in Law from the University of Budapest, he also learned the trade of weaving. His first poems appeared in the journal Anonymus Notary (Névtelen Jegyző) in 1932, followed in quick succession by his popular, brief, snappy, idiosyncratic vers-libres, increasingly politicizing, leftist, and warning about the danger of Fascism presented on a variety of platforms. He also scored success in stage-works. After the short-lived Anonymus, he organized and edited the journal Cross Section (Keresztmetszet), which appeared in ten issues per year. During the years of the right-wing movement, he was unable to do editing work, nor publish his poems. During World War II, he worked at a weaving factory. In addition to poems, he also wrote dramatic works, but these became lost. During the War, he was called in to do forced labor, and was later moved to the concentration camp of Mauthausen, from where he was taken to the concentration camp at Gunskirchen. Soon after the liberation of this camp, he died at the age of 32. His works include Head or Tail [Coin-flipping] (Fej vagy írás), poems (1933), Group Picture (Csoportkép), poems (1938). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Vankóné (Juli Dudás) (Galgamácsa, 7 January 1919 - Budapest, 1 April 1984) – Naïve painter and folk artist. In her paintings and drawings, she depicted the folk traditions, daily lives and celebrations of the people of her native village. She produced several large paintings on commissions (Balatonfüred, Hotel Marina; Budapest, Búsoló Juhász Restaurant; Hospital of Kerepestarcsa; Tokyo, Hungarian Restaurant). She participated in national and international joint exhibitions (e.g. Naive Artists, 1972; Hungarian National Gallery; Hungarian Naive Artists, 1973, Havana, Cuba). Solo exhibitions were held in Szeged, at The Artist's Commune Gallery of Szentendre in 1974, in Aszód, Debrecen, Derecske and Balmazújváros in 1975. She also held exhibitions in East Germany in 1977, in Paris in 1978, and in Munich in 1983. The 1969 film by Domokos Moldován entitled “Juli Dudás Peasant Painter of Galgamácsa” (Dudás Juli galgamácsai parasztfestő) described her work. Most of her works are kept in the Museum of Ethnography, at the Naive Artists' Museum of Kecskemét, and at the Village Museum of Galgamácsa (her birthplace). Postcards and a calendar were also made from her paintings in 1980. Her autobiography, My Village, Galgamácsa (Falum, Galgamácsa) was published in two editions in 1976. Her other work is: Csicsija bubája (Lullabies, Nursery Rhymes) (1955). There is a Juli Dudás Vankóné Museum in her honor in Galgamácsa. – B: 0883, T: 7667.

Várad Bishopric (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania) – According to the Prayer Codex, as well as to the experts, the Bishopric was founded by King István I (St. Stephen) (997-1038). Its seat was first in the Bihar region in Eastern Hungary. It was moved to Várad (Nagyvárad) by King László I (St. Ladislaus) (1077-1095), who had the first cathedral built, and who had the wealth of the bishopric increased. From 1464 to 1780, the bishops have been Lord Lieutenants as well. The more notable bishops were Valter, András (Andrew) Báthory; Demeter Meszed; János Vitéz; Fráter György (George) Martinuzzi; Ágoston Benkovics; Pál (Paul) Szhmrecsányi; Count Miklós (Nicholas) Széchenyi; Arnold Ipolyi, and in recent times, József (Joseph) Tempfli, who retired in 2008. – B: 0942, T: 7684. → Prayer Codex; István I, King; László I, King; Vitéz, János; Tempfli, József.

Várad Chronicle – A short Latin chronicle entitled Chronicon Varadiense, relating in its incomplete state the happenings from the founding of the chapter – actually from its transfer to Várad (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania) – until 1354. Imre, the reading chapter of Várad, compiling the rules of the Chapter inserted it as historical background at the head of the rules controlling the life of the Chapter. Its source was the similar Zágráb Chronicle. – B: 1552, T: 7456. → Zagreb Chronicle.

Váradi, Antal (Anthony) (Závod, 2 May 1854 - Budapest, 5 March 1923) – Writer, playwright and actor pedagogue. In 1873 he received a Ph.D. in Arts. From 1875, for nearly 20 years, he was a high school teacher. On the advice of Ede (Edward) Paulay, he was invited to lecture on the theory of Performing Arts and Esthetics at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest (1887-1906). In 1895, he was an appointed member of the Drama Critic Committee of the National Theater, Budapest. He was a member of the Kisfaludy Society and the Petőfi Society. Between 1893 and 1923, he was Editor for the paper, Country-World (Ország-Világ). He wrote poems, also plays (mostly in classical verse form), from the time of his high school days. He wrote textbooks for the Academy of Dramatic Art. His plays include Iskarioth (1876); Tamora (1879); The Dagger (A tőr) (1880); Descendants of the Huns (A Hun utódok) (1890); Rafael (1894), and Demon (1895). He was the author of one novel, Painted World (Festett világ) (1892). His translations include Goethe's Faust, Part II; Schiller's Wilhelm Tell; Wagner's Die Mesitersinger von Nürnberg, and Aeschylus' Oresteia. His books include Esthetics in a Nutshell (Aesthetika dióhéjban) 1881); Study of Costumes (Jelmeztan); A Short Outline of Esthetics (Az aesthetika rövid kivonata) (1896); The Locked-away Heavens (Az elzárt mennyország) (1910), and Actor Stories (Színész-historiák) (1922). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456. → Váradi, Aranka; Paulay, Ede.

Váradi, Aranka (Goldie) (Budapest, 11 March 1886 - Mallorca, 5 January 1966) – Actress. She was the daughter of Antal (Anthony) Váradi. After completing the course in acting at the Academy of Dramatic Art, and the Vocal Studies Department of the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest, she received a contract with the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) in 1903, becoming its life member from 1923 on. She often appeared on stage in country towns; in Pécs she was a permanent guest. Her art was characterized by restraint and charm. She appeared on stage for the last time in 1947, when she married and settled abroad. Her roles include Hedvig in Ibsen's The Wild Duck (A vadkacsa); Cleopatra in G.B. Shaw's Caesar and Cleopatra; Puck in Shakespeare's A Midsummer-Night's Dream (Szentiványéji álm); Cordelia in Shakespeare's King Lear; Margarete in Goethe's Faust; title role in Ibsen's Nora, and Roxanne in Rostand's Cyrano de Bergerac. She received the Farkas-Ratkó Prize in 1908. – B: 1445, 1160, T: 7456. → Váradi, Antal.

Váradi, Hédi (Hedwig) (Újpest, 22 September 1929 - Budapest, 11 April 1987) – Actress. She obtained her diploma from the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, in 1952. She was contracted by the Madách Theater (Madách Színház) in Budapest, where, at quite a young age, she played great dramatic roles. In 1963, she received a contract with the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, and remained its member until her death. In her quiet periods at the theater, she traveled the country with independent programs for children, and sometimes appeared as a guest artist in the Józsefváros Theater (Józsefvárosi Színház), Budapest. She played with depth; her scope was unusually wide, from the light humorous to deep tragedy. Her many roles include Juliet in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet; Cleopatra in G.B. Shaw's Caesar and Cleopatra; Eve in I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája); title role in Euripides' Iphigenia; Titania in Shakespeare's A Midsummer-Night's Dream (Szeniványéji álm); title role in F. Schiller's Maria Stuart, and title role in F. Molnár's Delila. Her film roles included At Midnight (Éjfélkor) (1957); Alba Regia (1961); Gömböc (1962, TV-film), and Dora Reports (Dóra jelenti) (1968). The Hungarian Television prepared a portrait film about her (22 September 1985). Her TV program series was called Now, I Am Singing (Én most énekelek). She received the Mari Jászai Prize in 1960, the Kossuth Prize in 1975, the Merited Artist title (1968), and the Outstanding Artist title (1973). – T: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Váradi, Mátyás (Matthew) (Sóvárád, now Sărăţeni, Romania, 1638 - Kézdivásárhely, now Târgu-Secuesc, Romania, 1684) – Priest and physician. He studied Theology and Medicine in Marosvásárhely (now Târgu Mures, Romania), Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), then also in Leiden, Utrecht, and Franeker. He received a Medical Doctorate and a Degree in Theology from the University of Franeker (1669). In Kolozsvár, he was a student of János (John) Apáczai Csere. From 1670 to 1680, he served in various parishes, and he also served as Dean. However, after 1680, he worked as a physician only. His writings on smallpox, measles and tuberculosis were important. His works included Dissertatio theologia de votis... (1666); Disputatio medica de variolis et morbilis...(1667); and Disputatio Medica Inauguralis de Phthisi (1669). – B: 1730, 0883, T: 7456.→Apáczai Csere, János.

Várad, Peace of – After the election of two Kings in 1526, in order to end the fighting between them, a secret pact was made between the two rival kings: King János Szapolyai (or King János I) (John, 1526-1540), and Emperor Ferdinand I of Austria (1526-1564), in 1538 at Várad (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania), concluding that both of them keep their kingly titles over the territory they ruled and owned, and thereby also admitting that neither of them could defeat the other, with the one and only condition that, after the death of King János I, the whole of the Kingdom of Hungary (the middle part, which was occupied by the Ottoman Turks), as well as Transylvania, would pass to the House of Habsburg, even if, in the meantime, an heir was born to King János I. However, in 1540, a son, John Sigismund (János Zsigmond) was born to King János I, to his wife, Isabella of Poland (1519-1559) (daughter of King Sigismund Jagello), and he made his son his successor as Prince and King, thereby rescinding the agreement with the Habsburgs. János Szapolyai, prior to his death, made his loyal counselor Frater György (George Martinuzzi) pledge that he would not keep the agreement contained in the Peace of Várad, but let his son, John Zsigmond, ascend the throne. The monk, Frater György, proved a skillful politician. When the Turkish Sultan Suleiman occupied Buda, the Capital of Hungary with his large army in 1541, he gave Transylvania to Isabella and her infant (on 29 August 1541). It was György Frater, who organized Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), into a State. After the death of King János I in 1540, his wife, Queen Isabella, considered handing over the rule of Transylvania to the Habsburgs, thus preserving the unity of the Kingdom; but her counselors urged her to persevere with the defense of the Capital, Buda. After the loss of Buda, she settled in Transylvania and, in 1552, she handed over Transylvania to Ferdinand and moved to Poland. In 1556, on the invitation of the Transylvanian Estates, she returned, and in place of her under-age son, she, at the age of 36, took over the rule of Transylvania. Várad (Nagyvárad) also passed to the property of Queen Isabella in 1557 and, together with the Trans-Tisza region (the so called Partium), for more than a century, it belonged to the Principality of Transylvania. This led to the division of Hungary into three parts during the 16th and 17th centuries. King János Zsigmond, or János II (John) ruled from 1540-1553. – B: 1031, 1068, T: 7456.→ János I, King; János II, King; Martinuzzi, György; Isabella, Queen.

Várad Registry (Regestrum Varadiense) – A registry book in the Latin language at the time of King András II (Andrew) (1205-1235) (before the disaster of the Tartar-Mongol invasion of 1241-1242), that describes 389 legal disputes. In addition, it contains the name of 43 Counties, 711 place names and 2,500 personal names. Frater György (George) Martinuzzi, Bishop of Várad, published it first, under the title Exemplum seu ritus explorandae veritatis (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 1550). It was published for the second time by Mátyás (Matthew) Bél (1640). Three more editions followed. This Registry Book was an important source for contemporary use of law and the development of Hungary. The original has been lost. – B: 1150, 0942, 1078, 1153, T: 7684.→Martinuzzi, György; Bél, Mátyás.

Várady, Béla (Szilice, now Silica, Slovakia, 16 September 1933 - ) – Actor. He was an auxiliary notary in his village of birth until 1951. From 1951, he was a member of the Hungarian branch of the Village Theater (Faluszínház), having had a good deal of theatrical experience in the amateur group at Szilice earlier. From 1959, he was a member of the Hungarian Area Theater (Magyar Területi Színház) of Komárom and, from 1969 until his retirement he was a member of the Thalia Theater of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). Between 1971 and 1981, he was also its Artistic Director. He makes good use of his comic abilities, but does not resort to cheap comic acts, rather depicts a sharply delineated character. His roles include Truffaldino in Goldoni's Servant of two Masters (Arlecchino servitore di due padroni; Két úr szolgája); Cleante in Molière's Tartuffe; Candy in Steinbeck's Of Mice and Men (Egerek és emberek); Máté in Á. Tamási's Singing Bird (Énekes madár); Balga in M. Vörösmarty's Csongor és Tünde; Candy in R. Nash's The Rainmaker (Az esőcsináló); Trafina in Békeffi-Lajtai's The Old Summer (A régi nyár), and Károly Paál in I. Csúrka's Dead Landmines (Döglött aknák). He acted in a number of Hungarian and Slovak films as well. He received the Nivo Prize in Slovakia (1969, 1974, 1975, 1984), and the Life Achievement Prize of the Hungarian Theaters Beyond the Borders in 1998. – B: 1445, 1890, T: 7456.

Várady, Imre (Emerico Várady) (Nagybecskerek, now Zrenjanin, Serbia, 3 July 1892 - Rome, 24 August 1974) – Literary historian, novelist and critic. He obtained his Degree in Arts, majoring in Hungarian and German Literature at the University of Budapest in 1914. Shortly after, he was enlisted into the Army during World War I. However, he succeeded in obtaining his Ph.D. in 1917, and another in Education in 1918. Between 1919 and 1927, he was a teacher in the high school of Szombathely, and from January 1928 till July 1936, he was Secretary of the Collegium Hungaricum of Rome. In the fall of 1936, he became Professor of Italian Language and Literature at the University of Szeged. When the Second Vienna Award returned northern Transylvania to Hungary in 1940, he was transferred to the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca again, in Romania), where he lectured on Italian Philology. In 1942, he became Professor of Hungarian Language and Literature at the University of Bologna. He settled permanently in Italy in 1944. When he retired in 1967, the University of Bologna awarded him its most prestigious honor, the Gold Memorial Volume. Thereafter, he moved to Rome, where he continued his Hungarian literary and critical activity. Most of his writings appeared in the paper Catholic Review (Katolikus Szemle), but he also published in the weekly National Guard (Nemzetőr); New Europe (Új Európa), and Corvina, as well as in Italian and German journals. His books include Grammatica della lingua ungherese (Grammar of the Hungarian Language) (1949); Teatro ungherese (Hungarian Theater) (1956), and Letteratura ungherese (Hungarian Literature) (1959). – B: 1672, 1257, T: 7456.→Vienna Award II.

Várady, Júlia (Júlia Tózsér) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 1 September 1941 - ) – Opera singer (soprano). At the age of 6, she began violin lessons; then, aged 14, voice training with Emilia Papp at the Academy of Music in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania); later she was a student of Arta Florescu in Bucharest. In 1962 she began her career in Gluck's Orfeo at the Hungarian State Opera House of Kolozsvár. In 1970 she moved to Germany, settled in Frankfurt-am-Main and, in 1972 she appeared first, as a guest artist, in the Munich Festival. In 1973, she was with the Bavarian State Opera in Munich, and later joined the Deutsche Opera Berlin. She was regularly invited to the foremost international opera festivals, e.g. Edinburgh and Salzburg. She first appeared at the New York Metropolitan Opera House in 1977. Since then she had been a permanent guest of the international operatic stages including the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, London; at the Vienna State Opera; at the Metropolitan Opera in New York; at the Teatro della Scala in Milan; at the Teatro Colón in Buenos Aires; at the Opéra Bastille in Paris, and at the Salzburg, Munich and Edinburgh Festivals. She is particularly noted for her singing of Mozart and Verdi works. She is also known worldwide as a solo singer at symphony concerts. In 1977 she married baritone Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau. In 1998 she retired from opera. She has been a guest professor at the Hochschule für Musik Hanns Eisler in Berlin. She performed more than 40 leading operatic roles, including Judith in B. Bartók's Bluebeard's Castle (A kékszakállu herceg vára); Michaela in Bizet's Carmen; Electra in Mozart's Idomeneo; Pamina in Mozart's The Magic Flute (A varázsfuvola); Liu in Puccini's Turandot; title role in Verdi's Aïda; Violetta in Verdi's La Traviata; Irene in Wagner's Rienzi, and Freia in Wagner's Das Rheingold. She was the wife of the famous baritone Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau. She was one of the greatest sopranos of the 20th century. – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.→Bartók, Béla.

Várady, László (Ladislas) (Budapest, 29 November 1906 - Vienna, 21 June 1989) – Conductor. He completed his studies at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest in 1924 as a student of Jenő (Eugen) Hubay, Zoltán Kodály and Leó Weiner. He began his career at the Opera Houses of Leipzig and Düsseldorf, and later became an assistant to Bruno Walter and Wilhelm Furtwängler. Afterward, he worked as an independent conductor in Brussels, Prague and Paris, where he introduced Béla Bartók's composition Two Portraits, for violin and orchestra, Op.5 (Két kép). In 1945 he returned to Hungary, where he reorganized the Opera Company of Szeged. From 1949 to 1957, he was Music Director of the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház), Budapest, where he staged several new Hungarian works. At the same time, he was Music Director of the Hungarian Film Studios. From 1957, he was a teacher at the Hochschule für Musik (Academy of Music) of Vienna, and also at the Conservatory of Music. At the Theater an der Wien he introduced György (George) Ránki's opera Peter the Musician (Muzsikus Péter) and Benjamin Britten's Let's Make an Opera. On Austrian and German Television he conducted the world premiere of Gluck's Der bekehrte Trunkenbold (L'Ivrogne corrigé – The Proselyte Drunkard). He conducted all the orchestras of Vienna, and founded the Wiener Barockorchester (Baroque Orchestra of Vienna). He gave an important series of lectures over the Viennese Radio on the music of Hungary. – B: 1445, 0883, T: 7456. → Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán; Ránki, György; Hubay, Jenő; Weiner, Leó.

Várdy, Béla (Steven Béla) (Bercel, 3 July 1936 - ) – Historian. As a result of the Soviet Russian forces occupying Hungary, he moved to Germany as a child with his parents. He completed his secondary studies in the Hungarian High School at Passau. In the 1950s he went to the USA. He did his higher studies in Cleveland, Kent, Vienna, and finally in Bloomington, where he obtained his Ph.D. from Indiana University in 1967. From 1964 as an assistant lecturer, he taught History at the Duquesne University of Pittsburgh. In 1967 he became an assistant professor, in 1971 Professor. He has also been Professor at the University of Pittsburgh. He lectures on European and East-European history. He was Director of the History Forum of Duquesne University from 1979 to 1982. He is a McAnulty Distinguished Professor, and Founder and Editor of the book series entitled University Historical Studies. His main fields of interest are Historic Studies, Hungarian Culture, and History of American Hungarian Settlers. His studies, papers and critiques appeared in the Hungarians of Pittsburgh, Catholic Hungarians' Sunday (Katolikus Magyarok Vasárnapja), New Horizon (Új Látóhatár), Ungarn-Jahrbuch, and in American historical journals and study-volumes. He is a productive writer with a long bibliographic list. His works include History of the Hungarian Nation, with Domokos (Dominic) Kosáry (1969); Hungarian Historiography and the "Geistesgeschichtliche" School, bilingual (1974); The Hungarian-Americans (1985); Louis the Great, King of Hungary and Poland, with Géza Grosschmid and László Domokos (1986); The Austro-Hungarian Mind: at Home and Abroad, with Ágnes Várdy-Huszár (1989), and Hungarians in the Gulag Slave Labor Camps (Magyarok a Gulag rabszolgatáborában) with Ágnes Várdy-Huszár (2007). He also wrote 600 essays and papers. He was several times President of the Society of Hungarian Historians in America. He is an external member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. In 1984, he received the Grand Prix of Duquesne University; in 1992 the Berzsenyi Prize of Hungary; in 1996 he became a member of the Hungarian Writers' Association; in 1997 he received the Gold Medal of the Árpád Academy, and in 2001 he received the Officer's Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary. – B: 1672, T: 7456. → Várdy-Huszár, Ágnes; Kosáry, Domokos.

Várdy-Huszár, Ágnes (Agnes) (Mrs. Béla Várdy) (Debrecen, 3 January 1943- ) – Literary historian. In the spring of 1945, facing the advancing Soviet army in Hungary, she fled to Germany with her parents, and in 1951, emigrated to the USA. She did her university studies at Cleveland, Heidelberg, Pittsburgh, Vienna and Budapest, where she obtained a Ph.D. in German literature. She began her educational career as a demonstrator at the University of Pittsburgh in 1966. From 1971, she worked as an assistant lecturer, and later as an assistant professor at the Robert Morris College of Pittsburgh, lecturing on German Language and Literature, and English Literature. Her study interests are German and American literature, as well as comparative European literature. Her writings appeared in the papers Chronicle; New Horizon (Új Látóhatár), and in American and Hungarian journals. Her works include A Study in Austrian Romanticism: Hungarian Influences in Lenau's Poetry (1974); The Folk Arts of Hungary, with W.W. Kolar (1981), and The Austro-Hungarian Mind: At Home and Abroad, with Béla Várdy (1989). – B: 1672, T: 7456.→Várdy, Béla.

Várdy, Péter (Budapest, 15 December 1935 - ) – Philosopher. He began his higher studies at the Budapest Polytechnic, where studied Philosophy and Electric Engineering. He left Hungary after the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight. He continued his studies at the University of Delft, in the Netherlands. In 1962 he completed a course in Electrical Engineering, followed by studies in Philosophy at the University of Freiburg, completing them at the University of Groningen, in the Netherlands, in 1975. He obtained his Ph.D. in Art from the University of Debrecen. Since 1966, he has lectured at the Philosophy Department of the University of Twente. The subject of his published works is mainly concerned with the university movements in the late 1960s, the history of the Hungarian Jews, the folk versus urban debate, as well as the philosophy of technology and other philosophical problems. His works include Opstand der studenten (1969); Change and permanence. Studies in Hungarian Civic Society (Változás és állandóság, Tanulmányok a magyar polgári társadalomról), edited with E. Karátson (1989), and There is in Life what Man doesn't do...And what he does do (Az életben van, amit az ember nem tesz... És tesz) (2004). – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Varga, Béla (Torda, 1886 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 1942) – Unitarian Bishop, theologian, philosopher. He attended school in his hometown, then studied Theology and Philosophy in Kolozsvár. He earned his Doctoral Degree in Philosophy; then he went abroad on a study trip. Upon returning home in 1911, he taught at a high school, then at the Theological Academy in 1922, and acquired an honorary lecturer qualification (privatedocent) in 1915. In 1926 he spent a year in Oxford, England, then, in 1928 he became Generalis Notarius of his Church, and from 1938, its Bishop. He was appointed University Professor at Kolozsvár in 1940. Some of his works are The Psychology of Today's Public Spirituality (A mai közszellem pszichológiája) (1928); The Question of Individualism (Az individualizmus kérdése) (1932); Religious Studies (Hittani tanulmányok) (1934), and Faith and Religion (Hit és vallás) (1948). – B: 0931, T: 7103.→Unitarian Church in Transylvania.

Varga, Csaba (Mezőcsokonya, 28 October 1945 - Pilisszentiván, 15 June 2012) – Writer, producer, sociologist. He also dealt with painting, sculpting, teaching and lecturing. After graduation from high school in 1964, he was a manual laborer. Later, he was an artistic director at Hatvan, and a journalist; and was a co-worker at the County Pest Committee of the Patriotic People's Front. In 1972, he graduated as teacher of Mathematics and Drawing from the Teachers' Training Academy of Pécs, where he opened an animation workshop and founded the Yxilon Filmstudio which in 1979 became the Pécs Film Studio of the Pannonia Film Studio, and he was its first director. In 1985, he graduated from the Sociology Department of the University of Budapest, and studied full time at the Institute for Executive Training for two years. He was Secretary of the Alliance of Hungarian Writers (1985-1986). He was editor for the periodical Seasons (Évszakok). He was also a freelancing writer. From 1988, he was Acting-Director for the Püski-Isis Ltd., Budapest. In 1989 he was one of the founders of the Varga Studio. From 1991 he was Director of the Strategy Research Private Institute (Stratégia Kutató Magánintézet), and Editor for the periodicals Closed Circle (Zártkör) and Conservative Review (Konzervatív Szemle). From 1992, he was Director for the Witness (Tanú) Ltd., and later owner of the Frig Publishers. His field of sociology encompasses village and town research (1972 - ), area structure research (1986 - ), future research, future strategy (1976 - ), conservative theories (1992-1995), globalization and localization (1993 - ), theory of information society (1993 - ) knowledge society research, knowledge theory and vision of the age of unity (1995). The title of his research was The Theory of the Society of Unity, in which he explored and created a synthesized hypothesis of scientific, sociological, religious and spiritual researches. His films include Lunch (Ebéd) (1972), Waltz (Valcer) (1984), The Wind (A szél) (1985), Don Quijote (1999), and the Beetle (Bogár) (2001). His major publications include Reform Castle, with István Kamarás (1984), Hungary Under the Eaves, selected sociographies (1989), Attempts at Freedom (1999), The Very Last Chance, with Endre Kiss (2002). His linguistic works include the Living Language and the Stone Age (in English), The Living Language of the Stone Age (A kőkorszak élő nyelve), Our Words from the Past (Szavaink a múltból), The Book of the Ancient Writing (Az ősi írás könyve), Sign, sign, sign, or the 30,000 Years History of the Alphabet (Jel jel jel avagy avagy az ABC 30.000 éves története). In 1998 he was elected among the 10 best animation filmmakers, and in 2000 among the 15 most decisive filmmakers. He was recipient the Béla Balázs Prize and the Gold Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary in 2003. – B: 1031, 2081, T: 7103.

Varga, Domokos (Dominic) (family name: Vargha) (Kunszentmiklós, 8 October 1922 - Budapest, 12 May 2002) – Writer. After completing his high school studies in Kunszentmiklós, he studied at the Forestry Department of the József Nádor Technical University, Sopron, and served as a forestry officer at Debrecen (1945-1946). Later, he became a journalist and radio contributor, a freelance writer between 1952 -1954, and a columnist at the Literary Gazette (Irodalmi Újság) between 1954 and 1956. After the fall of the 1956 Revolution, he was arrested for his work at the Writers' Association, and became a political detainee (1957-1958). He again served as a forestry officer during the years 1958-1968, and contributed to the journal, Life and Literature (Élet és Irodalom). He was a free-lance writer again from 1969, and was Editor of the paper, Free Period (Lyukasóra) (1992-1996). He was prohibited from publishing from 1956 to 1964. His selected works include Forest Ranger (Erdőkerülőben) sociography (1970), and Book of Waters (Vizek könyve) (1976). His works on family life include Good-for-nothings (Kutyafüülök) (1966), Kids Tasting (Kölyökkostolgotó) (1974); My Honored Family (Tisztelt családom) (1979), and We Are Not Born to be Parents (Nem születünk szülőnek) (1999). His autobiographical works are Beloved Szentmiklós (Szeretett Szentmiklós) (1994); Many Nice Words of My Mother (Édesanyám sok szép szava) (2000), and Our Finn Brothers (Finn testvéreink). His popular works for juveniles include Village of Boys (Fiúfalva) (1972); Kids Tasting (Kölyökkostolgotó) (1974); Book of Waters (Vizek könyve), sociography (1976); Birth of Europe (Európa születése) (1977); Tower of Babel (Bábel tornya) (1983), translated into many languages; Illustrated Encyclopedia of Heaven and Earth (Ég és a föld képes encyclopédiája) (1985); Remember Our Ancestors (Emlékezzünk eleinkről) (1996); Writer's School (Íróiskola) (2001), and End Play - Comedy Play (Végjáték-Vígjáték) (2002). He was awarded the Attila József Prize (1973), the IBBY Prize (1986), János Arany Prize (1997), the Gáspár Károli Prize (1998), the Middle Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1992), and the Kossuth Prize in 2002. – B: 0874, 0878, 0877, 1031, T: 7103. → Vargha, Tamás.

Varga, Erzsébet (Elizabeth) (Kisújfalu, now Nová Vieska, Slovakia, 12 January 1951 - Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 8 April 1999) – Writer and poet. She completed her secondary studies at Párkány (now Stúrovo, Slovakia), in 1961. From 1969 to 1974 she studied at the Faculty of Arts of the University of Pozsony, and obtained a B.A. Degree in Hungarian and Latin. From 1974 to 1981 she was Editor of the paper, Week (Hét), also running its cultural column. From 1981 to 1983, she was Editor, and from 1983 to 1990 Editor-in-Chief of the periodical Literary Review (Irodalmi Szemle). From 1990 she was Literature Editor for the Madách-Posonium Publisher. Her poems, articles, critiques, literaterary-history studies and reports, also in Slovakian translation, were published in numerous papers and magazines, such as the Pioneers' Paper (Pionírok Lapja); the New Youth (Új Ifjúság); the Week (Hét); from 1971, the Literary Review (Irodalmi Szemle); the Woman (Nő), and, from 1977, the Flame Palace (Tűzpalota). Her works include Green Waters, Red Pebbles (Zöld vizek, piros kavicsok) poems (1976); Ice-birds in Winter (Jégmadárcák télben) poems (1988); Tourist Lexicon of Slovakia (Szlovákiai turistalexikon) (1999), and The Pros and Cons (Érvek és ellenérvek), a study by Alexander Matuška, translation, 1982. – B: 1083, 1820, T: 7456.

Varga, Ferenc (Francis) (Mezőkomárom, 15 October 1835 - Tárnok, southwest of Budapest, 2 July 1898) – Physician and veterinarian. In 1862 he obtained his Veterinary Degree from the University of Pest, and in 1864 his Medical Degree. From 1862 on, he was an associate of the Veterinary Therapeutic Institute and, from 1867, Deputy Director of the Quarantine Station of Vöröstorony Pass (between the Fogaras and Szeben Ranges of the Southern Carpathian Mountains, now in Romania). From 1875, he was a teacher at the Veterinary School and, from 1890, Professor at the Veterinary College, Budapest, giving lectures on Surgery, Pathology and Therapeutics. In 1881 he became its Director. His works include Textbook of Horse Shoeing (Patkolástan) (1866) and Natural History of Useful Domestic Mammals (Hasznos házi emlősállatok természetrajza) (1872). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Varga, Gyula (Julius) (Szentendre, 4 September 1902 - Budapest, 11 November 1973) – Physician; ear, nose and throat specialist. He received his Medical Degree in 1925, and he also obtained a Medical Degree from the University of Pécs. From 1928 to 1930 he worked at the St. Stephen Hospital (Szent István Kórház) of Budapest, and as a throat specialist at the Jewish Hospital of Budapest, from 1930 until 1950; from 1945 as Senior Physician. During 1950-1951, he was Senior Physician of the Kútvolgy-Street State Hospital of Budapest. Between the years 1951 and 1966, he was Head of the Ear, Nose and Throat Clinic in Budapest. He was Editor for the journal, Ear, Nose and Throat Therapeutics. He was engaged in the study of noise-induced illnesses, prevention, surgery, and Ménière's disease. He introduced in Hungary the surgical improvement of hearing. His works include The Ear-Nose-and-Throat Pathology and Therapeutics (A fül, az orr és a gége kór- és gyógytan) (1965). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Varga, Imre (Emeric) (Győrke, now Durkov, Slovakia, 1 October 1905 - Rimaszombat, now Rimavska Sobota, Slovakia, 10 December 1980) – Bishop of the Reformed Christian Church in Slovakia. After completing six elementary school grades in Győrke, he was educated at the Reformed College, Sárospatak, from where he graduated in 1925. He studied Theology at the newly opened Reformed Theological Seminary in Losonc (now Lucenec, Slovakia). In 1925, he continued his studies in Halle, Germany. He was an assistant minister in Munkács (then Czechoslovakia, now Mukacheve, Ukraine), (1929-1930), and a minister in Rimaszombat (1930-1980). In the meantime, he taught New Testament Studies at the Seminary of Losonc, from 1932 until its closure in 1938. He was elected Bishop of the Reformed Christian Church in Slovakia, (1953-1980). He was Vice-President and a member of the Executive Committee of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, and also a member of the Executive Committee of the Conference of European Churches. He received an Honorary Doctorate from the Comenius Faculty of the University of Prague in 1955. – B: 0941, T: 7103.

Varga, István (1) (Stephen) (Vác, 7 May 1895 - Budapest, 17 January 1981) – Physician, dentist and odontologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1918. From 1918 he worked first in the No. 2 Surgical Clinic and, between 1923 and 1939, in the Stomatology Clinic. In 1945 he was delegated Head of the University Department, and until 1951 Senior Physician of the Odontological Surgical Section of the Metropolitan St. János (John) Hospital. From 1951 he was the Section's Director and Professor, as well as Head of Department of Odontology; and between 1964 and 1969, he was Dean of the Faculty. His fields of research were odontology, prosthetic dentistry and orthodontics. He was Editor for the journal, Review of Dentistry (Fogorvosi Szemle). His works include Biological Orthodontics (Biológiai fogszabályozás) (1935), and Odontology (Szájsebészet), co-authored (1955). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Varga, István (2) (Stephen) (Szabadka, now Subotica, Serbia, 28 July 1920 - ) – Theater manager. He obtained his Manager's diploma in Zágráb (now Zagreb, Croatia), under the tutorship of Branko Gavella, the greatest figure of Croatian theater life; thereafter, he was contracted by the Theater of Szabadka. Here he staged classical and contemporary plays in well-prepared, high standard performances. In 1958, he was transferred to Radio Újvidék (now Novi Sad, Serbia). He was one of the initiators to establish a permanent theater in Újvidék. Later he worked less and less as a theater manager. He retired in 1980, and lived a secluded life. Works he has managed include were Shaw's, Candida; Zs. Móricz's Gentlemen's Fun (Úri muri); Shakespeare's A Midsummer-Night's Dream (Szeniványéji álom); Gogol's The Inspector General (A revizor); Miller's The Crucible (A salemi boszorkányok); M. Gorki's The Night Refuge (Éjjeli mnedékhely); L. Németh's Victory (Győzelem), and F. Deák's Banquet (Tor). – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Varga, János (John) (Abony, 21 October 1939 - ) – Wrestler. He began this sport in 1955. From 1960 to 1974 he was a competitor of the Club, Budapest Honvéd. Between 1961 and 1965, he won five times in national Greco-Roman style wrestling and in free style. All in all, he was an individual Hungarian champion fourteen times. From 1961 to 1973 he was a member of the selected team. In bantamweight he received a silver medal in the 1961 free-style Yokohama World Championship. He achieved further international results in Greco-Roman style. In 1963 he was world champion in Hälsingborg. In 1967 he won a silver medal in Bucharest, and was European champion in Minsk. In 1968 he was the Olympic Champion in Mexico; at the 1970 World Champion in Edmonton, and at the European Champion in Berlin. In 1972 he obtained a diploma in coaching at the School of Physical Education. From 1974 to 1990 he was the coach of the Honvéd Club, Budapest, while he was acting as the leader of the junior selected team from 1978 to 1993. In the Hungarian army, he was a colonel. He retired in 1990. B: 2111, T: 7456.

Varga, József (1) (Joseph) (Budapest, 8 February 1891 - Budapest, 28 December 1956) – Chemical engineer and Minister of State. In 1920 he was made an honorary professor of the Budapest Polytechnic. During 1923 and 1938, he was a full professor. He was elected a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. In 1939 he became the first Undersecretary of State in Industry, then Minister of Industries. During 1939 and 1943, Varga was Minister of Commerce and Transport and, from 1951, Director of the Institute of High-Pressure Experiments (Nagynyomású Kísérleti Intézet); from 1952 he was a professor at the University of Heavy Chemical Industry (Nehézvegyipari Egyetem) at Veszprém. The most significant results of Varga's research work are the manufacture of synthetic petrol and similar materials capable of driving engines; the establishment of the hydrogen-sulphide effect; the so-called Varga-effect, and the internationally acclaimed invention of the high-pressure hydrogenation of black coal. The hydrocracking procedure is also linked to his name; for its development the Hungarian-German Varga Invention Society was formed, co-operating with the former German Democratic Republic. He patented his procedures and inventions in all the important oil producing nations. Numerous articles regarding the results of his research were published in both Hungarian and foreign scientific journals. He received the Kossuth Prize (1950, 1952). There is a József Varga Foundation in Budapest. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Varga, József (2) (Josef) (Külsővat, County Veszprém, 25 April 1923 - ?) – Historian and publicist. He read Law at the University of Budapest (1942-1947), and obtained a Doctorate in Law in 1947. From 1943 to 1947 he took part in the political youth movement, and in the activities of the Smallholders' Party (Kisgazda Párt). Beginning in 1948, for political reasons, without a court decision, he spent five years in internment camps, including the infamous Reck Camp. From 1953 to 1956, he was an unskilled laborer in Győr. After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he fled to Austria and settled in Vienna. He was a member of the Austrian-Hungarian National Committee and the Hungarian Revolutionary Council of Strasbourg. From 1958 to 1961 he was an educator for young Hungarian refugee workers. From 1962 he was in charge of, and from 1966 to 1970 Director of the Europe-House of Vienna. Between 1971 and 1984, he was Head of the Science Assistance in the Cultural Bureau of Vienna. He lectured on science and published studies on the political history of East-Central Europe. Between 1965 and 1980, he edited and/or published nine studies in German. His writings in Hungarian appeared in New Horizon (Új Látóhatár), Catholic Review (Katolikus Szemle) and Viennese Diary (Bécsi Napló). His works include Schuldige Nation oder Vasall wider Willen? Beiträge zur Zeitgeschichte Ungarns und des Donaupraumes I-II (1987, 1989), in Hungarian (1991). In December 1972, the Austrian Head of State conferred a professorial title on him. – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Varga, Károly (Charles) (Budapest, 28 September 1955 - ) – Sport shooter. He started his sports career in the Honvéd Sports Club in 1972. Soon he was invited into the national selected team. He won a gold medal in the 50-meter rifle prone event at the 1980 Summer Olympic Games in Moscow. In 1983 he became a competitor of the Ujpest Dózsa Club. Until 1986 he was a member of the selected team. During his career he won the National Championship three times. T: 1031, B: 7103.

Varga, László (Ladislav) (Budapest, 18 December 1910 - Budapest, 17 May 2003) – Writer, politician and lawyer. Having been trained in Law at the University of Budapest, he followed a career in the legal field; he worked as a lawyer from 1943 to 1948. At the same time, he was President of the Christian Worker-Youth Association (Keresztény Iparos és Munkásifjak Országos Egyesülete), and took part in the anti-German movement in 1937. In 1944, the Arrow Cross Party's Bench called him to account and arrested him. In 1947 and 1948, he was a Member of Parliament, standing for the Democratic People's Party. Due to a defense speech, the press attacked him. In 1948 he fled to the West. He became Editor of the paper, Courier (Híradó) in Zürich during 1949 and 1950. From 1950 until 1964, he was associated with Radio Free Europe. After getting his legal qualification in Switzerland (1957), he worked as a lawyer from 1957 to 1992. In March 1950, he emigrated to the USA and in New York he founded the Hungarian Theater and also a Society of Hungarian Theater and Artists (New Yorki Magyar Színház és Művész Egyesület). His articles appeared in the National Guard (Nemetőr), Catholic Review (Katolikus Szemle), Vienna Diary (Bécsi Napló), and other papers in various parts of the world. Between 1979 and 1989, he wrote 20 plays, of which 12 were staged in the Hungarian Theater of New York. In 1989 he settled again in Hungary, entered political life, and from 1990 on, he was Vice-President, then Co-President of the Hungarian Christian Democratic People's Party (Kereszténydemokrata Néppárt); from 1994 he was again a Member of Parliament. His works include Human Rights in Hungary (1967); The Betrayed Revolution (1980); The Occupation (1982); The Fatal Letter (1988); 1848 – Kossuth or Széchenyi (1989); The Outstanding Ones and the Failed Ones (A jelesek és az elbukottak) novel (1990), and The Big Fish (1999). His plays include Intruder (Betörő) (1931); Judgment (Ítélet) (1932); Júlia (1979); Palimony (1983); The Unexpected Guest (A váratlan vendég) (1985), and The Wandering Love. Five Plays (A bolygó szerelem. Öt színdrab) (New York, 1986). A Theater in Eger bears his name. – B: 0874, 1445, 1672, 1868, T: 7456.

Varga, Márton (Martin) (Szilágysomlyó, now Șimleu Silvaniei, Romania, 11 November 1886 - Budapest, 11 January 1952) – Horticulturist. He obtained his diploma from the College of Horticulture (1905-1908). In 1909, he entered a city position and, in 1925, he established and ran for two decades the Metropolitan Horticulturist Training School (Székesfővárosi Kertészképző Iskola). In 1928, he started the successful and large-scale cultivation of tulips and hyacinth bulbs. Varga was Executive President, later President of the National Hungarian Horticultural Association (Országos Magyar Kertészeti Egyesület). His works appeared in the Horticultural Review (Kertészeti Szemle) and Horticultural Papers (Kertészeti Lapok). His works, among others, include The Review of Growing Flower Bulbs and the Bulbous Species, Subspecies and Varieties of Flowers (Virághagymák termesztésének és a hagymás virágfajok, fajták és változatok ismertetése) (1931). A Horticultural and Surveyor School in Budapest bears his name. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Varga, Mihály (Michael) (Karcag, 26 January 1965 - ) – Economist and politician. In 1989 he obtained a B.A. Degree from the Department of Trade at the University of Economics, after which he worked in the field of economics; from late in 1988, he was a member of the Fidesz Party (Alliance of Young Democrats – Fiatal Demokraták Szövetsége - FIDESZ) and founder of the Szolnok County group of the Party. From 1993 to 1995, he was President of this Organization. In 1992 and 1993, he was President of the National Council of the Fidesz Party. From 1994 to 2003, and again after 2005, he was Vice-President responsible for the economic policy of the Party. From 1990 he was a Member of Parliament, twice on a national list, and also for the Karcag area. In Parliament, he worked in a number of Committees. He was President of the Examining Indebtedness and Bank-Consolidation Body, functioning between 1995 and 1997, and also Head of the Budget and Financial Committee (Költségvetési és Pénzügyi Bizottság). From 1995 to 1998, and from 2002, he was acting fraction-leader. From 2006 to 2010 he has been directing the work of the Budget, Financial and Audit Office Committee (Számvevőszéki és Költségvetési Bizottság). During the time of the first Orbán Government (1998-2002), Varga worked as Political Under-Secretary of State for the Ministry of Finance, between 1998 and 2000; and thereafter, from 2001 to 2002 as Minister of Finance. From 2005 on he was the main architecture of the Fidesz economy policy. In the re-elected Orbán Government, he is Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of State of the Prime Minister's Office since the first part of 2010. He is also the Deputy President of the Fidesz Party. From 2000 he has been a member of the Johannite Order; from 2001, an Elder of the Reformed Congregation of Karcag, and a member of the Rákóczi Society. Varga has been President of the Nagykun Civic Society and Titular Lecturer of the Economic College of Szolnok. – B: 1074, 1031, T: 7456.→Political Parties in Hungary.

Varga, Nándor Lajos (Ferdinand Louis) (Losonc, now Lučenec, Slovakia, 1 January 1895 - Budapest, 17 April 1978) – Painter and graphic artist. He studied in Kecskemét, and later at the Department of Art Teachers of the Academy of Applied Arts (Képzőművészeti Főiskola), Budapest. In 1923, he was already a demonstrator, specializing in the history of graphic art. With a scholarship from the Szinyei Society, he went on a study trip to Germany and Italy, and also traveled to Paris. His works appeared in a number of exhibitions abroad and overseas: Brussels, Zürich, the Barcelona World Fair, 22nd Biennale of Venice, Chicago, Philadelphia, etc. In 1929, a copper etching of his was placed in the British Museum, London. From 1931 he taught at the Graphic Art Section of the Academy of Applied Arts (Képzőművészeti Főiskola grafikai szakosztálya). He was President of the Society of Hungarian Graphic Artists (Magyar Grafikus Művészek Egyesülete) founded in 1940. His works are based on the classical traditions. With technical virtuosity, he developed to perfection the employment of graphic procedures. As an educator, many gifted artists have improved their talents under his tutelage. He also prepared ex libris and book illustrations. He appeared with his works in almost every exhibition in Hungary. His one-man shows were held in the Derkovits Hall (1958), in the Dürer Hall (1964), as well as in the Art Gallery (1970) in Budapest. His works are kept in the Hungarian National Gallery, the Historic Museum of Budapest, and are also found in private collections. His ex libris pieces, as part of the collection, owned by Rezső (Rudolph) Soó, were acquired by the Museum of Industrial Arts (Iparművészeti Múzeum), Budapest. His works include Copper Etching (A rézkarc) (1935); Woodcut (Fametszet) (1940); The Art of Line Drawing (Vonalművészet) (1944), and The Architectural Monuments of the Town of Sepsiszentgyörgy (now Sfântu Gheorghe, Romania), (Szepiszentgyörgy város építészeti emlékei) with Zoltán Székely (1969). In the 1938 Arte Moderna international exhibition he won the Bronze Medal founded for engravings and graphic art works. He was a recipient of the Merited Artist title (1971). – B: 0883, 1654, T: 7456.

Varga, Richard Steven (Cleveland, Ohio, USA, 9 October 1928 - ) – Mathematician. He was born of Hungarian parents. He obtained his B.Sc. Degree in Mathematics from the Case Institute of Technology in 1950, and his M.A. and Ph.D. from Harvard University (1951 and 1954). From 1954 until 1960, Varga worked for Bettis Atomic Power Laboratory in Pittsburgh. In 1960 he returned to the Case Institute of Technology as Professor of Mathematics, and remained there for the next nine years. He then moved to Kent State University as Professor of Mathematics. At Kent, Varga has held numerous academic positions including that of Director (1980-1988) and Research Director (1988-2006) of the Institute for Computational Mathematics. Varga is known for his contributions to areas of mathematics, including matrix analysis, complex analysis, approximation theory, and scientific computation. His research interests include numerical analysis, approximation theory and Linear Algebra. Dr. Varga has published over 200 papers, written 7 books, including the classic textbook Matrix Iterative Analysis and Geršgorin and His Circles. His books have been translated into 6 languages. He edited 5 additional books and organized 20 international conferences. Dr. Varga is Editor-in-Chief of the journal Electronic Transactions on Numerical Analysis (ETNA). He has received a number of awards and distinctions, including the Humboldt Prize in 1982. – B: 1031, 2058, T: 7103.

Varga, Vilmos (William) (Hegyközkovácsi, now Cauaceu, Romania, 9 December 1936 - ) – Actor and stage manager. He studied at the István Szentgyörgyi Institute of Dramatic Art in Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mureș, Transylvania, Romania) (1954-1958), then he received a contract with the State Hungarian Theater at Temesvár (now Timișoara, Romania), where he played leading roles for ten years. From 1969, he was a member of the Hungarian Branch of the State Theater of Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania). Between 1983 and 1985, he completed the postgraduate managers' course at the College of Dramatic and Cinematic Art in Bucharest. His acting is characterized by clear diction, individually organized delivery of text, and plastic performance. He has often held popular and captivating recitals in various towns of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), Hungary and other countries. His roles include Lucifer in I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája); Arrow in Gorky's Petty Buorgeois (Kispolgárok); Arnolphe in Molière's The School for Wives (Nők iskolája); Chekhov's Uncle Vania (Ványa bácsi), and I. Csurka's Original Scene (Eredeti helyszín). His stage managements include F. Karinthy's Tomorrow Morning (Holnap reggel); Zs. Móricz's

Judge Sári (Sári Biró), and L. Zilahy's Music Clowns (Zenebohócok). His recordings include Private Ballad (Maszek-ballada); Endre Ady, and I Francois Villon (Én Francois Villon). He is the recipient of a number of distinctions including the Ady Memorial Plaque from the Government of Hungary (1977), the Ady Prize (1985), and the Best Male Actor Prize (1999). – B: 1445, 0875, T: 7456.→Madách, Imre; Karinthy, Frigyes; Móricz, Zsigmond; Csurka, István; Zilahy, Lajos.

Varga, Zoltán (Vál, 1 January 1945 - Budapest, 9 April 2010) - Soccer player, who played in the 1960s and 1970s. He played for Ferencváros – FTC when they won the Inter-City Fair Cup in 1965. He was an Olympic gold medalist at the 1964 Summer Olympic Games in Tokyo. He also played for Ajax Amsterdam. He played in Germany for Borussia Dortmund and Hertha BSC, but was banned for two years. During the period of his suspension, he played for Aberdeen FC in Scotland. He died during a senior match. – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Varga, Zsigmond Sr. (Sigismund) (Marosdécse, now Decea, Romania, 5 February 1886 - Debrecen, 18 April 1956) – Reformed theologian and orientalist. He received his education first at the Nagyenyed (now Aiud, Romania) College, then at the Reformed Theological Academy of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). He continued his studies at the University of Berlin, the University of Geneva, and obtained a Ph.D. from the University of Utrecht as well as a Ph.D. in Eastern Languages from the University of Budapest (1911). First, he worked as Chief Librarian at the Reformed Theological Academy of Debrecen. In 1921, he became Professor of Reformed Theology at the University of Debrecen, later on becoming Professor of Oriental Languages. His works include Religious World View and Historical Research (1911); New Data to the Ancient Religion of the Ural-Altai Peoples (Új adatok az ural-altai népek ősvallásához) (1915); Cultural History of Eastern Peoples in Ancient Times vols. i-ii (1915-1918); The Present State of the Sumerian Problem (1920); Sumerian Heritage in the Religious Life of the Ural-Altai Peoples (1925); General Church History I-II (1931-1932), and From a Distance of Five Thousand Years (Ötezer év távolából) (1942), for which he was awarded the Fáy Prize of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. – B: 0883, 0910, T: 7456.→Varga, Zsigmond Jr.

Varga, Zsigmond Jr. (Sigismund) (Debrecen, 6 September 1919 - Gusen, Austria, 5 March 1945) – Minister of the Reformed Church, son of Zsigmond (Sigismund) Varga, Sr. He completed his schooling at the Reformed College of Debrecen. He studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy of Debrecen, and wrote a series of articles for the theologians' periodical, the Gazette (Közlöny). He obtained a Ph.D. in New Testament Sciences and History of Religion in 1942 in Debrecen. He was on a scholarship in Switzerland in 1942-1943, where he became acquainted with renowned theologians of the age, such as Visser't Hoof, Oscar Cullmann, Emil Brunner and Karl Barth. He returned to Hungary with a collection of books for the Main Library of the Reformed College of Debrecen. In 1944, he conducted studies in Vienna. At the same time, he also served as a minister for Viennese Reformed Hungarians on appointment from the General Convent of the Reformed Church in Hungary. He was arrested for one of his sermons and his anti-fascist behavior, and was deported to the concentrations camp of Matthausen, finally taken to Gusen where he died. There is a memorial plaque at the memorial Hall of Gusen and at the Reformed College of Debrecen. – B: 0883, 1873, T: 7103.→Varga, Zsigmond Sr.

Vargha, Gyula (Julius) (Káva, 4 November 1853 - Budapest, 2 May 1929) – Statistician, poet, translator of literary works. While reading Law, he entered the service of the Statistical Bureau. From 1892 he was Deputy Director of the Central Statistical Bureau, from 1901 its Director. In addition to developing the official statistics, he carried out valuable work in the field of economic statistics. He significantly contributed to the two volumes work of Lajos (Louis) Láng (ed.): Statistics of Hungary. From 1887 he wrote and edited, together with József (Joseph) Jekelfalussy, nine volumes of the Economic and Statistical Yearbook (Gazdasági-Statistikai Évkönyv), which is a valuable source for economic history of work statistics. From 1914 to 1917, he was a Member of Parliament of the National Labor Party (Nemzeti Munkás Párt), and political Undersecretary of State of the Ministry of Commerce. He was a keen follower of the politics of Count István (Stephen) Tisza. His first volume of poems was published in 1881 followed by several more volumes after a silence of 23 years. He was also well-known as a translator of literary works. From 1883 he was a member of the Kisfaludy Society; from 1900 its Secretary and, from 1922 its Vice-President. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1892, ordinary 1907, vice-president 1928-1929 and an honorary member from 1923). His works include Songs (Dalok) (1881); Financial Institutions of Hungary (Magyarország Pénzüzetetei) (1895); “Half-a-century Development of Hungarians” (“A magyarság félévszázados fejlődése”) in the Economic Review (1902); Poems of Gyula Vargha (Vargha Gyula költeményei) (1915); In a Fog (Ködben) (1922), and Toward the Infinite (A végtelen felé) (1923). He was presented with the Marczibányi Prize of the Academy of Sciences (MTA) and, for all his poems, the Grand Prix of the Academy of Sciences in 1923. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Jekelfalussy, József.

Vargha, Tamás (Thomas) (Budapest, 25 February 1890 - Budapest, 1 January 1968) – Minister of the Reformed Church, poet and writer. He was the father of writer and poet Domokos Varga. He completed his Theological studies at the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest, became Parish Minister in Kunszentmiklós, and Dean of the Solt Reformed Deanery. He was Editor of the periodical, Mustard Seed (Mustármag), and the Calendar of Hungarian Christians (Magyar Keresztyének Naptára). A selection of his works includes Poems From the Time of the Great War (Versek a nagy háború idejéből) (1917); Rabaut, Preacher of the Prairies (Rabaut, a puszták prédikátora) (1925), and Little Biblical Mirror (Bibliai kistükör) (1935). – B: 0877, T: 7103.→Varga, Domokos.

Vargyas, Lajos (Louis) (Óbuda, 1 February 1914 - Budapest, 11 October 2007) – Folklorist, music historian and writer. He studied Hungarian Literature and Folklore at the University of Budapest, (1936), and later Church Music at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, as a student and colleague of Zoltán Kodály (1938). He worked at the Folk Music Department of the Museum of Ethnography, Budapest, from 1939 to 1952, as a junior clerk, then an Assistant Professor and Librarian. From 1952, he was appointed Director of the same Institute. From 1962 to 1973, he was a principal contributor, then director, finally counselor for the Folk Music Research Group of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He was one of the outstanding folklorists of the later 20th and the beginning of the 21st century. A selection of his works includes Music Life of the Village (A falu zenei élete) (1942); The Rhythm of Hungarian Poetry (A magyar vers ritmusa) (1952); Hungarian Poetry – Hungarian Language (Magyar vers – magyar nyelv) (1966, 2000); Research in the Medieval History of Folk Ballads (1967); Folk-music of the Hungarians (A magyarság népzeneje) (1981); Hungarian Ballads and the European Ballad Tradition (1983); Hungarian Ethnography (Magyar Néprajz) editor (1988); Repertory of Hungarian Folk Music (A magyar népzene tára) (1993), and Music Genre of a Village (Egy falu zenei világa) (2000). Among his distinctions are the Ferenc Erkel Prize (1980), the Hungarian Heritage Prize (1991), and the Prima Primissima Prize (2004). – B: 0874, 0878, 0877, T: 7103. → Kodály, Zoltán.

Vári, Attila (nickname Doki) (Budapest, 26 February 1976 - ) – Water polo player. He started competing in modern pentathlon, but he was fed up with running. He liked to swim, so he went for water polo training in the neighborhood. He made his debut for the national side in 1997. He played on the gold medal squads at the 2000 and 2004 Summer Olympic Games. Vári's back hand shot from ten meters in the 2000 Summer Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia, finals against Russia was probably the most unexpected and spectacular goal anyone ever scored in an Olympic final game in water polo. B: 1031, T: 7103.

Vári Fábrián, László (Ladislav) (family name: Fábrián) (Tiszaújlak, now Vilok, Carpatho-Ukraine, 16 March 1951 - ) – Poet, ethnographer, literary translator and critic. His higher studies were at the University of Ungvár (now Uzhhorod, Carpatho-Ukraine) (1968-1971), where he read Hungarian Language and Literature. Due to his involvement in the Hungarian Civil Rights Movement, he suffered its consequences. From 1972, he was a soldier, serving in East Germany. From 1974, he was a laborer at the Ironworks in Beregszász (now Berehove, Carpatho-Ukraine). He acquired a Teacher's Degree in Hungarian Language and Literature from the University of Ungvár in 1978. He taught in Mezővári from 1976, later at the Hungarian College in Beregszász. Between 1967 and 1971, he was a member of the Studio Source (Forrás) of Ungvár. In the 1970s, he was silenced. He was involved in collecting ethnographical materials. He is one of the founders of the Hungarian Cultural Society of Sub-Carpathia (Kárpátaljai Magyar Kulturális Szövetség – KMKSZ), and was its Vice-President (1992-1996). Since 1991, he has been one of the leaders of the Alliance of Hungarian Writers (Magyar Írószövetség). His works include Belle-stories (Széphistóriák) poems (1991); Between Unsheathed Swords (Kivont kardok között) poems (1992), and There are Rocking Cradles (Vannak ringó bölcsők), Hungarian folk-ballads of Subcarpathia (1992). He also translates Ruthenian poetry into Hungarian. He is one of the leaders of the Sub-Carpathian Hungarians. His poetry is rooted in peasant and patriotic traditions, is highly regarded, and it will stand the test of time. Among his numerous distinctions are the Prize of the Ninth (1983), the Pro Cultura Hungarica (1991), the Pro Hungarian Art Prize (1992), the Gábor Bethlen Prize (2001), the Attila József Prize (2003), the Balassi Memorial Sword (2004), and the József Ratkó Prize (2007). – 1031, 1257, T: 7103.

Várkonyi, László (Leslie) (Nickname Konyi) (10 August 1956 - Mount Everest 26 April 2010) – Mountaineer. He started climbing at the age of fifteen. He climbed in the High Tatras, Caucasus, Pamir, Andes, and Tien Shan. He conquered three summits over 8000 meters and was under the summit of two others. In the spring of 2002, he reached up to 8770 meters on the south side of Mount Everest in the Himalayas. On 26 April 2010, he attempted to climb Mount Everest again (8850 m), together with Dávid Klein; but during the expedition, the team had an avalanche accident, and László Várkonyi lost his life. Várkonyi was one of the most successful and most experienced Hungarian expedition mountaineers, holding the Hungarian record for climbing without supplementary oxygen. – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Várkonyi, Mihály (Michael) (Victor Varkoni) (Kisvárdá, 31 March 1891 - Santa Barbara, CA, USA, 26 July 1976) – Actor. He completed his studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, in 1912; thereafter, he played in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) (1912-1914), while in 1919-1920 he played at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. In the fall of 1919, he played as a guest artist at the Apollo Cabaret. His film-acting career began with the silent films produced in Kolozsvár. In 1920, he emigrated and lived in Austria and Germany and, in 1923 he settled in the USA, shooting a number of silent films. He was not so sought-after when the sound-films appeared. He did appear at some Hungarian events in New York: e.g. Sulamit (1952), Lily (1954). In the 1950s he worked for Radio New York. He played romantic and heroic roles, as well as character figures. His roles included Lutz in F. Herczeg's The Black Rider (A fekete lovas); John in Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing (Sok hűhó semmiért), and Heavenly draftsman in F. Molnár's Liliom (later made into the Rogers & Hammerstein musical, Carousel). His feature films include Yellow Colt (Sárga csikó) (silent, 1913); Head Mistress (Tanitónő) (silent, 1917); Sister Maria (Mária nővér) (1919); Sodom and Gomorrah (Austrian, 1922); The Angel of Broadway (A Broadway angyala) (USA 1927), Devil of the Seven Seas (Hét tenger ördöge) (USA 1940); Forced Landing (Kényszerleszállás) (USA 1941), and Atom Submarine (Atomtengeralattjáró) (USA 1959). – B: 1445, 0883, T: 7456.

Várkonyi, Nándor (Ferdinand) (Pécs, 19 May 1896 - Pécs, 11 March 1975) – Librarian, cultural and literary historian. From 1914 to 1916 he was enrolled in Cultural History, Antiquity and Oriental Studies at the University of Budapest, and also obtained a Dip. Ed. in Education, majoring in Hungarian and French Literature. In 1916 he was enlisted in the army and in 1917, 80% disabled, he was discharged. By 1921 he had lost his hearing completely and had to relinquish his teaching career. In 1922 he moved back to Pécs, where, from 1924 until his retirement in 1956, he worked at the university library: from 1948 as Section Head and, in 1950 and 1951, as Acting Director. He was engaged in book-classification, reference and information work. In 1933, he was made an honorary lecturer (privat-dozent) in the Arts Department. After his retirement, he organized the Library of the Janus Pannonius Museum, and prepared the basic catalogue of the Library of the Medical University in Pécs. He played an important role in the organization of the literary life of the town of Pécs. He took part in the launching and editing of the University's journal, Symposion; he was also the founder and secretary of the Janus Pannonius Society, and the editor of its journal, Our Fate (Sorsunk), in which the poems of such well-known authors as Győző (Victor) Csorba, Weöres, Sándor, Kodolányi, János; Sándor (Alexander) Weöres and István (Stephen) Simon first appeared. One of his first important works, Modern Hungarian Literature 1880-1920 (A modern magyar irodalom 1880–1920), published in 1929, stirred up quite a storm. Várkonyi wrote a number of literary historical studies, among them Paul Claudel (1926); Emile Verhaeren (1939) and János (John) Kodolányi (1941). In his volume Intellects, Conceptions (Elmék, Eszmék) (1937) he treated the works of the great writers of Hungarian and world literature. He was also engaged in historic studies of the town of Pécs, and about the life in the western part of Hungary, the so-called Transdanubia, mainly in his work, entitled Hungarian Transdanubia (Magyar Dunántúl) (1944). He was the one who traced the only authentic portrait of the great poet Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi, which appeared in Portrait of Petőfi (Petőfi arca) (1940). His best-known and controversial work is Columns of Siriat (Sziriat oszlopai) (1942), in which he tried to reconstruct the past of mankind on the basis of myths (its revised version appeared in 1972). His other works include The French Mentality (A francia szellem) (1925); The Poetry of Transdanubia (A dunántúli költészet) (1940); The Peasant in Hungarian Literature (A paraszt a magyar irodalomban) (1942), and Transdanubia (Dunántúl) (1975). Between the two world wars, together with Béla Hamvas and János Kodolányi, they created one of the great spiritual triads in Hungary. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Janus Pannonius; Petőfi, Sándor; Weöres, Sándor; Simon, István; Hamvas, Béla; Kodolányi, János.

Várkonyi, Zoltán (Budapest, 13 May 1912 - Budapest, 10 April 1979) – Actor, theater and film manager, theater director and translator of literary works. He began translating poems in his school years, and published them in papers and journals. Of his translations Molière's works stand out: The Imaginary Invalid (Le malade imaginaire, Képzelt beteg); The Versailles Impromptu (L'Impromptu de Versailles – A Versailles-i rögtömrés), and The Doctor in Spite of Himself (Le Médecin malgré lui – Doktorrá avatás). He began his studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, in 1931, and obtained his diploma in 1934, after which he entered into a contract with the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest; in May 1941, he was discharged. From August 1941, he played at the Madách Theater (Madách Színház) with great success. In 1945 he founded the Artists' Theater (Művész Színház) as a private theater, and it was then that his activity as theater manager and directing began. In 1949, the Theater was closed down. From 1949 to 1951, he was a member of the National Theater of Budapest and, from 1951 to 1953 he was manager of the People's Army Theater (Néphadsereg Színháza). In 1953 he rejoined the National Theater. In 1962 he became stage manager of the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház), later its Director. From 1945, he taught at the Academy of Dramatic and Cinematic Art, Budapest and, from 1974 until his death, he was its Rector. In addition to his theatrical work, he directed 19 successful feature films. Várkonyi was an outstanding figure of theatrical art of the second half of the twentieth century, with his unparalleled energy, as an artist, actor and manager of many different genres; he was the builder of a theater, a film-scenarist and an educator of actors. He was a member of the Association-Directorate of the International Film Colleges (Centre International de Liaison des Ecoles de Cinéma et de Télévision – CILECT). An exhibition was organized, entitled “Zoltán Várkonyi the Actor” in January 1986, and the Hungarian Television presented a memorial program in its Studio '85. His roles included title role in Shakespeare's Hamlet; Dauphin in G.B. Shaw's Saint Joan; Higgins in Shaw's Pygmalion, and Möbius in F. Dürrenmatt's The Physicists. His managerial works included Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew (A makrancos hölgy); Romeo and Juliet; All's Well that Ends Well (Minden jó, ha a véged jó), and Dostoyevsky's Crime and Punishment (Bűn és bűnhődés). His film roles included Bitter Truth (Keserű igazság) (1956), Sons of the Stone-hearted Man, i, ii (A kőszívű ember fiai, I-II) (1965), and The Stars of Eger, aka Eclipse of the Crescent Moon i,ii (Egri csillagok I-II) (1968). His bust was erected in the Comedy Theater; a relief keeps his memory in the Academy of Dramatic and Cinematic Art, and a memorial plaque cherishes his memory on the wall of the one-time Artist Theater in Budapest. His statue stands in front of the László Ranódy Synchron Studio (1985). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize (1953, 1956) and was given the awards of Meritorious Artist and of Outstanding Artist; he was also honored with the Pro Arte Prize (1974). – T: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Varnus, Xavér (Budapest, 29 April 1964 - ) – Organ virtuoso and writer. He went to school in Kőbánya, an outer suburb of Budapest, and studied piano at the College of Music in the same suburb, where he also began playing the organ at the local Reformed Church. To further his studies, he learned organ at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, under Melinda Kistétény and Gábor (Gabriel) Lehotka and, subsequently, he became a student of the organist of Notre-Dame, Pierre Cochereau, in Paris; finally, he trained under Professor Lorenz Stolzenbach of the Leipzig Conservatory. In 1981 he settled in France and finally emigrated to Canada, where he obtained Canadian citizenship in 1984. Varnus became a well-known organist in Toronto. He studied at several universities and attended lectures in medieval literature and history of the poet György (George) Faludy. During the 1990s, for four years, he worked as the director of the Organ Festival of Zalaegerszeg in County Zala. In 1977 he went on a concert tour, having already had over three thousand concerts to his credit, drawing large audiences everywhere: in England and France, and in the Synagogue of Budapest. He is also a recording artist. He made a CD, playing on the organ of the Hall of Fine Arts, Budapest, earning the platinum leaf four times in one year. His CD-recording From Bach to Star Wars (Sony BMG, 2008) yielded a gold leaf in the month of its publication. In 2007 appeared his disk, entitled From Ravel to Vangelis, featuring works such as Ravel's Bolero, pieces from Carl Orff's Carmina Burana, and also Oxygene and Equinoxe by Jean-Michel Jarre; Andrew Lloyd Webber's Phantom of the Opera, and the piece 1492 by Vangelis. His first book, entitled God will Forgive: that is His trade (Isten majd megbocsát: az a mestersége), (1996, 1997, 1998, 1999). In the following years he published Continuation (Folytatás) (1998, 1999), Pictures and Masterworks (Képek és Mesterművek) (1999), and Metmorphoses (Átváltozások) (2005). The organ artistry of Xaver Varnus attracted many people to organ playing. He is regarded as the most successful Hungarian organist ever, at home and abroad. He was honored with the Officer Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary in 2004, the Middle Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2010), and he was made Honorary Citizen of Kőbánya. – B: 1031, 2016, T: 7456.→Kistétényi, Melida; Lehotka, Gábor; Faludy, György.

Várpalota (Palace of Buda Castle) – The Royal Palace occupies the southern section of Buda Castle. The Anjou King, Lajos I, (Louis the Great, 1342-1382) initiated the original construction of this Palace when he relocated the royal court from Visegrád to Buda. This period of construction lasted for nearly two centuries and, during the reign of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490), the castle became one of the greatest buildings of Europe. After the Turkish occupation, starting in 1541, the castle greatly deteriorated. In 1881, Miklós (Nicholas) Ybl received the contract to rebuild the castle. During World War II, the complex was heavily damaged, but was reconstructed during the 1970s and 1980s. During the reconstruction phase, archeological explorations found many valuable relics. Now the Palace is a cultural center, housing the Historical Museum of Budapest, the Hungarian Workers Museum, the Hungarian National Gallery, and the Széchényi Library. It has been part of the World Heritage since 1988. – B: 1020, 2055, T: 7663.→Lajos I, King; Mátyás I, King; Buda Castle.

Varró, Dezső (Desider) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, 29 June 1907 - Dés, now Dej, 11 April 1982) – Minister of the Reformed Church, poet. He completed his high schools studies at Kolozsvár, Dés and Nagyenyed (now Aiud, Romania), and he graduated from the Dániel Berzsenyi High School at Budapest in 1927. He obtained a minister of religion degree from the Reformed Theological Academy of Kolozsvár in 1932. He read Philosophy at the University of Budapest (1934-1937). He was assistant minister in Szamosújvár (now Gherla) (1938-1941), and in Dés (1941-1947). He was minister in the Diaspora churches of Radákszinye (now Răzibuneni) (1947-1950) and Kozárvár (Cuzdrioara) (1950-1970) After retirement he lived at Dés. His first poems appeared in the News of Enyed (Enyedi Hírlap) (1925), later a number of journals published his poems including News of Brassó (Brassói Lapok), Church Life (Egyházi Közélet), Opposition (Ellenzék), Transylvanian Helikon (Erdélyi Helikon), Young Transylvania (Fiatal Erdély), News of East (Keleti Újság), Szamos Diary (Szamosi Napló), the West (Nyugat), News of Pest (Pesti Hírlap), and Pest Diary (Pesti Napló) (1926-1940), as well as the New Frontline (Új Arcvonal) (1931), and the New Transylvanian Anthology (Új erdélyi antológia) (1937). He was a talented poet with much promise. However, his momentum broke at the middle of the 1930s. Although some of his poems appeared in the booklets of Crop (Termés), he slowly withdrew from literary life. His only volume entitled Killer Spring (Gyilkos tavasz) containing all his poems, was published in 1970. He was a remarkable second generation poet of the post-Trianon years. At the fiftieth anniversary of his death a memorial plaque was placed on the wall of the church of Kozárvár. – B: 1031, 1492, T: 7103.→Trianon Peace Treaty.

Varró, István (Stephen) (Nagykanizsa, 17 March 1878 - Chicago, 13 September 1963) – Publicist, sociologist, librarian and bibliographer. He studied at the universities of Budapest, Vienna and Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania); from the latter he obtained a Ph.D. in Political Science. At the Chamber of Commerce and Industry (Kereskedelmi és Iparkamara), Budapest, he worked as a secretary and was also the organizer and Head of the Library and the Documentation Service. Between the two world wars, he was one of the editors of the civil radical sociological journal Our Century (Századunk). He prepared the Hungarian chapter on the Gypsy problem for the International Bibliography (including Hungarian Bibliography, Gypsy Lore Society). To get away from fascism, he moved to Chicago toward the end of the 1930s, where he worked as a bookbinder. His works include Sociology and Ethnography (Szociologia és néprajz) (1907), and Bibliography of Hungarian Sociology (Magyar társadalomtudományi bibliográfia) (1909. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Varsányi, Gyula (Julius) (Esztergom, 16 February 1912 - Adelaide, 6 January 1988) – Lawyer and publicist. He obtained his Doctorate in Law from the University of Budapest. He furthered his studies in Rome and Milan. He worked initially as a civil servant; in Berlin and Stockholm as a commercial representative, and in Copenhagen as a foreign trade negotiator. He emigrated to Australia in 1950, where he worked as an official for a large firm; later he became a Research Associate at the University of Adelaide. His main interest lay in the field of International Law and the problem of national minorities. His writings appeared in international legal and political journals and study volumes. His works include Quest for a New Central Europe, editor (1977), and Border is Fate. A study of Mid-European diffused Ethnic Minorities (1982). – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Varsányi, Irén (Irene) (Malvin Voller) (Győr, 16 August 1878 - Budapest, 17 October 1932) – Actress. In 1894, she enrolled in the Academy of Performing Arts and, before completing her studies she was hired by the newly opened Comedy Theater (Vígszínház), and remained a member of the Theater until her early death. Her abilities blossomed after a reasonably short while; in great dramatic character roles, together with Gyula (Julius) Hegedűs, she played an important part in the success and the style of the Comedy Theater. She was a leading personality of the golden age of the theater, and her art helped in the rejuvenation of the Hungarian theater. She was a member of the Comedy Theater for 35 years and acted in 217 plays. Her more important roles were: Juli in Molnár's Liliom; Catherine in Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew (A Makrancos hölgy); Eliza in Shaw's Pygmalion; Sonya in Chekhov's Uncle Vanya (Ványa bácsi), Cécile in F. Herczeg's Blue Fox (Kék róka); Ella in Ibsen's John Gabriel Borkmann; Adél I F. Molnár's Glass Slipper (Üvegcipő), and Olga in Chekhov's The Three Sisters (Három nővér). She also played in a number of silent films, including The Dance (A táncz) (1901); Cox and Box (1915); Anna Karenina (1918); Sappho (1920), and The Actress (A színésznő) (1920). There is a Varsányi-Hegedűs Memorial Ring; a Street bears his name in Budapest, and a memorial plaque marks the house where she lived in Budapest. – B: 0871, 1031, T: 7684. → Hegedűs, Gyula.

Várszegi, Imre Asztrik O.S.B. (Emeric Astrix) (Sopron, 26 January 1946 - ) – Ecclesiastic. He studied Theology at the Theological Academy, Pannonhalma (1964-1971); later Hungarian and German Literature at the University of Budapest, and earned a Ph.D. in History in 1985. He entered the Benedictine Order in 1964, and was ordained into priesthood in 1971. He served as Magister from 1978 to 1986. He was Provost of the Arch Abbey from 1985 to 1988, and Auxiliary Bishop of Esztergom (1989-1992), then

Secretary of the Bishops' Conference, and Rector of the Central Seminary of Budapest, from 1989 to 1992. He was President of the Board of the Ichtyos Foundation in 1990; Arch-Abbot of Pannonhalma in 1991, and a Member of the Knights of Malta from 1991. He wrote a number of articles and essays on history and spirituality, and authored a Talking Booklet (Beszélgető könyvecske) with László (Ladislav) Lengyel (1999). He is the President of the Hungarian Christian-Jewish Council, and an honorary doctor of the University of Louvain-la-Neuve, Belgium. He is a recipient the Ányos Jedlik Prize. – B: 0973, T: 7103.

Vas, Gereben (József Radákovits) (Joseph) (Fürged, 7 April 1823 - Vienna, 26 January 1868) – Writer. Following his studies in Veszprém and Vienna, he became an agricultural apprentice on a Transdanubian farm. Later, he studied Law in Győr, where he founded a hand-written newsletter, the Two-farthings Magazine (Kétgarasos tár). His humorous writings earned him popularity. In 1847 he became a lawyer in Pest. He published a series of satirical writings, later also as a collection. After the publication of his first volume in 1847, Life Sketches and Hornet's Nest (Életképek és darázs-fészkek), he gave up his career in law and devoted his life to literature. He wrote short stories, sketches and life-scenes for journals and yearbooks. He became the second most popular writer after the great Mór (Maurice) Jókai. The government of 1848 appointed him, together with János (John) Arany, editor for the political journal, The Friend of the Nation (A nép barátja). After the Army's surrender at Világos in 1849, he was in hiding, then captured. He was stripped of his law qualification. After his release, he wrote novels and articles for daily newspapers. Following the Compromise between Austria and Hungary at the beginning of 1868, he went to Vienna and was active as a correspondent reporting on the events on the negotiations of the two delegations. He died there and his ashes were returned to Hungary in 1885. His works include The Good Old Times (A régi jó idők) (1855), The Day Laborers of the Nation (A nemzet napszámásai) (1857), and The Penny Pinching Aristocracy (A garasos arisztokrácia) (1865), – B: 0883, 1031, 1257, T: 7667. → Arany, János; Jókai, Mór.

Vas, István (Stephen) (Budapest, 24 September 1910 - Budapest, 16 December 1991) – Poet, translator, essayist, and memoir writer. He was born into a bourgeois Jewish family. The young Vas rejected his parents' bourgeois lifestyle. He slowly realized that he was closer to his rabbi grandfather's conservative Judaism than to his parents' assimilationist values. This can be seen in his memoirs Difficult Love (Nehéz szerelem) (1972); Why Does the Vulture Screech? (Mért vijjog a saskeselyű?) (1981), and Afterward (Azután) (1991). At the same time, he was critical of the Budapest Jewish bourgeoisie. The wartime experience and the years of persecution added a new dimension to Vas' art. In two of his best-known poems, Pest Elegy (Pesti elégia) (1957) and Boccherini's Tomb (Boccherini sírja) (ca. 1964), he paid tribute to his native city, and to those people, who helped him survive the years of darkness. His selected poems entitled Through the Smoke was translated by the American writer Bruce Berlind (1989). Among his numerous works are Three Nights of a Love (Egy szerelem három éjszakája), a tragedy with music, with Miklós (Nicholas) Hubay and György (George) Ránki (1961), and The Unknown God (Az ismeretlen Isten) study (1974). He translated many outstanding works into Hungarian, including F. Villon's Great Testament (Nagy testamentum) (1940); C. Alvaro's The Strong Man (Az erős ember) novel (1940); F. von Schiller's Love and Intrigue (Ármány és szerelem) drama (1950); W. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra, drama (1960), and W. M. Thackeray's The History of Henry Esmond (Henry Esmond története), novel (1986). He was a recipient of many distinctions, including the Baumgarten Prize (1958), the Attila József Prize (1951, 1956, 1961), the Kossuth Prize (1962, 1965), and the Order of Banner with Laurels (1980). – B: 0878, 2082, T: 7103.→Hubay, Miklós; Ránki, György.

Vas, Zoltán (Weinberger) (Budapest, 30 March 1903 - Budapest, 13 August 1983) – Communist politician and writer. As a high school student, he joined the Hungarian Red Army in 1919; then, after the downfall of the Hungarian (Soviet) Republic, he took part in the organization of the Communist Youth Movement. Due to his activities, he was expelled from high school in 1920, and fled to Czechoslovakia, from where he returned to Hungary illegally with a Party task in 1921. Soon after, he was arrested and imprisoned for 10 years; however, in 1922, by way of a prisoner exchange, he was able to leave for the Soviet Union and, in Moscow, he studied at the University. In 1924 he illegally returned to Hungary. In 1925 he was again arrested and sent to prison for 6 years. In 1929, he participated in a hunger strike at the Vác prison, whereupon his punishment was increased to 13-and-a-half years. In an exchange program on 21 March 1940 he, together with Mátyás (Matthias) Rákosi and others, departed to the Soviet Union and he became an associate of the Kossuth Radio in Moscow, having also joined the Red Army. He returned to Hungary in 1945 and, until 1953, he played a decisive role in Hungarian economic policy. After a series of clashes with Ernő (Ernest) Gerő, he was relieved from his high position (Head of the National Planning Office), demoted, then lost that position as well, and was forced to “exercise self-criticism”. He belonged to Imre (Emeric) Nagy's circle. During the 1956 Revolution, he was the food-control commissioner; on 4 November he fled to the Yugoslavian Embassy. On 18 November he left the Embassy and was arrested and interned in Snagov, Romania. In 1958 he could return to Hungary, but could not enter the political life; again, instead, he devoted his time to writing. In early 1973 he was again persecuted because of his autobiographic writing entitled Not the Milkman Rings the Bell (Nem a tejes csenget). Well-known are his works dealing with the life of Lajos (Louis) Kossuth (1965, 1967, 1968), and also of Miklós (Nicolas) Horthy (1975), though these reveal the inevitably one-sided historical view of the period; more enduring are his reminiscences and especially My Suppressed Book (1990, published posthumously). – B: 0881, T: 7456.→Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary; Banners of 1848-1849; Kossuth, Lajos; Horthy, Miklós; Rákosi, Mátyás; Gerő, Ernő; Nagy, Imre.

Vasadi Péter (family name: Víz) (Újpest, 1 June 1926 - ) – Writer and poet. First, he attended school in Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania); later, went to the Cadet School of Thaldorf in Bavaria. From 1947 to 1949, he was a leather-merchant apprentice. He did the maturity examination in an evening course in 1948. Thereafter, he studied at the University of Budapest and gained a Degree in German Literature in 1951, while earning a living as engineering draftsman and unskilled laborer. In 1952 he became Head of the Planning Group of the Transport Service. From 1967, he became an associate of the Catholic publications New Man (Új Ember) and Vigilia. He appeared in the anthology

With our Bread (A Magunk Kenyerén) in 1972. His poetry has a transcendental quality, searching for the probabilities of compassion, love and humaneness. His works include Report from Babylon (Jelentés Babilonból) poems (1974); Time Presses (Sürget az idő) essays (1996), and My Window Looks Out to the Sea (Kinéz tengerre ablakom), poems (1997). He was awarded a number of distinctions, including the Attila József Prize (1991), the Artis Jus Literary Prize (1993), the György Rónay Prize (1994), and the Milan Füst Award (1996). – B: 0878, 1257, T: 7456.

Vasady Balogh, Lajos (Lewis) (Vasadi) (Budapest, 26 January 1921 - Budapest, 2002) – Conductor, composer, pianist and organist. In 1938 he studied conducting at the National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede), Budapest, under the direction of László (Ladislav) Lajtha, János (John) Ferencsik, and Endre (Andrew) Szervánszky. From 1942 he continued his studies at the Teachers' Training Institute of the Academy of Music, Budapest, under Jenő (Eugene) Ádám, Lajos (Louis) Bárdos, and János (John) Viski. With a scholarship, he trained under Wilhelm Furtwängler and Isai Dobroven. He also studied Law, Philosophy, and History of Art. Between 1942 and 1953, he taught piano and composition at the Academy of Music of Buda. From 1953 to 1956, he led the Mávag Artists' Ensemble. Between 1956 and 1961, he was a conductor of the State Opera House, Budapest. From 1960 to 1966, he conducted the Postmen's Symphony Orchestra; from 1966, he was its musical director until 1981. In the meantime, he was a leading conductor for the Opera Stagione of Milan. He composed an Opera entitled Mary Stuart (Stuart Mária), Symphonic and Chamber pieces, Cantatas, Concertos and Ecclesiastical music, as well as works for solo instruments. He was guest conductor in many countries in Europe. He received the Meritorious Artist title in 1979. – B: 1445, 1679, T: 7456.→Lajtha, László; Ferencsik, János; Szervánszky, Endre; Ádám, Jenő; Bárdos Lajos; Viski, János (2).

Vasarely, Victor (born: Vásárhelyi, Győző) (Pécs, 9 April 1906 - Paris, 15 March 1997)

– Painter and artist. He was a Hungarian-French artist, whose work is generally seen aligned with Op-art. Vasarely grew up in Pöstyén (now Piešťany, Slovakia) and Budapest where, in 1925, he took up medical studies at the Medical School of the University of Budapest. In 1927 he abandoned medicine to study traditional painting at the private Podolini-Volkman Academy. In 1928-1929, he enrolled at the Sándor (Alexander) Bortnyik workshop, which existed until 1938, then widely recognized as the center of Bauhaus studies in Budapest. In 1929, Vasarely painted his Blue Study and Green Study. In 1930 he married his fellow student Claire Spinner (1908-1990). Together they had two sons, Andre and Jean-Pierre. In Budapest, he became a graphics designer and a poster artist, combining patterns and organic images.

Vasarely left Hungary and settled in Paris in 1930, working as a graphic artist and as a creative consultant at the advertising agencies Havas, Draeger and Devambez (1930-1935). He played with the idea of opening up an institution modeled after Sándor

Bortnyik's workshop, and developed some teaching material for it. Having lived mostly in cheap hotels, he settled from 1942 to 1944 in Saint-Céré. After World War II, he opened an atelier in Arcueil, a suburb some 10 kilometers from the center of Paris (in the Val-de-Marne region of the Île-de-France). In 1961, he finally settled in Annet-sur-Marne (in the Seine-et-Marne region). Over the next three decades, Vasarely developed his style of geometric abstract art, working in various materials, but using a minimal number of forms and colors. Between 1929 and 1944, Vasarely experimented with textural effects, perspective, shadow and light. His early graphic period resulted in works such as Zebras (1937), Chess Board (1935), and Girl-power (1934). The painting Zebra, created by Vasarely in the 1930s, is considered by some to be one of the earliest examples of Op-art. Between 1944 and 1947 Vasarely experimented with cubistic, futuristic, expressionistic, symbolistic and surrealist paintings without developing a unique style. Thereafter, he said, he was on the wrong track. He exhibited his works in the Gallery of Denise René (1946) and the Gallery René Breteau (1947). Writing the introduction to the catalogue, Jacques Prévert placed Vasarely among the surrealists. Prévert creates the term "imaginoires" (images + noir, black) to describe the paintings. Self Portrait (1941) and The Blind Man (1946) are associated with this period. Between 1947 and 1951 he developed a geometric abstract art (optical art). Finally, Vasarely found his own style. Ellipsoid pebbles and shells found during a vacation in 1947, on the Breton coast at Belle-Île, which inspired him to the Belles-Isles works. From 1948, Vasarely usually spent his summer months in Gordes in Provence-Alpes-Côte d'Azur. There, the cubic houses led him to the composition of the group of works labeled "Gordes/Cristal". He worked on the problem of empty and filled spaces on a flat surface as well as the stereoscopic view. From 1951 to 1955, he created kinetic images, black-and-white photographs. He developed superimposed acrylic glass panes to create dynamic, moving impressions depending on the viewpoint. In his black-and-white period, he combined the frames into a single pane by transposing photographs in two colors. Tribute to Malevitch, a ceramic wall picture of 100 m<sup>2</sup>, which he co-designed in 1954 with the architect Carlos Raúl Villanueva, adorns the University of Caracas, Venezuela. Kinetic art flourished, and works by Vasarely, Calder, Duchamp, Man Ray, Jesús-Rafael Soto, and Tingzely were exhibited at the Denise René Gallery under the title "Le Mouvement" (The Movement). Vasarely published his Yellow Manifest. Building on the research of constructivist and Bauhaus pioneers, he postulated that visual kinetics (plastique cinétique) relied on the perception of the viewer who is considered the sole creator, playing with optical illusion. During 1955 to 1965, he created the Folklore planétaire, permutations, and serial art; on 2 March 1959 Vasarely patented his method of unités plastiques. Permutations of geometric forms are cut out of a colored square and rearranged. He worked with a strictly defined palette of colors and forms, which he later enlarged and numbered. Out of this plastic alphabet, he started serial art, an endless permutation of forms and colors worked out by his assistants. In 1963 Vasarely presented his palette to the public under the name of Folklore planétaire. In 1965, he created his Hommage à l'hexagone, Vega: The tribute to the hexagon series consists of endless transformations of indentations and relief, adding color variations, creating a perpetual mobile of optical illusion. In 1965 Vasarely was included in the Museum of Modern Art exhibition The Responsive Eye, created under the direction of William C. Seitz. His Vega-series plays with spherical swelling grids, creating an optical illusion of volume. In October 1967, designer Will Burtin invited Vasarely to make a presentation to Burtin's Vision '67 conference, held at New York University. On 5 June 1970 Vasarely opened his first dedicated Museum with over 500 works in a Renaissance Palace in Gordes (closed in 1996). A second major undertaking was the Foundation Vasarely in Aix-en-Provence, a Museum housed in a distinct structure specially designed by Vasarely. It was inaugurated in 1976 by French president Georges Pompidou. Also in 1976, his large kinematic object, Georges Pompidou was installed at the Centre Pompidou in Paris. The Vasarely Museum, located in his birthplace in Pécs, Hungary, was established with a large donation of works by Vasarely. In 1982 154 specially created serigraphs were taken into space by the cosmonaut Jean-Loup Chrétien on board the French-Soviet spacecraft Sakyut 7, and later sold for the benefit of UNESCO. In 1987, the second Hungarian Vasarely Museum was established in the Zichy Palace in Budapest, with more than 400 works. One of his large murals, the Mural de Canada, has occupied the front entrance hall of the Vancouver Academy of Music in British Columbia, Canada, since 1977. His works are treasured by museums such as: Museum Foundation Vasarely in Aix-en-Provence (1976); Vasarely Museum in Gordes Palace, Vaucluse, France (1970-1996-closed); Vasarely Museum, Pécs, Hungary (1976); Vasarely Museum, Zichy Palace, Óbuda, Budapest, Hungary (1987). He received awards and prizes, among them: the Guggenheim Prize (1964), the French Chevalier de L'Ordre de la Légion d'honneur (1979), the Art Critics Prize, Brussels and the Gold Medal at the Milan Triennale. – B: 0872, 1031, T: 7617.

Vásárhelyi, János (John) (Maroscsúcs, now Stina de Mures, Romania, 12 June 1888 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 11 December 1960) – Bishop of the Reformed Church in Transylvania, (Erdély, now in Romania). After completing his higher studies at the Reformed Theological Academy of Kolozsvár (then in Hungary), Jena, Germany, and Basel, Switzerland, he served as an assistant minister in Beszterce (now Bistrita, Romania) in 1911 and in Dés (now Dej, Romania) in 1919. In 1921 he responded to a call from the Reformed Church in Kolozsvár, where he became a parish minister in 1923, a post he resigned in 1927, when he was elected Chief Secretary of the Transylvanian Reformed District (Erdélyi Református Egyházkerület). He was elected Bishop there in 1936. Of his numerous publications the best known are: Mihály Tompa (Tompa Mihály) (1916); I Know Whom I Believed (Tudom kinek hittem) sermons (1927); Our Faith (A mi hitünk) (1935); The Prayer Book of the Reformed Christian (A református keresztyén imádságoskönyve) (1938); The Reformed Woman (A református asszony), and The Triumphant Jesus (A diadalmas Jézus). – B: 0911, 0940, T: 7617. → Tompa, Mihály; Nagy, Géza.

Vásárhelyi, Pál (Paul) (Szepesolaszi, now Spišské Vluchy, Slovakia, 25 March 1795 - Pest, 9 April 1846) – Hydraulic engineer. He completed his secondary schooling in Eperjes (now Prešov, Slovakia) and Miskolc; then he continued his studies at the Engineering School of the University of Pest, receiving a Degree in Engineering in 1816. He started his work as an engineer with the surveying of the Kőrös River tributaries; then, from 1823 he was involved in surveying of the Danube River course. The mapping of the most difficult section of the Lower Danube was carried out under his leadership between 1832 and 1834. With the guidance of Count István Széchenyi, he completed the plan of the control of the “Iron Gate” section of the river, where it cuts across the Carpathian Mountain range, and he started the construction of the Lower Danube road (later on named after Széchenyi) and the riverbed reconstruction of the Iron Gate (1834-1837). However, this construction work had to be left incomplete because of the withdrawal of government assistance. He was invited to become a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1835. By 1843, he had completed one of his more important engineering works: the altitude determination of the river-level of the Danube and its tributaries related to the level of the Adriatic Sea. His greatest engineering achievement was the plan for the Tisza riverbed reconstruction, which he worked out in the years between 1833 and 1845. The main idea was to speed up the water-current for the down-flow of the river; which can only be achieved by cutting across the elbows and bends, thereby shortening the river's length. While debating his plans, he suddenly died. During the second half of the 19th century, the Tisza River Regulation was carried out to completion according to his plans. By the implementation of the flood-protection, 3.26 million acres of formerly unusable land became arable.

Vásárhelyi was the most significant river-water engineer of the Reform Era. His main achievements were: river-flow improvement of the lower Danube at Vaskapu (the Iron Gate), and also river-flow improvement of the Tisza River, the greatest tributary of the Danube. He was also an outstanding figure in Hungarian cartography and river-bed reconstruction. He recognized that one of the most extensive and richest reserves of medicinal mineral water, as well as thermal energy supply of aquatic origin, lies unexploited beneath the Great Hungarian Plain (Magyar Nagyalföld). In connection with all his various engineering undertakings, his studies survived partly in manuscript form, partly in print. Among these, the most significant are: (1) the mathematical formula for the average velocity of rivers given in a transverse section; and (2) his paper for his Academic Inaugural Address dealing with the regulation of the River Berettyó. In Szeged, a statue was erected for him. His works include Concerning a Permanent Bridge Over the Danube at Buda Pest (A buda pesti állóhid tárgyában) (1838), and A Few Warning Words about the Vaskapu Subject Matter (Néhány figyelmeztető szó a vaskapui ügyben) (1838). A College, a Commercial High School, a High School in Kecskemét, and a Street in Budapest bear his name. – B: 0883, 1138, 1031, T: 7456. → Széchenyi, Count István.

Vásárhelyi, Sándor (Alexander) (Felsőtárkány, 16 April 1934 - ) – Dancer and dancing teacher. Between 1954 and 1957, he worked as a dancer in the Danube Artist Ensemble (Duna Művészegyüttes), the Attila József Theater (József Attila Színház) Budapest, and the Szigligeti Theater (Szigligeti Színház) of Szolnok. Since 1957 he has been a lecturer for the Army (Honvéd) Artist Ensemble and, between 1968 and 1978, he was its solo dancer. In his solo roles he attracted notice for his naturally simple but technically high standard performance, as e.g. in Tibor Vadasi's: Negro Cantata (Néger kantáta); F. Novák's: Manly Behavior (Legényes), and Honvéd (Army) Cantata (Honvéd kantáta). In the 1980s, he was the leader of the Dancing Ensemble of Budapest University, as well as the studio-leader of the Domino Pantomime Ensemble. He was awarded the Ferenc Liszt Prize in 1975. – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Vásárhelyi Songbook – A manuscript songbook dating from the second half of the 17th century. The small, 340-leaf book contains love songs almost exclusively, thus being one of the most important sources of old Hungarian romantic poetry. It offers a rich selection of close to one hundred years' collection of love and popular songs, from between the end of the 16th to the end of the 17th century. Their authors, with a few exceptions (e.g. Bálint [Valentine] Balassi), are unknown. It was compiled around 1670, and was in the possession of the Vásárhelyi family of Háromszék County (Transylvania, Erdély, now in Romania), until the middle of the 19th century. – B: 1150, T: 7617.→Balassi, Bálint; Flower Songs.

Vásárhelyi, Zoltán (Kecskemét, 2 March 1900 - Budapest, 27 January 1977) – Choir conductor and composer. He studied violin and composition, the latter with Zoltán Kodály, at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Music Academy, Budapest. Following two years as a violinist and concertmaster in Estonia and Norway, he returned to Kecskemét, where he taught violin and choral singing at the Music School from 1926 until 1942. He staged numerous choral works during this time, and had an important role in familiarizing the public with the works of Kodály, and other contemporary Hungarian composers. From 1942, he taught at the National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede), Budapest. Between 1938 and 1948, he led a number of workers' choirs. Defying a ban, he conducted performances of the choral work The Peacock Flew Away (Felszállott a páva) by Kodály during the war years. In 1947, his own Vásárhelyi Choir won first prize at the Llangollen International Choral Competition in Wales, Great Britain. His compositions include many folk music interpretations, cantatas, popular songs, and children's choral works. He was a prominent figure of the Hungarian choral music scene. He was a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1949), the Merited Artist, and the Outstanding Artist titles in 1965. There is a male choir named after him. – B: 0883, T: 7667.→Kodály, Zoltán.

Vásáry, Tamás (Thomas) (Debrecen, 11 August 1933 - ) – Piano virtuoso and conductor. He gave his first concert, a Mozart piano concerto, at the age of eight in Debrecen. Ernő (Ernest) Dohnányi supervised his development. After completing his training at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest in 1953, as Zoltán Kodály's assistant, who made him a gift of a Steinway grand piano, he studied solfège and theory of music. Vásáry won the Franz Liszt Competition in Budapest in 1948. He regularly gave concerts in Hungary, as well as abroad. He left Hungary for Switzerland in 1956. He made his débuts in the major cities of the West in 1960 and 1961. He moved to England and settled in London. He gave concerts in London, Berlin and the United States. His first recording of the works of Liszt in 1960 met with great surprise in musical circles. He has made many recordings with Deutsche Grammophon, particularly of the Romantic repertoire, especially Chopin. He has made numerous concert tours and played in the best-known musical festivals of the world. After obtaining further training in Vienna and London, he debuted as a conductor in France in 1970. As a conductor, Vásáry served as joint artistic director of the Northern Sinfonia from 1979 to 1982, sharing the post with Iván Fischer. With the Northern Sinfonia, Vásáry recorded the Chopin piano concertos, directing from the keyboard. Vásáry was Principal Conductor of the Bournemouth Sinfonietta from 1989 to 1997, and Music Director of the Budapest Symphony Orchestra from 1993. He has conducted several operas by Mozart: The Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága) at the Sadlers Wells Theater in London and in Cambridge; Don Giovanni in Seville, and The Magic Flute (A varázsfuvola) in Budapest, where he also conducted Verdi's Rigoletto and Gluck's Orpheus and Eurydice. In 2006 he founded the Zoltán Kodály World Youth Orchestra (Kodály Zoltán Világifjúsági Zenekar). Vásáry has conducted more than 100 famous orchestras throughout the world. His remarkable qualities are his diversified use of the keys, his exquisite sense of form, and his outstanding lyrical and virtuoso performances. His numerous recordings under six different labels have further enhanced his world reputation. He is the recipient of a number of distinctions and prizes, including the Bach and Paderewsky Medals; Honorary Member of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music in London; Chevalier des Arts et Lettres (Order of Knights of Art and Literature) in France; in Hungary the Middle Cross of the Hungarian Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary, the Kossuth Prize, the Millennial Kölcsey Prize; the Gold Medal of the President of the Republic of Hungary (twice), and the Hungarian Heritage Prize. – B: 1031, T: 7684. → Dohnányi, Ernő; Kodály, Zoltán; Bogányi Gergely; Érdi, Tamás.

Vaskapu, Cave Inscriptions at, Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) – Romanian archeologists, during their research in 1973, found inscriptions beside the rock face, called “Alibég”, near the Vaskapu (Iron Gate – a gorge of the Lower Danube, where it leaves Historic Hungary) and also discovered new findings in a cave 30 meters above the water level in 1974. The brief announcement of the findings describes two undoubtedly runic-ligatured pictures, delineated with ochre red paint, together with the portrayal of a human hand. The line-direction of the runic signs is more recent than the part with red paint. Considering that the writing signs are in the mouth line of the sphinx-head-like drawing, the content of the words may indicate magic spells conjuring the forces of nature. In addition to the announcement, “numerous inscriptions” are rumored, but the report says nothing about them. Supposedly, these refer to further runic inscriptions. Unfortunately, no detailed photographs were made of the locality before the construction of the weir. Thus the elevated level of the Danube River will cover the mouth of the cave with its pictures and runic inscriptions forever. – B: 1174, T: 7669. → Vásárhelyi, Pál; Hungarian Runic Script.

Vasquez de Molina, Countess Italia (Italia Ucelli) (Trieste, 24 March 1869 - Budapest, 1954) – Singer of Italian origin (soprano). She was a student of András (Andrew) Jesenics. At age 21, she made her debut in the title role of Aida at the Opera House in Budapest. The performance met with such success that Gustav Mahler, the musical director and conductor of the Opera at the time, contracted her to the Opera House without any previous training on stage, and she remained there as the leading dramatic soprano until 1912. With her relatively clearly colored soprano voice and bel canto singing technique, at first she was very successful in the Italian operas but, later in her career, she was equally successful in Wagner's music dramas. She sang her roles in Italian; she did not learn Hungarian. Her roles included Sulamith in Goldmark's Queen of Sheba (Sába királynője); Santuzza in Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana (Parasztbecsület); Amalia in Verdi's Masked Ball (Álarcos bál); Desdemona in Verdi's Otello; Anna in Mozart's Don Giovanni; Elisabeth, Venus in Wagner's Tannhäuser; Sieglinde in Wagner's The Valkyrie; Elsa in Wagner's Lohengrin, and Isolde in Wagner's Tristan und Isolde. She was made a Life Member of the Budapest Opera House in 1917, and an honored member in 1932. – B: 1445, 1160, T: 7456. → Mahler, Gustav.

Vass, Éva (Budapest, 23 July 1933 - ) – Actress and costume designer. She began her career at the Youth or Pioneer Theater (Ifjúsági vagy Úttörő Színház), Budapest, in 1952. From 1954 she was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Pécs; from 1956 of the Petőfi and Jókai Theaters (Petőfi és Jókai Színházak) and, from 1957, the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), Budapest. In 1975 she was contracted to the Theater of Kecskemét (Kecskeméti Színház); from 1978 she was a member of the Buda Castle Theater (Várszínház) and, from 1983, of the National Theater. From 1991 she became an artist of the Independent Stage (Független Színpad). She was able to have an accurately worked-out role and true to life psychology of character, coupled with deeply felt lyricism and passion. Her roles include Catherine in A. Miller's A View from the Bridge (Pillantás a hídról); Juliet in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet; Miranda in Shakespeare's The Tempest (A vihar), and Mrs. Clandon in B. Shaw's You Never Can Tell (Sosem lehet tudni). Her feature and TV film roles include Lieutenant of Rákóczi (Rákóczi hadnagya) (1953); Thistle (Bógáncs) (1968); Cold Days (Hideg napok) (1960); Anthill (Hangyaboly) (1971); Torquato Tasso (1984), and Szamba (1995). She also worked as a theater costume designer. Her productions included Au Pair (1999); The New Breed (Új Faj) (2001); The Den of Lions (Oroszlánok barlangja) (2003), and 100 Feet (2008). She was awarded the Mari Jászai Prize in 1958 and 1963, received the Merited Artist title in 1983, and the Outstanding Artist title in 1988. She founded the Miklós Gábor Prize in 2000, in memory of her former husband. – B: 1445, 1742, T: 7456.

Vass, Imre (Emeric) (Rozsnyó, now Rožňava, Slovakia, 4 June 1795 - Sárospatak, 20 March 1863) – Engineer. He obtained his diploma from the Institutum Geometricum of Pest in 1818. At first, he worked as a manorial engineer; later, as an official surveyor of County Borsod. Between 1826 and 1829, in the Baradla Cave of Aggtelek, he discovered a more than 15-km long passage hitherto unknown and, in 1829, he prepared detailed maps of it. Later, he moved to Pest and, in 1846, he joined the team working on controlling the River Tisza. He participated in the War of Independence of 1848-1849 as a military engineer; in 1850 he was an appointed engineer. His works include Neue Beschreibung der Aggteleker Höhle (1830), and Description of the Aggtelek Cave (Az Aggteleki Barlang leírása) (1831). There is an Imre Vass Cave at Jósvalő. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Vass, Lajos (Louis) (Poroszló, 5 April 1927 - Budapest, 6 November 1992) – Composer and choirmaster. He was a student at the Reformed Teachers' College of Debrecen and, as such, he won a young composer's competition; from 1946 he continued his studies in the Department of Composition and Chorus Art at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest. From 1949 he worked as choir leader of the Honvéd (Army) Choir, as student of Zoltán Vásárhelyi; he became the leader of the Choir in 1953. The ensemble set out on a three-month tour of China during the fall of 1956. On their way back to Hungary, proceeding through Moscow, they were asked to present a concert there, but the choir and their leader Lajos Vass declined it because of the defeat of the 1956 Revolution. Early in 1957, the choir was disbanded and Vass was demoted. However, the Ensemble did not break up; it was able to continue under the name of State Male Choir (Állami Férfikar) through the help of the famous composer Zoltán Kodály, and other well-known personages; Vass remained its leader. In 1958, the Honvéd Army again took over the choir, but without Vass, who was rehabilitated only after 1990. From 1960 to 1964, he was in charge of the Male Choir “Steel Sound” of the Ganz-MÁVAG Works. Thereafter, until his death, he worked as the choirmaster of the Vasas Central Artist Ensemble, and from 1975, as the leading choirmaster in its Symphony Orchestra. From 1964, every month he went to Czechoslovakia to the Central Choir of the Hungarian Teachers’ Choir. He also relayed statewide programs on Hungarian Television as an organizer and program reporter. This activity helped to popularize folk music again in Hungary. Statewide “Peacock Groups” (Röpülj Páva Csoportok) were formed, which operate ever since. Vass took part in the launching of a number of these groups: he founded the folk music group in his birthplace, Poroszló. As a composer, he wrote oratorios, cantatas, children’s-operas, fairy plays, puppet plays, accompaniments of stage-works, and many choral works. Many of his works were published in music journals. As a popular figure, a number of organizations adopted his name for their titles, such as the Lajos Vass Choir, Chamber Choir and Symphony Orchestra of the Vasas Central Artist Ensemble, the Vass Choir of the Slovakian Hungarian Pedagogues, the Vass General School of Kispeszt, and also the Vass Folk Music Society. The Memorial volume of Lajos Vass (Vass Lajos Emlékezete), edited by Melinda Berlász was published in 1998. – B: 1868, T: 7456.→Kodály, Zoltán; Vásárhelyi, Zoltán.

Vass, Vince (Vincent) (1889 - Kecskemét, 4 June 1943) – Minister of the Reformed Church, theologian and writer. He completed his high school and theological studies in Pápa, and went to Genoa for further theological studies (1910-1912). He was appointed Secretary to the Bishop in Pápa (1913), acquired an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) qualification in Theology in 1916, and earned a Doctoral Degree in Philosophy in 1917. He became Professor of Theology at Pápa, in 1917. He served as Parish Minister at Enying in 1929, and at Kecskemét from 1936 to 1943. Some of his works are: The Sinlessness of Jesus (Jézus bűnnékülisége) (1913); Epistemology of Religious Knowledge (Vallási ismeretelmélet) (1915); Toward a Better Future (Jobb jövő felé) (1922); Calvinism of Jókai (Jókai kálvinizmusa) (1926), and The Worldview of Christianity, vols. i-ii (A keresztyénség világnézete, I-II) (1927-1928). – B: 0932, T: 7103.

Vassady, Béla (Arad, now in Romania, 30 December 1902 - Grand Rapids, MI., USA, 5 October 1992) – Minister of the Reformed Church, theologian and writer. He studied Theology in Hungary and in the USA. He received a B.D. degree from the Central Theological Seminary, Dayton, Ohio in 1924, and a Th.M. degree from the Princeton Theological Seminary in 1925. He obtained his lecturer’s qualification from the University of Debrecen in 1932. He further pursued his studies in Vienna, Berlin, Leipzig, Paris and London. He taught at the Reformed Theological Academies in Pápa, (1925-1927), Sárospatak (1927-1934), and Debrecen (1934-1945). In 1945, he moved to the United States and taught Theology at Princeton Theological Seminary, Princeton, NJ; the Fuller Seminary, Pasadena, California; Seminary of the University of Dubuque, Dubuque, Iowa, and the Lancaster Theological Seminary in Lancaster, PA. After his retirement in 1973, where he held the chair of Professor of Theology, he moved to Ann Arbor, MI, serving as a Theologian-in-Residence at the First Presbyterian Church. In 1979, he moved with his wife to Grand Rapids, MI, where he spent his remaining years writing, lecturing, and lending a helping hand wherever needed. Among his literary works the most important are The Major Traits of Calvin's Theology (1952); Light Against Darkness (1961); Christ's Church: Evangelical, Catholic and Reformed (1965); Limping along...Confession of a Pilgrim Theologian (1985), and the Hungarians in the New World: An Irregular History of the Hungarians of North America (Magyarok az Újvilágban: Az észak-amerikai magyarság rendhagyó története) (Budapest, 2000). He was also editor of the periodical Theology and Life. – B: 0906, T: 7617.

Vastagh György (George) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 18 September 1868 - Budapest, 3 July 1946) – Sculptor of animals. His first teacher was György (George) Zala. Almost 100 of his animal sculptures were included at the Paris World Exposition. Among these was the statue Herdsmen (Csikós), now located within Buda Castle. The statue of the Transylvanian statesman, Prince Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen, made in 1903, was placed in the Budapest Körönd Plaza. He sculpted several animal portraits and group-statues. He made animal studies for the Budapest Veterinarian College, and dog portraits for the Vienna Hunting Exhibition of 1911. He sculpted, together with his son, animal statues at the site of the Cairo Agricultural Museum in 1932. His equestrian statue of General Arthur Görgey was unveiled in 1936, but was damaged during the city's siege in 1945, and melted down to cast the statue of Josef Stalin. His equestrian sculpture of Count András (Andrew) Hadik is at the Buda Castle. His animal sculptures are part of many European and American Museums and Agricultural Colleges. One noted accomplishment, the Hungarian Team of Six Grey Carriage Horses, is exhibited at London's British Museum. His creations elicit lasting emotional experiences and represent a kind of breeding-history records. – B: 0883, 1020, T: 7675.→Zala, György; Görgey, Artur; Hadik, András; Bethlen, Prince Gábor.

Vasvár, Peace Treaty of – In 1663, the Turks attacked Habsburg-ruled Northern Hungary with a huge army. They did it because, by occupying this region, they would be able to successfully attack Vienna, the capital city of Austria. The Turks succeeded in occupying Érsekújvár (now Nové Zámky, Slovakia) first. At the beginning of 1664, the Imperial Army was victorious; but the Turks attacked again. However, the Imperial Army, led by Count Raimondo Montecuccoli, won an unexpected victory at Szentgotthárd (St. Gotthard). Actually, notwithstanding the command of Montecuccoli, the French Coligny and Count Ferenc (Francis) Nádasdy attacked and routed the Turks by the Rába River as they were building a bridge over it. However, Montecuccoli claimed it as his own victory. Following this event, a disgraceful peace agreement was made: the Peace of Vasvár, agreed on 10 August 1664 and, despite the victory of the Imperial Army, left all the Turks' conquests in their hands. Thus Várad, Érsekújvár and four northern Hungarian counties remained under Turkish occupation. The Turkish and Imperial armies withdrew from Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). The negotiating parties obligated themselves to inform each other of possible hostile plans of the Hungarians. Since, after the victory at Szentgotthard, the Hungarian public opinion expected an advantageous peace, the actual peace agreement caused a great outcry that eventually led to the Wesselényi-Conspiracy. – B: 1031, 1122, T: 7684.→Wesselényi Conspiracy; Nádasdy, Count Ferenc.

Vasvári, Pál (Paul) (originally Fehér) (Tiszabüd, 14 July 1826 - Havasnagyfalva, now Mărișel, Transylvania now in Romania, 5 July 1849) – Revolutionary, philosopher and historian. He began his secondary studies at the Piarist High School of Nagykároly (now Carei, Romania) in 1837; from 1843 he studied Philosophy at the University of Pest, also developing an interest in history. Under the influence of István (Stephen) Horvát, he turned completely to the study of history. In 1847 he became a teacher at the Special Educational School founded by Countess Blanka (Blanche) Teleki. Here his students, as well as his colleague, Klára (Clara) Leövey, fell under his revolutionary influence. He became one of the leading figures of the university youth, the Youthful Hungary Society, (Ifjú Magyarország Társaság), and the so-called Pilvax Circle. In March 1848, as the leader of university youth, he participated in the wording of the “12 points” (the wish of the people), and in the direction of the 15th March Movement. Vasvári spoke at the meetings of the university students, the workers of Pest, and the guild-boys. From 16 March, he was a member of the Revolutionary Public Peace Committee (Forradalmi Közcsend-Bizottmány). According to his revolutionary-democratic beliefs, he urged further development of the Revolution by organizing the March Club (Márciusi Klub). He worked as a secretary in Lajos (Louis) Kossuth’s Ministry of Finance. At the time of Jelačić’s military attack from Croatia, he also did courier service. He was one of the leaders of the popular rising in County Somogy in September 1848, becoming a Honvéd Second-Lieutenant. During 1849, he organized and led irregular troops in Counties Szabolcs, Szatmár and Bihar, in the name of the Revolution. He became the Commander as Major of the Rákóczi Irregulars. In July, in the fight against the Transylvanian Vlach (Romanian) insurgents, incited by Vienna, he was killed in action in the village of Marisel in the Gyalu Alps (County Kolozs), aged 23. He was regarded as the great promise of Hungarian historiography. His works include Historical Name-Register (1848). His works show that, in the development of his view of history, the thinkers of the French Enlightenment played an important role, but also Michelet and Cabet, and generally the Utopians, as evidenced by some of his studies, such as Michelet and the German Scientific System VIII-X (Michelet és a német tudományos rendszer, VIII–X) (1847-1848) and Guiding Principles of the First French Revolution (Irányeszmék az első francia forradalomból). – T: 0883, T: 7456. → March 1848, 12 points; Horvát, István; Teleki, Contess Blanka; Leövey, Klára; Kossuth, Lajos.

Vasváry, Ödön (Edmund) (Szeged, 18 October 1888 - Washington, DC. USA, 12 July 1977) – Minister of the Reformed Church in the USA and writer. After completing his secondary school education in Szeged in 1907, he enrolled at the local Roman Catholic Seminary, where he was ordained a priest in 1911; but soon after, he converted to the Reformed faith for personal reasons, and was accepted as a minister by the Hungarian Reformed Church. In 1914, before the outbreak of World War I, the Church sent him to the United States to serve in Pittsburgh, PA. He also served in Buffalo, NY (1916-1919), Springdale (1919-1921), Pittsburgh, (1921-1926) and Cleveland, Ohio, West-Side (1926-1935). When, in 1935, the American Hungarian Reformed Association (Amerikai Református Egyesület) elected him Treasurer, he moved to Washington, DC, where he served in this capacity until his retirement in 1957. During his stay in Pittsburgh, in partnership with Albert Fiók, he founded the Hungarian paper, Hungarians (Magyarság), and started the Hungarian Room (Magyar Szoba) movement at the University. His published works include Flowers on the Road (Virág a kocsúton) (1935) and Lincoln's Hungarian Heroes (Lincoln magyar hősei) (1939). In 1935, the Hungarian paper, Reformed Newsletter (Reformátusok Lapja), began to serialize his unfinished novel, The Hero of Madagascar (Madagaszkár hőse). Ever since his arrival in the USA, he studied the history of the Hungarian settlers; he wrote a number of books, studies and articles on the subject over several decades. His post-World War II studies and articles appeared in the newspapers Freedom (Szabadság) in Cleveland; In Fraternity (Testvériségben); New Hungarian Way (Új Magyar Út), and American Hungarian Reformed Paper (Amerikai Magyar Reformátusok Lapja). He is the author of Hungarian America (Magyar Amerika), studies and articles compiled by György Gyurics (1988). He left his uniquely valuable collection, dealing with the history of American Hungarians, to the Somogyi Library of Szeged; this bequest arrived in Szeged in 1978; now it is the Vasváry Collection. For his many endeavors, he received several honors. In 1975, the American Hungarian Foundation bestowed on him the Abraham Lincoln Award. There is a Memorial Plaque on the wall of his birthplace. – B: 0906, 2106, T: 7617, 7456.

Vaszary, Gábor (Gabriel) (Budapest, 7 June 1897 - Lugano, 22 May 1985) – Writer and journalist, brother of János (John) and Piri Vaszary. Initially, he studied at the Academy of Applied Arts, Budapest, because he wanted to become a painter. From 1924 to 1932, he was an illustrator for French papers. Back in Budapest, he became a journalist. Between 1927 and 1943, he wrote some fifteen books, which made his name popular all over the country. Besides novels, he was the author of short stories and stage plays. He also worked as a stage manager and scriptwriter. In 1947 he emigrated to the West; from 1949 he lived in Germany. From May 1952 to January 1953 he was a correspondent for Radio Free Europe. Later he settled in Tessin, Switzerland. Several of his earlier successful books were republished by Hungarian firms, such as the Kárpát, Pannonia, Amerikai Magyar Kiadó. His older and more recent works also appeared in German and other languages, published by the Rowohlt Verlag. His works include Two Against Paris (Ketten Párizs ellen); Adieu, mon amour (Adieu, my love) novel (1950); Kuki, novel (1963); Die nächste Liebe, bitte (The next love, please) novel (1968); Man nannte Sie Céline (They call her Céline) novel (1975). – B: 1672, 1445, T: 7456. → Vaszary, János (2); Vaszary, Piri.

Vaszary, János (1) (John) (Kaposvár, 30 November 1867 - Budapest, 19 April 1938) – Painter. His masters included Bertalan (Bartholomew) Székely at the School of Decorative Art, Budapest. He continued his studies in Munich and at the Julian Academy in Paris, from 1899. In his art, the French Bastien-Lepage and Puvi de Chevannes, and later, Les Fauves, Matisse, Dufy and Van Dongen were influential. In 1905 he went on a study-trip to Italy, Spain and France. In style, he moved from secessionism to impressionism. During World War I, he created realist pictures of soldiers. In 1920 he became a professor at the Academy of Applied Arts, Budapest. He made a lasting impression upon the younger generation of painters. As a teacher of art, he supported Avant-garde trends. He was a leading master of the New Society of Applied Artists (Képzőművészek Új Társasága – KUT). He was the founder of the Society of New Artists (Új Művészek Egyesülete – UME). Vaszary's main themes were rural life and portrait painting. His paintings include Youthful Self-portrait (Fiatalkori önarckép) (1887); Portrait of a Lady (Női portré) (1895); Golden Age (Aranykor) (1898); Soldiers in the Snow (Katonák hóban) (1916); Awakening (Ébredés) (1921); Lights of a City (Városi világitás) (1930), and Gladioli (Gladioluszok) (1938). He made graphics, such as Spring (Tavaszi) (1903); Synthetic Lines (Szintetikus vonalak) (1911); also tapestries, like the Engaged Couple (Jegyesek) (1905) and The Shepherd (A pásztor) (1906). His pictures are displayed in museums in Hungary and abroad. He was a recipient of prizes and awards, including the Society Prize (1898), the Small Golden State Medal (1902) and the Golden Prize in Genoa (1929). – B: 0872, 0934, 1031, T: 7103.→Székely, Bertalan.

Vaszary, János (2) (John) (Budapest, 10 January 1899 - Madrid, 20 November 1963) – Writer, brother of Gábor (Gabriel) and Piri Vaszary. At the age of 17 he voluntarily joined the army. After World War I, he began studying Law, but he gave it up and, in 1921, he went to Paris as a reporter for the paper, The Evening (Az Est). During his three years in the French capital, he learned theatrical management. On returning to Budapest in 1924, he became Manager of the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház); in 1927 that of Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház); he also wrote stage plays. Between 1931 and 1944, more than ten of his plays appeared on stage. Early in the 1940s, he became Director of the Andrassy Boulevard Theater (Andrassy úti Színház). He wrote a novel, a number of film scripts and directed films. Due to his political views, he was arrested in 1945, but escaped and, in June 1946, together with his wife, the actress Lili Muráti, he fled to the West. After a brief sojourn in Paris, they settled in Madrid in 1947. From 1949, he took part in the Hungarian program of Radio Madrid. His works include Knocking on the Door (Zörgetik az ajtót) diary (1950, 1959, in Spanish 1950), The Cat Jumped Up On the Table (A macska felugrott az asztalra) novel (Buenos Aires, 1950, 1951), and Adventure with a Redhead Girl (Kaland a vörös hajú lánnyal), novel (Budapest 1990). – B: 1672, 1445, T: 7456.→Muráti, Lili; Ilosvay Varga, István; Vaszary, Gábor; Vaszary, Piri.

Vaszary, Kolos (Keszthely, 12 February 1832 - Balatonfüred, 3 September 1915) – Archbishop, Cardinal, Prince-Primate, orator and historian. From 1847, he was a Benedictine monk, and was ordained in 1855. He worked as a teacher in Komárom, Pápa and Esztergom. From 1869 he was Principal at the high school in Győr, and was in charge of the monastery. From 1885 he was Archabbot at Pannonhalma. He founded several religious institutions. Vaszary was Archbishop and Prince-primate in Esztergom from 1891, and Cardinal from 1893. He is known for developing Catholic political structures. He organized the Archbishopric in Budapest. He retired in 1912, and dedicated himself primarily to his historical studies. He was a member of the Board of Directors for the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. His main works include The Battle of Várna (A várnai csata) (1864); Data for the History of the 1825 Session of Parliament. (Adatok az 1825-i országgyűlés történetéhez) (1883); The Betrayal of Ulászló I... and the Peril of Várna (I. Ulászló... esküszegése és a várnai veszedelem) (1884); Data for the History of the 1830 Session of Parliament (Adatok az 1830-i országgyűlés történetéhez) (1885), and Speeches by Vaszary Kolos (Vaszary Kolos beszédei) (1909). – B: 0883, T: 7667.

Vaszary, Piri (Piroska) (Budapest, 19 May 1904 - Palma de Mallorca, Spain, 2 October 1965) – Actress, sister of Gábor and János Vaszary. She completed the Drama School of Szidi Rákosi, and began her career in Újpest (a suburb of Budapest) in 1920-1921. The Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház), Budapest made a contract with her in 1921, while, during the years following 1922, she played in practically all the theaters in Budapest. Towards the end of 1944, she emigrated from Hungary; from 1948 to 1954 she appeared on the stage of the Hungarian Theatrical Company in Argentina, which also took her to Venezuela in 1959. She played primarily in comic roles, showing great originality, but she was successfully lifelike also in playing the roles of old women and young boys. She achieved popularity in cabaret ditties as well, and she appeared in numerous films. Her roles include Sarlotta Ivanovna in Chekhov's Cherry Orchard (Cseresznyés kert); Viola in F. Molnár's The Glass Slipper (Üvegcipő); Archer Michael in Zs. Móricz's Be Good unto Death (Légy jó mindhalálig); Mrs. Szabó in J. Vaszary's The World is just One Day (Egy nap a világ), and Mrs. Gál in M. Kerecsendi Kis' The First (Az első). There are more than 95 feature films to her credit including St. Peter's Umbrella (Szent Péter esernyője) (1935); A férfi mind örült (All Men are Crazy) (1937); Home Bound (Hazafelé) (1940); The Perfect Family (A tökéletes család) (1942); The Music Mill (A zenélő malom) (1943); Orient Express (1943), and The African Groom (Afrikai vőlegény) (1944). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456. → Vaszary, Gábor; Vaszary, János (2).

Vászolyi, Erik (Eric Vasse, Eric G. Vászolyi) (Budapest, 24 March 1933 - ) – Linguist. He obtained his B.Sc. Degree majoring in Finno-Ugrian Linguistics from the University of Budapest in 1956. He received his Ph.D. in 1968. He also studied Hungarian Ancient History and the Ethnology of Finno-Ugrian Ethnic Groups. In 1965 he studied in Helsinki and, in 1959, 1960 and 1966, he undertook research in the land of the Zyryans (Zürjénföld), and collected considerable linguistic, dialectal and ethnographic material. In 1968, as a protest against the invasion of Czechoslovakia by the Warsaw Pact countries, he emigrated to Great Britain. In the same year, Vászolyi was invited by the University of Cambridge to work on a scientific research scholarship at the Scott Polar Research Institute, also lecturing on Finnish and Hungarian at the Universities of Cambridge and Norwich. In 1970 he settled in Perth, Australia, and the University of Western Australia commissioned him to survey the various aboriginal languages of that State, and initiate their systematic study. In the course of this work, he became a recognized expert of the aboriginal languages. He constructed alphabets for a number of native languages, thus raising their speakers on the educational level of writing and reading. He also takes part in the training of native teachers. In 1988-1989, he was Guest Professor at two Chinese Universities and, from January 1991, he was a professor at the University of Perth until his retirement in 1995. He was Chief Adviser for the Australian Ministry for Aborigines. His papers appeared in Hungarian in the journal New Horizon (Új Látóhatár). In his translation, a collection of Zyryan (Komi, in Russia) folk tales and legends appeared in Budapest in 1964. In 1968, his Anthology of Finnish Short Stories was published. His works include Aboriginal Australians Speak: An Introduction to Australian Aboriginal Linguistics (Perth, 1976); Features of Serbo-Croatian for Language Teachers (1977); Teach Yourself Wangkatja: An Introduction to the Western Desert Language (Cundelea Dialect), textbook (Perth 1979), and Ausztrália bennszülött nyelvei (The Aboriginal Languages of Australia) (Budapest, 2003). – B: 1073, 1672, 1752, T: 7683, 7456. → Gallus, Sándor; Roheim, Géza.

Vaszy, Viktor (Budapest, 25 July 1903 - Szeged, 12 March 1979) – Composer, conductor and music director. He studied at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, from 1919 until 1927. Zoltán Kodály was one of his professors. Vaszy was conductor of the Capital City Orchestra from 1925, of the Budapest University Choir between 1929 and 1941, and of the Palestrina Choir of Budapest from 1935 until 1941. He taught at the Academy of Music from 1929 until 1941. Among numerous positions, he led the opera ensemble of the National Theater of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) from 1941 until 1944; he was Director of the National Theater of Szeged from 1957 until 1969, and he was leading conductor of the Szeged Symphony Orchestra from 1967 until 1975. He conducted several premiere performances of Béla Bartók's works in Hungary. He received numerous honors for staging both old and new operas not previously performed in Hungary. He was also an accomplished composer. His main works are Two Suites for Grand Orchestra (Két szvit nagyzenekarra); Romantic Overture (Romantikus nyitány); Rhapsody for Cello and Orchestra (Rapszódia gordonkára és nagyzenekarra); Hungarian Dances (Magyar táncok); Christmas Cantata (Karácsony kantáta), and Shakespeare Madrigals (Shakespeare-madrigálok). He was a recipient of the Merited Artist (1960), and the Outstanding Artist titles (1972). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7667. → Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán.

Vata (Vatha) (11th century) – A leader of the Magyars, supposedly a pagan, who rose in revolt in 1046 against King Peter during his second reign, against the Christian Church and the new feudal social system. Vata, setting out from his castle at Békés on the Great Plain, raised troops and joined the Árpáadian princes returning from Russia. Together with them, Vata arrived in Pest and, on the opposite Buda banks of the Danube, he had Bishop Gellért and his companions murdered, when they went in delegation to meet the Princes. He defeated King Peter (1038-1041) but, after the coronation of King Andrew I, Vata's followers were suppressed. Andrew I set out to consolidate the new Christian order. Among Vata's descendants, only his son John (János) is known: he was the leader of another Magyar uprising, when King Béla I (1060-1063) ascended the throne in 1060. The uprising was put down by King Béla, and about John's fate only so much is known, that king Béla forbade John's descendants to marry Christians. – B: 0883, 1078 T: 7456. → Gellért, Bishop; Rabonbán.

Vatai, László (Ladislás) (Poroszló, 14 July 1915 - Toronto, Ontario, Canada, 1993) – Minister of the Reformed Church, philosopher, politician and writer. He completed his high school studies in Eger, and his Theological studies at the Reformed Theological Academy of Sárospatak. From there, he went to Berlin, and later to Philadelphia. He received a Ph.D. in Philosophy from the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), where he became an honorary university lecturer (privatdozent). He was known in Hungary as one of the groundbreakers of existentialist philosophy. He was Secretary General of the Soli Deo Gloria Youth Organization from 1936 to 1940. From 1942 to 1947 he was Chaplain at the University of Budapest. In 1943 he taught as an honorary lecturer in Philosophy of Literature at the University of Budapest. During World War II, he took an active part in the Resistance Movement (against Hungary being allied to Germany) and, for this reason, the German secret police, the Gestapo, arrested him in 1944. After the war, during the coalition period in 1945, as a Member of Parliament, Vatai drafted the policy declaration of the Hungarian Independent Smallholders' Party (Független Kisgazda Párt). He also lectured at the Faculty of Economics. However, in 1947, the Hungarian Secret Police (ÁVH) arrested him. While under temporary release, he managed to escape to the West with his family. They lived in Geneva, Switzerland for several years; he also spent a short time in London, where he served as minister of the Hungarian Reformed Congregation. Then they moved to the USA, and soon he served the congregations of Leechburg, Buffalo West Side, NY; Windsor, Ontario, Canada; the First Hungarian Presbyterian Church of Detroit, MI. USA, and, for several years, he was a minister of the Hungarian United Church in Toronto, Ontario, Canada. Beginning in 1954, Vatai regularly delivered sermons on Radio Free Europe's Protestant Broadcast Program that was listened to by millions. He was also a prolific author; in the 1950s he wrote his first book on the life of Dostoyevsky in English, under the title: Man and His Tragic Life. In 1990 in Budapest, his selected sermons appeared in a book under the title From Darkness Into Light (Sötétségből világosságba). The impact of his book on the life of the great poet Endre (Andrew) Ady, entitled God's Monster, Ady's Lyrics (Isten szörnyetege, Ady Lirája) was so profound that, even a Soviet Russian periodical had to review it. The book entitled Reshaded Map (Átszínezett térkép) contains many of his American discourses. His studies, essays and articles appeared in the New Horizon (Új Látóhatár), Chronicle, New Hungarian Way (Új Magyar Út), and other papers. He was also the author of Fight for the New World View, textbook, (in Hungarian, 1950). – B: 0906, 1672, T: 7617, 7456. → Ady, Endre.

Vathy, Zsuzsa (Susie) (Pápa, 15 April 1940 - ) – Writer and journalist. She completed her high school studies in Pápa in 1958 and, thereafter, she studied and earned a Degree from the University of Chemical Engineering of Veszprém. From 1965 she worked as an engineer of the Oil-refinery of Százhalombatta. From 1970 she worked as a journalist. Since 1986 she has been editor of the children's column of the weekly, Illustrated 7 (Képes 7). From 1990 to 1992 she was Editor of the prose column of the journal Contemporary (Kortárs). In her works, considered autobiographical, the subjects are the problems of the child and youth, the contrast between generations, replacement of youth, and change of life-style. Her works include Fields of Power (Erőterek) short story (1970); The Ancestral Roof (Az ősi háztető) short story (1980); I Am At Home (Itthon vagyok) novel (1987); Our Life, Our Death (Életünk, halálunk) novelette (2007), and Amusement Park (Angolpark) short stories (2009). Her distinctions include the Attila József Prize (1986) and the Sándor Márai Prize (2010). – B: 0878, 1257, T: 7456.

Vay, Ádám (Vaja, 11 May 1657 - Dancka, now Gdansk, Poland, 31 January 1719) – Police commissioner in Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II's Court, and Colonel in the insurgent Kuruc army (opposing the oppression of the Habsburg rule in Hungary). He was a member of the lesser nobility with landed property in County Szabolcs. Quite early in his life he did active military service in Count Imre Thököly's insurgent forces. As a result, he was several times inconvenienced (in person and property) and only received complete amnesty in 1700. From this time on, he was active in the entourage of Prince Rákóczi. In 1701, together with the Prince, he was captured by the Habsburg forces and incarcerated in the Wiener-Neustadt prison. He was freed in 1702, and joined Rákóczi's movement against Habsburg rule. Rákóczi first made him Police Commissioner of his court; later on, appointed him to be that of the Yazigs (Jászok) and Cumanians (Kunok), living on a part of the Great Hungarian Plain (Nagyalföld); later on, he was made Police Commissioner of County Békés. He was one of the Prince's most trusted counselors; he did not acknowledge the Peace of Szatmár of 1711. From the end of 1711, he lived in Poland (Dacka/Danzig/Gdansk). He wrote his autobiography in verse form while still in the Habsburgs' prison. In Danzig, he composed political pamphlets, such as the political Animadversiones Apologiaca, (1706), siding with Prince Rákóczi to the end, despite the fact that he and his family lived in poverty. Vay's ashes were brought back from Turkey to Hungary for burial in Vaja when, in 1906, the remains of Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II and those of his fellow exiles were brought back to Hungary, and were reburied at Vaja. His picture, painted by Ádám Mányoki, is in the National Museum in Budapest; his old castle and a High School in Baktalórántháza bear his name. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Rákóczy II, Prince Ferenc; Thököly, Count Imre; Vay, Baron Miklós; Vay Family; Kuruc; Mányoki, Ádám.

Vay, Baron Miklós (Nicholas) (Serke, 6 September 1756 - Pest, 11 May 1824) – Brigadier-General, Military Officer of the Engineer Corps and Royal Commissioner. He was the great-grandson of Ádám Vay, a high officer of Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II. Miklós Vay studied at the Reformed College of Sárospatak, and excelled in mathematics. He continued his studies at the Military Academy of Engineers of Leingruben, Germany, from 1776. With a royal scholarship, he went on a study trip to Western Europe (1786-1788). He visited France, the Netherlands, Germany and England, where he became an associate of Jesse Ramsden, the excellent maker of precision instruments, and a member of the Royal Society (1787). Vay, as an artillery captain, participated the war against the Turks, which started in April 1788. He was present at the capture of Sabác and Belgrade. In the fighting, his right eye was wounded and had to be removed. As a Brigadier-General, after his retirement, he became a farmer on his estate of Alsószolca, where he introduced intensive farming. From England, he brought with him plans for ploughing, sowing and harvesting machines, and also a model of spinning equipment. He had other inventions too. He introduced potato production to County Szabolcs. From 1790, he was a Commissioner to the Diets. Due to his sharp criticism, the King divested him of his rank; but it was soon restored because of the protest of the Estates. From 1804 until his death, he was Royal Commissioner for the improvement of the flow of the rivers of Tisza and Körös. In 1809, he participated in the war against France. His works remained in manuscript form. A Technical School in Sárospatak bears his name. – B: 0883, T: 7103.→Vay, Ádám; Vay Family.

Vay Family – The first known ancestor of the family was Dennis de Voya, whose name was first recorded in a 1350 document. They possessed the village of Vaja, in County Szabolcs, in the 14th century. One of the outstanding members of the noble family was László (Ladislav) Vay (ca.1300), who was Bishop of Várad (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania). Another renowned member was Titusz Vay, who heroically rescued King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxembourg, 1387-1437), from the lost Battle of Nikápoly (or Nicopolis, now Nikopol, Bulgaria) in 1396. This scene was painted on the ceiling of the Castle of Vaja. In subsequent centuries the Ibrányis and the Jármys joined the Vay family through marriage. The most famous member of the family was Ádám Vay, the Court Marshal of Reigning Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II (1705-1711). Miklós (Nicholas)

Vay (1756-1824) was a military engineer and Brigadier-General. His son, Miklós (Nicholas) Vay, (1802-1894), was Lord Lieutenant of the County, and Guardian of the Crown. Due to his revolutionary activity, he was sentenced to death in 1849, but the sentence was commuted to four years imprisonment and, after eight months, he was pardoned. His son, Nicholas (1828-1886) was a renowned sculptor. The descendants of the family lived in the Castle of Vaja until the middle of the 1940s. – B: 0942, 2056, T: 7103.→Vay, Ádám; Vay, Baron Miklós.

Vázsonyi, Endre (Andrew) (Budapest, 6 January 1906 - Bloomington IN, 7 December 1986) – Journalist, critic and translator of literary works. He read Law at the University of Budapest; later, he became a journalist. Between 1926 and 1941, he was a theater critic for the paper, News (Újság). In 1945 he was a correspondent for the paper, Freedom (Szabadság). From 1945 to 1948 he was Head of the Capital City of Budapest Literary Institute (Budapest Székesfőváros Irodalmi Intézete). In 1948 and 1949 he was President of the Franklin Publishers. From 1954 he was Head of the Reader's Department of the Ferenc Móra Youth Book Publishers. He translated French belles-letters into Hungarian. In 1964 he emigrated with his wife, the ethnographer Linda Dégh, to the USA. At Indiana University of Bloomington, he was Scientific Associate of the Linguistic and Semiotic Research Institute, and, with his wife, he carried out ethnographical and sociological research on the American-Hungarian settlements. One of his works is The Hypothesis of Multiconduit Transmission in Folklore, with Linda Dégh (1975). – B: 1672, T: 7456.→Móra, Ferenc; Dégh, Linda.

Vázsonyi, Vilmos (William) (Vilmos Weissfeld) (Sümege, 22 March 1868 - Baden bei Wien, 29 May 1926) – Lawyer and politician. He read Law at the University of Budapest and became a successful lawyer. In 1894, he established the Democratic Circle, and was elected Member of Parliament in 1901. From 1917 on, he was a minister in successive administrations. He was against anti-war movements. He emigrated from Hungary, while the Council (Soviet) Republic existed; after its fall he returned. He reorganized his party under the name of the Democratic Civil Party (Demokrata Néppárt). He participated in the creation of the Leftist Democratic Block in 1924. He was under attack in the Parliament in the Franks Counterfeit case. A Senior Citizens Home bears his name in Budapest. – B: 0883, 1122, T: 7103.

Vazul (Vászoly) (ca 977-978 - 1037) – Prince of the House of Árpád, grandson of Prince Taksony, son of Prince Mihály (Michael), who was a brother of Géza-István. Vazul was baptized along with his father, and later imprisoned in Nyitra (now Nitra, Slovakia) to ensure the enthronement of Imre (Emeric), son of King István I (St Stephen, 1000-1038). Upon the death of Prince Imre, Vazul was released and made governor of the Duchy of Nyitra. When King István ignored the rules of succession upon the death of his son, and appointed Peter as his successor, Vazul plotted against the King. He, however, was captured, imprisoned, blinded and deafened to eliminate him as a candidate to rule. His sons, Levente, András (Andrew) and Béla were exiled, but later András and Béla returned and ruled as András I (1046-1060) and Béla I (1060-1063). From 1046, for 255 years, Vazul's descendants ruled in Hungary. – B: 1231, 0883, T: 7658.→ István I, King; Imre, Saint Prince; Levente; Árpád, House of.

Vécsey, Count Károly (Charles) (Pest, 1807 - Arad, 6 October 1849) – Honvéd general, one of the martyrs of Arad. As a Hussar officer in the Imperial Army, he reached the rank of Major. In the spring of 1848, he offered his services to the Hungarian Government, and excelled as commander of an army unit by putting down a Serb nationalist uprising in Kikinda and Óbecse (now Bečej, Serbia). On 12 October 1848, he was made Colonel and Commander of the Bácska Army Corps. On 21 August 1849, at Világos, he surrendered to Fjodor Vasilievitch Rüdiger, Russian General. His family, faithful to the Emperor, abandoned him. Haynau, the Austrian General, with special cruelty for his besieging of Arad and Temesvár, forced him to view the execution of his comrades before being the last to be hanged. According to witnesses, because he could not say goodbye to any of his comrades, he kissed the hand of General János (John) Damjanich, who was executed before him. – B: 1230, 0883, 1153, T: 7669. → Arad, Martyrs of.

Vecsey, Ferenc (Francis) (Budapest, 23 March 1893 - Rome, Italy, 5 May 1935) – Violin virtuoso, composer. First he studied with his father, Lajos (Louis), completed his studies under Jenő (Eugene) Hubay, and studied in Berlin with József (Joseph) Joachim. He first appeared on the concert stage in Berlin at the age of 10. Thereafter, he gave numerous concerts all over the world, especially in America and Eastern Asia. In Budapest, he was always a celebrated artist. He became known worldwide for his elegant style and virtuosity. He was the most popular among Hungarian violinists. He won his audience over with a distinguished appearance, superior virtuosity, and refined performance. He further made his name known in performances of minor chamber music and virtuoso solo compositions. His works include Virtuoso Solo Pieces for the Violin (Virtuóz szólódarabok hegedűre), Valse triste, and various salon pieces. – B: 1197, 0833, 1231, T: 7684, 7667. → Hubay, Jenő; Joachim, József.

Vécsey, Zoltán (Fogarás, now Făgăraș, Romania, 3 March 1892 - Sümeg, 31 March 1984) – Writer, teacher, one time Premonstratensian friar. He taught at the high school of the Premonstratensians in the town of Kassa (now Kosice, Slovakia) from 1914 to 1919. Because of his play entitled Bestia (Beast) (1919), he had to leave the Order. From 1919 he worked as a journalist, first as correspondent of Kassa Diary (Kassai Napló), and from 1925 that of the Prague Hungarian News (Prágai Magyar Hírlap). As a result of his articles on the protection of national minorities, his paper was seized several times. In his novel, entitled the Crying Town, vols. i,ii,iii (Síró város I-III) (1931), he featured the occupation of the town by the Czechs: a documentary of an age, which was seized by the authorities, its copies pulped. In 1933 he settled in Hungary. Until 1940, he was editor of the paper Hungarian Writing (Magyar Írás), later he returned to high school teaching. After the 1945 siege of Budapest, he was teaching Economics and Sociology in the Miklós Zrinyi High School, where he finished up as its Head Master before it was closed down. Later he taught Geography at the István Széchenyi High School of Budapest. For the journal popularizing science, entitled Life and Science (Élet és Tudomány) launched in 1946, he was one of the founders and its editor. He was also the editor of the methodological journal The Teaching of Geography (A Földrajz Tanítása) during the years 1958 to 1967. In Hungary mainly his books and studies on geography were published. In the program popularizing science, he gave more than one thousand lectures.

His dramatic works feature the conflicts of monastic existence. His novels however created no response. He was the first Slovakian Hungarian writer on crime. Vécsey was a talented linguist: he could speak and write in 10 languages, and was a well-known writer on chess. His works include John the Priest (János pap), novel (1925); Valse triste, novel (1934); Miracle of the Swamp (A láp csodája), novel (1943); New life (Új élet), play (1919), and Sacred Secret (Szent titok), play (1923). He was the author of numerous science-popularizing works, such as From the Secrets of Science (A tudomány rejtelméből); Perished Peoples, Extinct Cultures (Elpusztult népek, elpusztult kultúrák) and Inflamed Earth (Forrongó föld). – B: 1031, T: 7456. → Trianon Peace Treaty; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Vedres, István (Stephen) (Szeged, 22 September 1765 - Szeged, 4 November 1830) – Writer and engineer. He studied at the Art Faculty of the University of Pest; later at the Engineering Institute, obtaining his engineering qualifications in 1786. As the Engineer of the town of Szeged, he directed a variety of public works. He carried out pioneering work in stabilizing drift-sand with forestation in the outskirts of Csengele (1789). Later, in 1808, he organized a famous model farm of 5000 acres in the outskirts of Szőreg-Gyála (southeast of Szeged), by flood-protection and regulation of waterways. He was the author of a pamphlet (1805) on the Danube-Tisza Canal along Soroksár-Kecskemét-Kiskunfélegyháza-Szeged line, and a pamphlet on the commercial harbor and warehouse of Szeged. Of all his canal plans, the one dealing with the Transtibiscan flood-control was printed in 1830. He proposed the setting up of water storage basins, irrigation systems, development of rice-growing and lake-farming. Vedres was one of the initiators of the Hungarian-language agricultural, technical literature. In his writings in the field of economics, he was the forerunner of the reform-age economics. The effect of his ideas of water-management and conservation can be shown in Count István (Stephen) Széchenyi's ideas. As a literary writer, he was a member of the Circle of András Dugonics. The rock-theater of Szeged was enlarged according to his plans and, in 1803, it was here that the four-part play of heroes, entitled The Love of One's Country... (A Haza szeretete...) was performed. His works include The New Navigable Canal Connecting the Tisza with the Danube (A Tiszát a Dunával összekapcsoló új hajókázható tsatarna) (1805), and The Usability of the Barren Sand (A sivány homokság használhatása) (1825). A Builders' Technical School in Szeged bears his name. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Széchenyi, Count István; Dugonics, András.

Vedres, Márk (Ungvár, now Uzhhorod, Carpatho-Ukraine, 13 September 1870 - Budapest, 12 August 1961) – Sculptor. He studied with Simon Hollósy in Munich, and with Auguste Rodin in Paris, who influenced his style. His early works are characterized by impressionism. In 1902, he went to Florence, and became a member of the Society of A. Hildebrand. From 1923 to 1934, he spent most of his time in Florence, and only later settled down in Hungary. Between 1923 and 1934, he worked in the Cubist style; later, he returned to the Classic tradition. His statues mostly include nudes, such as Girl with Pitcher (Korsós lány) (1908); Standing Nude (Álló női akt) (1910), and Couple (Emberpár) (1913). After World War II, he engaged in monumental tasks, such as the Fountain of Peace (Béke kútja) composition, erected only after his death in Budapest. He was engaged in designing tombs. Some of his statues were erected in Florence and Switzerland. His creations were exhibited in Paris, Berlin, Vienna, London, Cologne and Amsterdam. He was a recipient of several prizes and awards in Vienna, Paris, London and San Francisco. He received the Outstanding Artist title in 1958, and the Kossuth Prize in 1948 and 1960. – B: 0872, 0934, 1031, T: 7103.→Hollósy, Simon.

Végel, László (Ladislav, (Szenttamás, now Srbobran, Vojvodina, 1 February 1941 - ) – Hungarian writer, dramatist and essayist. He attended school in Újvidék (now Novi Sad Serbia), where he now resides. At the University of Újvidék, he studied Hungarian Literature, and at the University of Belgrade, he read Philosophy. He has been Editor of the Lookout (Kilátó) literary supplement of the daily, Hungarian Word (Magyar Szó) (1971-1990), and was a dramaturge for the TV in Újvidék, which he left during a purge in 1991. He spent the tragic decade of the South-Slav War as the coordinator of the Novi Sad Office of the Open Society Foundation. He started his literary career in 1965 by publishing critical texts in the journal New Symposium (Új Symposium). Since then, he has been intensely present in the literature of Hungarians in Vojvodina (Vajdaság), and also in the former Yugoslavia, then Serbia. He has published in all the significant literary magazines in the country, e.g. Polja (Zagreb, 1968-1971), the daily Politika (Belgrade), and the Prologue in Zagreb (1987-1988). Since the social changes in 1989, he has been publishing books in Hungary, as well as articles in the more significant Hungarian journals. Since the 1960s, Végel has been a notable figure of the Hungarian Literature of Vojvodina, and that of public life. Between 1994 and 2002, he was Director of the Serbian Office of the Soros Foundation. Since 2003, he has been a Council Member of the Helsinki Committee in Belgrade. He studied in Berlin on a scholarship from 2004 to 2007. His works include Memoirs of a Pimp (Egy makró emlékiratai), novel (1967); A Course on Passions (A szenvedélyek tanfolyama) novel (1969); The Challenge of a Poem (A vers kihívása) essays (1975); Abraham's Knife (Ábrahám kése); Theater essays, studies (1987); Judit, Dramas (Judit, drámák) (1989); The Novi Sad Trilogy (Újvidéki triológia) novel (1993); The Great Central-Eastern-European Feast Enters the Picaresque Novel (A nagy Közép-Kelet-Európai Lakoma bevonul a pikareszk regénybe) essays (1996); Outer-Rim (Peremvidék) (2000); Homeless Essays (Hontalan esszék) (2002), and Judita and Other Dramas (Judita és más drámák) (2005). In his works he analyses the basic questions of minority existence. His works were translated into English, Serbian, Slovene, German, Dutch and Albanian. He is the recipient of a number of distinctions, including the Endre Ady Prize (1993), the Gold Medal of the President of the Republic of Hungary (2000), the Book of the Year Prize (2001), the Pulitzer Memorial Prize (2005), the Officer's Cross of Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2005), and the Kossuth Prize (2009). – B: 1031, 2079, T: 7103.

Végh, Antal (Anthony) (Jánkmajtis, 14 October 1933 - Budapest, 19 December 2000) – Writer and sociologist. He completed his secondary education in Debrecen; thereafter he taught in country schools and concurrently obtained a diploma in Education. From 1962, he was a freelance writer in Budapest, and from 1989, Editor-in-Chief for the journal, New Times (Új Idők). In a series of interviews, he wrote about the turn of events in his life. He recorded authentically the customs of his birthplace. His most successful short stories cover the changes in the lifestyle of the peasants. He warned about the backwardness and the problems of some regions. He reported in travelogues on his travels in Scandinavia, North America and Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). He was also engaged in sports issues, which volumes brought about a great deal of storm. In his works for the stage, he featured the problems of small country towns. Among his works are Life with Blue Eyes (Kékszemű élet) novel (1963); On Northern Tracks (Északi utakon) travelogue (1980), and The Black Rainbow (A fekete szivárvány) novel (1996). He was presented with the Literary Foundation Prize in 1981. – B: 0878, 1257, T: 7456.

Végh, György (George) (Áporka, 31 August 1919 - Budapest, 7 September 1982) – Writer, poet and translator of literary works. He completed his secondary education in Budapest and, in his student years, he already did some writing and translating. Later, he continued his studies at the Béla Gaál Film School. He also frequented the University, where he developed a friendship with poets and literary historians of his generation. His first poem appeared in the Diary of Pest (Pesti Napló). He joined the neo-Catholic writers. All his life, he earned his living by freelancing. His first independent volume of poems was published in 1941 entitled Snowy Nights (Havas éjszakák); later, he came out with two prose volumes. Already in his early work, his playfulness manifested itself in his poetry, by means of which he could fuse together the realist and the surrealist. Besides his storybooks, he published a book of poems expressing the feelings of the age, Storms are Approaching (Viharok jönnek) (1943). After 1945, two volumes of his poems reflected his interests, especially the volume Playful Youth (Játékos ifjúság) (1948). After 1949, for quite a few years, he was forced to remain silent but, in 1958, a new book of his appeared, his novelized autobiography: My Years of Adversity (Mostoha éveim). In the form of a summary of his regular translating work, he published his selection, Modern Orpheus (1960). György Végh did substantial work in the field of children's and youth literature, which was expressed in the elegiac tone of his book of poems, entitled Two Stars of the Autumn (Két őszi csillag). Almost at the time of his death, his novelized trilogy was published, followed by the posthumous collection of his poems and memoir-novel The Wicked Angel (A gonosz angyal) (1986). His other works include Book of Esther (Eszter könyve) (1946); The Monkey King (A majomkirály) fables (1963); Eternal Orpheus (Örök Orfeusz) translations of literary works (1984), and His Collected Poems (Összegyűjtött versei) (1984). – B: 0878, 1257. T: 7456.

Végh, Péter (Budapest, 17 February 1960 - ) – Actor. He studied acting at the Studio of the National Theater in 1981, as a student of Sándor (Alexander) Bodnár, Zoltán Simon and Imre (Emeric) Montágh, and completed his training in the class of Imre (Emeric) Kerényi at the Academy of Dramatic and Cinematic Art in 1988. Thereafter, he was contracted by the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest and, ever since, he has been one of the most popular and generally esteemed members. Since 1999, he has been a freelance artist and life guest-artist of the Magyar Theater (Magyar Színház). He has played, among others, at the József Katona Theater (Katona Színház) of Kecskemét, the Vörösmarty Theater (Vörösmarty Színház) of Székesfehérvár, the Mari Jászai Theater (Jászai Mari Színház), the Merlin Theater (Merlin Színház) and the Gyula Gózon Chamber Theater (Gózon Gyula Kamaraszínház) of Budapest. Apart from acting, he teaches Dramatic Art at the National School of Dramatic Art, also called the Hungarian School of Dramatic Art. On a number of occasions, he was stage manager of the examination presentations by graduating students. His roles include Victor in Loleh

Bellon's Thursday's Ladies (Les Dames de Jeudi; A csütörtöki hölgyek); Pedro in Leigh-Darion's Man of La Mancha (La Mancha lovagja); Su Fu in Berthold Brecht's The Good Person of Sechuan (A szecsuaní jó ember); Petruchio in Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew (Makrancos hölgy); Horatio in Shakespeare's Hamlet; Sur, Hungarian nobleman in Szörényi-Brody's István, the King (István a király); Bridegroom in Ibsen's Peer Gynt; Trofimov in Chekhov's Cherry Orchard (Cseresznyéskert); Condemned in Madách's The Tragedy of Man, (Az ember tragédiája), and Teacher in Bródy's The Schoolmistress (A tanítónő). His film roles include Perhaps in Another Life (Talán egy másik életben), an Austrian-Hungarian co-production. He is a recipient of the Farkas-Ratkó Prize (1966), the János Rajz Prize (1991, 1993, 1996, 1998), and the Csaba Ivánka Prize (2005). – B: 1795, 1445, T: 7456.

Végh, Sándor (Alexander) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 17 May 1912 - Freilassing, Germany, 7 January 1997) – Hungarian, later French, violinist and conductor. He began studying the piano at the age of six. He entered the Budapest Conservatory of Music in 1924, taking violin studies with Jenő (Eugene) Hubay and composition with Zoltán Kodály. He began a career as a solo violinist and, in 1927, played a Richard Strauss composition under the composer's baton. He graduated from the Conservatory in 1930, having won the Hubay Prize and the Reményi Prize from the Institution in 1927. In 1934, he was one of the founding members of the Hungarian String Quartet. He participated with the Hungarian String Quartet in the first performance of Béla Bartók's String Quartet No. 5. Végh left the Hungarian Quartet in 1940 to found his own quartet, the Végh Quartet. During the same season, he became a professor at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest. He and the Quartet left Hungary in 1946. They made several recordings, among them the string quartets of Mozart, Schubert, Beethoven, Brahms, Bartók and Kodály. The Quartet continued to give concerts until 1980, when the ensemble was disbanded. Végh also made solo appearances as a violinist. He became a French citizen in 1953. In 1962, he met cellist Pablo Casals, who invited Végh to join him in giving summer classes in Zermatt, Switzerland (1953-1962), and to appear annually in Casals' Prades Festival (1953-1969). He found teaching rewarding, and thereafter taught at the Basel Conservatory (1953-1963), in Freiburg (1954-1962), Düsseldorf (1962-1969), and at the Mozarteum in Salzburg (1971-1997). He founded the International Chamber Music Festival of Cervo in 1962, and often conducted there. He founded the Sándor Végh Chamber Orchestra, and conducted it from 1968 to 1971, and conducted the Marlboro Festival Orchestra (1974-1977). In 1979 he became Conductor of the Camerata Academia at the Mozarteum. With them, he made a recording of Mozart's Divertimenti and Serenades that won the Grand Prix du Disque in 1989. He was awarded the Chevalier de la Légion of France in 1986, Doctor Honoris Causa of Warwick and Exeter Universities, England (1987), an honorary appointment as Commander of the Order of the British Empire (CBE) in 1988, and the Gold Medal of Salzburg in 1987. He was best known as one of the great chamber music violinists of the 20th century. – B: 1031, 7617, T: 7617. → Bartók, Béla; Hubay, Jenő; Kodály, Zoltán.

Végyári, Vazul O.F.M. (Székesfehérvár, 2 September 1929 - Esztergom, 13 September 2011) – Roman Catholic priest. Between 1943 and 1945, he completed his studies at the Cadet School of Pécs and, at the end of World War II he was a prisoner of war for eight months. He completed his high school studies in 1947, after which in 1947 and 1948, he was a student at the Lónyai Street Commercial College in Budapest. Between 1948 and 1953, he was a student at the Noviciate of the Franciscan Kapisztrán Province of Széchény, and later, he studied Philosophy and Theology at the Theological College of the Order at Esztergom. On 23 August 1953, he was ordained. From 1953 to 1956, he was a prefect-educator in the Boarding School of the Franciscans at Esztergom. Against the advice of his Prior, Végvári took part in the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight in October-November of 1956. He was Commander of the National Guard in Buda Castle and fought fully armed. When the Revolution was crushed by the invasion of the Soviet Army, he was forced to flee. He became a pastor and headmaster of the Migrant Camp College of Vienna-Schwechat. After a brief stay in Strasbourg, he joined the Hungarian Franciscan community in the USA in July 1957. Thereafter, he served as a pastor of the bilingual Catholic Hungarians of North America for four decades. He was also the leader of the Hungarian Boy Scout troops of New Brunswick, and led the program: Radio of Hungarian Families in the Voice of America broadcasts. He was the press secretary of Archbishop József (Joseph) Mindszenty during his American visit in the early 1970s. In 1978, he was invited as councillor to the White House, Washington, DC, before the Carter administration handed over the Holy Crown to Hungary. In 1997, he returned to and settled in Hungary permanently, where he lives in the Franciscan Monastery in Esztergom. His works include Faces and Lights (Arcok és fények) poems (2001) and Rise, my Lyre, Cither (Kelj föl lantom, citerám), a collection of historic mosaics from 1956 (2006). He was awarded the Mindszenty Memorial Medal in 2005. – B: 1983, T: 7456.

Veil, Head Scarf – Veiled head scarf for women take their origin from Asia. They are still worn in Central Asia among the Uygurs, Uzbeks and Turkomans. It is worn on tall, conic caps of red or yellow leather. Its upper part is embellished with laces and silver disk-shaped veil pins. Cumanian Tartars brought this fashion into Hungary, from where it reached southern Germany, and later, Isabella of Bavaria, wife of French King Charles VI, introduced it to Paris in 1385. Its symbolic meaning is always to cover, to protect a secret, to look behind, to reveal, to acquire knowledge, to inaugurate all these are represented by the veiled head scarf. The lifting of the veil of the Egyptian goddess Isis symbolized the revelation of light. The veiling of the Moslem women's face serves to hide their personality, in order to emphasize their impersonality. Executors and partakers of some funerary services and members of secret societies covered their faces. Among Hungarians, the purpose of veiled scarves was to conceal and to prevent a destructive curse. The veil over the bed of a woman in childbirth, the bridal veil, and even the headscarf worn every day serves this purpose of concealment and privacy. – B: 1332, 1336, T: 7682.

Vekardi, József (Joseph) (Debrecen, 7 August 1927 - ) – Linguist. Between 1945 and 1950 he studied Latin, Greek and Russian, and acquired familiarity with about a dozen other living and dead languages at the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest. He was a candidate for the Science of Linguistics in 1955. He was an Assistant Professor in the Russian Department. From 1957 to 1959, he was in prison; from 1960 to 1963, he worked as a laborer at the Chinoin Pharmaceutical Factory in Budapest. Between 1963 and 1995, he was an employee of the National Széchenyi Library, Budapest, and earned a Ph.D. in 1979. Between 1973 and 1995, he was Head of its International Exchange Service Department and, in a surreptitious way he helped ethnic Hungarians in the neighboring countries to acquire Hungarian books against the will of foreign authorities. In 1992-1993, he was Director of the Eötvös College. His area of research is collecting Gypsy ethnographic and linguistic material. He is an outstanding Gypsyologist and Sanskrit scholar. Some of his major works are Sentence Structure of the Romanian Gypsy in Hungary (A magyarországi oláh cigány nyelvjárás mondattana) co-author (1974); Gypsy Folktale (A cigány népmese) (1974); History of Gypsy Research in Hungary (A magyarországi cigány kutatások története) (1982), and Dictionary of Gypsy Dialects in Hungary (A magyarországi cigány nyelvárások szótára) (1983). He has translated many pieces of Sanskrit literature, Buddha's Speeches, selection, translations from Pali, notes, postscript (1989); Waterfall of Desire (Vágyzuhatag), selection, translations from Sanskrit, postscript (1997); he translated the Vedas, the Upanishads, and verses of the Gita Govinda. He is a recipient of the Dajavati Modi Visva Sanskriti Samman Prize (2000). – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7684. → Gypsies in Hungary; Vekerdí, László.

Vekerdí, László (Ladislav) (Hódmezővásárhely, 21 July 1924 - Budapest, 27 December 2009) – Physician, literature, science and culture-historian, librarian, writer and polymath. His parents were teachers, and his younger brother József (Joseph) is a linguist. His secondary education was at the Reformed College of Debrecen. His ambitions as a writer took him to the Forestry Academy of Sopron. After three years he became a medical student at the College of Ferenc (Francis) Pápai Páriz, and completed his medical studies at the University of Budapest, obtaining his Degree in 1951. At the University of Debrecen, he earned the qualification as an Internist. He began his career at the Internal Clinic, later continued it at the Oncology Clinic. Suddenly, he abandoned his medical career and became a research librarian in the Research Institute of Mathematics, Budapest, publishing more and more papers on cultural history of the natural sciences and mathematics, on the historic role of the Academy, on Galileo, Pascal and Descartes. From the mid-1960s, he lectured at the Faculty of Art at the University of Budapest. His talks on TV and the radio became popular, also his speeches at congresses and science programs, and at commemorative meetings. His works include Adventures in the History of the Sciences (Kalandozás a tudományok történetében) (1969); Knowledge and Science (Tudás és tudomány) (1995), and Correspondence of Lajos Fülep (Fülep Lajos levelezése) (2009). He received a number of awards, including the Ervin Szabó commemorative medal (1987), the Attila József Prize (1992), the Széchenyi Prize (2001), and the Pál Teleki Medal (2008). – B: 1031, 2084, T: 7456. → Vekerdí, József; Fülep, Lajos.

Vekerdí, Tamás (Thomas) (Budapest, 21 September 1935 - ) – Psychologist and writer. His higher studies were carried out at the University of Budapest, first in the field of Law, later in Psychology between 1962 and 1967. He worked as a private tutor from 1958 to 1960, then as an extra for the National Theater, Budapest. From 1959 to 1969, he was the part-time consultant and later Associate Editor of the journal Family and School (Család és Iskola). Between 1969 and 1972, he was a lecturer in Psychology at the Academy of Dramatic and Cinematic Art, while, from 1972 to 1983, he was an educational advisor in psychology for the Districts of IX and III of Budapest. From 1983 he was a principal contributor for the National Pedagogic Institute; from 1990 scientific advisor and, between 1995 and 1998, its senior advisor. Between 1992 and 1998, he was an assistant professor of Education at the University of Miskolc. From 1991 he was in charge of the Waldorf Continuing Education at Solymár. From 1998, he was President of the Liberal Pedagogic Society. Vekerdy was not only a psychologist and researcher in teaching, but represented the one-person institution of Hungarian public life. His works include Book of Young Parents (Fiatal szülők könyve) (1975); Presence of Mind (Lélekjelenlét) (2000) and Adults and Children – What Do They Want From Each Other? (Felnőttek és gyerekek – Mit akarnak egymástól?) (2006). His translations include Edward's Butterfly (Eduárd pillangója) (1988) and Lars-Henrik Olsen: The Whirlwind (Lars-Henrik Olsen: A forgószelel) (1990). His distinctions include the International Lego Prize (1993), and the Pro Scholis Urbis Prize (2006). – B: 0878, 1031, 1257, T: 7456.

Velits, Antal (Anthony) (Szécsény, 14 March 1855 - Budapest, 15 February 1915) – Physician and Orientalist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1879. From 1879 to 1885 he studied Eastern Languages and History in Egypt, Algiers and Turkey. From 1885 he had a private medical practice in Budapest. He researched and translated the documents of the Turkish Period in Hungary, the treasury notes of the National Archives in Budapest, and the Imperial Archives of Vienna. His works include Turkish Letters from the Archive of Kismarton (Török levelek a kismartoni levéltárból) (1885); Über die Urquelle aller Sprachen (1900), and Versuch eines natürlichen Systems in der Etymologie (1905). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Velits, Dezső (Desider) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 28 April 1860 - Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 7 February 1921) – Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1885. For five years he was a demonstrator at the Obstetric Clinic, Budapest. In 1890 he became Director of the Maternity Hospital of Pozsony. He established the Outpatient Department in the Public Hospital of Pozsony, where he endeavored to introduce the concepts of I. Semmelweis. In 1914 he was appointed Professor of Obstetrics at the Medical Faculty of the newly founded University of Pozsony, and he was also Director of the State Public Hospital of Pozsony from 1910 until 1918. His works include The Effect of Carbon Dioxide and Oxygen on the Functioning of the Mammalian Heart (A szénsav és éleny hatása az emlőszív működésére) (1882), and Protection During War Times against Infectious Diseases (Védekezés háború idején a fertőző betegségek ellen) (1915). – B: 1730, T: 7456. → Semmelweis, Ignác.

Venczel, Vera (Budapest, 10 March 1946 - ) – Actress. She first appeared in film roles as a college student. She completed her studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest in 1968 and, since then she has been a member of the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház). She plays with sensitive interpretation and evocative facial expressions. Her roles include Lorette in Romain Weingarten's The Summer (L'Été; A nyár); Sonia in Chekhov's Uncle Vanya (Ványa bácsi); Eva in Milton's Paradise Lost (Elveszett paradicsom); Princess Leonora in Goethe's Torquato Tasso, and Beatrice in A. Miller's A View from the Bridge (Pillantás a hídról). Her forte is film-roles. There are at least 24 feature and 83 TV films to her credit. Her feature films include Road Accident (Karambol) (1963); Three Nights of a Love (Egy szerelem három éjszakája) (1967); Eclipse of the Crescent Moon i, ii (Egri csillagok I, II) (1968); Mission in Evian (Küldetés Evianba) (1988); The Gambler (A játékos) (1999); Relatives (Rokonok) (2005), and Tableau (Tabló) (2008). Her TV films include The Black Town i-vii (A fekete város I-VII) (1971); Family Circle (Családi kör) (1979); Gloria (1982); Franz Liszt i-xvi (Liszt Ferenc I-XVI) (1982); Dearest Anne (Édes Anna) (1990); King István (István király) (1992), and Among Friends (Barátok között) (2005-2008). She was awarded a number of prizes, among them the Mari Jászai Prize (1975), the Irén Varsányi Memorial Prize (1977), the Critics' Prize (1977), the Ruttkai Memorial Prize (2003), the Life Member of the Society of Immortals (2008), the Merited Artist title (2010), and the Zsolt Harsányi Memorial Prize (2011). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Venczell, Béla (Cancian) (Nyitra, now Nitra, Slovakia, 17 February 1882 - Budapest, 17 November 1945) – Opera singer (bass). He studied at the Teachers' College in Léva (now Levice, Slovakia). He was a student of Mrs. Maleczky in Budapest, and intermittently of Geiringer in Vienna. In the summer of 1906, he studied in Bayreuth; in 1906 he joined the Opera House of Budapest, and was its member until 1932. He was made its life member in 1923. He sang with great success on German and Italian stages. He was also a recognized oratorio and Lieder singer. His roles included Sarastro in Mozart's Magic Flute (Zauberflöte – Varázsfuvola); Basilio in Rossini's Barber of Seville (Sevillai borbély); Sparafucile in Verdi's Rigoletto; Rocco in Beethoven's Fidelio; Marke in Wagner's Tristan und Isolde; Hunding in Wagner's Die Walküre (The Valkyrie, A Walkür); Hagen in Wagner's Götterdämmerung (Twilight of the Gods; Istenek alkonya), and Cillei in F. Erkel's László Hunyadi. His feature films include The Old Scoundrel (A vén gonosz) (1932); Loránd Fráter (1942), and I Dreamt You (Megálmodtalak) (1943). He was one of the outstanding artists of the Opera House of Budapest. – B: 1445, 1160, T: 7456.

Venezuela, Hungarians in – The Hungarian presence in Venezuela reaches back to the 19th century. While visiting Venezuela in the 19th century, János (John) Csetz acquired a good reputation for the Hungarians. There are fourth and third generation families, who were and are proud of their Hungarian roots and culture, which they keep alive, including the language. Many immigrants arrived after 1944. Following hard physical labor, many became respected intellectuals, e.g. physicians, engineers, or highly placed government officials. At least 90% of the Hungarians found their place in Venezuela. On 8 May 1957, the “Venezuela” steam ship transported 85 Hungarian refugees to Venezuela, where the Hungarian Associations of Caracas welcomed them.

They established a bilingual day-care center, where the children spoke Hungarian as well as Spanish. There is a Hungarian-language weekend school, and the scout groups also communicate in Hungarian. There are Hungarian churches and dance groups among their 14 associations. Two dance groups visited Hungary and performed with success in 2009. They marked the 100th anniversary of the birth of musician Zoltán Kodály in 1982, with a memorable celebration. The religious paper, Message (Üzenet), published by the Protestant congregation, is well-known on three continents.

By the estimates in 1961, there were 3,890 registered Hungarians in Venezuela. At the turn of the millennium, some 5,000 Hungarians lived in the country; the majority of them live in Caracas, and have become well-educated, well-respected members of society. Some also live in Maracaibo, center of the oil fields, on the shore of the Caribbean Sea at Puerto La Cruz, in San Cristobal in the high peaks of the Andes, and also in Valencia. Due to unfavorable political changes in the country, many of the youngsters have decided to leave and emigrate to elsewhere in the world; some of them returned and settled in Hungary.

Major Hungarian organizations are the Hungarian House; Comradeship Community of Hungarian Warriors (Magyar Harcosok Bajtársi Egyesülete); Hungarian Kindergarten; Cardinal Mindszenty Foundation (Mindszenty Hercegprímás Alapítvány); József Mindszenty Catholic Congregation; Lea Ráskai Scout Troop; Szent Erzsébet (Saint Elizabeth) Scout Troop No. 35; Szent István (Saint Stephen) Scout Troop No. 11; Szent Erzsébet (Saint Elizabeth) Catholic Women's Association; Caribbean Newsletter (Caribi Újság), a quarterly; Resurrection (Feltámadás) Congregation; Zsuzsanna Lorántffy Protestant Women's Association; Hungarian Cadastral Committee in Venezuela; Venezuelan-Hungarian Chamber of Commerce; Co-ordination Committee of Hungarian Organizations in Venezuela and the Honorary Consulate of the Republic of Hungary. – B: 1020, 1224, 2007, T: 3240, 7103. → Czetz, János; Kodály, Zoltán.

Venkei, Tibor (Szeged, 19 October 1906 - Budapest, 17 February 1983) – Physician, oncologist and dermatologist. In 1930 he obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Szeged and, thereafter, he was an associate at its Dermatological Clinic. From 1933 to 1939 he was on several consecutive scholarships: he studied in Vienna and Paris. In 1940, he became an honorary lecturer. He worked as a physician in Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, Romania) from 1940 to 1943; in Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania) in 1943-1944, and in the St. John's Hospital of Budapest in 1944-1945. From 1945 to 1950 he worked as a senior physician and dermatologist at the Hospital of Magdolnaváros in Budapest. From 1950 to 1954 he worked as a medical officer in the army with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. From 1954 he was a senior physician of the National Oncological Institute, Budapest; in 1968 he became a titular professor and also a lecturer at the University of Szeged. He was engaged in research in Oncology and Dermatology, and he edited the journal Dermatological Review from 1955 to 1966. He was a member of several scientific societies. Among others, he published the works Early Diagnosis, Pathohistology and Treatment of Malignant Tumors of the Skin, with J. Sugár (1965), and Early Diagnosis of Skin Cancer and its Treatment (A bőrrák korai diagnózisa és kezelése) (1978). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Vér, Andor (Andrew) (Sátoraljaújhely, 6 August 1897 - Buenos Aires, 24 March 1976) – Writer, journalist, poet and translator of literary works. He served in World War I as an army officer, after which he completed his studies at the Eastern Academy in Budapest (Keleti Akadémia). From 1920 he worked alternately as a private official and a journalist. Between 1925 and 1927, he worked for the paper Morning News (Reggeli Hírek) in Miskolc and, from 1931 to 1937, for the paper Freedom (Szabadság), run by Endre (Andrew) Bajcsy-Zsilinszky. As a poet, he published four volumes of poetry, as well as a political satire. In 1938 he emigrated to Argentina, where he lived from casual work and writing articles for papers. He translated, with László (Ladislás) Szabó, the famous epic poem, Martin Fierro of the poet Jose Hernandez, which appeared in print in Buenos Aires in 1944. In 1963 he returned to settle again in Hungary, becoming a correspondent for the National Translating Bureau; he carried out translations from German and Spanish into Hungarian. In 1969 he visited Argentina, but he fell ill and was unable to return to Hungary and died in Buenos Aires. His works include Lament (Sirató) poems (1949), and From the Danube to La Plata (A Dunától a La Platáig), poems (1963). – B: 1672, T: 7456. → Bajcsy-Zsilinszky, Endre; Szabó, László.

Verancsics, Antal (Anthony) (Sebenico, now Šibenik, Croatia, 29 May 1504 - Eperjes, now Prešov, Slovakia, 15 June 1573) – Humanist, historian and prelate. He was a descendant of a Dalmatian family. His uncle János (John) Statileo, Bishop of Transylvania, provided education for him in Hungary and Padua. First, he was a diplomat of the House of Szapolya. In 1549 he joined the service of the Habsburgs. In 1553 he became Canon of Eger, Archdeacon of Szabolcs, and later Reading Canon of Esztergom and Abbot of Perno. In 1553 he was appointed Bishop of Pécs and, at the head of a legation, he was sent to Constantinople. Four-year long negotiations proved unsuccessful; he returned to Hungary where, in 1557, he became Bishop of Eger. From 1567, he again became an envoy to the Turkish Porta; on 17 February 1568, he signed the Peace of Adrianople with Sultan Selim. He was searching for Oriental manuscripts in Ankara, when Busbequius discovered the famous Monumentum Ancyranum (an inscription from A.D. 14 inside the Temple of Rome and Augustus in Ancyra, Galatia, modern Ankara). After the death of Miklós (Nicholas) Oláh in 1569, Verancsics became Archbishop of Esztergom and, from 1572, Royal Governor. He worked up to the day he died. He did not live to receive the news of his appointment as Cardinal on 5 June 1573. He maintained correspondence with the humanists of his age and wrote poems in Latin (1542); one of his speeches was published in Krakow in 1543. He planned to write a large-scale contemporary historical work on Hungary, a continuation of the work of A. Bonfini (1434–1503); only fragments of this work were completed, but a good deal of his collected source material did survive. One of Antonio Abondio's commemorative medals features Verancsics. His works include His Complete Works, vols. i-xii (Összes munkái I-XII) published by László Szalay and Gusztáv Wenzel, (1857-1875). – B: 0883, 1031 T: 7456. → Verancsics, Faustus; Bonfini, Antonio; Szalay, László.

Verancsics, Faustus (Verančic; Verantius) (Sebenico, Dalmatia in 1551 - Venice 3 January 1617) – Dictionary-compiler and polymath. His uncle, Antal (Anthony) Vernacsis provided his education in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), and Padua, Italy. He returned to Hungary in 1571, and immediately set out on a three-year foreign tour. After his return in 1573, he settled in Pozsony, where he was appointed Constable of the Castle, Governor of the Episcopal Estates, as well as Court Secretary to Emperor Rudolf II (1552-1612). In 1594, Verancsics traveled to Venice; then, after the death of his fiancée, he entered a Monastic Order. In 1598 he was appointed Bishop of Csanád. However, due to poor health, he resigned in 1606, and in 1609 entered the Pauline Order in Rome.

His five-language dictionary is a pioneering work in Hungarian dictionary literature. In the latter part of his life, his interest turned exclusively to physics, and he attained Europe-wide fame with his experiments and inventions. He designed and constructed the world's first functioning parachute, which he personally demonstrated successfully. His chute was of a rectangular-shaped design, which was replaced by the more conventional circular version. Recently, however, they have begun to employ the rectangular shape, realizing that it is easier to maneuver. His technical text, Machine Novae (New Machines) was published in Venice in 1616. The Hungarian Post Office issued a commemorative stamp in his honor. – B: 1226, 1257, T: 7617.→Verancsics, Antal.

Verbunkós (Webunkosch) – A Hungarian music and dance genre of the late 18th, early 19th centuries. The name is derived from the German word Werbung, meaning “recruitment”. The Verbunkos, a recruiting dance, was performed during the induction of recruits into the army. Mistakenly, this genre was attributed to Gypsies, because usually they were the ones who performed it; but Magyar musicians performed it as well. The Gypsy composer János (John) Bihari is the best-known composer and interpreter of the verbunkos, of which 84 compositions of his remain. Another composer of verbunkos was József (Joseph) Kossovits (died 1819). In the second half of the 19th century, verbunkos appeared in opera, such as in the operas of Ferenc (Francis) Erkel’s Hunyadi László and Bánk bán, and even Béla Bartók’s work: Contrasts, and in Violin Concerto No.2. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Bihari, János; Erkel, Ferenc; Bartók, Béla; Palotás; Hungarian Dances, Traditional; Versegly, Ferenc.

Verebély, Iván (Budapest, 7 December 1937 - ) – Actor. He completed his studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest in 1961. Thereafter, he was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Miskolc, from 1961 to 1963. From 1963 to 1968, he was a member of the National Theater, Budapest. Since 1968 he has been a member of the Merry Stage (Vidám Színpad, now Central Theater). He is an outstanding comic actor both in cabaret pieces and comedies. His acting is characterized by individual humor and versatility. His unmistakable physique and face often appear in films and television in Hungary. His roles include Voltore in Ben Jonson’s Volpone (“Sly Fox”); Timothy, manservant in G. Vaszary’s The Devil Does Not Sleep (Az ördög nem alszik); Enyves Jimmy in Brecht-Weill’s Happy End, and Ivanov in M. Lengyel’s Ninocska. There are more than 40 feature and TV films to his credit, including Moneymaker (Pénzcsináló) (1964); Boys from the Square (Fiuk térről) (1967); The Immortal Legionist (A halhatatlan légiós) (1971); Next, Please (Kérem a következőt) (1974); Fish without Bones (Hal szálka nélkül) (1984), and Boy in the Striped Pajamas (2008). He was awarded the Mari Jászai Prize (1972), and the Knight’s Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2008). – B: 1445, 1742, T: 7456.

Verebély, László (Ladislav) (Trencsén, now Trencin, Slovakia, 5 July 1841 - Budapest, 4 June 1922) – Physician and surgeon. He obtained his Medical and Surgical Degrees from the University of Pest in 1865. He worked as a demonstrator at the Surgical Clinic, Budapest in 1867. In 1870 he became an honorary lecturer and Senior Physician at the Stefánia Children’s Hospital. He was mainly engaged in surgery for children and the hygiene of wounds. His works include Primary Osteomyelitis and Periostitis Infectiosa (1891), and A Case of Navel Cord Rupture Surgically Healed (Köldökszínórsérv műtéttel gyógyult esete) (1900). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Verebély, Tibor (Budapest, 28 January 1875 - Budapest, 28 March 1941) – Physician. In 1900 he obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest. He was an associate at the Institute of Pathological Anatomy; from 1901 a demonstrator, later an assistant lecturer at the Surgical Clinic of the University of Budapest. From 1906 he was also a senior physician of the Stefánia Hospital. From 1908 he was an honorary lecturer of infectious surgical illnesses; in 1913 he was an Associate Professor, in 1914 Professor of Surgery and Director of No. 3, later No. 1 Surgical Clinic, Budapest. In 1938 and 1939 he was Vice-Chancellor of the University of Budapest. He treated surgical pathology, surgery of blood vessels and nerve-chords, bone tumors, and surgical treatment of illnesses of the stomach and the pancreatic gland. He developed an important school of specialists, was an outstanding surgeon. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1922, ordinary 1935). His works include Darwin and his Theories (1909); Surgery of the Eye-socket, vols. i, ii (A szemüreg sebészete, I-II) (1930-1931); Pathology and Therapy of the Pancreatic Gland (A hasnyálmirigy kór- és gyógytana) (1935), and The Illnesses of Degenerating Bones (A csontok pusztulásos betegségei) (1939), and more than 300 scientific studies. – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Verebes, Ernő (Earnest) (New York, 6 December 1902 - USA, 1971) – Actor. He completed his studies at Szidi Rákosi's School of Dramatic Art in 1920. From 1920 to 1922 he was a member of the Lujza Blaha Theater (Blaha Lujza Színház), Budapest, and also appeared at the Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház). From 1924 to 1934 he shot films in Berlin. On returning to Hungary, he played his comic operetta pieces at the Buda Theaterette (Budai Színkör), the Metropolitan Operetta Theater (Fővárosi Operett Színház), the Municipal Theater (Városi Színház), and the Royal Revue Theater (Royal Revüszínház). In 1938 he emigrated to the USA, where he resumed his film-acting career. During the period from 1920 to 1936, he also appeared in Hungarian silent and sound-films. His roles included Hessen Maxi in Krasznai-Krausz's Yellow Lily (Sárga liliom); Eagle in M. Eisemann's My Younger Brother and I (Én és a kisöcsém), and Viki Cserepes in Zerkovitz's We Live only Once (Csak egyszer élünk). – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Verebes, István (Stephen) (Budapest, 4 July 1948 - ) – Actor, manager, theater director, dramaturge, drama critic and writer. He completed his studies at the Acting Department of the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, in 1970. He spent one season with the 25th Theater (25. Színház), Budapest. From 1971 to 1975 he was an actor at the Gergely Csiky Theater (Csiky Gergely Színház), Kaposvár and, for a year, he worked as Program Editor for Hungarian Television. From 1975 to 1978 he worked at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Miskolc, and that of Szeged. For two years he also worked as a journalist. From 1980 to 1985 he was a member of the Microscope Theater (Mikroszkóp Színház), Budapest. In 1980 he started working for the Hungarian Radio as an author and actor for the Radio-Cabaret. He was the author of a number of plays. From 1985 he was Manager of the Radnóti Theater (Radnóti Színház). From 1990 to 1993 he was Director of the Comedy Theater (Kommédiúm Színház). From 1993 to 1998 he was Director of the Zsigmond Móricz Theater (Móricz Zsigmond Színház), Nyíregyháza. Since 1989 he has been a publicist for the paper Snowshoes (Hócipő). He is Program Director for the Sunrise (Napkelte) of Hungarian Television (MTV). Verebes' work as a theater manager is characterized by meticulous finish, refined humor and irony. His roles include title role in Molière's Tartuffe; Leonato in Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing (Sok hűhó semmiért); Cassius in Shakespeare's Julius Caesar, and Papa in E. Szép's Groom (Vőlegény). His stage managements include Csekhov's The Three Sisters (A három nővér); Ernő Szép's Violet Acacia (Lila ákác); I. Örkény's Cat's Play (Macskajáték); M. Füst's Aunt Máli (Máli néni), and Shakespeare's Hamlet. He is the author of plays, such as Nobody is Perfect (Senki sem tökéletes); Something Called Hungary (Valami Magyarország); Lottery (Sorsjáték), and Humor Therapy (Humorterápia). There are a number of feature films to his credit, including Shiny Winds (Fényes szelek) (1968); Dearest Sárka (Sárka drága) (1971); Viaduct (1982); Colonel Redl, i, ii (Redl ezredes I, II) (1984), and TV films: Gentlemen, Let Us Talk (Uraim beszéljünk) (1974); Brutus (1981), Peace Strategy (Békestratégia) (1985), and Coffee House (Kávéház) (2001). His distinctions include the Mari Jászai Prize (1983), the Karinthy Ring (1985), and the Zsigmond Móricz Ring (1996). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Verebics, Ilona (Helen) (Győr, 6 March 1962 - ) – Singer (soprano) – She obtained her qualification from the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest in 1986, as a student of Boldizsár (Balthasar) Keönch and Éva Andor. Since 1986, she has been a member of the Opera House, Budapest. She has a shining, glittering voice, combined with great insight. She is in possession of a wide repertoire in operas and oratorios, and is also a recognized Lieder singer. She has also made a number of recordings. Her roles include Eurydice in Gluck's Orpheus and Eurydice; Belinda in Purcell's Dido and Aeneas; Pamina in Mozart's The Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola); Lauretta in Puccini's Gianni Schicchi; Elisabeth in Wagner's Tannhäuser, and Agata in Weber's Der Freischütz (A bűvös vadász). She won first prize at the song competition of Karlovy Vary in 1982, a prize at Helsinki in 1984, a special prize at Barcelona in 1986 as the best presenter of French songs, and was the winner of the BBC song competition in Cardiff in 1987. In the Pavarotti competition in Philadelphia and New York in 1988, she was the only Hungarian place winner. – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Veres, János (John) (Zoltán János Vörös) (Tornalja now Tornal'a, Slovakia, 28 February 1930 - Rimaszombat, now Rimavská Sobotá, Slovakia, 5 August 1999) – Teacher and poet. His secondary education was completed at the Slovak High School of Rimaszombat. From 1949 to 1957, he was in a Sanatorium in the High Tatra. From 1957 to 1966, he was a patient transporter for the Rimaszombat Hospital, later an office clerk. From 1966 to 1970, he was a lecturer in Methodology at the District Cultural Center of Rimaszombat. In 1970-1971 he was ill, and finally retired in 1971. He was a Member of the Presidium of the Czechoslovak Hungarian Workers' Cultural Federation – CSEMADOK. In 1970 however, he was expelled for political reasons. From 1963, he was a member of the Hungarian Section of the Slovak Writers' Association, and from 1990 he was a member of the Czechoslovak-Hungarian Writers' Society, and also a member of the Green Party. His poems, narratives, literary and cultural articles, critiques, translations of poems from Czech and Slovak languages were published in numerous papers and magazines, such as the Creative Youth (Alkotó Ifjúság) (1952); Torch (Fáklya) (1952); New Word (Új Szó) (1952-1968); Nations and Nationalities (Nemzetek és nemzetiségek); Literary Review (Irodalmi Szemle), and Csallóköz (1962). His works include Flames and Flowers (Tűzek és virágok) poems (1961); After the Earthquake (Földrengés után) stories (1966); White Deer (Fehér szarvas) poems (1967); The Young Man from Gyetva (A gyetvai legény) epic poem by Andrej Sládkovič, translation (1980); Course of Life (Életút) selected poems (1989); Iceberg (Jéghegy) poems (1998), and Black Magician (Fekete magus) poems (2006). He was awarded the Madách Prize of County Nógrád (1990), and the silver medal of CSEMADOK (1991). – B: 1083, 1890, T: 7456.

Veres, Mrs. Pál (Paul) (née Hermin Benicky) (Lázi, 13 December 1815 - Váchartyán, 28 September 1895) – A leading figure in women’s education. Her husband’s friend, Imre (Emerich) Madách, exerted a powerful influence on her, as Madách dedicated his timeless philosophical drama, The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája), to her husband. In 1867 she organized the National Women’s Educational Association (Országos Nőképző Egylet), with the aim of rendering women’s basic education possible, and for those without any property to secure bread-winner positions. In 1869 she founded, then managed the Association’s Institute for Educating Girls (Leánynevelő Intézet), the Principal of which was Pál (Paul) Gyulai. It was her ceaseless urging that resulted in the establishment in Budapest, in 1875, of the first Girls’ High School in the entire Kingdom of Hungary. In 1880, the Association had already moved into its own building, provided with living accommodations, which soon reached a capacity of ca. 800 girl residents. It had a Primary School, as well as a High School (Gymnasium), a Cooking School, and even a Residence for her university student girls. In 1889, due to her illness, she withdrew from her educational work. Her memory is treasured by a plaque on the wall of the church at Váchartyán, where she died at the age of 80, while the girls’ high school, founded by her, cherishes her memory, being named after her. The Hungarian community in Budapest had a street named after her, and a marble statue erected in her honor, on the bronze rosette of which these lines by Kálmán Mikszáth may be read: “Her name is immortalized by history, her figure by this marble, and her spirit is a heritage for the girls of the realm”. – B: 1150, 1257, T: 7456. → Madách, Imre; Gyulai, Pál, Mikszáth, Kálmán.

Veres, Péter (Balmazújváros, 6 January 1897 - Budapest, 16 April 1970) – Writer, politician and state minister. He completed his primary education in his native town, and worked as a shepherd, day laborer, and railroad worker. Later, he farmed on a few hectares of land, joined the agrarian socialist movement, and became its most prominent figure. Following World War I, during the short-lived Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungarian in 1919, he was a member of the Directorate. After World War II, he first became a Member of Parliament; then, between 1945 and 1949, President of the National Peasant Party, later Minister of Reconstruction, and finally, Minister of Defense. Between 1954 and 1956, Veres was President of the Hungarian Literary Association. Later, he retired from public life. From the early 1930s, he also pursued literary activities. Many of his radical articles appeared in various papers, mostly in the Peoples’ Voice (Népszava), for which he was often detained. A selection of his works is The Peasantry of the Great Plain (Az Alföld parasztsága) (1936); What is the Worth of a Man, if is Hungarian? (Mit ér az ember, ha magyar?) (1940); Peasant Fate – Hungarian Fate (Paraszt sors – magyar sors) (1943); Peasant Future (A paraszt jövő) (1948); The Story of the Balogh Family (A Balog család története) (1961); On the State Highway (Az ország útján) (1965); Szárszó (1971); Our Wise and Foolish Ancestors (Bölcs és balgatag őseink) (1968), and a Reader's Diary (Olvasónapló) (1962, 1984, 1986, 1988). His sociological works are valued as ethnographic source material. He received the Kossuth Prize (1950, 1952). There is his memorial house and statue at Balmazújváros; a High School in Budapest, and streets elsewhere are named after him. – B: 1150, 1134, 1257, T: 7617.→Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary.

Veress, Dániel (Sepsiszentgyörgy, now Sfintu Gheorghe, Transylvania, Romania, 1 June 1929 - ) – Drama critic and writer. He graduated from the Bolyai University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), majoring in Philosophy and Psychology. Earlier on in his career, he dealt mainly with works of classical and contemporary world literature. Later on, he started to focus on the mediaeval Hungarian princes of Transylvania, as well as on the famous writer Kelemen (Clement) Mikes, about whom he wrote a drama, first staged in Sepsiszentgyörgy in 1968. It was Veress, who edited Mikes's famous Letters from Turkey (Törökországi levelek) (in Hungarian, 1974; in Romanian, 1988). His monodrama on Miklós (Nicholas) Misztótfalusi Kis, The Deceived (A megtévesztett), was produced in Sepsiszentgyörgy in 1991. For a while, he made a living from writing and, from 1970 to 1990, he was Drama Critic for the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház) of his native town. He published articles, studies and essays in various papers and journals. His dramas were performed in his native town and in Gyula; these dealt with the famous figures of Transylvanian history, such as Zsigmond (Sigismund) Báthory, Miklós (Nicholas) Wesselényi and Zsigmond (Sigismund) Kemény. He also wrote introductory essays to the drama series of Kriterion Publishers. In 1971, his essay volume, entitled On Wanderings (Vándorúton), was honored with a literary prize in Bucharest. His dramas include Four Winters (Négy tél) (1968); Nights at Gräfenberg (Gräfenbergi éjszakák) (1971); Holiday Spoilers (Ünneprontók) (1982), and The Deceived (A megtévesztett) (1991). His books include In the Attraction of the Theater (A színház vonzásában) (1980). In 1969, he was awarded the Kelemen Mikes Memorial Medal in Budapest. – B: 1445, 1257, T: 7456.→Mikes, Kelemen; Misztótfalusi Kis, Miklós; Báthory, Prince Zsigmond; Wesselényi, Baron Miklós; Kemény, Baron Zsigmond.

Veress, Miklós (Nicholas) (Barcs, 13 January 1942 - ) – Poet, critic and translator of literary works. He obtained his Degree in Education from the University of Szeged, majoring in Hungarian and Russian Literature. He worked as a High School teacher and, for a while, also taught at the University of Szeged. From 1969 to 1974, he was an associate of the paper Southern Hungary (Délmagyarország), and from 1971, also of the journal Life and Literature (Élet és Irodalom). Between 1975 and 1981, he was Editor of the journal Moving World (Mozgó Világ). From 1986 to 1988, he was a secretary of the Writers' Association. Since 1988, he has been working as a freelance writer. His work represents a return to the Hungarian poetic tradition. Veress has translated numerous works from Russian, Ukrainian, Gruzian, Estonian, Bulgarian, Serbian, Turkish and Dutch literature. In his poetry, he stresses love as a basic asset in the field of internal freedom. His works include Forest for the Wild Creatures (Erdő a vadaknak) poems (1972); Dust-ash (Porhamu) poems (1978), and Light-shadow (Fényárnyék), poems (1985). His translations include the works of Sören Kierkegaard, as co-author (1969), Alexander Blok's poems (1977), and Ataol Behramoğlu's poem, Wind, Apple Tree, Friend (Szél, almafa, barát) (1988). He was awarded the Attila József Prize (1973, 1985), the Áprily Prize (1984), and the Contemporary (Kortárs) Prize (1996). – B: 0878, 1031, 1257, T: 7456.

Veress, Sándor (Alexander) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 1 January 1907 - Bern, 4 March 1992) – Composer, folk-music researcher and music pedagogue. His family moved from Transylvania (Erdély) to Hungary proper in 1916. He studied music composition under Zoltán Kodály, and piano under Béla Bartók at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, from 1923 to 1927. He undertook a folk-music collection tour in Moldova, Romania and, on a scholarship he traveled to Berlin, London and Amsterdam. Upon returning, he worked on the foundation of Hungarian music pedagogy. He became Professor of Composition at the Ferenc Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest; from 1943 to 1948 he continued his folk music research at the Museum of Ethnography (1927-1940); and at the Hungarian Academy of Arts and Sciences, he worked with the famous Béla Bartók. In 1950 he lived in Bern, Switzerland, and worked at the Conservatory of Music; then he became a professor at the Music Department of the University there. He was a visiting professor at the Peabody Conservatory of Music, Baltimore, MD, (1965-1966), then at the Goucher College, Towson, Maryland, USA, in 1966, and Adelaide, Australia, in 1967. Some of his literary works are String Quartet (1934); Katica Tércsili (ballet) (1949); Psalm of St Augustine (Szent Ágoston zsoltára) oratorio (1943-1944); Symphonia Minneapolitana (II. Szimfónia) (1953); Canti Ceremissi (1945); Musikscene Schweiz (1939), and Songs of the Seasons (1962). His writings in Folk Music include Folk-music Collection of the Csángós of Moldova (Népzenei gyűjtés a moldvai csángók között) (1931-1932); La raccolta della musica popolare ungherese (Rome, 1941), and Szekler Folk-ballad Variations in Moldavia (Székely népballadák változatai Moldvában) (1941-1942). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1949, the Bartók-Pásztory Prize in 1985, and the Berne Canton prize in 1976. – B: 0886, 1031, T: 7103. → Kodály, Zoltán; Bartók, Béla.

Vermes, Géza (Makó, 22 June 1924 - ) – Theologian, historian of religion. He was born into a Jewish family. He and his parents were converted to the Roman Catholic faith. His parents died in the Holocaust. After World War II, he became a priest, studied first in Budapest, then at the College St Albert and the Catholic University of Leuven in Belgium, where he studied Oriental history; in 1953 obtained a PH.D. in Theology with a dissertation on the Dead Sea Scrolls. He left the Catholic Church in 1957; reasserting his Jewish identity, moved to Britain and took up a teaching post at the University of Newcastle. In 1965, he joined the Faculty of Oriental Studies at Oxford University, and became the first professor of Jewish Studies. He retired in 1991; since then, he is frequently on lecture tour around the world. His research focused on Jewish and Christian religious history. He is an authority on the Dead Sea Scrolls, and on the life and religion of Jesus. He is an authority on contemporary Jesus research, foremost on Jesus the Jew, and questioning the basis of some Christian teachings on Jesus. His rich life-work includes Jesus the Jew: A Historian's Reading of the Gospels (1973); The Dead Sea Scrolls: Qumran in Perspective (1977); The Religion of Jesus the Jew (1993); The Changing Faces of Jesus (2001); Who's Who in the Age of Jesus (2005), and Jesus: Nativity - Passion - Resurrection (2010). Professor Vermes is a Fellow of the British Academy, the European Academy of Arts, an honorary doctor of the University of Edinburgh, the University of Durham, and the Central European University of Budapest – to mention only a few. He was awarded the Wilhelm Bacher Memorial Medal by the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1996), the Memorial Medal of the town of Makó, his place of birth (2008), and the keys of the cities of Monroe LA, and Natchez MI (2009). – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Verse Chronicles – A form of epic poetry that was popular in Hungary mainly during the 16th century. The theme was a current event touching on the life of the country (e.g. fall of a castle, or a battle). Earlier, they fulfilled the role of disseminating both general news and historical events. One of the main functions of the verse chronicle was to rouse patriotic sentiments. Occasionally, foreign events were also recounted. Lutenists or minstrels performed the verses and accompanied the songs with their own compositions to liven up and add artistic elements to the generally colorless, monotone recitation. Well-known chroniclers were: Demeter Csanádi, Mátyás (Matthias) Csáktornyai, Mátyás (Matthias) Gosárváry, Péter Huszti, Péter Ilosvai-Selymes, Péter Kákonyi, Anonymus of Léva, György (George) Salánki, Mihály (Michael) Sztárai, and Sebestyén (Sebastian) Tinódi Lantos. – B: 1150, T: 7617.→Ilosvai-Selymes, Péter; Sztárai, Mihály; Tinódi Lantos, Sebestyén.

Verseghy, Ferenc (Francis) (Szolnok, 3 April 1757 - Pest, 15 December 1822) - Writer. He was an official's orphan, who became a Seminarian at age 14, so that he could continue his studies. When he was 20, he left the Seminary and studied Law for a year. Due to his straitened circumstances, he entered the Pauline Order; this way, he was able to complete his Theological and Arts course. He was a preacher with Josephinist views, working in Pest; after the abolition of the Order, he worked as a field chaplain. From 1788 on, he was a correspondent for the paper Hungarian Museum (Magyar Museum). In 1793, he was held in monastic captivity in Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia) for his worldly lifestyle and his enlightened, anticlerical writings, and especially as a result of his translation of Henri Millot's book into Hungarian. After he was discharged from there, he joined the Martinovics Movement in Pest. He was the first to translate the French revolutionary march, the Marseillaise. As a result of the reprisal against the conspiracy of Martinovics and his group, he was also arrested and sentenced to death; the monarch commuted his sentence to imprisonment for an indefinite period; after nine years, he was the last to be freed from among the convicted Jacobins. He obtained a position as a language master in the confidential environment of Joseph of Austria, Palatine of Hungary. His way of thinking was influenced by the Palatine and his aristocratic surroundings, and to a certain extent he became acquainted with the views of the nobility. Verseghy was a multi-faceted writer and also an esthetician. He wrote a number of short stories in verse, which revealed a bourgeois mentality. He translated J. G. Herder's work Ideen zur Philosophie der Geschichte der Menschheit (Ideas about the Philosophy of the History of Humanity) into Hungarian. He wrote the satirical epic poem (1804) Matthias Rikóti, in which he ridiculed the untalented poets. He also tackled linguistic problems: orthography, assimilation in language, problems of dialects; he was against the language reform, which he regarded as artificial (“language is a living organism”). In the basic problems of orthography, he favored spelling on the basis of pronunciation; hence a controversy developed between the so-called ‘yottists’ and the ‘epsilonists’ (the use of “i” or “y”) in which he lost against Miklós (Nicholas) Révay, who followed the etymological method. He often dealt with music, writing some musical studies, e.g. he wrote Hungarian words for German songs; he also wrote songs in Germanic style, often with “verbunkos” and folk-song-like flavor. He initiated the art-song writing, following the German Lieder model. He died lonely, excluded from literary life. His mortal remains were taken from the Viziváros cemetery of Buda to his native town in 1931, where the Versegly Literary Circle (operating since 1926), had his bronze statue erected in 1934. His main linguistic work is Hungarian Grammar or Linguistics (1821), while another in the same field by him was Pure Hungarian (1805). – T: 0883, 1068, T: 7456. → Josephinism; Jacobites in Hungary; Martinovics, Ignác; Szentmarjay, Ferenc; Batsányi, János; Óz, Pál; Kazinczy, Ferenc; Szentjóni Szabó, László; Verbunkos; Révay, Miklós.

Versegly, József (Joseph) (Versegi) (Kanizsa, now in Serbia, 20 October 1927 - Szabadka, now Subotica, Serbia, 9 September 1976) – Actor. From 1951 until his passing, aged 49, he was member of the Folk Theater (Népszínház) at Szabadka. His attractive singing voice and musical talent rendered him an outstanding operetta hero; he later became increasingly successful in dramatic roles as well. His roles included Tiger Brown in Brecht-Weill’s Beggar’s Opera (Koldusopera); Zhiska in Gy. Hay’s God, Emperor, Peasant (Isten, császár, paraszt); Petur bán in J. Katona’s Bánk bán; Prince Su-Chong in F. Lehár’s The Land of Smiles (A mosoly országa), and Máté in A. Tamási’s Singing Bird (Énekes madár). – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Vértes, Imre (Emeric) (Debrecen, 12 April 1905 - Budapest, 16 July 1986) – Pharmacist. He received his Degree in Pharmacology from the University of Strasbourg in 1927, and a Ph.D. in 1928. From 1928 to 1942 he worked as a pharmacist in Nagyvárad (now Carei in Romania). In 1942 and 1943 he served as a pharmacist in the army. He deserted to the Soviet occupying forces and became a partisan commander. From 1945, he was a professional soldier. From 1951 to 1953, he was Head of the War Historical Archives; from 1953 to 1956, he was imprisoned on trumped-up charges, but rehabilitated in 1956. From 1956, he was a pharmacist at the Metropolitan Pharmaceutical Center, Budapest and, from 1960, Director. From 1958 he was the Hungarian delegate on the Narcotic Drugs Committee of the United Nations, and a Member of the International Drug Control Company. – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Vértes, László (Ladislav) (Budapest, 3 November 1914 - Budapest, 20 August 1968) – Archeologist. After his high school studies he began to study Medicine at the University of Budapest; however, due to straitened financial circumstances, he had to leave after 2 years; thereafter he worked as an acrobat, library assistant, laborer, assistant in a bookshop, but managed to carry out speleological studies as well. Shortly before the outbreak of World War II, he joined Ottokár Kadič’s exploration of the Solymár Caves. Later on, he was commissioned to the Solymár Caves exploration by the Hungarian National Museum. After the War, he became the Museum’s correspondent. At first, he led the Cave Supervisors, run by the Museum; later, he was also in charge of its Geological and Paleontological Collection. After the Paleolithic Collection of the Geological Institute was handed over to the Historical Museum (1951), he took over its curatorship: for 17 years he worked in that capacity for the Paleolithic Collection, until his sudden death in 1968. From 1950 to 1952, he led cave explorations and carried out Paleontological, Geological and Morphological studies. From 1952 to 1955, he dealt with the archeological research of primitive man of the Pleistocene Epoch (ended 11,700 years ago). By means of excavations he opened up ancient sites, such as the Kőporos-tető of Eger, the caves of Lovas, Szeleta, Istállóskő, Jankovich and Peskő, as well as the archeological site of Tata. By making use of the new finds and literature, he succeeded in significantly transforming the chronology of the Paleolithic Period. He used mathematical methods for processing the data of the sites. The work of the last decade of his life was built on these methods and their further development. In the course of his study trips, he traveled on four continents. At Vértesszőlős, where he unearthed finds of early man, an open-air museum was established, and his discovery was published in his book, The Story of the Early Man of Vértesszőlős (A vértesszöllősi előember regénye) (posthumous, 1969). Another of his works is entitled The Lower Paleolithic Site of Vértesszőlős (in Recent Archeological Excavations in Europe, no date); furthermore: Tata – Eine mittelpaläolithische Travertin-Siedlung in Ungarn (in Archaeologia Hungarica, 43, 1964). – T: 0883, T: 7456.

Vértes Mountain – The second-largest member of the Transdanubian Central Mountains, between the Bakony Mountain in the southwest and the Gerecse Range in the northeast; it is positioned between Oroszlány in the north, and Csákvár. and further away at the cultural, historic town of Székesfehérvár in the south. The Mór Graben separates it from the Bakony Mountain, and the fault-line at Bicske from the Gerecse Range. It is geologically and tectonically similar to the Bakony Mountain, composed largely of Triassic limestone and dolomite beds, often karstic. Its flat top is covered by forests, the highest points being Csókahegy (479 m), Körtvélyes (480 m), and Nagytáborhegy (451 m). Along the slopes and foothills surrounding the range, there are attractive, historic castle- and church-ruins, like Szentkereszt, Csókakő, Gerencsés, Gesztes and Csákvár. Its mineral wealth consists of the brown coal of Tata and Mór, and the bauxite deposit. According to legends, the earlier name of the range was Bodóhát; its present name appeared in 1051, when the soldiers of the Holy Roman Emperor, Henry III, coming to the aid of King Salamon (1063-1074), threw away their armor and breastplates (vért) in the area, fleeing from the army of Prince Béla. Further southeast of the Vértes Mountain is the Velence Range, geologically an ancient granite batholith, superimposed by some more recent volcanic rocks. Its highest point is Meleghegy (352 m). South of this range is Lake Velence. – B: 1068, 7456, T: 7456. → Salamon, King.

Vértési, Arnold (Eger, 16 August 1834 - Budapest, 1 August 1911) – Writer and journalist. In 1849, at the age of 15, he joined the army (during the Hungarian Revolution and War of Independence). In 1852 he began his studies at the University of Pest, at first in Medicine, and later in Law. His first short story appeared in 1856. He joined the young leftist writers' group gathered around János (John) Vajda. In 1861, to support the fights of the opposition, he edited and wrote the comic paper, Black Soup (Fekete leves) together with Pál (Paul) Matkovics, and he wrote articles in the great poet Arany's Literary Observer (Szépirodalmi Figyelő). He was an assistant editor of Ladies' Courier (Hölgyfutár), and one of the founders of the journal New Generation (Új Nemzedék). In 1863, he edited Fashion Hall (Divatcsarnok) and, from 1866 to 1870, he edited Illustrated World (Képes Világ); in 1867, News from Pest (Pesti Hírlap); from 1867 to 1870, Hungary and the Great World (Magyarország és a Nagyvilág), while in 1871, he was Editor of Country-World (Ország-Világ), in which his novel glorifying the commune appeared, entitled The Fight of the Commune (A commune harca). From 1878 to 1893, Vértesi lived in Debrecen, where he was the editor and owner of the journal Inspector of Debrecen (Debreceni Ellenőr). Later, he returned to Budapest. He was a member of the Petőfi Society from its foundation (1876), as well as the Kisfaludy Society (1887). In his numerous short stories and novels he showed the corrupt gentry, the destitute pariahs of life, and the typical figures of small country towns in a realistic portrayal. His works include Historic Talks, vols i,ii (Történeti beszédek, I-II) (1859); Suicidals (Öngyilkosok) (1882); Pariahs (Páriák) (1885); Stories from Small Country Towns (Kisvárosi történetek) (1898), and His Collected Works - A Thousand Short Stories, vols. i-xv (Összes munkái - Ezer elbeszélés I-XV) (1888-1889). – B: 0883, 1257; T: 7456. → Arany, János; Vajda, János; Matkovics, Pál.

Vértesy, József (Joseph) (Vrabel) (Zombor, now Sombor in Serbia, 19 February 1901 - Budapest, 21 December 1983) – Water-polo player and swimmer. From 1920 he was a member of numerous sporting organizations in Budapest. In 1932 he was member of the Hungarian Olympic Champion team at the Los Angeles Olympics. In 1928, at the Amsterdam Olympics, he was second, while in the 1924 Paris Olympics, he was a member of the Hungarian team that placed 5th. From 1926 to 1934, he was four times European Champion. Between 1921 and 1940, he was seven times Hungarian Champion. From 1913 to 1934, he was seventy times on the Hungarian select team. In 1921, he was Hungarian Champion in 4x200 m fast free-style swimming. In 1923, he was a member of the Hungarian Champion team for river swimming. From 1934 he was a trainer in the swimming section of the University of Budapest Athletic Club (BEAC); his best-known student was Ferenc (Frances) Csík, Olympic Champion in the 1936 Games. From 1943 to 1944, he was Captain of the Hungarian water-polo national selected team. From 1953 to 1960, he was the trainer of the water-polo section of the Dózsa Water Conservancy Club of Szolnok; as a trainer he was Hungarian Champion in 1954, 1957, 1958 and 1959. – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Csík, Ferenc.

Verzár, Frigyes (Frederick) (Budapest, 16 September 1886 - Arlesheim bei Basel, Switzerland, 13 March 1979) – Physician and physiologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1908. Thereafter, he was a correspondent for the Biological Institute of the University. In 1914 he received the qualification of an honorary lecturer (pivatdocent). During World War I, he served as a medical officer. In 1919, he was appointed Professor of Biology at the Medical School of the newly opened University of Debrecen; soon he became Head of the Patho-biological Institute. In 1929, the Minister of Education and Religion, Count Kunó Klebelsberg commissioned him to establish and lead a Biological Research Institute at Tihany (on the peninsula of Lake Balaton). However, in 1930, he was invited to head the Institute of Biology at Basel and was appointed Professor of Biology there; he worked in that capacity for ten years, while he also led the institute at Tihany, and was at the same time professor at Debrecen. At Tihany he developed an excellent research team, which included Géza Entz, József (Joseph) Gelei, Lajos (Louis) Varga and Albert Szent-Györgyi. Verzár retired from his position in Basel in 1956. In his retirement, he organized the Experimental Gerontological Research Institute of Basel, and was also the Secretary of the International Gerontological Society. He actively took part in establishing the nutrition program for the World Health Organization (WHO), becoming the leader of its project. He spent some time in Peru, Bolivia, and in Argentina. In Venezuela, he organized the pre-clinical teaching at the University of Caracas. His field of research included muscle biology, absorption originating from the bowels, connection between hormones and vitamins, and the functioning of the endocrine glands. He made some important observations about the essential features of the ageing process. He also treated the history of medicine and he was a member of numerous societies in Hungary and abroad; he was a Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1973). His works include On Life, Illness and Death (Életről, betegségekről és halálról) (1924); Lectures on Experimental Gerontology (1963), and Absorption from the Intestine (1967). – B: 1730; T: 7456. → Klebensberg, Count Kunó; Entz, Géza (2); Szent-Györgyi, Albert.

Vessels, Bell-Shaped – In ancient archaeological literature, two vessel types were identified under this name: (1) the ornamental, striped decorative cups that were usually accompanied by buried vases, originating from the end of the New Stone Age (Neolithic, 6000 B.C. to 2000 B.C.) and the beginning of the Bronze Age (2000 B.C.). These were found in Szentes and in Tököl. (2) The larger vessels, which were found in Eastern Prussia and Poland during the Hallstatt Era (old Iron Age, 800 to 450 B.C.), were used to cover and conceal urns containing ashes. – B: 1078, T: 7676.

Vészi, Endre (Andrew) (Budapest, 19 October 1916 - Budapest, 9 July 1987) – Poet and writer. He was the son of a soap-maker. After his secondary education, he received training in engraving; then worked at the firm of Geduldiger from 1932 to 1938. His poems appeared in various papers such as: People's Word (Népszava), West (Nyugat), Nice Word (Szép Szó), Answer (Válasz), etc. from 1934 on, while his community articles and sociological reports appeared from 1937. His first volume of poems, Take Me into Your Protection (Végy oltalmadba) was published in 1935. His first novel, entitled You Were Liberated (Felszabadultál) (1937), won the Mikszáth Prize of the Pantheon Publishers. From 1942 he was in a forced labor unit, and a prisoner in concentration camps in Mauthausen and Günskirchen. He returned to Hungary in August 1945. Thereafter, from 1945 to 1951, he was a correspondent for the paper People's Word (Népszava), and head of its cultural column. In 1955 and 1956 he was Secretary of the Writers' Association. After the September 1956 issue of the Literary Paper was banned, he resigned from his position. From 1948 on, he continuously produced volumes of poems, radio plays, stage plays, films, TV-plays, e.g. The Lost Veil (Elveszett fátyol) radio plays (1948); Angi Vera, novel, also in film version (1978), and Statistics, radio play (1964). Vészi continued the Hungarian short-story tradition with great success, such as in Man and Shadow (Ember és árnyék) (1975). The Hungarian Television presented a portrait film of him (1981, 1986). His correspondence and the bibliographic arrangement of his works have been deposited at the Petőfi Literary Museum. His published poems include Spoiler of Holiday (Ünneprontó) (1936); The Black Port (A fekete rév) (1944);

Star Map (Csillagtérkép) (1956)é Mysteriuos Parallels (Titokzatos párhuzamok) (1977), and Continuous Confession (Folytatólagos vallomás) (1981). His prose works include With Child on his Arm (Gyerekkel a karján) novel (1938); Submerged Budapest (Elsüllyedt Budapest) (1946); Feast at Dawn (Lakoma hajnalban) short stories (1960); Incognito in Budapest (Inkognitóban Budapesten) (1976), and Limit of Tolerance (Tűrészhatár) (1982). His stage works include Last adventure of Don Quixote (Don Quijote utolsó kalandja) (1962, 1986); The Long Hallway (A hosszú előszoba) (1972), and the Down With the Old Folks (Le az öregekkel) (1987). His feature films include The Last Circle (Az utolsó kör) (1968) and Angi Vera (1978). His collected radio plays include The Red Lion (A piros oroszlán) (1962), and God in Farmer Clothes (Jóisten farmerben) (1984). He was awarded the Attila József Prize three times (1950, 1955, 1965), and the Kossuth Prize (1978). – T: 0883, 1257, 1445, T: 7456.

Veszprém (German: Vesprim, Slavic: Bezprem) – Old Hungarian town, a municipal borough, seat of County Veszprém and the Roman Catholic Bishopric, 260m above sea level, situated in a picturesque ravine of the Séd River, with the horst of the Castle Hill overlooking the town below, 13 km north of Lake Balaton, an eminently well-defensible site, founded by King St. Stephen in 1001 AD. The Bishopric of Veszprém was established in 1009. The town is also an important road junction of two main routes: the road connecting the Little Hungarian Plain (Kisalföld) with the Mezőföld area to the southeast, and the road connecting the Danube with the Lake Balaton region. The population of Veszprém was 14,141 in 1901; 17,792 in 1930; 21,555 in 1941; ethnically purely Hungarian and mostly Roman Catholic, 38,000 in 1970 and 59,000 in 1983 (82% Roman Catholic, 9,2% Reformed, 3% Lutheran, 4,7% Jewish. 9.2% of the working population is primary producers, 33.1% tradesmen, 12.1% merchants and transport workers, 12% civil servant and freelancing, 10.3% pensioner and fund-holder, 11.4% day workers and servants. The main occupations are in industry, mainly handicrafts; larger firms include currency distribution, brickyards, pottery, woodware, rug-factories, watermills, grain marketing, livestock trading and professional work. In the historic atmosphere of Castle Hill, formerly a citadel, there is a multitude of historic buildings such as: the massive Episcopal Palace (1762-1773); the Franciscan Monastery and Church (1776); the Chapter Library (1773); the Seminary and the Piarist High School. The Cathedral was restored in its original Romanesque style in 1907-1910, its Gothic sanctuary dates from the 13th century. The northern protruding rampart of Castle Hill is the Bastion Lookout, with a splendid view over the entire town. Below it are the ruins of the Dominican Monastery and Church, where Blessed (Princess) Margaret (Boldog Margit) (1241-1270) spent her childhood. South of the Castle Hill; St. Benedict Hill is the Baroque town center with the Town Hall (1793), the Pósa House, the Theater, built together with a hotel in Magyar style, the work of István Medgyaszay, (1909), the Post Office mansion, the County Hall, the Neo-Gothic Church and Monastery of the English Ladies (Agolkisasszonyok), the Institute of the Sisters of Charity, and the Palace of the Museum (Medgyaszay, 1924). The Bishop's Gardens, the Plosser Promenade and the Elizabeth Grove lend freshness to the town's view. In the suburbs of the hillsides are the High Schools, the Orphanage, the Hospital, the Reformed and Lutheran churches, the bust of Empress and Queen Elizabeth (1837 – 1898, wife of Emperor and King Francis Joseph I), the St. László (Ladislás) Church (1902-1905), and the St. Anna Chapel of 1724, renovated in 1924-1926. The town has a number of special schools, a Municipal College of Music, Roman Catholic Theological College, and the University of Pannonia. (formerly University of Veszprém). The National Casino was founded in 1832. The Museum's rich material holds, e.g. the mosaic details of Balácsa from Roman times, many Pannonian memorials, and rich collections of local history, industrial art and ethnographic material. The Turkish minaret is now a fire tower. The history of Veszprém begins with the Neolithic and Bronze-age settlements; there are some signs of the Iron Age and Roman-time settlements as well. During the Carpathian conquest by the Hungarians (896-900) the tribes of Őcséb and Őse occupied the site. It was in this area that King István I (St Stephen, 997-1038) defeated the uprising of Koppány (descendant of Prince Árpád) in 998. King István I had the St. Michael Cathedral built and made Veszprém the residence of his Queen, Princess Gisella of Bavaria. In 1276, Palatine Péter Csák had the town ravaged, famous for its Cathedral School. Austrian Prince Maximilian occupied the town in 1491, and then King John (János) occupied it in 1527. Veszprém was under Ottoman Turkish rule from 1552 to 1564, and from 1594 to 1598. Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen, Prince of Transylvania seized it in 1620, Imre (Emeric) Thököly's army in 1682, and the Imperial Austrian forces took it from the Kuruc forces in 1704. French troops looted it in 1809, and it was badly damaged by fire in 1895. For a brief period during the summer of 1919, it was under Romanian occupation. Toward the end of World War II, for several months, it was in the last southwest-to-northeast defense line held by the German forces against the advancing Soviet army. – B: 1068, 1582, 1789, 1816, 7456, T: 7456.→Most of the persons in the article have their own entry.

Veszprém, Donation Document to the Nuns – A donation document in the name of Rex Stephanus, Géza István, dated before 1002, together with the donation document written in Latin of 1009, was preserved on parchment paper. This is one of the earliest relics of Hungarian origin. It is held in the National Archives in Budapest. – B: 1138, 1020, T: 7669.

Veterans – After World War I, all veterans from most of the warring countries around the world congregated into associations. Their aim was to preserve the spirit of camaraderie and maintain national traditions, to support their members morally and financially, by establishing mutual beneficiary institutions. In Hungary, the National Veterans Association was founded in 1929. The members wore distinct uniforms, where the golden shoulder knot was reserved for officers, silver for the subalterns, and green for the enlisted men. After World War II, the European Veterans Association was founded in Paris, France, as headquarters; the first president of it was Jacques Kosciusko Morizet, descendant of the legendary Polish national hero. The president of the Hungarian division was Vitéz László (Ladislas) Duska. After the disintegration of the Soviet Union, the Hungarian Veterans' Association was welcomed into the European Federation. – B: 1078, 1020, T: 3233.→Duska, László.

Vetési, Albert (1410 - Veszprém, 18 June 1486) – Bishop and diplomat. He studied at the University of Vienna and probably at an Italian University and, because of this, he became a member of King Zsigmond's (Sigismund of Luxembourg, 1387-1437) entourage in Rome in 1433. From 1446 to 1456, he served as Canon of Erdély (Transylvania, now in Romania). In 1452, he was sent to the Austrian Estates on a diplomatic mission with Bishop Ágoston of Győr. Later, as Secretary to Regent János (John) Hunyadi (1446-1453), he was a legate to Rome. In 1455, he joined the royal service and was appointed as legate to Rome and Venice. Pope Callixtus III elevated him to Apostolic Protonotary. Over the course of his career he served in a number of positions; he was Provost, Bishop, Legate and Vice-Chancellor. In 1473, he participated in the Czech-Polish-Hungarian peace negotiations. His final assignment was in Rome and Venice, then in Naples, where he officiated at the marriage of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus) and Princess Beatrix of Naples, in 1476. His tomb was discovered in 1957, in the Castle of Veszprém. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7103.→Zsigmond, King; Hunyadi, János; Mátyás I, King.

Vető, Lajos (Louis) (Viszkok) (Kondoros, 17 October, 1904 - Budapest, 22 September, 1989) – Lutheran Bishop. He studied Theology in Sopron from 1924 until 1928, in Berlin and in Tartu, Estonia from 1929 until 1931. He was ordained in 1928. In 1935, he received his Doctorate in Religious Studies in Pécs. After serving as Assistant Minister in Medgyesegyház from 1928 until 1929, and in Szolnok from 1931 until 1937, he became Parish Minister in Diósgyőr-Vasgyár from 1937 until 1948, and in Nyíregyháza from 1948 until 1952, as well as Bishop of the Tisza Church District. From 1952 until his retirement in 1967, he was Parish Minister in Budapest-Budavár Evangelical-Lutheran Congregation. He was the first Bishop of the newly established Evangelical-Lutheran Northern Church District. He was President of the Hungarian Ecumenical Council, President of the Bible Council of Hungary, a member of the Presidium of the National Peace Council, Presidential member of the Patriotic People's Front and, between 1953 and 1971, was a Member of Parliament. Vető was a member of the International Psychological Society. His main works are Main Directions of Modern Psychotherapy (A modern pszichoterápia főirányai) (1933) and In wiefern ist der Rechtfertigungsglaube noch lebendig in den evangelischen Gemeinden? (To What Extent is Orthodoxy Still Alive in Evangelical Communities?) (1966). In 1953, he was awarded an Honorary Doctorate from the Protestant Theological Academy of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). He received several distinctions for his work. – B: 0883, T: 7667.→Evangelical-Lutheran Church in Hungary.

Vetráb, József Kadocsa (Joseph) (Budapest, 1955 - ) – Historian. He came from an old noble family. His ancestors served the Holy Crown as soldiers, diplomats and priests. After he obtained a goldsmith master's diploma, he studied French at the Department of Foreign Languages of the Miklós Zrínyi Military Academy, Budapest (1994-1996). He earned a Ph.D. from the University of Budapest (1998-2000). His field of research centers on the Hungarian Sacral Kinship, mapping the traces of cities of the Middle Ages, the system of forts, and also documenting and photographing the still visible traces. He is a member of the Two Ravens Friendly Society (Két Hollós Baráti Társaság). Since 2003 his writings and studies in connection with the Pilis Mountain and the history of the Magyar language have been published in the paper, News of Tura (Turai Hírlap), and in the magazine Dobogó. His published writings include The Environs of Buda in the Árpád Age (Az Árpád-kori Buda és környéke); Island of Hares (Nyulaknak-szigete); Linguistic Relic from the Age of (King) András, vols. i,ii (András-kori nyelvemlékiünk I–II); Trojans, Sicambers, Sicans, Franks, vols.i,ii (Trójaiak, szikamberek, szikánok, frankok, I-II); Valley of Kings (Királyok völgye); University of Matthias Corvinus (Hollós Mátyás egyeteme); The Second Mohács (A második Mohács); Viszoko – the Valley of Pyramids (Viszokó – a piramisok völgye); In the Footsteps of Vanished Time (Az eltűnt idő nyomában), and Túr, Tura, Turul. – B: 1935, T: 7690, 7103.→Pilis archeological site.

Vette, György (George) (Graudenz, Poland, 30 October 1645 - Nagyszeben, now Sibiu, Romania), 11 June 1704) – Naturalist, botanist and pharmacist. He studied at Thorn and, after his research student years, from 1672, he was in charge of the pharmacy of Nagyszeben in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). He was the first to provide the gas-content of the Transylvanian mineral waters and to describe the Transylvanian flora. He was a well-known naturalist and a member of the Imperial Academy of Austria. Some of his articles survived, one of them on certain plant-abnormalities. He was the author of the work Observationes de luxuriantibus quibusdam Transylvaniae plantis... (Ephemerides Naturae Curiosorum. Ann. VI – VII. Vindobonae). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Vetter, Antal (Anthony) (von Doggenfeld) (Mestre, Italy, 3 July 1803 - Budapest, 26 July 1882) – Imperial army officer of Austrian ancestry. He was a Lieutenant-Colonel at Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania) in June 1848; in September he became a colonel and, in November, a general, and Head of the Honvéd General Staff. He was acting Minister of Defense in the absence of Lázár (Lazarus) Mészáros. On 8 March 1849, he became a Lieutenant-General and, after Henrik Dembinszky, he became the Supreme Commander of the Honvéd army; however, due to illness, he was forced to resign. After his recovery, he worked as the head of the engineering section and organized the re-conquest of Bácska. After the capitulation at Világos, he emigrated to England, where he worked as a teacher in Military School. After the 1867 Compromise, he returned to Hungary and settled in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). He is the author of the work The Serbian Attack of 1848-1849 (Az 1848/49-iki szerb támadás) in the journal, Our Country (Hazánk: 1885-1889). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Mészáros, Lázár; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Vezér, Ferenc Szaniszló (Francis) (Transylvania, now in Romania, 1913 - Budapest, 28 March 1952) – Pauline monk, Secretary of Archbishop József (Joseph) Mindszenty. The Communist authorities arrested him in 1951. He was accused of organizing sentries to warn of approaching plundering Soviet soldiers. His case was connected with the show-trial of Bishop József (Joseph) Grósz and he was accused of a fabricated case of armed-conspiracy. He was sentenced to death in June 1951. In prison, he was severely tortured, but he remained steadfast to his faith, and even consoled his jail-mates. He was executed in the prison of Budapest. – B: 1020, 1031, T: 7103.→Pauline Order; Mindszenty, József; Grósz, József.

Victims of the Bolshevik Dictatorship in Hungary – According to the historian Emőke Kovács, the number of Hungarians carried off to the Soviet Union up to 1956 may be put at 600-700 thousand, of whom 220,000 to 260,000 never returned to Hungary. Within Hungary's borders, from the end of World War II until the 1960s, the Communist regime killed several thousand, and who were vilified were in the hundreds of thousands. The historian Tamás (Thomas) Stark, in one of his studies, states that, in the Holocaust, more than 440,000, but certainly less than 550,000 Jewish Hungarians lost their lives. – B: 1985, T: 7456.→Stark, Tamás; Hungary, history of; Soviet rule in Hungary; Jews in Hungary.

Victor, Gedeon (Gideon) (Budapest, 16 June 1923 - Budapest, 24 January 2004) – Actor. He began his acting career in Pécs in 1944. He became a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest (1945-1946); the Theater at Miskolc (1945-1947, 1955-1957); at Kecskemét (1949-1952); at the Comedy Theater (1952-1954); the State Village Theater (Faluszínház) (1954-1955); the Merry Stage (Vidám Színpad) (1957-1970), and the Thália Theater (Thália Színház) (1970-1973). From 1974 to 1990 he received roles at the Madách Theater (Madách Színház) and, in 1977, he played at the Radnóti Theater (Radnóti Színház), usually playing prose and vocal character roles. He was the author of a number of TV-plays. His roles include Uncle Marci in Kodály's Háry János; Otto in Katona's Bánk bán; Dr. Wolff in F. Molnár's One, Two, Three (Egy, kettő, három); second villager in Fiddler on the Roof (Hegedűs a háztetőn); and Jonathan in Tolcsvay-Müller's God's Money (Isten pénze). There are more than 10 feature films to his credit including The Lieutenant of Rákóczi (Rákóczi hadnagya) (1954);, Sword and Cube (Kard és kocka) (1959); Moneymaker (Pénzcsináló) (1964), and the Sons of the Stonehearted Man (A köszívű embere fiai) (1963). Among his TV films are Zrinyi (1973); Hungary 1848-1849 (Magyarország 1848-1849) (1983), and Police-raid at the Golden Eagle (Razzia az Aranysasban) (1991). – B: 1445, 1719, T: 7456.→Victor, János; Victor, Máté.

Victor, János (John) (Budapest, 4 June 1888 - Budapest, 19 June 1954) – Minister of the Reformed Church, theologian. He completed his Theological studies in Budapest, where he also read Philosophy. He spent one year at the University of Princeton, USA, received a B.A. in Theology, in 1924 a Ph.D. in Philosophy, and became an honorary lecturer (privatdocent) at the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest. Between 1925 and 1932, he was Professor of Theology at the same Academy. In 1932 he was called to serve at the Szabadság Square Church in Budapest, where he built the modern Church of Homecoming (A hazatérés Temploma). In 1949, he returned to his post at the Theological Academy of Budapest, as Professor of Dogmatics and Ethics. His outstanding works are In the Holy of Holies (A szentek szentjében) (1926); Rise Up, Beloved Zion (Térj magadhoz, drága Sion) sermons (1930); He and Us (Ő és mi) sermons (1932); Blissful Captivity (Boldog rabság) (1933), and The Reformed Creed (Református Hiszekegy) (1943). He also translated the works of Harry Emerson Fosdick and J. Calvin. He was one of the gifted servants of the Reformed awakening, of student mission work, of congregational building, and of scientific theology. – B: 0911, T: 7617.→Victor, Gedeon; Victor, Máté.

Victor, Máté (Matthew) (Budapest, 26 February 1945 - ) – Composer and singer. He began his musical studies at the Béla Bartók Music Educational High School, studying composition under Rezső (Rudolph) Sugár; he continued his studies at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, under Ferenc (Francis) Farkas. In 1968-1969, he was on a scholarship in Warsaw, where he studied mainly electronic music. At the beginning of the 1970s, his interest turned toward pop music. Since 1974, he has created a number of electronic music works. He wrote music for stage works, and composed for some musicals. On occasion, he appeared in singing roles for some of these musicals, e.g. High Priest Asztrik in Szörényi-Bródy's Stephen the King (István a király). His works include Villon and the Others (Villon és a többiek) (1976); Foolish Istók (Bolond Istók) (1977); Hungarian Electronic Music (Magyar elektronikus zene) (1979); Electronic Music by Young Hungarian Composers (Fiatal magyar zeneszerzők elektronikus kompozíciói) (1983); Cyrano (1983), and You Have to Live and Die Here (Itt élned, halnod kell) (1985). He received a number of prizes, including the Erkel Prize (1985), the Emerton Prize (1997), the Artisjus Prize (2005), and the Officer's Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary, Civil Class (2005). – B: 1445, 1852, T: 7456, 7103. → Victor, János; Victor, Gedeon; Sugár, Rezső; Farkas, Ferenc.

Vidákovits, Kamilló (Újmoldva, now Moldova Nouă, Romania, 18 January 1879 - Szeged, 6 August 1967) – Physician and surgeon. In 1903 he was a ship's doctor and a career army officer. Between 1909 and 1920, he was a lecturer at the Surgical Clinic of the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania); in 1914 he was an honorary lecturer (privatdozent); from 1921 he was Professor and Head of the Surgical Clinic of the University of Szeged. He dealt chiefly with abdominal and thoracic surgery. His works include The Surgical Complaints of the Inflamed Rectum (A végbél gyulladós sebészeti bántalmai) (1914), and On the Early Surgery of Gallstones (Az epekövek korai műtétjéről) (1926). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Vidnyánszky, Attila (Beregszász, now Berehove, Carpatho Ukraine, 8 March 1964 - ) – Theater and film director. His higher studies were at the University of Ungvár (now Ushhorod, Ukraine), where he read Hungarian Literature and History, and obtained a Degree in 1985. He taught at a village for two years, and after he was admitted to the Theater and Cinematic Art of the University of Kiev, and obtained a diploma of stage-manager in 1992. He taught at the same University from 1990 to 1997. In 1992, he was the founder of the Gyula (Julius) Illyés Hungarian National Theater (Illyés Gyula Magyar Nemzeti Színház) in Beregszász which, since 2008 is the Hungarian County Drama Theater of Sub-Carpathia (Kárpátaljai Megyei Magyar Drámai Színház). He is its Artistic Director and Chief Manager. He also worked in Hungary, e.g. at the old National Theater in 1999, and at the Hungarian Theater of Pest (Pesti Magyar Színház) from 2000. He was a leading stage-manager of the Hungarian State Opera House, Budapest, in 2004, and from 2006, he has been an artistic director of the Csokonai Theater (Csokonai Színház), Debrecen. His numerous stage management works include S. Beckett's Waiting for Godot (Godotra várva); L. Földes-Hobo's Vagabonds' Ten Commandments (Csavargók Tíz Parancsolata); Hunting (Vadászat); J. Katona's Bánk bán; I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember trégédiája); Zs. Móricz's Gentlemen Fun (Úri muri); W. Shakespeare's The Winter's Tale (Téli rege), and R. Wagner's e. Die Mestersinger von Nürnberg (A Nürnbergi mesterdalnokok). He shot films too, e. g. Liberté 56 (2007). During his career he created a unique theater language what he called „Poetic Theater” (Költői színház). In 2005, he was elected member of the Hungarian Art Academy of Sciences. He is a recipient a number of distinctions, including The Gold Lion Prize (1995), the Mari Jászai Prize (2002), the Merited Artist of Ukraine (2002), the Knight of Culture (2003), the Gundel Prize (2004), the Silver Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2004), For the Hungarian Art (2007), and the Kossuth Prize (2011). – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Földes, László.

Vidor, Dezső (Desider) (Nagykerekéi, 15 February 1870 - Budapest, 29 April 1945) – Actor, manager, theater secretary, teacher of actors and theater historian. He graduated from the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, in 1893. He became a character actor, manager and deputy director in country theaters. From 1898 to 1901, he was Manager for the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház), Budapest and, it was in 1901 that he joined the Opera House, Budapest, where at first he worked as draftsman, later as Stage Manager (1902-1908); for two periods (1908-1918, 1922-1931), he worked as a secretary, and between 1931 and 1944, the collection of relics was in his care. From 1918 to 1922, he worked in the Art Section of the Ministry of Education and Religion, dealing with theater life in the countryside. From 1910 he was also a member of the Directorate of the National Actors' Association, and was a teacher in the Association's School; from 1923 to 1936, he led the Association. He translated opera librettos, e.g. The Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága), and authored works on theater history and theater theory. It was to his merit that the collecting and research work of the history of the Opera House, Budapest, began in earnest. He was also active in Acting Pedagogy. His books include About Stage Performance (A színészetről) (1905), and The Theater Author and his Work (A színpadi szerző és munkája) (1906). His translations include Karel Weis: The Polish Jew (A lengyel zsidó) (1902), and Mozart: Marriage of Figaro (Figaro házassága) (1928). – B: 1445, 1742, T: 7456.

Vidor, Ferike (Frances) (Franciska Wechselmann) (Budapest, 2 June 1889 - Budapest, 23 January 1970) – Actress. After studying at the Acting School of Szidi Rákosi, she graduated from the school of the National Actors' Association in 1907. She first appeared on the stage of the Theater Company of Ákos Bihari, in Kecskemét. From 1909 she worked on the stage of various Budapest cabarets, such as the Modern Stage (1909-1912), the Apollo Cabaret (1916-1920), the Merry Stage (Vidám Színpad) (1924), the Rakéta Cabaret (1925), the Andrassy Boulevard Theater (Andrássy úti Színház) (1927-1928), the Bethlen Plaza Theater (1929-1930), and the Comedians' Cabaret (1931-1932). Concurrently, she appeared in the Royal Orpheum in Vienna (1920-1924), and in a Berlin theater in the late 1920s. She played some roles at the Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház) and the Artist's Theaters (Művész Színházak) and also on the Independent Stage (Független Színpad) during 1937 and 1938. Between 1940 and 1944 she took part in the artists' campaign. From 1945 to 1952 she was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest and, at the same time, she also acted for the Inner City Theater (1949-1951). From 1953 to 1959 she appeared on the Merry Stage (Vidám Színpad). Ferike Vidor's servants' songs, which were written for her by her second husband, Andor (Andrew) Gábor, determined the genre of the Hungarian Cabaret. She made use of her humor and idiosyncratic characterizing ability in character and episode roles too. Her roles include Mrs. Hollunder in F. Molnár's Liliom, and Anyó in Zs. Móricz's Crafty Matt, the Goose-herd (Ludas Matyi). She appeared in feature films, including Pastry Shop in Buda (Budai cukrászda) (1936); The Headmistress (A tanítónő) (1945), and Foothold (Talpalatnyi föld) (1948). Her book is entitled I Kiss Your Hand! (Keziticsókolom!), recollection (1942). She received the Merited Artist title in 1957. – B:

1445, 1742, T: 7456.→Gábor, Andor.

Vidor, Zsigmond (Sigismund) (Nagykálló, 7 October 1835 - Budapest, 1 March 1908) – Physician, ophthalmologist. In 1860 he obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Pest; in 1861 and 1862, he continued his studies at the University of Vienna as a research student of Professor Jäger. From 1862 until 1901, he practiced in Pest as a physician and ophthalmologist. From 1868 he also worked at the Poor Children's Hospital of Pest. From 1871 he was Senior Ophthalmologist of the Jewish Hospital of Pest. He edited the Ophthalmology supplement of the paper, Medical Weekly. He translated Stellwag's Practical Ophthalmology (1868). His works also include Rückblick auf die im Pester Kinderspitale vom 1. Jänner 1869 bis 31. Deczember 1971 behandelten Augenkrankheiten (1883). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Vidrócki, Márton (Martin) (Monosbél, 12 November 1837 - Mátraverebély, 8 February 1873) – The outlaw of the Mátra Mountain. His father was a shepherd. According to folk tradition, he became an outlaw because he was an army deserter; another variation states that, as a young herdsman, he beat up his head shepherd. The legends also contain: romantic love, orphanhood and illegitimate origin. According to legend, he was a handsome, valiant man, well equipped with pistols and shotguns. According to popular belief, bullets did not hurt him; he punished his enemies cruelly, and was most generous with those who helped him. He only robbed the rich and never hurt the poor. There are many stories about his boldness, his wild nature and his revelries. On account of all these, his name was revered among the people. There were even several versions about his death. According to one story, it was his lover who betrayed him. According to another, one of his partners killed him. Information from contemporary newspapers proves the latter. It was Zoltán Kodály, who revived his life and death in his choral work for mixed Choir "Pictures from the Mátra Mountain" (Mátrai Képek): Vidrócki's Famous Flock... (A Vidrócki hős nyája...), based on a folksong. A wayside inn bears his name, and also the folk dance ensemble in Gyöngyös. – B: 1031, T: 7684.→Rogue; Highwaymen's Time; Rózsa, Sándor; Sobri, Jóska; Savanyú, Jóska; Zöld, Marci; Kodály, Zoltán.

Vienna, Avar relics of – There were approximately 40,000 Avar graves excavated in Vienna's eight city districts. The sites lead from the inner district to the outer peripheries of the city. The 500 graves excavated in the XI District prove that, between the 6th and 8th centuries, the Avars inhabited the area. The contents of the graves excavated so far are, in all probability, only a fraction of what still lies beneath the buildings. Based on the location of the cemeteries, one can establish the approximate relationship of the Avar settlements, which proves the continuity of Avar generations for 250 years. There are few geographic areas in Austria that yielded so many Avar cemeteries as Vienna and the neighboring Vienna Basin. The grave-finds point not only to historical presence, but also to chronological continuity. The geographic location of the excavated graves demonstrates an unbroken chain of Avar settlements from Vienna to Wiener Neustadt, and to the River Leitha (Lajta) to the east, or even farther. Comparative analysis of the finds shows that the Avars were living in tribal organizations in this region of Austria, even beyond the second half of the 9th century. Avars are believed to be relatives of Magyars. – B: 0881, 1020, T: 7617.→Avars.

Vienna Award I (the First), on September 30, 1938. – The leaders of Great Britain, France, Italy and Germany agreed to return to Germany the land of the Sudeten Germans (Sudetenland), which had been ceded to Czechoslovakia with some 3 million ethnic Germans by the Versailles Peace Treaty after World War I. The Munich Appeasement Accord had a supplementary declaration concerning Polish and Hungarian minorities in Czechoslovakia. In so far as the States concerned failed to reach an agreement, the four great powers themselves would deal with the issue at the next meeting.

The signatory the four great powers of the Munich Protocol also recognized the legitimacy of the Hungarian territorial claims with respect to the Hungarian inhabited territories of Czechoslovakia. Lord Hastings, British Minister of Foreign Affairs, confirmed in a speech the legitimacy of the claim in Edinburgh, on 24 October 1938. British Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain reiterated this position in a letter to Rear Admiral Miklós Horthy, Regent of Hungary. On 2 October 1938, the Czechoslovakian Government transferred 16,270 inhabitants to Poland from the northern boundary territory of historic Hungary, pursuant to the Munich Accord. On 9th October, the Governments of Hungary and Czechoslovakia met in Komárom concerning the return of territories of Northern Hungary (Felvidék), inhabited by Hungarians, to the mother country. The Hungarian Government's position was to insist upon the return of the southern belt of Slovakia, entirely inhabited by Hungarians, contiguous with three substantial and a few inconsequential territories of mixed population districts, but still with a Hungarian majority. Slovakia was to receive the northwestern third. Plebiscites were to be held in Carpatho-Ruthenia and Eastern Slovakia, which were half Slovak and half Ruthenian, Hungarian and German. The Slovaks did not insist on the entirely Hungarian territories but, contrary to Hungarian aspirations, they demanded the regions of mixed inhabitants, even though there was a Hungarian majority, and they outright rejected the notion of a plebiscite anywhere. Hungarian public opinion considered Hungarian efforts excessively tame and moderate. The agreement fell through over the future of the cities of Kassa and Pozsony, now renamed Kosiče and Bratislava. While the Hungarians requested a plebiscite, the Slovaks stuck firmly to arbitration and the Hungarians finally gave in, agreeing to the four-power decision. Great Britain and France let Germany and Italy decide. By default, these two concluded the arbitration in the name of all four. On 2 November 1938, in the Belvedere Palace in Vienna, Austria, the foreign ministers of Germany and Italy, Joachim von Ribbentrop and Count Galeazzo Ciano, effected the arbitration, which was accepted by both Hungary and Slovakia. According to it, 11,927 km<sup>2</sup> with 869,299 persons (86.5% ethnic Hungarian and 9.8 % Slovakian), returned to Hungary. 70,000 Hungarians remained in Slovakia, i.e. 10 % of the Hungarian population of the former Slovakia. The cities of Kassa, Ungvár and Munkács were returned to Hungary. Pozsony and Nyitra remained in Slovakia under the name of Bratislava and Nitra. On 5 November 1938, the Hungarian Army peacefully marched into the designated areas. This was the first peaceful revision of the Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate forced upon Hungary on 4 June 1920.

Toward the end of World War II, the armistice, signed by the Hungarian Provisional National Government – under Soviet pressure – declared the First Vienna Award null and void by decree No.526/1945. The Paris Peace Treaty on 10 February 1947, returned the gained historic territories with a majority Hungarian population to Czechoslovakia, except Carpatho-Ruthenia, which was given to the Soviet Union. However, during these events, Hungary was under strong and prolonged Soviet military occupation (1945-1991). – B: 1230, 1288, 1020, 1031, T: 7661, 7103.→Horthy, Miklós; Ciano, Count Geleazzo; Joachim von Ribbentrop; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Vienna Award II (the Second) – After occupying half of Poland in 1939, the Soviet Union retook Bessarabia and Northern Bukovina from Romania in 1940. After that, the Hungarian Government put forward claims for the return of the regions of Transylvania (Erdély) that still had majority of Hungarian population. Consequently, the relationship between the two countries deteriorated, and soon a war loomed over them. Germany's leader, Adolf Hitler, unsuccessfully asked them to resolve the matter by negotiation. Hitler then suggested to the Romanians to seek arbitration. Foreign Ministers, Joachim von Ribbentrop of Germany and Count Geleazzo Ciano of Italy arbitrated an agreement, which was signed at the Belvedere Palace in Vienna on 30 August 1940. According to the arbitration, the northern part of Transylvania (Erdély) would return to Hungary, including Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania) and Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), a total area of 43,590 km<sup>2</sup> area, with a population of 2,185,000, of which 51.5% were Hungarians and 42% Romanian. However, large numbers of Hungarians remained in the southern part of Transylvania. Neither party was satisfied with this ruling, so the relationship between the two countries remained tense. Hungarian Prime Minister, Count Pál (Paul) Teleki, accepted the resolution with reservation, but the public euphoria was so intense in Hungary that refusal was impossible. The return of northern Transylvania was accomplished by the end of September. The southern regions of Transylvania remained in Romanian hands, providing easy access for the Soviet army to the rest of Hungary in 1944. Following World War II, the Peace Treaty in Paris on 10 February 1947 – on Soviet initiative – annulled the Award, and northern Transylvania fell again under Romanian rule. It is important to note that, at that time, Hungary was under strong Soviet military occupation, which lasted until 1991. Actually, in the fall of 1944, Romania unilaterally repossessed Northern Transylvania following its occupation by the Soviet Army.– B: 1230,1231,1020, 1031, T: 7103.→Teleki, Count Pál; Ciano, Count Geleazzo; Joachim von Ribbentrop; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Vienna (Bécsi) Codex – A partial copy of the oldest Hungarian Bible translation (Old Testament), comprising 162 leaves, dating from around 1466. Since the beginning of the 18th century, it has been kept in the National Library in Vienna. It is the work of three anonymous scribes. The text was first published by the poet Gábor (Gabriel) Döbrentei, a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, in 1838, who, in memory of the Catholic priest and poet, Miklós (Nicholas) Révai (1749/50), named it the Révai Codex. The rest of this translation is contained in the Munich Codex and the Apur Codex. – B: 1031, 7617, T: 7617.→Döbrentei, Gábor; Révai, Gábor; Codex Literature.

Vienna, Collegium Hungaricum – Founded in 1924 at the Trautson Palace, erstwhile residence of Empress Maria Theresa's Hungarian bodyguards, where György (George) Bessenyei, Károly (Charles) Kisfaludy and György (George) Klapka, and in recent times Kálmán (Coloman) Benda, István (Astephen) Bicó, Dezső (Deiderius) Keresztúry and Domokos (Dominic) Kosáry lived. It has been the permanent official cultural institute of the Hungarian State in Austria. It provides a meeting place for the different Hungarian societies operating in the building. Since 1963, it has functioned in a new building in Holland Strasse 4. – B: 1020, 1031, T: 7669.→Bessenyei, Gyögy; Kisfaludy, Károly; Klapka, György; Benda, Kálmán; Bibó, István; Keresztúry, Dezső; Kosáry, Domokos.

Vienna Museums, Hungarian Art Treasures in:

Hungarian art treasures of the Ecclesiastical Treasure House in Vienna:

1) Relic repository: holder of the house-cap worn by King István I (St. Stephen) (997-1038). It is a crystal dish in a silver holder. The underside of the lid is adorned with the picture of the Annunciation, dated from the 14th century.

2) The Cross of King Nagy Lajos (Louis the Great)(1342-1382): The 34 cm tall cross was made for the king in Hungary between 1370 and 1382. The 33 cm high base originates from the 15th century.

3) Purse of King István I (St. Stephen): It has several parts. The one, from the 11th century, is made of red silk. The front part is decorated with the picture of the Savior, with the prophet Isaiah and Archangel Michael. The reverse originates from the 12th century with this old Slavonian inscription: “Your blessing stay with us, now and for evermore”. On the side: “God be merciful to us now, and bless us, show us his face and have compassion”. The gold ribbon and the gold fringe are of a more recent date. The purse was donated by the wife of King Mátyás II (Matthias) (1608-1619) to the Viennese Capuchin Museum.

4) House-cap of King István I (St. Stephen): Made of light cherry-colored silk material. Its decoration is completed with rich gold embroidery, portraying foliage on both sides, illustrated with two-headed bird figures. It originates from the 11th century. The wife of King Mátyás II donated it to the Viennese Capuchin Museum.

Hungarian treasures in the Hofburg:

1) Cavalry sword: dating from the Hungarian settlement era (896 AD), made in the 9th century in Etelköz for Chieftain Árpád (Etelköz, between the Rivers Etil - now Volga - and the Lower Danube). The saber is 90-cm long; the hilt is decorated with silver, gold and precious stones. The blade was made of red copper, and has floral and animal figure decorations. The damaged edge of the blade suggests it was more than an ornamental piece. The shape perfectly corresponds to the sabers from the Hungarian settlement era. It was taken to Germany in the 11th century, to be displayed among the emblems of the Imperial might. Today it is displayed in a glass showcase as Säbel Karls des Großen (The Saber of Charlemagne).

2) Vestments of the Knights of the Order of István I (St. Stephen): The green velvet hand-woven mantle – decorated with gold and ermine – was made in Vienna in 1764.

3) Hungarian herald's uniform and staff of office: a rich, silver-embroidered, gold lamé coat was the gala dress of the king's herald; it originates from the 18th century.

4) The Bocskai Crown: of Turkish origin, a 23-cm high gold crown, decorated with emerald and turquoise stones. In 1605, Turkish Sultan Achmed presented it to István (Stephen) Bocskai, Prince of Transylvania (1557-1606). Bocskai added an additional small cross to the top.

5) Hungarian jewelry: gold belt, necklace, earrings, clips, and hairpins, made in Hungary in 1881, as a present from the City of Budapest for Crown Prince Rudolf's and Princess Stephanie's wedding.

6) The Cross of the Order of King István I (St. Stephen): a gold cross, decorated with precious stones from the latter part of the 18th century. It is the work of a Hungarian goldsmith.

Hungarian weapon collection of the Museum of History of Arts:

1) The sword of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus), (1443-1490): a magnificent saber with a gold hilt According to researchers, King Mátyás donated it to the city of Raguza; earlier, it was mistakenly thought to be the rector's sword from that city.

2) The armor of King Lajos II (Louis) (1516-1526): donated as a gift to the 9-year-old Lajos II in 1615, by King Miksa (Maximilian).

3) The helmet of Miklós (Nicholas) Zrínyi (1508-1566): a slender, twelve-layered headgear (helmet of the "Hero of Szigetvár"), decorated with gold motives on a blue base.

4) The cavalry sword of Miklós Zrínyi: The slightly curved blade has a long edge. On the silver hilt, the Zrínyi family's coat-of arms, with the initials 'N.C. de Z' and the year 1567 are engraved.

5) The helmet and armor of István (Stephen) Báthori (1571-1576): The armor was made in 1560. In the middle of the chest is the slightly oriental-styled picture of the crucified Jesus. The decoration on the pointed helmet is done in the same style

6) A heavy broad sword of King Mátyás II (1608-1619): The blade originates from the 15th century. The scabbard supports the Austrian burgundy crest; the Silesian and Hungarian national coat of arms, as well as the name of King Mátyás II are engraved on it. On the other side, the Hradistye city crest and the following inscription are visible: Arma Regiae Civitatis Hradist, 1608.

The Hungarian collection of the Heeresgeschichtliche Museum, Wien (War History Museum, Vienna):

1) The painting of Pope Pius VII, depicting the journey from Fontainebleau to Rome in 1814. It illustrates the Pope's voyage, from the Taro Bridge on the French-Naples border, escorted by the Hungarian Hussars, acting as his bodyguards.

2) The pontifical flag of the Hussars: Donated by Pope Pius VII to his Hussar cavalymen, who escorted him. The beautiful, artistically, superbly-embroidered silk needle-point flag portrays the Holy Father as he kneels at the front of Patrona Hungariae, decorated with the Hungarian crown and with this inscription: Hungariae Patrona Pium comitatur ad Urbem - O Felix tanto Roma sub auspicio! (To my faithful Hungarian protectors, who escorted me to the Eternal City - as a special favor from the blessed Rome). On the flag, bright figures, dressed in Hungarian clothes, hold the triple crown atop the pontifical crest.

3) The uniform of General Géza Fejérváry: the full dress uniform and the winter gala coat of the general.

4) Hungarian flag of the Hussars: The 5th Hungarian Cavalry Regiment's flag from 1814, with the picture of the Blessed Mary.

Hungarian collection at the Kunsthistorisches Museum (History of Art Museum)

1) The ceiling painting by Mihály (Michael) Munkácsy in the entrance hall of the Museum is entitled The Apotheosis of Art. It portrays a Renaissance Hall, with angels flying through the open dome. In the middle of the 10x10 m painting, the old Master Titian corrects the work of a young painter. Two architects are portrayed on the left and, on the right, Michelangelo is standing in the foreground. In the background, the artist immortalized himself. After the death of academic history painter Hans Makart, the ruling dynasty commissioned Munkácsy to paint the fresco, which was completed in 1889.

2) Treasures from Szilágysomlyó (now Şimleul Silvaniei, Romania): The 2.5 kilograms of gold pieces were excavated in 1797 in the outskirts of Szilágysomlyó.

3) Nagyszentmiklós Gold Treasure (now Sânnicolau Mare, Romania): In 1799, at the estuary of the River Maros by Nagyszentmiklós, twenty-three gold dishes weighing ten kilograms were found.

4) Mátyás (Matthias) relief: the marble relief, portraying King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus), is a 1490 creation of a master sculptor from Northern Italy.

5) Vestments of the Hungarian Order of Dragons: gold radial crosses are embroidered on a blue velvet background. It is dated in 1444. – B: 1020, 1031, T: 7685.

Vienna's Hungarian Monuments:

1) Pálffy Mansion – built in 1875 for Baron Khuen-Bélássy, Chief Master of the Horse. His granddaughter married Count Pálffy, who inherited and renovated the building in 1875. In 1953, an additional floor was converted into a cultural center.

2) The Hungarian Coat of Arms of the Hofburg – The oldest Hungarian coat of arms in Vienna, originated in 1536, can be found on the walls of the Hofburg. It consists of an eagle with the shield of Árpád on its breast.

3) Old University. (Dr. Ignaz Seipel Pl.) – from 1453. Hungarian names appear in the register of the Alma Mater Rudolphina. In the Register of the Hungarian Nation (Liber Nationis Hungariae, 1453-1629), out of its former students, 74% were Hungarians, including such notables as Tamás Bakócz, Batthyány, Garai, Majláth, Nádasdy, Pálffy, Vitéz, Wesselényi, etc.

4) Pazmaneum. (14 Boltzmanngasse) – The Hungarian Roman Catholic Seminary moved into the building in 1901 from their former endowment institution. On the façade of the building, there is an inscription: “Petrus S.R.E.Card. Pazmany Aepp. Stig. Fund. Anno MDCXXIII.” (Cardinal Péter Pázmány Established the Institution in 1623).

5) Statue of the Holy Trinity – It was built in 1687-1693. The Hungarian coat of arms along with the Austrian Imperial Crown is found on the statue.

6) Esterházy Mansion. (4 Wallnerstrasse) – Palatine Pál (Paul) Esterházy built the mansion in 1695. It was remodeled in the 18th and 19th centuries. The inscription on the façade is: “Soli Deo Gloria. Domus Haec A.S. Leopoldo Marchione Austria olim Habitata et Successu Temporis ad Nobilem Familiam Esteras Devolte.” According to legend, the hunting lodge of Count Lipót (Leopold) stood on this same plot.

7) The Hungarian King Hotel (6 Schullerstrasse) – In the 17th century there was a sign on the house, which read: König von Ungarn (King of Hungary). The house became a Hotel in the 19th century, and the original sign was kept. Hungarian noblemen used to stay in the Hotel and many rooms are named after noble families.

8) Hungarian Chancery (4-6 Bankgasse) – The Hungarian Treasury bought the building from the Windischgrätz and Strattmann families in 1746. There is a tablet on the house with the inscription: “DICUNDIS ET FACI UNDIS HUNGARIE REBUS MAGNQUE REGIS SIGILLO SACRAE QUAE MODERNAM INDUERE FORMAM”. Presently it is the property of the Hungarian Embassy.

9) Theresianum. (15 Favorittenstrasse) – Jesuit priests taught in the building between 1746 and 1773. In the first part of the 19th century, Premonstrian priests taught here and, after 1849, it became a public school. Empress Maria Theresa (1740-1780), established a scholarship for 10 Hungarian youths of noble families. The school usually had 4 -5 Hungarian students every year, including famous men, such as: György (George) Festetich, Count Ferenc (Francis) Széchenyi and Tivadar Puskás.

10) Trautson Palace (Palais Trautson, 7 Museumstrasse) – It was the palace of the Hungarian Royal Bodyguards from 1760. The Transylvanian Estates bought the building in 1783. The following year, they combined it with the Hungarian Chancery located in the adjacent building. After the defeat of the War of Independence of 1848-1849, the Austrian Government assumed control and converted it into an office building. Between 1853 and 1875, the Council of the Austrian Empire used the palace. After the Habsburg Empire collapsed, the building became the property of the Hungarian Embassy.

11) Birthplace of István (Stephen) Széchenyi (6 Lovelstrasse) – Count Ferenc (Francis) Széchenyi rented the place in 1788. Two of his children, Zsófia and István, were born there. The original building was demolished and Prince Montenuovo built a new palace on the same plot.

12) Döbling Monument – In the park of the old Mental Institution, there is a monument with an inscription: “Count István (Stephen) Széchenyi, the greatest Hungarian, lived here from September 7, 1848 until April 8, 1860”. Later, another tablet with the sentence: “Your ideas are living 1960”, was placed on the monument.

13) Schönbrunn Palace – The decorative gate of the park and the fountain system was made according to the plan of Hungarian architect Farkas Kempelen.

14) Monument of Maria Theresa (Maria Theresien Platz) – It was erected between 1874 and 1887. The monument is 20-m high, portraying statues of the Hungarian generals: Count András (Andrew) Hadik and Count Ferenc (Francis) Nádasdy. – B: 1020, 1031, T: 7663. → Most of the persons in the article have their own entry.

Vienna Peace Treaty – Signed on 23 June 1606, between Prince István (Stephen) Bocskai, and Archduke Matthias. The treaty granted all constitutional and religious rights and privileges to the Hungarians in both Transylvania and Royal Hungary, including Calvinists and Lutherans. The accord also recognized Bocskai as the Prince of Transylvania, and guaranteed the right of Transylvanians to elect their own independent princes in the future. It established that the Holy Crown of Hungary would be brought to Hungary; the Jesuits could not possess estates in Hungary; the state officials would be Hungarians, and the unconstitutional orders by the kings should be rescinded. The Treaty became a fundamental text regarding Hungarian political liberty and would be referenced in the future conflicts of the seventeenth century. – B: 1031, T: 7103. → Freedom Fight of Bocskai, Prince István; Hungary, History of.

Viennese Codex (also called Révai Codex) – Paper Codex of oblong quartoform, written by three contemporary hands. The names of its copiers and the year of its preparation are not known, though it could be of the 15th century, judging from the nature of its writing; and, because it must have been prepared contemporaneously with the precisely dated Munich Codex, it may be regarded as dating from the same age, from 1466. It is a much-valued linguistic record. Its content is made up of the following books of the Old Testament: Ruth, Esther, Joshua, Daniel, Hosea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Jonah, Micah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi. It also contains a fragment of the last translation of the so-called Franciscans' Bible, which was compiled around 1450. It is most probably a copy, similarly to the Munich and Apor Codices. Already in the 1720s, it was held in the Imperial Court Library of Vienna; then, in 1932, it was moved to the National Széchényi Library in Budapest. The Codex was named after the place of its discovery. – B: 1078, 1138, 1150, 1031, T: 7456.→Apor Codex; Munich Codex; Tatros Bible; Hussite Bible; Bible in Hungarian; Codex Literature.

Viennese Legion – A troop consisting mainly of students from universities who, after the defeat of the Viennese Revolution of 1848, escaped to Hungary. They fought to the end of the Hungarian War of Independence under General József Bem in the Transylvanian army. Their slogan was: "Hungary's freedom is Austria's freedom". Their original number of 100 was reduced to one-third. – B: 0942, 1020, T: 7668.→Viennese Uprising; Bem, József.

Viennese Uprising in 1848 – On 6 October 1848, the Upper Austrian artillerists, who refused to go into combat against the Hungarian Freedom Fighters, sparked the Vienna Uprising. On the anniversary of this event, General Haynau ordered the execution of thirteen Hungarian generals at Arad, on 6 October 1849. – B: 1020, T: 7668.→Viennese Legion; Arad, Martyrs of.

Victorisz Codex – A 16th century songbook manuscript. Its 145 folios contain a mixture of 45 sacred and secular, Hungarian and foreign language songs, as well as dances and instrumental compositions. It is presumed that the Codex have been compiled in Northern Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia). Earlier research placed it in the collection of Prince Pál (Paul) Esterházy. However, according to more recent research, it is plausible that it found its way to Vienna from the library of the Victorisz family. Since 1903, it has been housed in the manuscript archives of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. – B: 1136, T: 7617.→Codex Literature.

Vig, Rudolf (Bogács, 25 June 1929 - Esztergom, 10 March 1983) – Researcher of folk music and chorus master. He attended the great Zoltán Kodály's lectures on folk music between 1943 and 1948, and thereafter on a scholarship, he pursued studies on folk music and choir direction at the Conservatory of Music of Moscow from 1949 to 1954. Later, he worked as the choirmaster of the State Folk Ensemble (Állami Népi Együttes) (1954-1958). He was an Associate of the Folk Music Research Group of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences from 1958 to 1980 and, until his death he acted as a scientific scholar of the Music Collection of the Gorky Library. On Kodály's urging and with his assistance, he studied the folk music of India for several months on two separate occasions; the center of his research work was the study of Gypsy folk music. His published works include Songs of Peoples (Népek dalai) (1948); Gypsy Folk Songs from the Collection of Béla Bartók and Zoltán Kodály (Cigány népdalok Bartók Béla és Kodály Zoltán gyűjtéséből)(1974), and Gypsy Folk Songs of Hungary, vols. i,ii (Magyarországi cigány népdalok, I-II) (1976). – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Bartók Béla; Kodály, Zoltán.

Vígh, Tamás (Thomas) (Csillaghegy, 28 February 1926 - Budapest, 18 September 2010)

– Sculptor and medallion artist. He studied under Béni (Ben) Ferenczy at the Academy of Fine Arts in Budapest (1946-1951). His early works show Ferenczy's influence, which can be seen in his later works as well. In the mid 1950s, Vigh developed his own style, which was concerned with the essence of things, and followed a logical and organic path. His familiarity with the rolled sheet metals, such as copper, aluminum etc, played an important role in his work, as he worked these metals and molded them into sculptures and medallions. The first work in this new style was his memorial plaque of the writer Gyula Krúdy in Budapest (1958). It embodies the most characteristics of Vigh's larger, later works. Although Vigh consciously avoided the expression of emotion, his monumental works are full of human content. Some of his more exceptional works are Sowers (Magvetők) (1964, Debrecen); Horn Players (Kürtösök) (1964–1967, Budapest); People of the Alföld (Az Alföld népe) (1967, Budapest); Town Founder (Városlapító) (1980, Esztergom), and his memorial to Attila József (1991, Pécs). He also made a number of portrait busts, e.g. copies of the bust of the poet Sándor Petőfi (Budapest, Margaret Island) were erected in La Paz, Bolivia (ca. 1973), and the German Democratic Republic (Weimar, 1976). His other public place works include József Katona (Kecskemét); Béla Bartók (Békéscsaba); János Pilinszky (Székesfehérvár), and Tree of Life (Életfa) (Visegrád). Vigh is also credited with reviving medallion art in Hungary. He had a number of solo and group exhibitions in Hungary. From 1992, he had been a Member of the Hungarian Art Academy. His works are treasured by many public collections, e.g. the Hungarian National Gallery, Budapest, the Janus Pannonius Museum, Pécs, the Gallery of Budapest, and the Bulgarian National Museum, etc. He was a recipient of a number of prizes, including the Merited and Outstanding Artist titles, the Kossuth Prize, the Táncsics Prize, the Prima Prize, and the Jenő Kerényi Prize. – B: 1031, 2098, T: 7103. → Most of the persons in the article have their own entry.

Vikár, Béla (Hetes, 1 April 1859 - Dunavecse, 22 September 1945) – Ethnographer and professional translator. He studied Linguistics and Literature at the University of Budapest (1874-1884). In 1889, he went on a study trip to Finland and, in the same year, he started working in the shorthand office of the Parliament of Hungary, later on becoming its head. He retired in 1921. He founded the Lafontaine Literary Circle, and was its first President. He became a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1911. His work, entitled The Folk Poetry of Somogy County (Somogy megye népköltése), first taken down in shorthand notes in 1890, was published in 1905. He translated a version of the Finnish epic, Kalevala, published in 1909. It belongs to the finest professional translations in Hungarian literature. He also translated all the fables of Lafontaine, and did translations from German, English, Georgian (Grusian), Estonian and Norwegian. He recorded the folk tunes authentically; for the first time in Europe, he collected folk music material by using phonograph equipment. His cylinders, showing a rich variety of melodic types, demonstrated at the 1900 Paris World Fair, earned international recognition for Hungarian folk-music research. He laid the foundation for that modern method which led to the development of the scientific research of Hungarian folk music, causing a world sensation. His phonograph recordings of tunes were written down in notes by Béla Bartók. His phonograph cylinders are held in the Ethnographical Museum in Budapest. A mixed choir in Kaposvár and a Music School in Barcs bear his name. – B: 1134, 0883, T: 7456. → Folk Song; Folk Music; Sebestyén, Gyula (2); Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán.

Vikidál, Gyula (Julius) (Budapest, 25 January 1948 - ) – Singer. In 1965 he began his career as a rock vocalist in groups such as Iris, Pannonia, Pop, Rekorder and Gemler. In 1974 he joined the P. Mobil heavy rock group, reaching his fame as a singer. From 1979 to 1981, he was a member of the Hungarian super group, Dinamit. Between 1983 and 1986, he was in the P. Box Groups. In 1983, he had a great success as Koppány in the rock musical Stephen the King (István a Király). Thereafter, he has been a rock opera singer with leading parts in Jesus Christ Super Star, Attila, Anna Karenina, and other plays. He still sings rock but in smaller contexts, in H.M.V. and Boxer. He left Boxer in 2008 and joined a new band: Mobil Mania. Since 2010 he has given only guest performances. Vikidál is regarded as one of the best rock singers. He is also a recording artist, as in Dinamit (1980); Stone on Stone (Kő kövön) (1983); Omen (1985); Best of the Best (Színe-java) (1999); Passed Time (Múlt idő) (2003), and This is the Mania (Ez a mánia) (2008). His stage roles include Koppány in Szörényi-Bródy's Stephen the King (István a király), and Joseph Bouquet in A. L. Webber's The Phantom of the Opera (Az Operaház fantomja). There are nine feature and TV-films to his credit, including Jesus Christ Super Star (Jézus Krisztus Szupersztár) (1983), and The Golden Age of Transylvania, vols. i,ii, (Erdély aranykora, I-II) (TV, 1989). His distinctions include the Emerton Prize (1987, 1991), the Ferenc Liszt Prize (1998), and the Officer's Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1993). – B: 1031, 2103, T: 7103, 7456.

Viking – Proto - Hungarian Connections (Norseman/Norman-Proto-Hungarian connections) – The Vikings' (Norsemen) trade routes passed through Kiev and the Donyec Basin to reach the Black Sea. Peddling their goods along the way, they visited the equestrian tribes of the Steppes. The iron industry around Kiev played a major part in the Viking/Proto-Hungarian connection. Their weapons even reached into Central Asia. The traditions of the Hungarian chronicles, together with the people of Chorezm/Khorezm, and the "Legend of Csaba" substantiate the similarities of the Viking and Hungarian weaponry style in the time of Ügek (c. 796 – 820 AD). The finish of the sling ends is almost identical as shown by the find of Nagyősz, Hungary, and its counterpart found in Birka, Sweden.

The Vikings probably took the "tendril and palmetto" type ornamental style to England, as is confirmed by an example found on a well curb at Hook-Norton. A Viking scepter, among the artifacts of the well-known Sutton-Hoo Viking boat grave in Suffolk – excavated in 1939 – exhibits the same influence. As experts pinpointed, perhaps the striking similarities in folk traditions are the strongest between the Viking and Hungarian customs. B. Blindheim, the curator of the Viking Museum of Oslo, noted the similarity between funeral traditions. In 1950, he discovered a Proto-Hungarian-type skeleton buried in a boat at the Viking settlement of Kaupang.

By regularly criss-crossing the Hungarian settlements of the Donyec Basin, the Viking (Norseman) ship flags were evidently styled on the art of animal motifs and adapted to Scandinavian needs. The Scandinavian Jellinge- and Ringerike-style carry on the Hungarian art of animal motifs. – B: 1020, T: 3240.

Vikol, János (John) (Karcag, 8 September 1911 - Geneva, 27 October 1970) – Physician, politician. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Debrecen in 1935. From 1935 to 1945, he was a professional soldier, and an outstanding swordsman. From 1943, he served in a unit of the Soviet army. From 1945 to 1955, he was Secretary of State at the Ministry of Public Welfare, later, that of the Ministry of Health. From 1955 to 1958, he was a section-head there. In 1958-1959, he was Director of the St. István (Stephen) Hospital, Budapest. From 1958 to 1966, he served as Head of the National Oncological Institute. Between 1966 and 1970, he was in charge of the section on Cancer Prevention of the World Health Organization – WHO. He dealt with the organization of public health and endoscopic investigations. His works include Twenty-Five Years in the Service of the Fight against Cancer (Huszonöt év a rákellenes küzdelem szolgálatában), co-authored (1966) and Oncological Notes (Onkológiai jegyzet), with co-authors (1966). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Világos, Surrender at – The War of Independence against Austria (1848-1849) ended formally on 13 August 1849, at Világos (now Siria, Romania). The outcome of the War was decided after the Russians, with an overwhelming force, led by Prince Ivan Federovich Paszkievics intervened. The deciding point came at the Battle of Temesvár (now Timișoara, Romania), lost to the Austrians, led by General Baron Julius von Haynau. General Artur Görgey received an offer from Russian General Churloff on 21 July, promising the Hungarian officers and men total freedom. The Hungarian Army surrendered to Russian General Rüdiger on 13 August 1849. At Bohus Castle, they signed the document of surrender. By surrendering to the Russians, General Artúr Görgey tried to show that Hungary had not been defeated by Austria. After the surrender, the Austrians made reprisals against Hungary. They sentenced hundreds of soldiers and civilians to death, and imprisoned even more. Prisoners were conscripted into the Austrian Army. On 6 October 1849 at Arad (now in Romania), the Austrians executed twelve Hungarian generals and one colonel. The same day they executed Count Lajos (Louis) Batthyány, the first Hungarian Prime Minister. Following that, Haynau became the Regent of Hungary and began bloody reprisals against Hungary. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7103.→Temesvár, Battle of; Arad, Martyrs of; Haynau, Baron Julius Freiherr von.

Village Demolition→Systematization in Romania.

Villány Range (Siklós Range) – A low-altitude fault-block mountain made up Triassic and Jurassic sediments, chiefly limestone, in the southern section of County Baranya, some 35 km south of the Mecsek Mountain. The township of Siklós is positioned at its southern foot. Its highest point in southern Transdanubia is Harsány Mount or Szársomlyó (442 m), at its easternmost end; in the west there is an unnamed high point (408 m). Near Máriagyűd there are marble quarries. The area is famous for its wine. – B: 1068, 7456, T: 7456.

Vilmon, Gyula (Julius) (Alsóhámor, now Dolné Hámre, Slovakia, 31 March 1897 - Budapest, 6 April 1966) – Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1927. From 1932 he was a municipal medical officer in the town of Salgótarján; from 1939 in County Nyitra (now Nitra, Slovakia), and from 1941, in County Bács-Bodrog. From 1943 he worked at the Hospital Section of the Ministry of the Interior; from 1945 he was Section Head in the Ministry of Public Health; from 1951, Section Head of the Ministry of Health, where he was deputizing for the Minister of Health from 1956 on. From 1960 he was professor at the Medical School of the University of Szeged. He dealt mainly with public health, epidemics and settlement-health. His works include Textbook of Hygiene (A higiéné tankönyve) (1960) and Settlement Health (Településegészségügy), notes (1962). He was awarded the József Fodor and Pál Bugát Memorial Medals, and he also received the Kossuth Prize in 1948. – B: 1730, 0883, T: 7456.→Fodor, József.

Vilt, Tibor (Budapest, 15 December 1905 - Budapest, 13 August 1983) – Sculptor. His wife was Erzsébet (Elizabeth) Schaár. From 1922 to 1926, he studied at the Academy of Industrial Arts and then at the Academy of Applied Arts. His first important artistic creation was a Self-portrait (1926). In the following year, he was invited to become a member of the New Artists' Association and, with two of his works he also appeared at the exhibition organized by the New Society of Artists. In 1929, together with János (John) Kmetty, he had a joint show in the Tamás Gallery, mainly exhibiting portraits. During 1928 and 1930, he studied in Rome with the scholarship provided by Lajos (Louis) Ernst. Until the middle of the 1930s, in addition to the effect of the Egyptian and Mediaeval sculptural art, he was influenced by Cubism and Classicism. From the end of the 1930s, in his figurines and reliefs, Vilt was seeking the current expression of movement and change. In his works, he primarily used bronze, metals and glass. Typical of his works is the series Figure with Chair (Figura székkal) (1945-1954). From the 1960s, the expression of his mediums became simplified. Numerous works of his, seen in public places, are filled with tension and dynamism. His characteristic statuettes include After the War (Háború után) (bronze, 1945); Indifference (Közöny) (bronze, 1952) and Three Figures (Három figura) (glass). At the 1968 Biennale of Venice, two of his works appeared: Dorothy (an aluminum composition of 3.2 m), and Daydreamer (Merengő) (bronze, 1.7 m high). In 1973, he was a prizewinner at the International Biennale of Small Sculpture of Budapest. His exhibitions include the Ernst Museum (1934); Art Galleries of Debrecen and Budapest (1970); Székesfehérvár (1965); Petőfi Literary Museum, Tihany (1974); in other countries: Paris (1966) and Vienna (1967). He was the winner of the Munkácsy Prize (1965), the Kossuth Prize (1980), and received the titles of Merited Artist (1970), and outstanding Artist (1978). – T: 0883, T: 7456.→Schaár, Erzsébet; Kmetty, János.

Vincze, Zsigmond (Sigismund) (Zombor, now Sombor, Serbia, 1 July 1874 - Budapest, 30 June 1935) – Conductor and composer. He studied at the School of the Music Lovers' Society of Budapest, and began his career in Debrecen; he took part in concerts as a piano accompanist for singers. From 1894, he was conductor of the Opera House Orchestra, Budapest. From 1898, he was conductor of János (John) Komjátyy's Group and, from 1901, of Ignác (Ignatius) Krecsányi's group. From 1903 until his death, he was a member of the King Theater (Király Színház), Budapest, except for the contract with the Szeged Orchestra between, 1928 and 1930. Among others, he conducted the world premiere of J. Huszka's work, Gül Baba, and he conducted his successful operettas also in Dresden and Vienna. He conducted the premiere of his only opera The Stronger (Az erősebb), it being an attempt at presenting a Hungarian folk-play opera at the Opera House, Budapest. Many of his songs appeared in Metropolitan Cabarets. The little operettas composed together with Gyula (Julius) Kővári were presented at the Teréz Ring Boulevard Stage (Teréz-körúti Színpad). He orchestrated Pongrác Kacsóh's musical comedy John the Brave (János vitéz). His works include Kissing is Forbidden (Tilos a csók) (1909); Gypsy Countess (Cigánygrófné) (1920), and The Golden-haired Lamb (Az aranyszőrű bárány) (1929). – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Vinland-maps – At present, five Vinland-maps are known: (1) The Skalholt-map, prepared in 1570 by the Icelander, Sigurd Stephanson. This was lost but a copy, drawn by Bishop Tord Turlaksson in 1670 is extant, and is held by the Copenhagen Library. (2) A sketch by Bishop Hans Poulsen from 1605, now kept in the Nautical Map-Library of Copenhagen. (3) The controversial Yale-map, according to some a forgery, now held by Yale University, USA. (4) The Vinland-map of Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia) is in the possession of Géza Szepessy, Museum director of Várpalota, which is known in international professional circles by the name of Hungarian Vinland Map; it must be the one known by millions all over the world. (5) The Vinland-map named after Mátyás (Matthew) Bél, whose original has been deposited in the town of Malmö, Sweden.

The Vinland-map of Nagyszombat is an early medieval work, which has been the object of a number of corrections and modifications: a copy was prepared in 1599 in Nagyszombat. It was given the serial number 56, which suggests that at least that many maps have been prepared and jointly commissioned. Its paper material was made in Amsterdam, in the 16th century. The short text of the map is derived from the 9th century and, according to Kurt Bergsland, it is a mixture of Old-German and English. According to K.B. Wiklund and Van Loey, it is a mixture of Old Anglo-Saxon and a northern sailor's jargon. The text is almost entirely of the nature of continuous writing, using Hungarian runic characters; they might have departed from their original form somewhat as a result of the copying, or possibly repeated copying. These runic characters were in use in Hungary at the end of the 16th century, writing from left to right. Some of the inscriptions are: Tengar = Tenger, and Hoyer-weg = the route of the Hoy (islanders). The written text is a valuable relic of Hungarian runic script. According to some it suggests old Norman-Hungarian connections. The map (with three other maps) was bought in 1955 by Géza Szepessy, at that time Head of the Country Museum of the Dorog Coal-basin; it was bought from a teacher from Esztergom, who found it in 1945, while cleaning out a building formerly used as German command headquarters.

The Vinland-map named after Mátyás (Matthew) Bél is 395x250 mm in size; its paper material is of uneven thickness, whitish, and slightly greyish-blue. István (Stephen) Kovárczy, in an extensive study, reported on the results of his research on this map. Engineer Arnulf Hongoslo, head of the experimental section of Tumba Bruk AB, paper and banknote paper works, a recognized specialist on papers, is of the opinion that the paper of the map was made in Hungary in 1698 (+ or – 4 yrs), using a procedure employed Europe-wide, by the standards of the time an excellent quality that could then be produced only in Hungary and Sweden. It could possibly have been made in the paper workshop of the University of Nagyszombat (Trnava). The map shows the area of the Tule (formerly Iceland) diocese, but the indication of the place names, churches, chapels and mission-stations on the map are incomplete, from which one can conclude that the map in its entirety has not been finished. It may have been intended as a map-supplement to a codex, but was not completed for some reason. Of its text-space, lines 1-3 have Latin letters and text, and lines 4-11 have runic script and are in the Hungarian language. Its unknown author was skilled in map-drawing and writing texts in Latin characters, but was not experienced in using the runic script; those characters were written with great care and with few mistakes. The map received its name from the quotation bearing the name of Mátyás Bél.

On the other side of the map sheet some notes may be seen in cursive writing from two different hands, in the Hungarian language. One of the notes is a medical collection of five prescriptions. According to the unanimous opinion of specialists, the preparations suggest the therapeutical age of the 1700s. Another note is of agricultural nature, listing the quantity of grain already sown. These notes indicate that the map was in Hungarian hands for centuries. The agricultural note may also indicate the owner of the map, possibly either the Abbey of Tihany, or was in the possession of one of the Széchenyis of Balatonfüred. During the battles around Lake Balaton in World War II, somebody must have rescued it and later on (perhaps Kovárczy), sent it to Sweden.

In connection with the Vinland-maps, a number of problems have arisen, which are not yet explained fully; however, their scientific elucidation is being worked on currently, including the Hungarian issues – B: 1174, 1031, 1020, T: 7456.→Bél, Mátyás; Hungarian Runic Script.

Viola, József (Joseph) (Marosvásárhely, now Targu Mureș, Romania, 15 March 1770 - Moldova, 1849) – Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Pest in 1796. He became a medical officer in the army, and served in the wars against the Turks. In 1801, he practiced in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania); from 1806 in Bukovina. From 1808 to 1834 he was Court Medical Officer for the Romanian Prince Sturdza, Senior Physician of Moldova, and Supervisor of the Military Hospitals of Moldova. He became a rich landowner in Moldova, Romania. He was corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1838). His works include Diatetik für einen Regenten (1833), and The Hungarian Folk-poetry of Moldva (A moldvai magyar népköltés) (1840). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Viola, Mihály (Michael) (Ács, 22 June 1922 - Budapest, 25 March 1981) – Actor. He graduated from the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, in 1944. From 1945 to 1948 he performed at the Artist Theater (Művész Színház), Budapest; from 1948 he played at the Little Theater (Kis Színház), Budapest, and a number of other country and metropolitan theaters. From 1954 until his death, he was a member of the Merry Stage (Vidám Színpad). He was an elegant actor of a pleasant sense of humor, always caricaturing with moderation. His roles include Csongor in M. Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde; Oberon in Shakespeare's Midsummer-Night's Dream (Szentiványéji álom); Kossuth in Gy. Illyés's Torch Flame (Fáklyaláng), and Frank in G.B. Shaw's Mrs. Warren's Profession (Warrenné mestersége). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Violin – The most widespread and perfect among the stringed and bowed instruments. Its first depiction can be seen on a 12th century sculpture in the Cathedral of Pécs. According to the conclusion of the renowned music historian A.W. Ambrose, its medieval format was brought to Europe in 1217 by the Crusaders of Hungarian King András II (Andrew, 1205-1235). Its earlier name was fiddle. Medieval source material often mentions it: Sebestyén Tinódi in 1553, Pál Eszterházy in 1658. A 17th century German political leaflet also mentions it. Among the court musicians of Mihály (Michael) Apafi, Gábor Bethlen and Imre Thököly, there are references made to fiddlers. Reigning Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II (1705-1711) listened to fiddler's music played in front of his tent. It appeared in its present form in Italy at the end of the 16th century. The school of Cremona left it more or less in its original form. Its masters, Stradivarius and Guarnerius, however, refined the instrument to its highest perfection in the 18th century. The 17/18th century masters included outstanding virtuoso Niccolò Paganini; in modern times among the Hungarians violin virtuosos were Jenő (Eugene) Hubay, Ede (Eduard) Reményi, Ede (Edward) Zathureczky and József (Joseph) Szigeti. – B: 0942, 1197, T: 7684.→Most of the persons in the article have their own entry.

Virág, Benedek (Benedict) (Dióskál, 1754 - Buda, 30 January 1830) – Poet, writer and literary translator. He was educated in Nagybjom, Nagykanizsa and Pest. In 1775 he entered the Pauline Monastic Order, and studied Theology and Philosophy in Pécs and Pest. From 1782 he taught at the secondary school in Székesfehérvár, where he remained, even after the dissolution of the Order in 1785. In 1794 he entered the household of the noble Batthyány family as a tutor. Later, he moved to the Tabán district of Buda, where he lived for 30 years on a meager pension and on funds anonymously provided by friends. He was one of the greatest masters of Hungarian ode literature. He began to write poetry in 1789, his ideals being the works of the antique masters, especially those of Horace. In his patriotic and philosophical odes, satires and epigrams, he also gave voice to the ideals of his times: the Age of Enlightenment. As a translator, he translated into Hungarian the complete works of Horace. In the last third of his life, he dedicated all his energies to his great historical opus, Hungarian Centuries (Magyar Századok). The work, written in accordance with the patriotic spirit of the times, summarizes the history of the Hungarians up to the Battle of Mohács in 1526. His statue, the work of the sculptor István (Stephen) Ferenczy, was the first statue of a poet to be erected entirely from public donations. – B: 1150, 0883, T: 7617.→Ferenczy, István.

Virágh, András (Andrew) (Budapest, 24 February 1960 - ) – Organist and conductor. He commenced his musical studies at the Béla Bartók Conservatory of Music in Budapest. He graduated from Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, where his teachers included Endre (Andrew) Virágh and Ferenc (Francis) Gergely, and graduated in 1983. In 1985 he was on a scholarship at the Royal Conservatory in Liège, Belgium, and was a student of Jean Ferrad. Since 1983, he has been the organist of the Inner-City Parish-Church; since 1999 its conductor and music director; since 1998 he has been choir-director of the Kapisztrán Choir of the Buda Franciscan Church, Budapest. On the 100th anniversary of the death of Ferenc Liszt in 1986, he performed all the Master's organ works; in 1990 he played all the major organ works of Cesar Franck, in honor of the great French composer. He gives regular performances, both in Hungary and abroad. His repertory includes organ works by Bach, Franck, Liszt, Reger, Mendelssohn and Brahms, as well as contemporary Hungarian and French organ works. He has regular performances at St. István's (St. Stephen) Basilica in Budapest, and is the regular organist of the National Philharmonic Orchestra. He teaches organ at the Church Music Department of the Dániel Berzsenyi College in Szombathely, where he is an assistant professor. András Virágh has given performances in Italy, Austria, Germany, France, Switzerland, Belgium, Denmark, France, Bulgaria and Slovakia. His recordings include all of Liszt's organ works (1996), Kodály's entire organ works (1997), and C. Frank's entire organ works (1999). At the Second International Ferenc Liszt Organ Competition in 1983, he was awarded the special prize of the Cziffra Foundation for the most outstanding interpretation of Liszt's works. In 2001, from the Hungarian State, he received the Ferenc Liszt Prize, and from the City of Budapest the Pro Civibus Prize. – B: 0874, 1936, T: 7103.→Virágh, Endre; Gergely, Ferenc; Liszt, Ferenc.

Virágh, Endre (Andrew) (Vasvár, 23 March 1923 - ) – Organist and conductor. He obtained his Ecclesiastical Conductor's qualification from the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest in 1950. His teachers were Lajos (Louis) Bárdos, Zoltán Kodály, Miklós (Nicholas) Forrai, Zoltán Vásárhelyi, Zoltán Gárdonyi, Artur Harmat and Olivér Nagy. As a student of Sebestyén (Sebastian) Pécsi, he received his diploma in organ playing in 1955. He furthered his studies under Jiri Reinberger in Prague, Dupré Marcel in Paris, and Germani Fernando in Rome. From 1955 to 1986 he taught at the College of Music in Miskolc and, from 1987 to 1986, at the College of Music of Budapest. From 1973 to 1979 he conducted music courses at the festival of Citta di Castello and, from 1980 on, at the Assisi Festival. All over Europe, he gives concerts regularly. He is conductor of the Inner City Parish Church of Budapest. – B: 1679, T: 7456.→Bárdos, Lajos; Kodály, Zoltán; Gárdonyi, Zoltán; Harmat, Artúr; Pécsi, Sebestyén.

Virginia Codex – A manuscript written before 1529. It contains monastic rules, as well as notable events from the life of St. Francis of Assisi. The author is an unknown Franciscan monk who compiled it for the use of the Clarissa nuns. It is a 150-page Hungarian language relic discovered in 1844 at the Rectory in Tiszalök. Countess Virginia Desewffy forwarded it to the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, whence is its name. It is in the Library of the Academy of Sciences. – B: 1150, 1078, T: 7617.→Codex Literature.

Virgin Mary Lamentation→Maria's Lamentation, Old Hungarian.

Visegrád (In Slavic: "High Castle"; in German: "Plintenburg") – Town in the Danube Bend, north of Budapest, a popular summer resort, on the right banks of the Danube, situated between Esztergom and Vác, 108 m above sea level. The settlement Gizellatelep is joined to it and opposite, across the Danube is Nagymaros. South of it is Szentgyörgypuszta. The town is at the northern foot of the Visegrád Range, composed of young volcanic rocks and tuffs, mainly andesite. Outside the town, there are quarries. There are many summer villas, a forestry office, and a sanatorium. Its population was 1508 in 1901; 1720 in 1930; 1667 in 1941; and 1654 in 2002. Steeply facing the Danube, there is the Royal Castle-fort at 328 m height, from the times of the Árpád dynasty. King András I (Andrew, 1046-1060) founded a monastery for Greek monks, and it was this monastery into which King László I (St.Ladsislas, 1077-1095) locked King Salamon in 1082. King Béla IV (1235-1270) built the castle fortress after the Tartar-Mongol invasion and devastation of 1241-1242. The golden age of Visegrád was in the 14th and 15th centuries. King Károly (Charles Robert, 1307-1342) made it the Royal Seat, and had a splendid palace built here, in which he received foreign rulers and dignitaries, and held the famous Congress of Visegrád in 1335. The lords of the realm held King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxembourg, 1387-1437) captive in this fort, and King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490) locked up the rebellious Archbishop János (John) Vitéz here. Mátyás had a splendid castle built at the foot of the cliff, surrounded by the palaces of the noblemen. In 1529, Ottoman Turks occupied the castle and it was left in destruction and decay. It was freed from Turkish rule in 1684. In 1702, even the remnants and ruins of the palaces and castles of Károly Robert and King Mátyás I were blown up by the Habsburg ruler; only a small section of the upper castle, the Salamon-tower, and the connecting bastions were left intact. The excavations, begun in 1940, unearthed a part of the 14th century palace and castle chapel. In the deciduous state forests of the surroundings can be found the famous auroch (European wild ox). – B: 1068, 1582, 1816, 7456, T: 7456.→Visegrád Group.

Visegrád Group – Three Central European countries: Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Poland formed it on 15 February 1991 at the historical castle town of Visegrád, Hungary. The three countries made an agreement for co-operation and strengthening Central European identity. Slovakia became member after the dissolution of Czechoslovakia in 1993. All four members of the Visegrád Group became part of the European Union on 1 May 2004. The Visegrad Group is the seventh largest economy in Europe and the 13th in the world. The name of the Group is derived from a meeting of the Bohemian, Polish and Hungarian rulers in Visegrád in 1335. Charles I (Károly) of Hungary, Casimir III, of Poland and John of Luxembourg of Bohemia agreed to create new commercial routes to obtain easier access to other European markets. – B: 1011, 1031, T: 7103.

Viski, András (Andrew) (Visky) (Marosvásárhely, now Târgu Mureș, Romania, 13 April, 1957 - ) – Writer, poet and dramaturge. He was the seventh child born into the family of a minister of the Reformed Church. His parents were deported to one of Romania's Gulag camps, and the seven children lived in a state orphanage; they were reunited with their father only after eight years of separation. Viski studied at the Technical University of Temesvár (now Timișoara, Romania), and graduated in 1982. He was employed as a designing engineer at the engineering works "Unio" in Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, Romania) and at the "IPA" works of Marosvásárhely. From 1990 he was a dramaturge for the Hungarian State Theatre of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), and from 1991 to 1999, he was a senior lecturer at the Art College in Marosvásárhely. From 1991 to 1994 he was an editor of the journal, Our Age, (Korunk); from 1994 he was Senior Editor of Koinónia Publisher. From 1994 to 1996, he was a serial-editor of the Ariadne Books. Viski spent 2009-2010 as a guest professor at Calvin College, Grand Rapids, MI., USA. He is a member of a number of literary societies, including the Hungarian Writers Association of Budapest, and a member of the Board of Trustees of the Soros Foundation of Romania. He wrote a radio play, Vércseh, and the libretto for an opera, Parafarm. He was awarded the Soros Scholarship in 1995. His works include Landing (Partraszállás) poems (1984); Snowy Owl (Hóbagoly) poems (1992); Hamlet Departs (Hamlet elindul) theatrical writings (1996), and Morning Tranquility (Reggeli csendesség) essays, 1996. His stage managerial works include Shakespeare's As You Like It (Ahogy tetszik), Twelfth Night (Vízkereszt); E. Ionesco's The Bald Soprano (A kopasz énekesnő); The Chairs (A székek), and M. A. Bulgakov's The Cabal of Hypocrites (Képmutatók cselészövése). His works appeared in Romanian, English, Bulgarian, Italian, French and Slovenian translations. His plays are on the stage in Hungarian, Romanian, Serbian and American theatres. He is the recipient of a number of distinctions, including the Essay Prize, Marosvásárhely (1991), the Poesis Prize, Szatmárnémeti (1995), the Soros Prize (1999), the S. Quasimodo Prize (2001), the Gáspár Károli Prize, the Ernő Szép Prize (2002), the Artisjus-János Arany Foundation Prize (2004), and the Attila József Prize (2009). – B: 1036, T: 7456, 7103.

Viski, János (1) (John) (Szokolya, 1891 - 1985) – Painter. His higher studies were at the Academy of Fine Arts, Budapest, where he studied under Tivadar (Theodore) Zemplény. His first exhibition dates back to 1913. He excelled in painting animals, especially horses; and not just the animals, but their movements too, which he brilliantly portrayed. Forms and colors were his main tools in animals and landscapes. His works reflect that supreme blend, achieved by a gifted artist. Featuring motion and forms as well as color effects in open-air locations. His work include Self-portrait, (Önarckép); Woman in White in Armchair (Fehérruhás nő fotelben); Hunting (Vadászat); Shepherd (Juhász); Wild Horses (Vad lovak); Horses in a Storm (Lovak viharban); Cowboy (Csikós), and Coach Ride at full Speed (Vágtató szekér). His pictures express strength, movement and impressionist characters. His paintings are displayed in several museums, galleries and show rooms, and many of them can be found in private collections in Brazil, Uruguay and Argentina. In 1936, he was awarded the Grand Prix at the 1936 Salon des Beaux Arts in Paris. – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Viski, János (2) (John) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), 10 June 1906 - Budapest, 16 January 1961) – Composer. First, he wanted to become a violin virtuoso; however, he abandoned this plan, and at the age of 19, he switched to the study of composition. In 1927 he was a student of Zoltán Kodály at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. In 1941 he became a teacher at the National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede) in Budapest. In 1941 he was Director of the Music Conservatory in Kolozsvár (after northern Transylvania was returned to Hungary between 1940 and 1944). From 1942 until his death, he was Professor of Composition at the Music Academy of Budapest. Among his works are: Symphonic Suite (Szimfónikus szvit) (1937); Two Hungarian Dances (Két Magyar tánc) (1938); Enigma (1939); Concerto for Violin and Orchestra (Versenymű hegedűre és zenekarra) (1947); Concerto for Piano and Orchestra (Versenymű zongorára és zenekarra) (1953); Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra (Versenymű csellóra és zenekarra) (1955); The Stag of Irisora (Az irisorai szarvas) ballad (1957), and Choir works, Songs (Kórusművek, dalok). For his compositions, he was awarded the Greguss Memorial Medal (1942), the Erkel Prize (1954), the Merited Artist title (1955), and the Kossuth Prize (1956). – B: 0883, T: 7103.→Kodály, Zoltán; Hidas, Frigyes; Ledvai, Kamilló; Pál, Tamás; Petrovis,

Emil.

Viski, Károly (Charles) (Torda, now Tursa, Romania, 14 April 1883 - Budapest, 5 September 1945) – Ethnographer and linguist. He completed his secondary and higher studies in Torda and the Reformed College of Székelyudvarhely (now Odorheiu Secuiesc, Romania) in Transylvania; later, he obtained a Degree in Education from the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), and earned a Ph.D. in Finno-Ugrian Linguistics in 1906. From 1908, he worked as a teacher in high schools in Torda, Nagyszalonta (now Salonta, Romania), Székelyudvarhely and Budapest. For political reasons, he gave up his teaching career and, from 1919, he began working in the ethnographic section of the Hungarian National Museum in Budapest, from 1922 as a curator. In 1940, when the Second Vienna Award returned northern Transylvania to Hungary, he was appointed Professor of Ethnography at the University of Kolozsvár (now again Cluj-Napoca, Romania). From the end of World War II until his passing, he lectured at the University of Budapest. He published a number of significant studies in the field of folk art and linguistics. For a number of years (1941-1945) he was Director of the Ethnographic Institute and Head of the National Advisory Board for Public Collections. Together with István (Stephen) Györfly and Zsigmond (Sigismund) Bátky, he edited and wrote several chapters of the 4-volume collective work entitled The Ethnography of Hungarians (A magyarság néprajza). He worked extensively to acquaint other countries with Hungarian folk art. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences from 1945. His other works include The Dialect of Torda (A tordai nyelvjárás) (1906); Les hongrois de Transylvanie. L'art populaire (1920); Szekler Embroideries (Székely hímzések) (1924); Szekler Carpets (Székely szőnyegek) (1928); Hungarian Peasant Customs (1932); Hungarian Dances (1937), and Ethnic Groups, Regions (Etnikai csoportok, vidékek) (1938). He achieved a great deal in promoting Hungarian folk art in wide circles, also in other languages. – B: 0883, 1134, 1257, T: 7456.→Györfly, István (1); Bátky, Zsigmond.

Visky, Árpád (Székelyvécke, now Vețca, Romania, 8 July 1940 - Sepsiszentgyörgy, now Sfintu Gheorghe, Romania, 12 January 1986). – Actor. He graduated from the Institute of Dramatic Art at Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mureș, Romania) in 1963. In his college years, with promising talent, he played Tartuffe alternately with his teacher György (George) Kovács. Between 1963 and 1965, he was an actor at the Hungarian State Theater (Magyar Állami Színház) at Sepsiszentgyörgy; from 1968 to 1974, he was at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Marosvásárhely; from 1975 to 1983 again at the theater of Sepsiszentgyörgy. At the People's Theater (Népszínház) of Székelyudvarhely (now Odorheiu, Romania), he staged Harold Pinter's piece The Go-Between (A gondnok). He avoided the stentorian tone, but he always created tension on the stage. On 23 February 1983, the Romanian authorities arrested and imprisoned him; he was only freed on 23 August 1984, but was not allowed to appear on the stage. He had to work in a factory as an unskilled laborer. His shattered nervous system could not stand this situation for long, and he committed suicide, aged 46. His roles included Mayor in Dürrenmatt's The Visit of the Old Lady (Az öreg hölgy látogatása); Kurrah in Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde, Tibors in J. Katona's Bánk bán, and Catavencu in I. L. Caragiale's The Lost Letter (Az elveszett levél). The Culture House at Sepsiszentgyörgy was named after him, and his relief is on its wall. – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Vita, Zsigmond (Sigismund) (Nagyenyed, now Aiud, Romania, 16 June 1906 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca Romania, 1 January 1998) – Literary historian. He completed his high school studies at the Bethlen College, Nagyenyed, in 1924, where he was the president of the Literary Society under the direction of Lajos (Louis) Áprily. He received a Degree in Hungarian, Romanian and French from the University of Kolozsvár, in 1928. He studied in Paris and Grenoble for a year, was a teacher at the Bethlen College of Nagyenyed from 1928, and worked at the Bethlen Library from 1956 until his retirement in 1968. The publishing of his works was banned between 1944 and 1968. A selection from his works: Nation and Fate in Bánk bán (Nemzet és Sors a Bánk bán-ban) (1941); Tales of the Blind King (A vak király meséi) (1943); Dramatic Art of the Bethlen College in the 17th and 18th Centuries (A Bethlen kollégiumi színháztudomány a XVII és XVIII században) (1943); With Knowledge and Deed, studies (Tudománnyal és cselekedettel) (1968); Lajos Áprily, the Man and the Poet (Áprily Lajos az ember és a költő) (1972); Jókai in Transylvania (Jókai Erdélyben) (1976); The Melting Foundry of Enyed (Az enyedi kohó) (1986), and Years and Men in Enyed (Enyedi évek, enyedi emberek) (1998). – B: 0878, 1257, T: 7103.→Áprily, Lajos.

Vitális, István (Stephen) (Orosháza-Szentetornya, 14 March 1871 - Budapest, November 1947) – Geologist. He completed his high school studies in Szarvas, after which he obtained a Degree in Education from the University of Budapest, majoring in Natural Science and Geography. In 1893 he became a demonstrator under the renowned professor Lajos (Louis) Lóczy. Later, he worked as a high school teacher in Budapest and in Selmecbánya (now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia). In 1903 he was appointed assistant lecturer in the Geology Faculty of the Mining Engineering and Forestry Academy of Selmecbánya where, in 1912, he became Professor of Geology and Mineralogy. In 1920 he continued to work in this position in Sopron, to where the entire Academy moved because Selmecbánya was ceded to Slovakia (at that time part of Czechoslovakia) as a result of the Dictated Peace of the Treaty of Versailles-Trianon (1920). In Sopron, he was Professor of Geology and Stratigraphy. Later, he became Professor of Mining Engineering at the Budapest Polytechnic until his retirement in 1941. Vitális participated in the detailed geological study of the environs of Lake Balaton, the geology of the Transylvanian Basin, prospecting for natural gas and geological mapping of hydrocarbon occurrences. After the political upheavals of 1918-1920, it was to his credit that the research in coal deposits was started under newly created unpromising conditions, and the development of the coal deposits began. He wrote a large monograph on the coal deposits of present-time Hungary. In addition, his research in bauxite deposits significantly contributed to the bauxite mining in Hungary. He was a Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1920; ordinary 1943). The Hungarian Geological Society elected him an honorary member in 1942, and President in 1945. It is to his credit that he trained generations of mining engineers. – B: 0883, 1405, T: 7456.→Lóczy, Lajos; Trianon Peace Treaty.

Vitéz Codices – Its name given to a collection of manuscripts from the library of János (John) Vitéz, Bishop of Várad, Archbishop of Esztergom. Several of his codices found their way into the library of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus) (1458-1490), some of which rival in beauty of the famous Corvinas. – B: 1144, T: 7617.→Vitéz, János; Codex Literature; Corvina; Corvinus Codices.

Vitéz, György (George) (original name: György Németh) (Budapest, 1933 - ) – Physician, writer, translator of literary works. He moved to Canada in 1956, and attended Sir George Williams University and McGill University, Montreal, PQ, Canada, and earned M.A. and Ph.D. Degrees. He served as Chief Psychologist at Queen Elizabeth Hospital in Montreal, and as Assistant Professor of Psychology at Concordia University. He was Co-editor of Arkanum, an avant-garde periodical, contributed to several journals, and translated into Hungarian the poetry of William Carlos Williams. He also published four collections of poetry: An American Story (Amerikai Történet) (1977); Missa Agnostica (Agnostic Mass), (1979); Sign Language (Jelbeszéd) (1982), and a volume of collected poems published in Hungary. – B: 0892, T: 4342.

Vitéz, János (John) (Croatian: Ivan Vitez of Sredne) (Zredna, Croatia, ca 1408 - Esztergom, 9 August 1472) – Archbishop, humanist, writer, diplomat, mathematician, astrologist and astronomer. He was born into a Croatian family. His father was the secretary of Regent János (John) Hunyadi (1446-1452). He began his studies at the Chapter of Zagreb, continued his education at the University of Vienna, where he graduated in Law, and became knowledgeable in physics, astronomy and alchemy, and met with humanists. He was placed into the Royal Chancellery as a protonotary, where he rose in rank, and by 1464, became Chancellor, remaining in this office until his death. He was one of the teachers of János (John) Hunyadi's son, Mátyás (Matthias Corvinus), who soon became the King of Hungary. In 1445, János Vitéz became the Bishop of Várad (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania), and turned it into a Humanist Center with Italian humanists, and collected books for a famous library of humanist center. In 1465, he became Archbishop of Esztergom and Primate of Hungary. On 19 May 1465, he founded the Academia Istropolitana (rather: Universitas Istropolitana) from which the University of Pozsony (now, Bratislava, Slovakia) grew out. He was interested in natural sciences and promoted their study. He promoted astronomic research, and founded the observatory in Esztergom. In the Government of King Mátyás I (1458-1490), he fulfilled many positions, including that of Royal diplomat. He served the King in diplomatic missions, e.g. to the Holy Roman Emperor and to the Czech King Podebrad. After 1464, he became active as the highest and secret Chancellor. During the late 1460s, he became estranged from the King and, in 1471 he led the opposition against the King, and initiated a rebellion against him, because of the King's premature war with Bohemia. For this, the King had him arrested in 1471-1472, he lost his privileges and estates, and was confined to the fortress of Visegrád. He was returned to Esztergom in 1472, but remained in residential confinement. He corresponded with the best of Europe's scientists. His most outstanding literary work dates back to his era as Bishop of Várad: A Book of Letters (Leveleskönyv) (1451). János Vitéz is regarded as the Father of Hungarian Humanism. His nephew was the great humanist, Janus Pannonius. – B: 1031, 1153, 1257, T: 7103.→Hunyadi, János; Mátyás I, King; Janus Pannonius; Universitas Istropolitana.

Vitéz, Order of (Vitéz: hero or brave) – A Title and an Order that was initiated by Regent Miklós (Nicholas) Horthy in 1920. The title was to be granted to such individuals who rendered outstanding services to the country during World War I, later extended to cover any subsequent wars. Its aim was to reward or honor those who in time of war and revolution distinguished themselves with their bravery and patriotic sentiment. It also had the additional purpose of forming an organization of national defense from individuals and their descendants, unconditionally trustworthy and loyal to their country. Admission to the organization occurred by application. The person awarded the title swore an oath and was ceremonially created vitéz, a title to be used like baron, count or knight, preceding the person's surname (family name), like vitéz Ferenczi; sometimes the title is indicated by the letter "v.", to be displayed in the registration of birth, and to be passed to the first-born son as well. A vitéz was granted a landed property by the head of state. The persons with the title vitéz formed a separate social order, the so-called Vitéz Order (Vitézi Rend); its highest governing body was the National Vitéz Chair, headed by their Captain-General, who was the Regent during the period 1920 - 1945. The area of the State is divided into regular chairs of vitéz members; at the head of each chair is a chair captain. In Hungary, the organization did not function in its original form from the end of World War II until the end of Communist era. However, it has survived and is practiced in at least four fragmented organizations in Hungarian communities living in the West, as well as in the mother country, where the title is bestowed upon deserving individuals by the highest-ranking officer of a particular community. After the political system changed in Hungary, the Order of Vitéz was reorganized and it has functioned as a registered organization since 3 February 1992. – B: 1068, 7456, T: 7456.→Horthy, Miklós.

Vitkovics Codex – A codex of Franciscan origin, a valuable Hungarian language relic dating from 1525, containing the rules of St. Bonaventure. An anonymous Clarissa nun copied it. It contains prayers and meditations on 54 folios, the products of Franciscan literature. The subsequently discovered Miskolc Fragment at one time formed part of this Codex, fitting perfectly between folia 72 and 73. Mihály (Michaelí) Vitkovics discovered it in Eger in 1803. It is in the National Széchényi Library in Budapest. – B: 1078, 1136, T: 7617.→Vitkovics, Mihály; Codex literature.

Vitkovics, Mihály (Michael) (Eger, 25 August 1778 - Pest 9 September 1829) – Poet, author of fairytales. He began writing poetry during his secondary school years in Eger and Buda. After graduating from Law School, he opened his practice in Pest, and soon became the trusted lawyer of many prominent families. On the influence of Ferenc (Francis) Kazinczy, he became an advocate of the Hungarian language reform movement, and gained lasting credit for his moderate language purification activities. His house became a home for the writers of Pest and the provinces, who were away from home. Gatherings at his house somewhat compensated for the lack of literary journals and reviews. During the last years of his life, he took part in the preparations for the organization of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. – B: 1150, T: 7617.→Vitkovics Codex; Kazinczy, Ferenc; Academy of Sciences, Hungarian.

Vitray, Tamás (Budapest, 5 November 1933 - ) – Journalist. His studies were completed at the Academy of Foreign Languages at the University of Budapest, where he read English Literature and Journalism (1952-1956), and at the Academy of Physical Training (1960-1963), Budapest. From 1955 to 1956 he was a translator at the Ministry of Home Defense. In 1957 and 1958 he worked as an English reporter for the Hungarian Radio. From 1958 to 1968 he was an associate of the Hungarian Television, and its Chief Contributor from 1968 to 1975. He was Chair of its Entertainment Department (1975-1980), then Chair of its Drama Department (1980-1988), and from 1988 to 1990 Chair of its Sports Department. From February to April 1990 he was a member of the Presidium of Hungarian Television. From March to May 1991 he was Superintendent of TV2, then again Leader of the Sports Department. In 1997 he became a lifetime member of Hungarian TV. Since 1999 he has been the leader of the Sunrise (Napkelte) program. Vitray is a professor at the Academy of Theater and Film Arts. Since 1991 he has been a member of Presidium of the Hungarian Olympic Committee. He is President of the Advisory Board of the Cancer Foundation (Rák Alapítvány), and that of the Press Foundation (Sajtó Alapítvány). His major works include report books, such as I Report from Iceland (Jégországból jelentkezem) (1963); Mexican Mosaic (Mexikói mozaik) (1969); American Mosaic (Amerikai mozaik) (1972); Professional Sports-fan (Hivatásos sportrajongó) (1981); The Half of the Whole (Az egész fele) (1987); I Just Sit and Ask...(Csak ülök és kérdezek...) (1990), and Vitray (2000). His TV series include I Just Sit and Talk...(Csak ülök és mesélek...)(1975-1978); Success (Siker) (1980-1981), and Your Mom and Dad Must Come Here! (Apád, anyád idejőjjön!) (1990-1991). He is a recipient of the Ferenc Rózsa Prize (1971), the Outstanding Artist title (1988), the Opus Prize (1993), the Golden-Deer Prize (1994), the Pulitzer Life-time Prize (1995), the Egon Erwin Kisch Prize (1995), the Sándor Pethő Prize (1999), the Golden Pen Award (2000), the Aladár Gerevich Life-achievement Prize (2001) and the Golden-Age Prize (2001). He is a legendary sports-journalist of the later part of the 20th century. – B: 0874, T: 7103.→Pluhár, István, Szepesi, György.

Vizi, Elek Szilveszter (Alexis Sylvester) (Budapest, 31 December, 1936 - ) – Physician and scientist. He studied at the Medical Schools of the Universities of Pécs and Budapest (1956-1961), and received his M.D. Degree in 1961. He was an assistant professor, adjunct, then docent and professor at the Semmelweis Medical University, Budapest (1961-1978). He was Deputy-director, then Director of the Experimental Medical Research Institute, Budapest (1981-1989). He was a visiting researcher in Mainz, Germany in 1963, and was on a Ricker scholarship at Oxford, England; he was a guest professor of Psychiatry and Anesthesiology at the Albert Einstein College of Medicine of Yeshiva University, New York, N.Y. USA. He is a full Professor and Department Chair of Pharmacology and Therapy at the Semmelweis University of Medicine. He has worked as a clinical pharmacologist since 1980. His fields of research are: the brain, the immune system, as well as the nervous system in general, and chemical neurotransmission in particular. He was a Corresponding Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1985, then its ordinary Member in 1990, its Vice-President in 1992, then President in 2002. He became a member of the European Academy; in 1992, a member of the Royal Belgian Academy of Medicine, and a member of the European Sciences and Arts Academy in 1994. He is a member of a number of editorial boards, e.g. Neuroscience, Journal of Autonomic Pharmacology, Neurochemical Research, and the Journal of the Autonomous Nervous System. His main books are Non-Synaptic Interactions between Neurons (1984); The Foundations of Neurochemistry, co-editor, (A neurokémia alapjai, társzerk) (1987), and Science in the Future (1994). He has received a number of prizes and distinctions including the Széchenyi Award (1993), the Knight of the Sovereign Order of St. John of Jerusalem, Malta (1997), the Middle Cross Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1997), the Galileo Award, Italy (1998), the Order of the Sacred Treasure donated by the Japanese Emperor (2002), the Pro Meitis Academiae of the European Academy (2003), and the Prima Primiissima Prize (2003). – B: 0874, 1817, T: 7103.→Pálinkás, József.

Vizinczey, István (Stephen) (Káloz, 12 May 1933 - ) – Playwright, writer. He studied Esthetics at the University of Budapest, and Dramaturgy at the Academy of Dramatic Art. He started writing plays from his early twenties. One of his pieces was banned in 1956. He took part in the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight. Afterward, he emigrated through Italy to Canada, and settled in Montreal. He learned English, and he wrote an increasing number of plays, film scripts, essays and novels in that language. He worked for the television, launched a literary paper entitled Exchange, and founded a book publishing company. In 1965 he published his novel, In Praise of Older Women (Érett asszonyok dicsérete), translated by Zoltán Halász, which was printed in more than forty editions in English, and 3 million copies were sold; it was also translated into other languages, and was made into a film. In 1966 he moved to England, and he now lives in London. His works, apart from the above, also include The Rules of Chaos (1969); Truth and Lies in Literature, essays, reviews (1986); Der unschuldige Millionär (1987), and Be Faithful unto Death (Oxford, 1997). He, who arrived in Canada with 50 words of English, today is praised as one of the masters of plain English prose. – B: 1672, 1031, T: 7456.

Vizin, Viktoria (Kecskemét, ca 1975 - ) – Opera singer (mezzo-soprano). She studied music at the Conservatory of Szeged, Hungary. In 1996 she won the Nicolae Bretan International Singing Competition at Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), where she also made her debut as Rosina in Rossini's Barber of Seville. Also in 1996, she was on a scholarship in order to further her vocal studies; in 2001 she completed her M.Sc. Degree and later she obtained her Ph.D. In the meantime, she won second prize at the International Singing Competition of Budapest, and went on to appear in numerous operatic roles, e.g. as Angelina in Rossini's Cinderella; Kate Pinkerton in Puccini's Madama Butterfly; Idamante in Mozart's Idomeneo, and also as soloist in K. Szymanowski's Stabat Mater. In her Vienna debut in the Staatsoper, she appeared as Cherubino in Mozart's Marriage of Figaro, and then, in the Budapest Opera House, she sang Dorabella in Mozart's Così fan tutte, and sang Zerlina in Mozart's Don Giovanni at the Deutsche Oper am Rhein, Düsseldorf, and at the Opera House in Budapest. Miss Vizin made her debut at the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, London, in the role of Flora in Verdi's La Traviata. In the years after the completion of her Ph.D. in vocal music, she appeared in the title role of Bizet's Carmen at Essen (2002-2003), and the Metropolitan Opera, New York (2010). In a new production with the Pittsburgh Opera in 2003-2004 season her performances included Adalgisa in V. Bellini's Norma. In the 2004-2005 season she was invited to Düsseldorf to sing Hansel in Humperdinck's Hansel and Gretel, and Maddalena in G. Verdi's Rigoletto. She likes to appear at New Year's Eve concerts in Kecskemét, her native town. In 2006, she sang with the Lyric Opera of Chicago, and in further performances in the title role of G. Bizet's Carmen at Covent Garden, and at the Opera House of Budapest in 2007 and 2008; in the same role she also sang at the Los Angeles Opera House in 2008. Since 2001, she has been living in the USA. – B: 1903, 7456, T: 7456.

Vizkelety, Gyula (Julius) (Szombathely, 12 December 1907 - Budapest, 28 February 1974) – Physician and urologist-surgeon. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest. From 1933 to 1938 he was an intern at the Rókus Hospital of Budapest; from 1938 a demonstrator at its Urological Clinic. Between 1942 and 1944, he was a medical officer in the Hungarian army, fighting against the invading Soviet forces. From 1946 he was Head of the Urology Ambulance of No. 2 Surgical Clinic. His main fields of interest were diagnostics and analytical methodology. He constructed the modern retrospective cystoscope, introduced in 1938, that came into universal use for urological examination. His works include New System of Retrospective Cystoscope (Új rendszerű retrospektív cytoskop) (1939); Instrumental Ablation of Urinary Calculus (Ureterkövek eszközös eltávolítása) (1955), and Urinary Calculus' Analysis with a Fast Micro-procedure (Húgykőanalýsis gyors mikroeljárással) (1964). – B: 1730 T: 7456.

Vizsla, Hungarian Dog – Its origin is uncertain.

There are written mentions from the 16th century, but detailed descriptions exist only from the beginning of the 20th century. It is possible that this dog evolved from the ancient Hungarian kopó hound. Today's modern form was gained only in the 19th century by the introduction of foreign species. There are two variations: the smooth, or flat haired and the wire-haired Vizsla. The smooth-haired is different from every other Vizsla with its dark yellowish color but mainly because of its diversified usefulness. Withers height for bitches is 53-60 cm, for the male-dog it is 57-64 cm. Head is noble and lanky; stop line is moderate. Its eyes are alert, intelligent, and a shade darker than the hair; ears are thin-skinned and a rounded V-shape. The back is straight, the breast is round and well muscled; the chest is deep, and its stomach is slightly pulled-up. The tail, sometimes docked, is positioned horizontally while in motion. The skin is tight, not folded. Hair is thick, sits close and is shiny and monochrome. Movements are quick and elegantly graceful; temperament is lively, but restrained. It accepts directions well, and is docile. It can be used in every type of hunting. It bears up calmly and readily to wild animals and works willingly on wetlands; its blood-hounding work is excellent. Longer haired progenies that were brought forth when flat haired litters were mated with the German Vizslas during the 1930s, and thus the Hungarian wire-haired Vizsla developed. Although it is slightly more resistant and harder to handle, it still possesses qualities that are similar to the smooth haired Vizsla. The Hungarian or Magyar Vizsla is an elite sporting dog, and the smallest of the pointer-retriever breeds, a natural hunter with an excellent nose and an outstanding trainability. The Vizsla is lively, gentle mannered, affectionate and sensitive, and also fearless, possessed of an excellent protective instinct. Through the centuries the Vizsla has held a unique position as a sporting dog, household companion and family dog. – B: 1020, 1031, T: 7675.→Komondor; Kopó; Puli; Pumi.

Vizsoly Bible→Károli Bible.

Vízváry, Mariska (Mary) (Viszkidenszky) (Budapest, 27 May 1877 - Budapest, 9 January 1954) – Actress. She was a descendant of an old acting dynasty. Already as a child, she was on stage several times and, after completing her studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, she was engaged by the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, in 1896, where she remained a member until her death. In 1928, she had become a life member there. Her career was inexplicably disregarded. At first, she played ingénue roles, without much success; then she attempted tragic roles, but her real talent showed itself in comic roles. In 1935 she retired from the National Theater and appeared in private theaters. Between 1935 and 1937, she played at the Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház); from 1938 to 1940 at the Pest and the Comedy Theaters (Pesti and Vígszínház); in 1942 at the New Hungarian Theater (Új Magyar Színház); in 1945 at the Buda Theater (Budai Színház); in 1946 at the Inner City and the Metropolitan Operetta Theaters (Belvárosi Színház, Operett Színház), and in 1947, at the Madách Theater (Madách Színház). She played for the last time at the Artist Theater (Művész Színház) in 1949. She also appeared in several films with considerable success. Her roles included Berengere in Sardou's Odette; Mrs. Sotenville in Molière's George Dandin; Martha in Goethe's Faust; Mrs. Solness in Ibsen's The Master Builder (Solness építőmester), and Voinicka in Chekhov's Uncle Vanya (Ványa bácsi). She authored one play: Flash in the Pan (Szalmaláng), and a cookbook: Mariska Vízváry's Cookbook (Vízváry Mariska szakácskönyve). – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Vlach Bible – The appellation of the New Testament translated into Romanian and put in print, as ordered and financed by the Prince of Transylvania, György (George) Rákóczi II (1648-1660) in 1648. A monk called Sylvester translated it from the Greek, Jewish and Slavonic languages. Since he died before its publication, his translation was published by the Archbishop of Belgrade, István (Stefan) Simon and several others. Its complete title is: Noul testament, sau impacarea, au leagea noauo alui Is. Xs. Domnului nostrum. Izvodit cu mare socotinta den izvoda grecescu si slovenescu, pre limba rumaneasca, cu indemnarea si porunca, denpreuna cu toataa cheltuiala a Marii Sale Gheorghie Rakoti, craiol Ardealului. Typaritusau intru a Marii Sale typografie, denteiu niou, in Ardeal, in cetatea Belgradului, anii dela itruparea Domnului si Mantuitorului nostrum Is Xs, 1648, luna lui Ghenuariu 20. (“The New Testament, that is the Reconciliation or the New Law of our Lord Jesus Christ, was translated with great care from Greek and Serbian into the Vlach language on the initiation, order and expense of His Excellency, George Rákóczi, Reigning Prince of Transylvania. It was printed in the press of His Excellency at Alba Iulia on the Commemoration of the Incarnation of Our Lord and Savior, on 20 January of the year 1648”). – B: 0945, T: 7456.→Vlach Catechism.

Vlach Catechism – Catechismul calvinesc (Calvinist Catechism) – First published in 1642, and again in 1656. It is a shortened version of the Heidelberg Catechism, translated and published in the Vlach (Romanian) language during the reign of Reigning Prince György Rákóczi II (1648-1660) for the purpose of converting the Vlach people in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) to the Reformed faith. – B: 0026, T: 7682.→

Vlach Bible.

Vlachs, The (or Wlachs, Wallachians, Vallachians, Walla, Wallachs, Vlahs, Olahs or Ulahs, Romanians) – A general term covering several modern Latinized populations in the Balkans. Vlachs (Romanians) originate from the Balkans. Historic and linguistic evidence shows that the Vlachs came from the center of the Balkan Peninsula, from the environs of Lake Ochrida, east of Albania, from where they kept migrating slowly and steadily for prolonged periods to the northeast, due to their pastoral lifestyle, until they settled in the southern and eastern slopes of the Carpathians. They are considered to be the descendants of Romanized Thracians and Illyrians. During the Vlach migrations, they absorbed a considerable number of Slavic (south Slavic) elements in their language, classified by linguists as an East Romance tongue. Since the Romance languages are considered to have evolved from Vulgar Latin during the 5th to 9th centuries, they could not have been in existence at the time of the Roman evacuation of Dacia (including Transylvania) in the 3rd century. Therefore, the language of the Vlachs could not have been formed in the isolated location of Transylvania. In more recent times the Vlachs called themselves Rumun (Rumuny), and from the mid-19th century Roumanians-Rumanians-Romanians. In 1878, at the Conference of Berlin, the Foreign Minister of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, Hungarian Count Gyula (Julius) Andrassy suggested that Wallachia should receive the name Roumania, which was accepted.

During the 12th-14th centuries, Transylvania was also inhabited by the Turkish Blaks (Bulaks, Blakos), not to be confused with Vlachs (Wallachs, Wlachs) according to L. Rásonyi (1982) and G. Bodor (1976), corresponding to the Hungarian chronicler Anonymus's ethnic name Blacus (in plural Blachi or Blacci). Roger Bacon, about 1280, also mentions Blacia (the blako people). E.R. Roesler (1871) was the first to criticize the hypothesis of the Daco-Roman continuity (much earlier F.J. Sulzer, in 1781, did the same), maintaining that the Romanians with their Romance tongue are a relatively recent "importation" from the Balkans, from nearby Albania. He was supported, among others, by the Hungarian linguist, ethnographer and historian, P. Hunfalvy, in his book on the history of the Vlachs (Romanians) in Transylvania (1894). Roesler's criticism of the Daco-Roman continuity hypothesis was in turn criticized by Johann H. Jung of Innsbruck, and the Romanian writers, like: J.L. Pic, B.P. Hasdeu, D. Onciul, A.D. Xenopol, C.C. Giurescu, and others. On the other hand, the Hungarian scholars have opposed the hypothesis on archeological and historic grounds [first documented appearance of Vlachs (Romanians) in Transylvania is dated 1222, as shepherds in the mountains at that stage, and the first extant text in Romanian is a letter from 1521], also on a linguistic basis, contending that the hypothesis is scientifically untenable. Andre Du Nay (1977) follows the same line of thought, developed also on linguistic grounds. Linguist and orientalist L. Kazár (1983) pointed out that (1) neither in Rome, nor in Byzantium are there any records in existence concerning the Christianization of the Daco-Roman people; (2) the Vlachs were placed under the rule of the Archbishopric of Ochrida (near Albania) by the Byzantine Emperor Basil II (Basilios, "the Bulgar-slayer"), because, after protracted campaigns, he had totally destroyed the West Bulgarian Empire and their Vlach allies by 1018; the Transylvanian Wallachians as a result belonged to this Eastern Church rite until 1715, and the Vlach priests did not use the Latin script but the Cyrillic script up to the middle of the 19th century; (3) the 19th century vocabulary of the Romanian language was composed of 31% Latin, 45,7% Slavic, 8,4% Turkish, 7% Greek, 6% Magyar, and 0,6% Albanian, and no Dacian – according to A. de Cihac, a Romanian linguist; (4) there is no evidence of borrowings from the culturally advanced Goths and Gepids, who settled in Transylvania after the Roman withdrawal; (5) There are no archeological proofs (artifacts, utensils, ruins, cemeteries) that Daco-Romans lived in Transylvania after the Roman evacuation in ca. AD. 270; (6) The Regestrum Varadiense of the Bishopric of Nagyvárad (now Oradea) records, in the eastern part of the Hungarian Kingdom, about 600 place names and 2500 personal names without any such names being of Romanian origin, and beside the large majority of Hungarian names, there are also German, Walloon, Ruthenian and Ishmaelite names, while Romanian names start occurring only centuries later in Hungarian documents; (7) there are numerous, conspicuously common characteristics between the Albanian and the Romanian languages; (8) the settlement history of Transylvania shows (following I. Kniezsa, 1938, and others) that, up to the end of the 12th century, out of 511 well-established place names, only three are of Vlach origin; (9) King István I (Saint Stephen) of Hungary (997-1038) adopted Western Christianity for his kingdom (including Transylvania, AD 1004), with the Latin language and script, whereas the Greek Orthodox Christianity, with its Cyrillic alphabet, was regarded as heretical; (10) in Vlach/Romanian church services, the language of ritual was Slavic up to the 19th century; (11) assuming that the Vlachs converted to Christianity in the 4th or 5th century, there should be widespread occurrences of religious symbols, like inscriptions and epitaphs in Transylvania (Dacia), which in other Roman provinces never fail to occur; (12) during the Roman rule of 166 years, the soldiers and settlers were not drawn from Italy but from other provinces, whose language was not Latin; (13) in Transylvania there are no river, brook or creek names of Daco-Romanian origin (stated by I. Kniezsa, 1938 as well), these names are mostly Hungarian or Slavic in origin, and the Romanians simply adopted them; this fact also indicates that the Vlachs/Romanians arrived by infiltration or immigration after the Carpathian settlement by the Magyars, under the Hungarian Leader/Khagan Árpád (895) and also after the Germanic tribes.

In order to escape the harsh rule of their own chieftains, Vlachs gradually infiltrated from the southern and eastern slopes of the Carpathians into the Hungarian-ruled Transylvania. Their number grew steadily: in the 14th century there were only 389 Vlach villages in Transylvania; in 1874, the Vlach population had increased to 787,000, and finally, they claimed Transylvania for themselves as their original homeland on the basis of their mythical Daco-Roman hypothesis. This has been successfully disseminated on international level and, in some cases, Western historians has adopted it. The Daco-Roman theory received great political significance before and after the Versailles-Trianon Peace Treaty (1920), as Romanian nationalists found the theory very useful in stressing their “historic rights” to the possession of Transylvania. Most recent findings of Etruscan-Hungarian language research suggest that the so-called proto-Magyars were in possession of the Carpathian Basin around BC 3000, well before the beginning of the Roman Empire. – B: 1068, 1075, 1240, 1285, 1582, 1763, T: 3233, 7103, 7456.→ Dacia; Daco-Roman Continuity, Theory of; “Divide et Impera”; Árpád; Etruscan-Hungarian Linguistic Relationship; Wallachia; Trianon Peace Treaty; Paris Peace Treaty.

Vladár, Gábor (Gabriel) (1881 - 19 July, 1972) – Ecclesiastical lawyer and Lutheran church district supervisor. From 1929 he was head of the preparatory committee for certain laws to be enacted at the Department of Justice; he prevented the handing-over of convicted Jews to the gendarmerie. Under the Lakatos Government, when the Minister of Justice was preparing to pull Hungary out of the war as the unwilling satellite of Germany, Vladár was involved in the preparation and, therefore, he had to flee, when the Arrow-Cross Government took over the power on German insistence. In 1945, after the Communist take-over, he withdrew from public life. In 1947 he became the supervisor of the Lutheran Bánya Church District, and participated in the negotiations with the Communist government. He was soon forced into retirement. In 1950 he was deprived of his pension. He had to work in the forest of Hűvösvölgy, in the vicinity of Budapest. In 1951 he was relocated to Tomor, near Miskolc and, in 1953, he had to settle in Bia, near Budapest. How he spent the last 20-plus years of his life, and the circumstances of his death, are unknown. Up to 1950, he was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; then, yielding to political pressure, he became a consulting member. The Corvin Society made him its laureate member, and he was President of the State Judicial and Attorney Association. He wrote his autobiography in the last years of his life, entitled Recollections, with a Bibliography of his Scientific Works (Visszaemlékezések, tudományos munkáinak jegyzékével). In 1942 he was awarded an Honorary Doctorate by the University of Debrecen. – B: 1050, T: 7456.

Vofkori, László (Ladislav) (Brassó, now Braşov, Romania, 3 March, 1944 -) – Teacher. He studied at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), majoring in Geography; he graduated in 1966. He obtained a Ph.D. in Geography from the University of Bucharest in 1979. From 1967 to 1968 he taught at the primary school in Ülke; from 1968 to 1972 he was a teacher at the Áron Tamási Lyceum and, from 1972 a teacher at the Elek Benedek Teachers' College. His works include Current Problems of Settlement Geography (A településföldrajz időszerű kérdései) (1980); Odorheiu Secuiesc (Székelyudvarhely), (2nd. edition 1991); Social and Economic Geography of Transylvania (Erdély társadalom és gazdaságföldrajza) (1993); Administrative and Ethnic Geography of Transylvania (Erdély közigazgatási és etnikai földrajza) (1998), and Social and Economic Geography of Romania (Románia társadalom- és gazdaságföldrajz). – B: 1036, T: 7456.

Vogel, Eric (Budapest, 22 June 1907 - Budapest, 17 October 1996) – Stage and costume designer, graphic artist and painter. He studied painting under Adolf Fényes and Lipót (Leopold) Hermann. From 1925 to 1927, he studied interior architecture, and familiarized himself with theaters and filmmaking. In 1927 he prepared his first stage and costume designs for the Metropolitan Operetta Theater (Fővárosi Operett Színház), the Artist Theater (Művész Színház), and the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház). From 1930, he was engaged as a designer for classical and modern operettas and musical entertainment plays in the King Theater (Király Színház) and the Municipal Theater (Fővárosi Színház). He became familiar with many entertainers, and musical and creative artists of the theater, who were inspired by his culture of beauty and dynamically vibrant approach. He often prepared plans for the Royal Revue Theater (Royal Revü Színház), cabarets and nightclubs, like the Moulin Rouge, Parisien Grill, in richly colored, piquant style. He was an associate of the paper Theater Life (Színházi Élet). After the Soviet military occupation of Hungary (1944-1945), he went to live in Bucharest, working for the paper Scienteia, but prepared stage designs for operettas as well. In 1948 he returned to Budapest. First, he joined the Metropolitan Operetta Theater, and was a founding member of the Attila József Theater (József Attila Színház), the Merry Stage (Vidám Színpad), the Little Stage (Kis Színpad), the Kamara Varieté, the Comedy Theater (Víg-színház) and the Thália Theater (Thália Színház). He prepared designs for country theaters, circus shows, and nightclubs; he worked for musical, entertainment, TV plays and also for theaters in Berlin and Paris. He participated in a number of exhibitions with his drawings and paintings. In 1987, his life-work exhibition was organized in the Vigadó Gallery, held in the Municipal Concert Hall. His outstanding drawing ability, detailed knowledge of the theater stage and the human body, as well as his piquant and ironic spirit radiated an unmistakably individual quality. Works with his designs include J. Lengyel's The Great Prison (A nagy börtön); P. Ábrahám's Viktória; I. Kálmán's Empress Josephine (Josephine császárnő), and I. Kállai's Ropedance (Kötéltánc). – B: 1445, T: 7456.→Fényes, Adolf.

Voigt, Vilmos (William) (Szeged, 17 January 1940 - ) – Folklore researcher. In 1963 he obtained a Degree in Ethnography from the University of Budapest. Later, he was a research student at the Folklore Department (1963), a demonstrator (1964), an assistant lecturer (1970), an assistant professor, and from 1979, Professor and Head of the Folklore Department of the University of Budapest. He obtained a Ph.D. in Literature in 1995. He was awarded the Széchenyi professorial scholarship in 1999. He is engaged in the study of comparative philology and the theory of folk poetry. Since 1982, he has been Editor for the publication, Folklore, Folkloristics and Ethnology (Folklór, Folklorisztika és Etnológia) and, since 1989, Editor of the Hungarian Folk Poetry Collection (Magyar Népköltési Gyűjtemény). He has been President of the Hungarian Semiotic Society and Vice-President of the Ethnographic Society. From 1985 to 1988 he edited the journal, Hungarian Studies. He is the author of numerous articles in scientific journals in Hungary and abroad. His works include To the Esthetics of Folklore (A folklór esztétikájához) (1972); Glaube und Inhalt (1976); Introduction to Semiotics (Bevezetés a szemiotikába) (1977), and Suggestions Toward a Theory of Folklore (1999). – B: 1134, 1257, T: 7456.

Voith, Ági (Agnes) (Budapest, 17 March 1944 - ) – Actress. Her mother is actress Agi Mészáros, and her husband is Gyula (Julius) Bodrogi. From 1966, when she finished her studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, until 1984, she was a member of the Attila József Theater (József Attila Színház). Since 1984, she has played at the Thália Theater (Thália Színház) and the Arizona Theater (Arizóna Színház), Budapest. In 1993 she became a freelance artist. Her acting is characterized by humor, hence she mainly appears in comedies, but she also scored great success in a number of musicals. Her roles include Stéphanie in Barillert-Gredy's Cactus Flower (A kaktusz virága); the angel in M. Gyárfás' Forced Landing (Kényszerleszállás); Vica in L. Németh's Great Family (Nagy család); Marie in Magnier's A Certain Smile (Mona Marie mosolya); Polly in B. Brecht - K. Weill's Beggar's Opera (Koldusopera), and Elisabeth in Schiller's Maria Stuart. Her feature and TV films include I Usually Don't Lie (Nem szoktam hazudni) (1966); Old Summer (Régi nyár) (1969); The Caucasian Chalk Circle (Krétakör), manager (1978);

Lucky Daniel (Szerencsés Dániel) (1983); Wedding Anniversary (Házassági évforduló) (1970), and Linda - The Satyr (Linda – A szatír) (1984). She is also a recording artist. In 1976 she was awarded the Mari Jászai Prize. – B: 1445, 1031, 1742, T: 7456, 7103.→Mészáros, Ági; Bodrogi, Gyula.

Vojnics, Oszkár (Oscar) (Bajsa, 18 May 1864 - Port Said, Egypt, 18 March 1914) – World traveler, geography writer. His financial circumstances made it possible for him to make several globe-circling trips. He traveled to observe coastal conditions, mainly the effects of volcanoes. He visited Russia's coastal areas, island groups of the Pacific Ocean, India, Burma, the Malay Peninsula, and the Indonesian Archipelago. He photographed more than 50 active volcanoes in Oceania and Asia and wrote descriptions about them. He climbed the smoke-emitting Vesuvius Mountain in 1906, together with his friend, the geologist Lajos (Louis) Lóczy, and witnessed an actual eruption. – B: 0883, 1020, T: 7675.→Lóczy, Lajos Sr.

Vojvodina→Southern Hungary.

Volf, György (George) (Törökbálint, 3 October 1843 - Budapest, 13 September 1897) – Linguist. He completed his higher studies at the University of Budapest; thereafter, from 1872, he worked as a teacher in Buda and, from 1890, he was Director of the Training School of the Teachers' College of Budapest. In his published works he was mainly engaged in the study of old Hungarian culture and language, and he also studied the correctness of language and the critique of the language reform. He was the editor of the 15-volume work entitled: Collection of Linguistic Records (Nyelvemléktár) (except vols. i, and xv). For a while, he participated in the editing work for the Historical Dictionary (Nyelvtörténeti Szótár). His works also include László Bátor and the Jordánszky Codex (Bátori László és a Jordánszky-Codex) (1879); Old Hungarian Linguistic Records, vols. i,ii, (Régi magyar nyelvmélekek, I-II) (1888); The Basis of Hungarian Orthography (A magyar helyesírás alapja) (1894), and The Culture of Hungarians at the Carpathian Conquest Times (A honfoglaló magyarok műveltsége) (1897). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Völgyes, Iván (Budapest, 25 August 1936 - ) – Historian. He began his higher studies at the University of Budapest, and completed them at the American University in Washington. He obtained a Ph.D. in History, after which he went to the University of Nebraska to teach European History. His main field of interest is 20th century Central-European and Hungarian History. He worked for Radio Free Europe as an outside consultant under the name István (Stephen) Zuglói. His works in English appeared mainly in American periodicals, dealing with Eastern Europe. His works include Hungary in Revolution, 1918-1919, editor (1971); The Liberated Female: Life, Work and Sex in Socialist Hungary, co-author Nancy Völgyes (1977), and Politics in Eastern Europe (1986). – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Vona, Gábor (Gabriel) (until 2000, Zázrivecz) Gyöngyös, 20 August 1978 - ) – Politician and historian. He comes from a peasant family, and was brought up with strong traditional values. He was influenced by the memory of his grandfather, who was killed in World War II on the Eastern Front, fighting against the Soviet Army. His higher studies were at the University of Budapest, where he obtained a Degree in Education, majoring in History. After working only for a short time as a teacher, he became a production manager for a security firm. In his university years, he was active in the Christian Student Committee. Later, he became President of the Christian Intellectuals' Association (Keresztény Értelmiségiek Szövetsége). In 2002, at the invitation of the Prime Minister Viktor Orbán, he joined the Association of Civic Circle for the Nation (Szövetség a Nemzetért Polgári Kör). He was one of the founders of the Conservative Youth Community which, in 2003, was transformed into a political party called "Jobbik, the Movement for a Better Hungary" (Jobbik Magyarországért Mozgalom) commonly known as Jobbik (the Better One), where Vona became one of the Vice-Presidents, and in 2006 its President. The controversial Hungarian Guard (Magyar Gárda) was also his brainchild, founded in 2007, organized for the protection of the poor and the intimidated. However, later it was banned as a semi-military organization. Vona succeeded in establishing Jobbik as a patriotic force in Hungarian political life against all odds. His Party had an important victory during the EP election in 2009 and, as a result, the Party was able to send three representatives to the EU Parliament, among them the charismatic human-rights lawyer Krisztina (Christina) Morvai. The support of the party also grew in municipal and in by-elections. At the 2010 Parliamentary election, Jobbik won 47 seats in the Parliament and became the No. 3 Party of the nation. – B: 2006, T: 7103, 7456. → Orbán, Viktor; Morvai, Krisztina; Gaudi-Nagy, Tamás; Political Parties in Hungary.

Vönöczky-Schenk, Jakab (Jacob) (Óverbász, now Stari Vrbas, Serbia, 2 June 1876 - Kőszeg, 22 February 1945) – Zoologist and ornithologist. He began his higher studies at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), and completed them between 1896 and 1899 at the University of Budapest. He started work as a mathematician and, inspired by Otto Herman, he became interested in ornithology. In 1898 he worked as an assistant at the Ornithological Institute, Budapest, where he became Acting Director in 1927, and Director in 1933. He studied mainly the problems of bird-migration, and in this field he gained a reputation abroad as well. In 1908 he introduced the practice of bird ringing. Thanks to his nature-conservation activity, the heron colony of Lake Balaton was saved. Near the end of his life, he was engaged in the history of falconry in Hungary, and the study of various falcon species. From 1905 he edited the journal Aquila and, thereby, he developed the international journal exchange. He was elected as member of several Ornithological Societies abroad. His works include The Question of Bird Migration (A madárvonulás kérdése) (1902); The Aves-volume of the work Fauna Regni Hungariae (1917); The Past and Present Nesting Colonies of Herons in Hungary (A kócsag hajdani és jelenlegi telepei Magyarországon) (1918), and Effect of a Lunar Eclipse on Bird Migration (A holdfogyatkozás hatása a madárvonulásra)(1938). – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Herman, Ottó.

Vörös János (John) (Csabrendek, 25 March 1891 - Balatrontüred, 23 July 1968) – Army Officer and politician. He was trained at the Cadet School of Traisskirchen, Austria and, from 1911 he served in the Army of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy. At his request, he was transferred to the Hungarian Army, and served in the Seventh Home Defense Artillery Group of Hajmáskér. He fought in World War I at the Eastern Front, and in the Italian Campaign. In 1921 he was Head of the Operational Group of the Chief of Staff.

Between the two wars, he served at the Ministry of Defense, and later taught at the Ludovika Royal Military Academy. In 1932, he was appointed Lieutenant-General, Commander of the Second Legion of Székesfehérvár. In 1939-1940 he was Leader of No. 7. Communication Department of the Chief of Staff as Colonel-General. On 1 May 1941, he became Commander of the No.2 Motorized Brigade. He was appointed Chief of Army Staff on 19 March 1944, when the Germans occupied Hungary. Later, he joined the Soviet Army, which had arrived at Hungary's eastern border. He served as Minister of Defense in the Interim National Government, which was led by Béla Miklós Dálnoki. He was one of signatories of the Moscow armistice, as one of the members of the Interim Government delegation. On 1 September 1946, at his own request, he was retired. On 23 July 1949, he was arrested on the charge of spying, and he was sentenced to life imprisonment in 1950. He was released in 1956, and after that he lived desolately and in poor conditions. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7103.→Dálnoki Miklós, Béla.

Vörösmarty, Mihály (Michael) (Pusztanyék, 1 December 1780 - Pest, 19 November 1855) – Poet and dramatist. He studied in Székesfehérvár and Pest. Following the early death of his father, he took a position as a tutor, in order to support his siblings. He studied Law, but never practiced. He wrote poetry from childhood, and his first poems appeared in print in 1823. In 1825, when his great hexametric epic about the Settlement Period of the Magyars, The Flight of Zalán (Zalán Futása) was published, his name became known nationwide. With this work, he founded the nostalgic, independence-oriented, romantic national epic poetry. After 1826 he lived for literature alone, wrote one epic and lyric poem after another, establishing himself as the founder of modern Hungarian poesy. Between 1827 and 1832, he edited the journal, Scientific Collection (Tudományos Gyűjtemény), and its supplement, Wreath (Koszorú).

Vörösmarty won numerous Academic prizes. In 1830, the Hungarian Academy of Sciences elected him a member. In 1831, he published his favorite work, the charming fairytale play, Csongor and Tünde (Csongor és Tünde). At the same year, he wrote his widely romantic work, Two Neighboring Forts (Két Szomszédvár), in which his extraordinary mastery of language and his flights of fancy, at times bordering on the fantastic, reached its climax.

In 1832, the Academy commissioned him to write a work on the Principal Rules of Hungarian Spelling and Declensions (Magyar Helyesírás és Szóragasztás főbb Szabályai). He excelled with his spiritual portrayal in the poetic narrative Belle Helene (Szép Ilonka), published in 1833. In 1836, he became one of the founders of the Kisfaludy Society. His patriotic poem, Call to the Nation (Szózat), put to music by Béni (Ben) Egressy, became a second national anthem. He wrote many romantic dramas. The new National Theater in Pest opened with his play, The Awakening of Árpád (Árpád Ébredése), in 1837. In 1848, Vörösmarty became a Member of Parliament and an unconditional devotee of Lajos (Louis) Kossuth. After the surrender at Világos in 1849, he had to go into hiding. He received amnesty in 1850. Following these events, he occupied himself solely with translations. However, in 1854, his great poetic inspiration once again revived, and he composed one of the most moving Hungarian lyric rhapsodies, the The Old Gypsy (A Vén Cigány). He translated into Hungarian Shakespeare's Julius Caesar (1839) and King Lear (1854). He also wrote literary critiques for the paper Atheneum (1837-1843). When he died, the Austrian censorship forbade orations at his graveside. At the funeral, 20,000 Hungarians bade a silent farewell to the greatest master of the Hungarian language. The guardian of his children was "the Sage of the Country" Ferenc (Francis) Deák. He was the greatest Hungarian romantic poet. His inimitably vivid language and the many colors of his rich imagination make it almost impossible to translate into another language. – B: 0883, 1153, 1257, T: 7617, 1445. → Egressy, Béni; Kossuth, Lajos; Deák Ferenc.

Vörösváry, István (Stephen) (Weller) (Szentendre, 4 November 1913 - Toronto, 7 December 1993) – Writer, journalist, publisher and editor. He read Law at the University of Szeged, but gave it up for a journalistic career. He became a correspondent for the papers published by the Central Press Enterprise: National News (Nemzeti Újság), New Generation (Új Nemzedék) and the Illustrated Chronicle (Képes Krónika). In 1938 he joined the Pest News (Pesti Újság), where he worked for two years. In 1943 he launched the Hungarian Festival (Magyar Ünnepe), a literary and art journal. This was closed down when the rightwing Arrow Cross Party rose to power in October of 1944. Although after 1945, the People's Tribunal (Népbíróság), for lack of any crime, freed him from the political charges brought against him, the police arrested and interned him. When he was freed, he fled to the West and settled in Rome in August 1947. In the spring of 1948, he emigrated to Argentina. In Buenos Aires, he learned the printing trade. In July 1949, together with Márton (Martin) Kerecsendi Kiss, as editor, he launched the paper entitled, Hungarians' Road (Magyarok Útja). He took on book publishing and, in his printery he published a number of notable works. In the summer of 1955 he moved with his family to Toronto. In 1956 he launched the weekly paper called Hungarian Life (Magyar Élet) and, in the middle of 1963, he purchased the title of Canadian Hungarians (Kanadai Magyarság), and founded a paper with that name, later changing it to Hungarian Life (Magyar Élet), and it appears under that name to the present. – B: 1020, 1257, T: 7456. → Kerecsendi Kiss, Márton; Vörösváry-Weller Publishing Company.

Vörösváry-Weller Publishing Company – In addition to the paper, Hungarian Life (Magyar Élet), István Vörösváry founded a book-publishing firm, the Vörösváry-Weller Publishing Company in Toronto in 1963. Its printery is equipped with the latest machinery, and it employs 55 workers and prints more than 400 publications, not only in Hungarian, but in other languages as well. More than 75% of the Canadian nationality press is prepared here. Among the authors of works printed and published here were: Sándor (Alexander) Márai; Miklós (Nicholas) Horthy; József (Joseph) Mindszenty; Ferenc (Francis) Fáy; Imre; (Emeric) Kovács; Zoltán Nyisztor; László (Ladislav) Mécs; István (Stephen) Fekete, and Albert Wass. – B: 1672, T: 7456. → Vörösváry, István; Márai, Sándor; Horthy, Miklós; Mindszenty József; Fáy, Ferenc; Kovács, Imre; Nyisztor, Zoltán; Mécs, László; Fekete, István; Wass, Albert; Püski Publishers.

Vujicsics, D. Stojan (Vujičić, Stojan) (Pomáz, 15 May 1933 - Budapest, 11 February 2002) – Writer, literary historian and translator of literary works. He was born into a Serbian clerical family, and was the brother of Tihamér Vujicsics. He obtained his diploma of Education from the University of Budapest, majoring in Serbo-Croat and Bulgarian Literature. His first place of employment was in the Institute of Literature of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; later, he was dismissed for political reasons. For four years, he lived from private tuition and occasional editing work. Thereafter, he was an associate of the Institute of Dramatic Art; later, he again joined the Academy of Sciences as an associate, and later as a group leader. His poems appeared in Serbian. He was mainly engaged in the Serbian Culture in Hungary, Serbian literature, and Hungarian-South-Slav cultural connections, and he also did literary translations. He was Secretary of the Committee of East-European Science of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He was also Founder and Director of the Serbian Orthodox Religious Art and Scientific Collection in Hungary, President of the Serbian Cultural Foundation, an honorary member of the Serbian Writers' Society of Belgrade, Vice-President of the Hungarian Pen Club, an associate of the journal European Traveler (Európai Utas), and a member of the Committee of the Modern Philological Society. His works include The Serbian Church of Pest (A pesti szerb templom), study (1961), and Serbians in Pest-Buda (Szerbek Pest-Budán) (1997). He was awarded the Attila József Prize and the Serbian Pen Club Prize and the memorial medal of the 1956 Hungarian Revolution. – B: 0878, 1257, T: 7456. → Vujicsics, Tihamér.

Vujicsics, Tihamér (Pomáz, 23 February 1929 - Damascus, 19 August 1975) – Composer and collector of folk music. In the National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede), Budapest, he was a student of Rezső (Rudolph) Sugár and, in the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, a student of Sándor (Alexander) Veress and Ferenc (Francis) Farkas. The Hungarian composer with Serbian mother tongue was chiefly a collector and popularizer of the Serbian folk music in Hungary, e.g. Palóc Fantasy, Kalotaszeg Concerto and Dances of Drágszél (Palóc fantázia, Kalotaszegi concerto, Drágszéli táncok). His devotion to a theme and his humor through music became evident in numerous contemporary radio and TV programs. As a composer, he wrote mainly ballet music and film scores, e.g. the music for the TV-series Bors, and The Captain of Tenkes (A Tenkes kapitánya). He also collected Macedonian, Sokac, Albanian, Persian and Arabic folk music, and was the composer of the music for 137 films and one opera. He is the author of Musical Traditions of the Southern Slavs in Hungary (A magyarországi délszlávok zenei hagyományai) (1976). In István (Stephen) Szabó's avant-garde short film entitled Koncert (1961), it was Vujicsics who played the piano on the banks of the Danube. He was the victim of an airplane accident. In Szentendre (north of Budapest), a Music School and a Plaza bear his name, and there is a Vujicsics Ensemble at Szentendre. – B: 1031, T: 7456. → Vujicsics, D. Stojan; Veress, Sándor; Farkas, Ferenc.

W

Wagner, Dániel (zólyomi) (Brezsnóbánya, now Brezno, Slovakia 1800 - Budapest, 10 January 1890) – Pharmacist. He obtained a dispensing chemist diploma from the University of Pest, and he was the first to obtain a Ph.D. in chemistry on potassium from the University of Vienna, which he developed further with many of his experiments. Returning to Hungary, he was at first a pharmacist in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) and, from 1834 in Pest. In the laboratory of his pharmacy, he developed the first chemical factory, leading later to the firm Hungaria Chemical Works (Hungaria Vegyiművek). He further improved a method for detecting arsenic, and experimented with the production of artificial mineral water. During the 1848 War of Independence, he was a counselor of health, and lecturer on health issues. As a leading pharmacist of the 1848 government, he tried to raise pharmaceutical training to the level of medical training. In Hungary, he introduced raising chemical decomposition to the level of the courts. He was a founding member of the Natural Scientific Society (Természettudományi Társulat). His works include Pharmaceutisch-medicinische Botanik...(1828); Selectus Medicamentum (1839), and The Economically Well-known Products of Hungary (Magyarországnak közgazdaságilag nevezetes termékeiről) (1844). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Wagner, János (John) (Komárom, 18 July 1811 - Budapest, 2 January 1889) – Physician, internal pathologist. In 1835 he obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Vienna, after which he joined the Medical Faculty at the University of Budapest. From 1847, he was Professor of Diatetics, from 1848, Professor of General Pathology and Pharmacology. From 1861 to 1863, he was Professor of Internal Medicine and Surgery, and between 1841 and 1846 he was also engaged in Medical Training and was Secretary of the Medical Association, later its President from 1846 to 1862. He was one of the founders of the clinical approach in Hungary and one of the leaders of the Medical School of Pest (later to become Budapest). His works include: Dissertatio inauguralis medica de gastromalacia (1835), On infant shortage (A kisdéd aszályról) (1841). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Wagner, Károly S.J. (Charles) (Zboró, now Zborov, Slovakia, 11 April 1732 - Kisszeben, 7 January 1790) – Jesuit teacher, historian and translator of literary works. In 1747, he entered the Jesuit Order in Trencsén (now Trenčín, Slovakia). Thereafter, he worked as a teacher and orator in a variety of towns. From 1773 he was Director of the National Archives in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) and, from 1777 he worked as Curator of the University Library of Buda, where he later became Professor of Sigillography (the study of seals) and Heraldry until his retirement in 1784. He was a correspondent for the Ungarisches Magazin of Pozsony, and translated from the works of Corneille. He published important source material on the Szepesség area and County Sáros in Upper or Northern Hungary (Felvidék, then part of Historic Hungary, now Slovakia). He was also engaged in genealogical research. Several of his manuscripts are held at the National Széchényi Library. His works include Analecta Scepusii...I-IV (1774, 1778), and Diplomatarium comitatus Sarosiensis...(1780). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Wagner, Nándor (Ferdinand) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 7 October 1922 - Mouka, Japan, 15 November 1997) – Sculptor and artist. He was the son of a dentist.

Wagner studied at the Art Academy, Budapest, before and after World War II. He had three art periods: when he lived in Hungary (1945-1956), in Sweden (1956-1971), and in Japan (1972-1997) respectively. He became well-known for his novel cast stainless steel sculptures made in Sweden and Japan. He and his Japanese wife Chiyo Wagner established the TAO Research Institute of World Culture and Development, which continues to support the education of talented young artists and the promotion of Mashiko pottery. They also initiated the establishment of an Academia Humana Foundation in Hungary, which has been in operation since 1999. After the war, he created statues in Hungary: the Corpus Hungaricum; József Attila the poet; Sorrow of Mother, and the Fountain with Three Boys, among others. One of his works was honored by the British Museum. He gave courses in Art to talented students who were refused to enter universities before the 1956 Hungarian Revolution. Due to his involvement in the Revolution, and after its suppression by the Soviet army, he had to leave Hungary with his family and they emigrated to Sweden. Soon after that, he established his studio in Lund. He invented a new method to overcome the shrinkage problem of stainless steel. Eight such monuments were erected around the country, among them War Memorial for Polish Soldiers, Tranås, Fountain with four Children, and Clown. He was also active and inventive in painting and drawing. He developed a novel painting technique, which he named paper fresco. He also taught at the Art Academy of Lund. In 1969 the Wagners moved to Japan and they built a studio in Mashiko, where the Mother with Child, a terracotta piece, was created. He won a contest in creating large size art in Narita, with his work entitled: Patron Saint of Travelers (Dosojin). He also received a commission to design and construct the surrounding park. Besides sculpting, he started to paint fine aquarelles and create more ceramics, including his terracotta series Silk Road. In Mashiko, the Garden of Philosophy was also created. Its five figures: Abraham, Akhnaton (Amenhotep IV), Jesus, Buddha and Lao Tse, around the center point symbolize the founders of the major religions of the world. Three complete sets were cast, one for Japan, one for the USA, and one for Hungary. It was presented to Hungary in 1997, and was unveiled on the Gellért Hill on 18 October 2001. – B: 1031, T: 7103. →József, Attila.

Wagner, Sándor (Alexander) (Pest, 16 April 1838 - Munich, 19 January 1919) – Painter. Early in his career, he was a student of Henrik Weber. He later moved to Vienna; from 1856 to 1864, he studied under Karl von Piloty at the Academy of Art, Munich. His early works, such as Titusz Dugonics (1859, now in the Hungarian National Gallery), and Queen Isabella's Farewell to Transylvania (Izabella királyné búcsúja Erdélytől) (1862, lithographed by himself) were created in the spirit of Romantic historical painting with dramatic depiction of self-sacrifice, and hiding in emigration. In 1866 he became a professor at the Art Academy of Munich, and his art became increasingly outward to harmonize with the spirit of the Munich Academy, even though he gladly treated Hungarian themes, especially folk life, e.g. Hussar Bravado (Huszárbravúr) and Herdsmen's Competition at Debrecen (Debreceni Csikósverseny). His large-size panoramic painting entitled Entry of Emperor Constantine the Great (Nagy Konstatin császár bevonulása), is exhibited in Munich. He frequently visited Hungary and Italy. Another of his conservative wall-paintings is the one he prepared for the Municipal Concert Hall (Vigadó) of Pest, entitled Matthias Defeats Holubar (Mátyás legyőzi Holubárt), a reflection of the influence exerted on him by his former teacher, Karl von Piloty. Also well-known is his painting of Queen Elizabeth, the wife of Emperor-King Francis Joseph I. He was not an innovator, but his teaching experience was made good use of. One of his students was Pál Szinyei Merse. Wagner really entered the pages of art history with one work: Self-sacrifice of Titusz Dugonics (Dugonics Titusz önfeláldozása). Through this single work, he succeeded in expressing the heroic struggle of the Hungarian youth against the advancing Ottoman Turks. – B: 1031, 0883, T: 7456.→Dugonics, Titusz; Isabella, Queen; Mátyás I, King; Erzsébet (Elizabeth Amalia Eugenia), Queen; Szinyei Merse, Pál.

Wagon Fort of Marót – The Turkish troops captured the wagon-fort of Marót (now Pilismarót) on 15 September 1526, after a three day siege. According to contemporary records, about 25,000 people lost their lives or were taken into slavery. – B: 1230, T:7665.

Wailing Song – Planctus. A genre of poesy from the Middle Ages, a mourner song with religious content. It turns to, and praises God but the acceptance of his will is especially emphasized. This makes it different from any other wailing songs from antiquity to the Middle Ages. The wailing songs of the Christian Middle Ages are rooted in the mourning songs of the death of Jesus. The wailing songs especially flourished in the 13th century. The ‘Mary’s Ancient Hungarian Lamentation’ (Ómagyar Mária-siralom) is also from this period. Another form of lamentations enumerates the set-backs and the change of fortune of a larger community, such as the Hungarian people. It was influenced by the wailing songs attributed to the prophet Jeremiah and was especially popular in early medieval Hungary. – B: 1136, T: 3240→Maria’s Lamentation, Old Hungarian.

Wailing Song about the Devastation Caused by the Mongol Invaders in Hungary – Planctus destructionis Regni Ungariae per Tartaros. This is the best example of medieval Hungary’s Latin poetry. An unknown religious author wrote it in 1241 or 1242 most probably in the Dalmatian Court of King Béla IV (1235-1270). It tries to show the wrongdoings that led to the country’s destruction through the dramatic events of devastation caused by the Mongol-Tartar invasion. This is the first time in Hungarian poetry that someone openly accuses the Hungarian aristocracy of their negligence. It conveys an honest agony and despair about the glorious past in view of the devastation and this only loosens up in the spirited final prayer for the end of misfortunes. – B: 1150, T: 3240.

Waldapfel, József (Joseph) Budapest, 28 October 1904 - Budapest, 15 February 1968) – He studied at the Faculty of Arts of the University of Budapest, focusing on Early Hungarian Literature. From 1949 until his death, he was Director of the Hungarian Institute of Literary History. He was active in promoting classical works. He played a major role in the publication of the Hungarian Classics (Magyar Klasszikusok) series and in launching research into Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi’s and Attila József’s works. He also published and wrote introductions for writings of Katona, Vörösmarty, Madách and Attila József. At the start of his career he focused on the literature of the Renaissance, and specifically on lyrical and dramatic works. In the 1930s, he turned to comparative methods and studied the relationships between Hungarian, Polish, Serbian and Croatian literature. His Marxist views are expressed in large literary studies, such as Socialist Culture and Literary Heritage (Szocialista kultúra és irodalmi örökség) (1961). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7667.

Wallachia (Havasalföld) – The land of Vlachs, in modern time Romania. Its original territory was between the southern Carpathian Mountain Range of Transylvania (Erdély) and the southern part of River Danube; a historical area in part of the present-day Romania. Earlier it was the Land of the Cumenians (Kunok). The area, together with the Barcaság region was granted to the German Order of Knights by King András II of Hungary in 1222. The Royal Deed specifically refers to the area of the ‘Blaci’, that in the 14th century became an autonomous principality under Basaraba, the ruler of Blaci. The eastern portion of the area was called Muntenia, while the western end was Oltenia. In 1369, the entire area fell into vassalage under King Lajos I (Louis the Great) of Hungary (1342-1382). After the 14th century Princes of Wallachia were either on the side of Hungarians, or sided with the Turks and, finally came under complete Turkish rule until 1857. In 1858, under the auspices of the Great Powers of Europe Wallachia and Moldavia were united into a single principality that in 1862 elected Cuza I as Reigning Prince of then Rumania, later Roumania, finally Romania. At the Berlin Congress of 1878, on the suggestion of the Hungarian Count Gyula (Julius) Andrassy, the Foreign-Minister of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, Wallachia received the name Roumania. After the Congress of Berlin, 1878, held by the Great European States, Rumania gained the status of a kingdom and ruled by kings of the Hohenzoller Dynasty.– B: 1230, 1153, T: 7103.→Vlachs; Vlach’s Bible.

Wallachia Hungarians in (Havasalföld) – King András II (Andrew, Endre) (1205-1235) organized not only the Hungarians in Moldavia, but also the Hungarians in Wallachia and Szörénység. The cities of Wallachia were founded at this time mostly by Hungarians, Pechenegs (Besenyős), Úzs and Csángós, who survived the rule of Cumanian’s rule, and also by those Cumanians, who became assimilated Hungarians. They were Christians, and under the organization of King András II, they formed a strong national and political unity in Wallachia, which made an impact on the Cumanians, south of Wallachia. They realized, that their survival would be ensured only if they became a part of the Hungarian nation. The Mongol-Tartar destruction in 1241-1242, caused a great loss in human life in Havasalföld, and from the 13th century on the remaining population was gradually influenced by the pesence of infiltrating pastoral people, the Vlachs (today Romanians) from the south. The Hungarian kings, such as Károly I (Charles Robert, Károly Róbert) (1307-1342) and Lajos I (Louis the Great) (1342-1382), supported the population by protecting their rights, but Governor János (John) Hunyadi (1446-1453) was much preoccupied fighting the Turkish menace to pay significant attention and help to their domestic problems. King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus) (1458-1490) also had more pressing interests elsewhere. Finally, in 1526, after the lost Battle of Mohács, the influence of the Hungarian kings over Havasalföld ceased completely. As a natural consequence, the Vlach Voivodes stripped entirely the rights of the Hungarian population, which only accelerated the pace of their Roumanization. – B: 1020, T: 7103.

Wallachian, Psalter of the Franciscan Order – A valuable Hungarian language relic, discovered by Baron Balázs Orbán in his parish church at Csikkarcfalva (now Cinta, Romania). According to a notation in the text referring to the year 1364, the Psalter was already in use in the middle of the 14th century. However, it is highly probable that the work dates from the middle of the 13th century. Baron Orbán reported its existence in the Székelyföld Leírása (Description of the Szeklerland), published in 1686. Written on parchment and later paginated, each stanza begins with a melodic line written on a staff of four lines in Gregorian notation, followed by the rest of the stanzas. The verses are in Gothic miniscule script of two different sizes. The first initials are often illuminated. A Hungarian hand appears to have written it. Its Hungarian origin is supported by the inclusion of four Hungarian saints: St István, St László, St Erzsébet and St Imre in its incomplete calendar. The Psalter was inspected and approved on 16 April 1667 by the Archdeacon of Csíkgyergyó and Kászonszék. The covers are damaged, thus its place of origin can only be conjectured by the notation: „Hic obyt Alexander voyvoda transalpin(us) - Anno domini millesimo CCC-mo quarto” (Here Died Alexander, Voivode of Wallachia – in the Year of our Lord 1364). The seat of the Voivode at the time was at Hosszúmező (now Cimplung, Romania), where there still stands beside the Catholic Church a monastery and a chapel, all predating the year mentioned in the codex. The Franciscans’ arrival in Wallachia is mentioned in a papal breve to the Voivode Alexander, dating from this period. The Psalter is in the National Széchényi Library in Budapest. – B: 1020, T: 7614.

Wallaszky, Pál (Paul) (Bagyán 29 January 1742 - Jolsva 29 September 1824) – Literary historian. After attending the Lutheran secondary schools of Selmezbánya (now Schemnitz, Slovakia), Rimaszombat (now Rimavská Sobota, Slovakia) and Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), he studied at German Universities (Leipzig, Halle, Wittenberg). By this time he was already collecting data for his work on the history of Hungarian literature. After his return to Hungary he served as Lutheran pastor from 1769 in Tótkomlós, from 1780 in Cinkota, then from 1783 he was pastor, later dean in Jolsva. Already in Leipzig he published a Latin thesis on István Werbőczy and on the Statutes of Education in Hungary during the reign of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus). His magnum opus is the Conspectus Republicae Litterariae in Hungaria, published in Pozsony and Leipzig in 1785. The book consists of two parts: the first part discusses Hungarian cultural standards up to the Battle of Mohács (1526), the second part covers the period to 1776. The introduction contains the first professionally written Hungarian literary history. His works were written in Latin and Czech but in a strongly Hungarian patriotic vein. He was the first author to create a systematically organized history of Hungarian literature. – B: 1150, 0942, T: 7614.

Wallenberg, Raul Gustav (Kappsta, Sweden, 4 August 1912 - Moscow, 17 July 1947 ?) – Diplomat, architect, tradesman. He came from an ancient Swedish family. He studied architecture and was involved in international trade. During World War II some 700 thousand Jews lived in Hungary, many of them from other countries who found refuge there. They were somewhat restricted but not harmed until 19 March 1944, when Hitler invaded Hungary to have a secure hinterland to his army fighting on the Eastern Front. At this time the deportation of Jews from Hungary to camps in Germany started. In July 1944, the Swedish Government sent Raul Wallenberg to Hungary to rescue as many Jews as he could. In a heroic rescue mission he gave thousands of 'Schutz-Passes' (protection letters) to Jews, thus extending Swedish diplomatic protection over them. He rescued some 100 thousand Jews, mainly from Budapest. In January 1945, while traveling to Debrecen, he disappeared without a trace. He must have been suspected to be an American spy by the Soviets, taken to Moscow and executed. Some reports said that he was still alive after 1947. A memorial was erected, a street and a society were named after him in Budapest. – B: 0950, T: 7103.

War Lord (Hadúr) – An indigenous Hungarian military figure, a character already alluded to in early chronicles. The poet Sándor Aranyrákosi-Székely in his short epic, The Székelys in Transylvania (The Szeklers in Transylvania), published in 1823, first used the designation. The great poet Mihály Vörösmarty later took it up and imaginatively rounded it out in his epic poem, Zalán Futása (The Flight of Zalán), and through it the expression became widely known. The figure is represented everywhere as the Hungarians' national war god. – B: 0942, T: 7614.

Wartha, Vince (Fiume, 17 July 1844 - Budapest, 20 July 1914) – Chemist. After completing the high school at Szeged, he studied at the Joseph Polytechnic of Buda, then in Zürich, Switzerland, where in 1864 he received a technical chemist diploma. On returning to Hungary, at first he was a demonstrator in the Budapest Polytechnic, but by 1865 he was already an assistant lecturer at Heidelberg, Germany, where in the Ruperto Carola University he received his Ph.D. During 1865-1867 he was again a demonstrator in Zürich, later an honorary lecturer (privatdozent). After Hungary's compromise with the Habsburgs in 1867, he was appointed Professor at the Budapest Polytechnic, where he organized the industrial chemistry chair, whose foundation professor he became in 1870. Later, on several occasions he was appointed dean and twice vice chancellor. By invitation he became a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1873. He reorganized the chemical faculty of the Polytechnic in 1882. He was president of the Natural Science Society during 1899-1910, as well as that of the Hungarian Tourist Club in 1899-1902, following Baron Lóránd Eötvös in that position. He retired in 1912. He produced something of permanent value in several fields of his discipline. By analyzing the various types of coal in Hungary, he was the first to determine which types would be suitable for gas production. He also analyzed industrial waters and drinking water. His method for determining the degree of alkalinity of water is still used worldwide. Among several of his inventions one is particular note: the deciphering, in 1892, of the manufacturing secret, sought for centuries, of the glaze with metallic luster of the Gubbio majolica, Italy. With this manufacturing method for the enamel coating, which he named eozin-glaze he enabled the Zsolnay Porcelain Works of Pécs to achieve world recognition. In 1904, commissioned by the Hungarian state he reorganized the Herend Porcelain Plants. As a well-known expert in the ceramic industry, he took active part in Faenza (Italy, famous for its majolica) in the foundation of the ceramics museum the Museo Internazionale delle Ceramiche. He wrote nearly 700 papers and participated in the editing of several professional journals. In his memory the Hungarian Chemists' Society instituted the Vince Wartha memorial medal in 1955. – B: 0883, 1123, T: 7456.

Warsaw Treaty, The (or Warsaw Pact: Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance,) (1955–1991) – It was formed between eight Communist states in Eastern Europe, established at the Soviet Union's initiative and realized during 11-14 May 1955, in Warsaw, Poland. On the one hand, the The Warsaw Treaty was the Soviet Bloc's military response to West Germany's May 1955 integration with NATO Pact in 1954; on the other hand, on 15 May 1955, the foreign ministers of the USA, France, Great Britain and the Soviet Union signed the Austrian State Agreement and they declared Austria's neutrality, which became effective on 27 July 1955. After this date and according to the Yalta Agreement in 1945, the Soviet Union was supposed to withdraw its occupying forces from Czechoslovakia, Poland, Hungary and the German Democratic Republic (GDR, East Germany). The eight member-countries of the Warsaw Treaty (Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, GDR- East Germany, Hungary, Poland, Romania and the Soviet Union) pledged the mutual defense of any member who is attacked; relations among the treaty signatories were based on mutual non-interference in the internal affairs of the member countries, respect for national sovereignty, and political independence. The multi-national Communist armed forces' sole joint action was the Warsaw Treaty involvement in the Czechoslovakian crisis in August 1968. All member countries, with the exception of Romania, participated in the invasion. The Warsaw Treaty's organization was two-fold: the Political Consultative Committee handled civil matters, and the Unified Command of Pact Armed Forces controlled the assigned multi-national forces, with headquarters in Warsaw, Poland. Furthermore, the Supreme Commander of the Warsaw Treaty forces also was the First Deputy Minister of Defense of the Soviet Union. Therefore, although ostensibly an international collective security alliance, the Soviet Union dominated the Warsaw Pact armed forces, as the USA dominated NATO Pact. Among the documents published is the Warsaw Treaty's nuclear war plan, Seven Days to the River Rhine – a short, sharp, shock capturing Western Europe, using no nuclear weapons, in self defense, after a NATO strike. In Prague on 1 July 1991, the Czechoslovak President, Václav Havel (1989–1992), formally ended the Warsaw Treaty after 36 years of military alliance with the Soviet Union. Five months later, the USSR disestablished itself in December 1991. – B: 1031, 1231, T: 7103.

Washington, George, Ancestry of (Bridges Creek, VA, USA, 22 February 1732 - Mount Vernon, VA, USA, 14 December 1799) – First president of USA. In 1016, Edmund II (Ironside), King of England lost the battle against Canute, the Commander of the Danish Army, who thereafter became king not only of Denmark, but also of England and Norway. Edmund II died soon afterwards and his two sons, Edmund and Edward were forced to flee. According to the medieval chroniclers, Ordericus Vitalis and John Fordun, the two exiled princes settled in Hungary, where Edmund, the crown prince died. John of Fordun (died 1384), Scottish chronicler, stated in one of his historical works, that the younger Prince Edward had married Agatha, one of the relatives of the Hungarian King István I (St. Stephen) (997-1038). From their marriage three children were born: Edgar, Margaret (the subsequent Scottish Queen, St Margaret of Scotland, who married Malcolm III) and Christina, who became a nun. The family stepped on English soil again in 1057, after the Norman Conquest. David Hume, Scottish philosopher and historian, stated a similar account of what happened to Edmund II and his descendants. Agatha is being venerated by English Catholics as the Blessed. In contrast, Margaret, the Scottish King's Malcolm III's wife and Queen of Scotland was born English-Hungarian. Their daughter Edith Matilda became the wife of Henry I, by which marriage the Anglo-Saxon, Hungarian, Scottish and Norman royal houses became united. A descendant of Henry I and Edith Matilda, centuries later, was Margaret Butler, who on 3 August 1588 married Lawrence Washington, an ancestor of George Washington, the first president of United States. – B: 1020,T: 7456.

Wass, Count Albert (Szentgyeydi és Czegei) (Válaszút, Transylvania, now Răscruți, Romania, January 1908 - Astor, Florida, USA, 17 February 1998) – Writer, poet, journalist, publisher. He completed his secondary school education in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). Later, he graduated from the Agricultural College in Debrecen. He studied forestry and horticulture in Germany and France, and then returned to manage his estates in Transylvania (Erdély, in Romania since 1920). He wrote poetry, short stories and articles that were published in journals and in Transylvanian weekly papers. His first book was published in Kolozsvár in 1928, under the title Flower Burial (Virágtemetés). He was a founding member of the Transylvanian Fine Arts Guild (Erdélyi Szépművés Céh). He moved to Western Europe at the end of 1944. For a while he lived in Hamburg, Germany, then in 1952, he emigrated to the United States. In Romania, he was condemned as war criminal, but in US court none of the accusations against him prevailed. Between 1957 and 1973, he was Professor of German, French and European Literary History at the University of Florida in Gainesville. In 1962, he founded the American Hungarian Fine Arts Guild (Amerikai Magyar Szépművés Céh) and organized its scientific activities and publishing programs, edited its Newsletter (Értesítő), as well as its review publication, the Transylvanian Quarterly. He played a leading role in the activities of the Transylvanian World Federation and edited the journal Hungarians of Transylvania (Erdélyi Magyarország). In 1970, he founded the Danubian Press Publishing Company, of which he was President. Several literary societies made him a member. He was President of the International Kiwanis Club. 37 volumes of his works were published up to 1989, mostly novels and novelettes. In his writings Wass he most effectively immortalized the atmosphere of the Transylvanian countryside. He also wrote poetry, short stories and plays in a lyric vein. Most of his writings are in Hungarian, but he published a few works in English as well. His novels were published in high print-runs and in many editions. His most notable work is the novel Wolf Pit (Farkasverem), first published in Kolozsvár in 1934, which had many subsequent reprints. The other outstanding masterpiece of Wass is the The Witch of Funtinel (Funtineli boszorkány), first published in 1952, then in German in 1953, then again in Hungarian in 1976. This great story about patriotism and longing for the homeland has extraordinarily beautiful descriptions of landscape, and a riveting story line. An other most popular novel of his is entitled Sword and Sieckle (Kard és kasza), in which he overviewed the Hungarian history and his own family history. His novel: Give me back my Mountains! (Adjátok vissza a hegyeimet!) is also growing in popularity. Before 1990, mostly Hungarian émigré papers published his articles, and some of his English writings appeared in foreign publications. It was only after his death that he became recognized in Hungary, and overnight became a most popular Transylvanian Hungarian author. – B: 1020, 1031, 1257, T: 7617.

Wass, Count Sámuel (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 13 January 1814 - Budapest, 20 March 1879) – Writer of travels, economist. He completed his education in the Austrian Imperial College and in the Lyceum of Kolozsvár, mastered several languages (Romanian, German, French and Latin). After his Lyceum studies he went on extended travels abroad, on which he reported in travel-notes. From 1833 he worked as a public servant. During the 1848-1849 War of Independence from Habsburg rule, he became personal diplomatic envoy of the revolutionary leader and patriot, Lajos (Louis) Kossuth in order to acquire weapons for the Hungarian insurgent army. Count Wass traveled to Istanbul, then to Paris and London and finally to the USA. He purchased at his own expense tens of thousand bayoneted rifles and sent them by ship to the port of the Kingdom of Hungary: Fiume (now Rijeka in Croatia), where it promptly became the booty of the Austrian Habsburg authorities. Learning about the collapse of the War of Independence while he was still in the USA, he found himself in exile. In San Francisco, with the assistance of several of his friends, he founded a gold-smelting and processing plant. His firm earned such good reputation, that he received an order for minting 5, 10, 20 and 50 dollar coins. However, at the end of the 1850s, with the abating of the gold fever, the plant closed down. In 1858, he returned to Hungary and published his overseas experiences in a two-volume work. From 1861 he was a member of the House of Estates of Parliament, took part in the founding of the Land-Bank and he especially pressed for more and more industrial enterprises. – B: 0883, 1604, T: 7456.→Kossuth, Lajos; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Watchmaker's Trade in Hungary – The first data referring to the Hungarian watchmaker's trade are from the 14-15th centuries. From this era only the names of horologists (watch and clock repairers) of northern Hungary (Upland, now Slovakia) and Transylvania (now in Romania) are still extant, the nature of their activities is unknown. It was about at that time that the first, small-sized tower (or town) clocks appeared, though they were a great rarity then and occurred only in royal and aristocratic courts, or in the property of rich burghers of towns and church dignitaries. Their concentration in trade guilds within the historic Kingdom of Hungary first took place around the turn of the 16/17th centuries: in 1571 in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), in 1585 in Szepsi (now Moldavia) and Bodvou in Slovakia, in 1608 in Sárospatak and in 1639 in Kismarton (now Eisenstadt, in Austria). From the areas of the Kingdom of Hungary under Ottoman Turkish occupation for 150 years, the masters of watchmaking found it necessary and advisable to emigrate to safer areas (the remaining Christian parts of the kingdom). After the Ottoman Turks had been forced out of Hungary, during the feverish resettlement era to repopulate devastated areas of the kingdom, many settlers came from abroad, mainly from Germany, amongst them watchmakers as well, who played an important role in the Hungarian watchmakers trade in the subsequent much improved conditions, in the ensuing long period of peace (the later part of the 18th century). Watchmaker's guilds were formed first in Pest in 1701, then in Sopron in 1776, and in Temesvár (now Timișoara, Romania) in 1815. At Szentgotthárd a pocket-watch factory was established in 1896, which was in operation until 1925. In Budapest the making of pendulum clocks began in 1905, and a factory was established there for the manufacture of electric and town/tower clocks, which despite several name-changes and the 1948 nationalization has survived to the present. – B: 1020, T: 7456.

Water Reverence – There are two distinct types of water reverence: (1) the honoring of water as an element, in form of wells, rivers, lakes, honored without regard to the cult of its creatures living in it. These include ancient, sacred wells and the cult of sacred rivers like the Ganges, Jordan and Nile. Based on Christian practice is the ceremony of blessing of the water. The use of sanctified water, not expressly religious but also for superstitious purposes is also included. (2) The water, honoring the home of creatures living in water, which is like the practice of more developed mythological systems. Most typical honoring of water is in Greek mythology, where all the family of the water gods are shown. The water fairies, sirens and water demons with enchanting voices belong to this group. In the religious belief of ancient Hungarians the pure spirits who dwell in sacred gardens played an important part. These are preserved in traditions of pagan past. Well known is the ‘water fairy’ of Hungarian folk tales. – B: 1078, T: 7682.

Wathay, Ferenc (Francis) (Vathay) (Nagyvág, 24 September 1568 - ? after 1606) – Fighting man of the marches, painter and song writer. His father, Lőrinc (Lawrence) Vathay, was Captain of the Fortress of Csesznek. Wathay went to school in Németújvár (now Güssing, Austria) and Sopron. From 1584, at age 16, he was already in the army. In 1602, at the age of 34, he was Vice-Captain of Székesfehérvár when, because of the mass-desertion of the Hajdú soldiers, he became wounded and fell into Turkish captivity. In Belgrade, he managed to escape from the Turks and, on his way home to Hungarian territory, he was recaptured, but he succeeded in escaping anew. However, in the region of Lippa, he fell into Turkish hands once more. He was locked up in the black tower of Constantinople. After this, his fate is not known. It was there that he wrote his self-illustrated songbook, as well as his autobiography (the latter written in February 1605). He was author of the work: History of the Loss of Székesfehérvár 1603 (Székesfehérvár veszéséről való história 1603) (1959). – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Hajdús.

Weber, Henrik (Henry) (Pest, 24 May 1818 - Pest, 14 May 1866) – Painter. He was a student of T. Kaerling in Pest; he continued his studies at the Academy of Art in Vienna under L. Kupelwieser and J.N. Ender. He lived from tutoring and lithographing for years. Toward the end of the 1830s, he made an appearance with scenes from life, e.g. The Dressing of the Bride (A menyasszony öltöztetése), Palm Sunday (Virágvasárnap). In 1840 he went to Munich. On returning to Hungary, he painted some historic works, such as the Death of János Hunyadi (Hunyadi János halála) (1844), and King Solomon in Prison (Salamon király a börtönben) (1852). Between 1845 and 1847 he stayed in Italy, where he painted a number of vedutas (land- or cityscapes) and women in national dress. He was an outstanding portrait painter of his age, e.g. Portrait of the Composer Mihály Mosonyi and his Wife (Mosonyi Mihály zeneszerző és felesége portréja) (ca. 1840), and The Weber Family (1846). A number of the paintings and drawings of this eminent master of Hungarian Biedermeier art are held at the Hungarian National Gallery. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Weber, János (John) (? , 1612 - ? , 1683) – Physician, pharmacist. In 1645, he opened a chemist shop at Eperjes (now Prešov, Slovakia), as a qualified chemist. Between 1661 and 1667 he was Chief Justice of the town. In 1663, he was given a title of Hungarian nobility. He took part in the conspiracy of Wesselényi, consequently he was imprisoned from 1670 to 1675. Afterward, from 1677 to 1682, he was again Chief Justice of Eperjes. He also acted as the Doctor for the Wesselényi family, but where he received his medical qualification is unknown. His works include: Janus bifrons, seu speculum physico politicum (1662), Lectio principum (1665). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Weichinger, Károly (Charles) (Győr, 12 October 1893 - Budapest, 25 January 1982) – Architect. He received his Degree from the Budapest Polytechnic in 1920. From 1921 to 1944 he was Professor of Architecture at the National School of Industrial Art. In 1945 he became Deputy Professor in the town-planning department at the Budapest Polytechnic; from 1946 Professor of Public Building Planning, later Head of Department until his retirement in 1969. The central subject of his scientific work was the study of esthetic considerations in architectural art and engineering constructions. He obtained his Ph.D. in Engineering, in 1976. He was a member of several international architectural juries. His plans include Elizabeth Szilágyi Girls' Secondary School, Budapest (Szilágyi Erzsébet Leánygimnázium, Budapest) (1937); Central Town Hall of Budapest (Budapesti Központi városháza), co-authored with Róbert K. Kertész (1940); The Pauline Monastery of Mount Gellért in Budapest, (A gellérthegyi pálos kolostor, Budapest), and Architectural and Esthetical Considerations of Transportation Buildings (Közlekedési építmények építészeti és esztétikai vizsgálata), with István Hámor (1963), and Economic Considerations in the Building of Public Educational Facilities (Általános iskolák építésének gazdaságossági vizsgálata), with István Hámor (1967). He received the Kossuth Prize in 1954. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Weiner, Leo (Budapest, 16 April 1885 - Budapest, 14 September 1960) – Composer , music educator. He received his first music and piano lessons from his brother, but soon he taught himself. He entered the Musical High School in Budapest in 1901. He studied with János (John) Koessler and completed his musical studies at the Franz Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest (1902-1906). Afterwards he took a long study tour in Vienna, Berlin, Leipzig and Paris. He taught briefly at a Music School, and he was a coach of solo singers at the Budapest Comic Opera (Vigopera). He taught at the Academy of Music from 1908 to 1957 and he continued it there even after his retirement. In 1928, he founded a chamber orchestra under his leadership, which performed without a conductor. He composed some 30 major musical works, including his first orchestral work, Carnival (Farsang) in 1907; the Hungarian Fantasy, Serenade, Op 3, a String Trio, three String Quartets, two Violin Sonatas, five Divertimenti for orchestra, a symphonic poem, numerous Chamber and Piano Pieces and the Fox Dance (Róka Tánc). He had an interest in the Hungarian folk music. Leo Weiner was one of the leading Hungarian music educators of the first half of the twentieth century. His name is attached to the training of Weiner and Bartók string quartets. He is credited the reputation of Hungarian musicians for their accuracy, qualities and depth of interpretation in chamber music. Weiner was a skilled composer, one of the outstanding representatives of the so-called conservative form of new Hungarian music. He received numerous awards including the Coolidge Prize, Schwunda Prize, the Volkmann Prize, the Erkel Prize, the Haynald Prize, and twice the Kossuth Prize. A music school bears his name. – B: 1031, 1197, 0883, 1153, T: 7103.

Weiss, Baron József (Joseph) (Pest, 11 April 1857 - Budapest 25 December 1922) – Prominent Hungarian industrialist. He studied at the Academy of Commerce. In 1876 he managed a German export company. When he was twenty years old, he and his brother founded the first cannery in Hungary. A second factory was established for supplying the cannery with boxes, which in 1889 expanded to produce ammunition. In 1892, he opened the first ammunition factory in Csepel (a suburb of Budapest), which was later equipped with a copper smelter foundry, rolling mill and large-scale steel-works. The factory in Csepel, the largest of the Monarchy with 30,000 employees, was dedicated exclusively to the production of war supplies during World War I. After the war, he turned to the manufacture of agricultural machinery, enamel ware, bicycles, sowing machines, and similar items. Later he founded a baize factory, an airplane plant and a plant for the production of engines. He was one of the founders and Vice President of the National Industrialist Association. From 1915, he was a Member of the Upper House of the Parliament and in 1918, he was granted the title of Baron. – B: 0883, T: 7667.

Weissmüller, Peter János (Johnny; Tarzan) (Szabadfalu, Freidorf, Temesvár (now Timișoara, Romania) 2 June 1904 - Acapulco, Mexico, 20 January 1984) – Actor, sportsman. His mother was a Hungarian and his father a German, both were Hungarian citizens. In 1907, the family emigrated to the USA, and settled in Chicago. On the advise of a doctor Johnny took up swimming and he became an athlete. He was educated at the University of Chicago. At the Olympic Games in 1924 and in 1928, he won five Gold Medals for swimming. He broke the record in each race. From 1921 to 1929, he won every free style race he entered. He was the first who swam 100 m within 1 minute. He started acting in film in 1929, and even advertised swimsuits. The real break-through came with Tarzan, the Ape Man, in 1932. This prompted a long string of sequels such as: Tarzan and his Mate (1934), Tarzan Escapes (1936), Tarzan's Secret Treasure (1941), and Tarzan's New York Adventure (1942). For Metro Goldwin Mayer he acted some 14 Tarzan films all of which teamed as the former University of Chicago student with Maureen O'Sullivan. He made 6 more Tarzan films for RKO, and 16 Jungle Jim TV movies for Columbia Pictures (1948). After that he retired from movies and turned to private business in Fort Lauderdale, Florida. Finally, he lived in complete seclusion in Acapulco, Mexico. In the last stage of his life, he sat in a wheelchair, with injuries as a result of a car accident. – B: 1037, T: 7103.

Weiss, Xavér Ferenc (Farcis) (Nagyszombat, now Trnava, Slovakia, 16 March 1717 - Buda, 10 January 1785) – Jesuit mathematician and astronomer. Quite early in his life he entered the Jesuit Order. From 1753 he was a professor at the University of Nagyszombat, where together with Miksa (Maximilian) Hell he established an observatory. From 1756 on he regularly published his observations. For studying youth he published a book in 1759, entitled: Astronomiae Physica juxta Newtoni Principia Breviarium etc. to acquaint them with the fundamentals of Newtonian and astronomical mechanics. When in 1773, the Edict of the Ruler Emperor József II (Joseph) dissolved the Jesuit Order, he was allowed to stay in his position because of the high esteem he generally enjoyed. Between 1777 and 1785, he lived and worked in Buda, as the director of the observatory there. He corresponded widely with the astronomers of his era. He especially gained distinction for his numerous and very accurate observations concerning the various phenomena about the moons of the planet Jupiter. – B: 0883, 1020, T: 7456.→Hell, Miksa.

Wekerle, Sándor Sr. (Alexander) (Mór, 14 November 1848 - Budapest, 26 August 1921) – Prime Minister of Hungary, as well as treasurer, liberal politician, the best-known financial expert of the dualism period under Emperor-King Francis Joseph (Ferenc József). He received his law degree from the University of Budapest, and from 1870, he worked as an official of the Treasury. From 1886 on, as an Undersecretary of State, he was the effective Head of the Ministry of Finance, soon to become Treasurer. The system of taxation and economic and financial reconstruction of the Habsburg dualist state were to his credit. From 1892 to 1895, he was the first middle-class Prime Minister of Hungary and during his term of office he achieved a completely balanced budget and the change-over to the gold currency system. The further separation of Church and State, by means of liberal laws in church policy, constituted Wekerle's most important field of activity. After the political crisis of 1905, the King appointed him, as a responsible politician of the 1867 Compromise, to head a coalition government, composed of the opposition parties (1906-1910); concurrently he also headed the Ministry of Finance. During his third term as prime minister, from 20 August 1917 to 28 October 1918, he was unable to prevent the dissolution of the Habsburg Monarchy, though he kept in addition both the portfolios of the Ministry of Finance and the Ministry of the Interior. After the dismemberment of Historic Hungary, during the proletarian dictatorship, he was arrested and held hostage, but during the Counter-Revolution he was only active in the economic field. He was member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Ferenc József; Wekerle Sándor Jr.

Wekerle, Sándor Jr. (Alexander) (Budapest, 26 June 1878 - Budapest, 23 December 1963) – Politician, minister of finance. He studied law at the University of Budapest and in universities abroad. Finally, he obtained a doctorate of law from the University of Budapest. From 1901 to 1906, he was an official at the Ministry of Commerce; during 1906 he lectured in financial law and economics at the College of Commerce. From 1906 to 1910 he was Member of Parliament with a program for the Constitutional Party. In 1914, he joined the Army for military service. After the war until 1922 he lectured again in financial law at the College, becoming professor in 1926. From 1927, he was a Member of Parliament in the Upper House. From 5 September 1928 until 24 August 1931, he was Minister of Finance in the Bethlen Government. From November 1943 till November 1944, he was Vice-President of the Upper House of Parliament. He published widely in the legal field. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Wekerle Sándor Sr.

Wellmann, Oszkár (Oscar) (Szászrégen, now Reghin, Romania, 8 October 1876 - Budapest, 4 May 1943) – Physician and veterinary. He obtained his medical degree from the University of Budapest in 1900; his veterinary degree was received from the Veterinary College in 1897. Until 1901, he was demonstrator in the Biology Department there. From 1901 to 1905, he practiced as a veterinary surgeon. In 1907, he was the first to receive veterinary doctorate in Hungary. From 1910 until 1934 he was Professor of Animal Husbandry at the Veterinary College. He was dealing with biology, biochemistry, problems of metabolism and genetics of animal husbandry. He was the first in Hungary to carry out quantitative chemical analyses on animals. His research on rachitis had considerable significance. He recognized the importance of mineral salts and vitamins, thereby strongly contributing to the development of animal husbandry in Hungary. In 1926, he elaborated the system of registration for cattle and that became the basis of the international agreements concluded in Rome in 1936. Together with József (Josedh) Marek, he published the results of his scientific research on animal experimenting in a monograph that gained international acclaim. The Turkish and Persian governments invited him to coordinate their organization of the livestock breeding programs. His activity heralded a new era in the history of Hungarian livestock breeding. His literary activities were also significant. His collaboration laid the foundation of the Union of European Livestock Raisers, established only after World War II in 1947. He was Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1936, ordinary 1941). His works include: General Animal Husbandry, vols. i, ii (Általános állattenyésztéstan, I-II) (1921-1928), The Pathology of Rachitis (A rachitis kóroktana), with J. Marek (1932), Raising Calf (A borjú felnevelése) (1928). – B: 0883, 1562, 1730, T: 7550, 7456.

Went, István (Stephen) (Arad, now in Romania, 20 March 1899 - Debrecen, 29 May 1963) – Physician. He received his medical degree from the University of Budapest in 1923. From 1926-1927 he was on state scholarship in France, studied the albumen and lipid metabolism, and from 1927 to 1929 with a Rockefeller scholarship he was in the USA, where he studied in the Biology Department of the Harvard School of Public Health. He became Honorary Lecturer in Patho-biology in 1930. From 1932, until his death, he was Professor of Biology and Head of Department at the University of Debrecen. He received a doctorate in medicine in 1952. He dealt with biology, pathology and immunology, in particular with the pathomechanism of anaphylactic shock, synthetic hormone-antigenes and coronary reflexes; also with the theoretical research on histaminasoprotein and its therapic application, among others. He was Corresponding Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1948). His works include: General Pathology (Általános kórtan), with others (1939), Biology (1946), Immono-chemistry (Immunokémia), co-authored, (1959). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1957. – B: 1730, T: 7654.

Weöres, Sándor (Alexander) (Szombathely, 22 July 1913 - Budapest, 22 January 1989) –

Poet, dramatist, literary translator. He came from a military officer and farmer family. He studied at the Lutheran high school in Pápa. He published his first poem at the age of 15. At the University of Pécs he briefly studied law, then philosophy and obtained a PhD in 1938. In his mid 30s, he received the Baumgarten Award and the Baumgarten Prize, and he was able to make extensive travel in North Europe and the Far East. Later, he visited Italy, China, USA and Britain. Between 1941 and 1950 he worked as a clerk in various libraries and became a co-editor of the literary publication Our Fate (Sorsunk). From 1951 he earned his living as a freelance writer. The manifestations of his extraordinary aptitude for literary form were already present in poems. His name became well known in the literary column of West (Nyugat). In the Soviet military occupation of Hungary, and the change of regime after World War II, evidence of political commitment was absent from his poetry; he rejected the theory and practice of Socialist Realism, and rather researched Eastern philosophy, Polynesian myths and wrote children's nursery rhymes. In 1946 he married the poetess Amy Károlyi. From 1949 to 1964, his poetry was suppressed by the Communist Government of Hungary. A selection from his writings are: It is Cold Today (Hideg van) (1943), Praising of the Creation (A teremtés dicsérte) (1938, 1986), Alphabet of Love (A szerelem ábécéje) (1956), The Tower of Silence (A hallgatás tornya) (1956), Drowning Saturn (Merülő Saturnus) (1968), Three Sparrow with Six Eyes (Három veréb hat szemmel) (1977), Song of the Wounded Earth (A sebzett föld éneke) (1989). Between 1949 and 1956 only his literary translations and child-poetry were allowed to be published, e.g. Tuft (Bóbíta) (1952). Weöres translated works from Po Csü Li, Csü Juan, Rusztaveli, Shakespeare, Santarcangeli, etc. His translating works embraced practically all fields and periods of world literature. He especially excelled in translating the works of antique masters, which he enriched with his colorful imagination and ingenuity of language. He received the Kossuth Prize and the Austrian State Prize. He is the most outstanding representative of 20th century Hungarian lyric poetry. A theater in Szombathely, a high school and a website bear his name. – B: 1031, 1257, T: 7617, 7103.

Werbőczy, István (Stephen) (Werbőcz, Verbőczy) (Verbőc? ca. 1458 - Buda, 13 October 1542) – Politician, jurist. He was educated in Hungary and also abroad: Bologna, Padua and Vienna. He worked at the Royal Chancery. He was the deputy of the County of Ugocsa to the Diet of 1498, where with his eloquence and scholarship he impressed the members. He was one of the leading figures of the political party representing the lesser nobility. In 1517 Werbőczy was appointed the guardian of the infant King Lajos II (Louis), and was sent abroad to solicit aid of the Christian world against the Turks. On his return he found the strife of parties fiercer than ever and the country in anarchy. In 1525 at the Diet of Hatvan, he delivered a reconciliatory oration which so affected the delegates that they elected him Palatine. When, in the following Diet, he was deposed, he retired from public life until the election of King János I (John) (János Szapolyai), who made him chancellor. He devoted himself to the study of jurisprudence, and the result of his labors was the famous and influential Opus tripartitum juris consuetudinarii inclyti regni hungariae (the Tripartitum – Triple Book - Hármaskönyv), published in 1517, which was the law-book, a collection of laws and customs in the Kingdom of Hungary (Corpus juris Hungarici) until 1848. In 1514, he actively participated in the defeat of György (George) Dózsa's Peasant Uprising. He was one of the initiators of the Law of 1514, which spelled out that The Serfs are Tied to the Ground (Glebe adstricti, or: A jobbágyok földhözköttöttek). In 1541, he was appointed the Chief Justice of Hungary; soon afterwards he was poisoned and died. – B: 0883, 1257, 1153, T: 7103.→King Lajos II; King János I; Dózsa, György.

Wesselényi, Baron Miklós Jr. (Nicholas) (Zsibó. now Jibou in Romania, 30 December 1796 - Pest, 21 April 1850) – Politician, political writer. He joined the political life as one of the organizers of the Transylvanian (Erdély) famine campaign. In 1820 he became a close friend of Count István (Stephen) Széchenyi, with whom he went on a study trip to France and England in 1821-1822. For some time he was Count Széchenyi's leading supporter; however, from 1830 on, he started to follow a separate course. From 1830 to 1833, he was the leading organizer of the Reformist Opposition in the Diet. He tried to curb the absolutistic Habsburg rule by means of a political lawsuit. He was a popular and effective figure in the reformist diets of Hungary. In 1831, he was made an honorary Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. It was in 1833, that his first book, On Prejudices (Balítéletekről), was published. In it he pointed out the misjudgements of the Hungarian nobility (gentry) opposing any ideas of progress and he strongly criticized the political and social conditions. In 1834 the Viennese Court had enough of his activities: in Transylvania and in Hungary separately took court actions against him. The Transylvanian lawsuit never reached the sentencing stage, while in the Hungarian lawsuit of disloyalty he was defending himself for four years.

In his age he was one of the outstanding rural economists of Transylvania. The romantic aspects of his person: he was a powerful orator, great hunter, fencer, swimmer, the rescuer of hundreds during the devastating flooding of Pest by the Danube in 1838 – he was “the boatman of the flood”; all these aspects of his character left a deep impression on the public mind. Soon after the flood, on 31 January 1839, in his lawsuit he was sentenced to three years imprisonment. On 10 May 1840, he received pardon, but he left his prison almost completely blind. Until 1848 he was the sub-prefect of County Kolozs in Transylvania, but because he was blind since 1844, lived in Zsibó. The most important product of this phase in his life was his work of 1844 entitled Manifesto to the Nation Regarding the Hungarian and Slavic Nationalities (Szózat a magyar és a szláv nemzetiség ügyében), in which he drew attention to the developing Panslavism of the times. In 1848, despite the loss of his eyesight, he played a significant role in the Diet of Kolozsvár to pronounce the union between Transylvania and Hungary. On his way from Zsibó to Pest he contracted pneumonia and died. His funeral became a national demonstration of sorrow. – B: 1230, 0883, 1153, 1257, T: 7456.→Széchenyi, Count István.

Wesselényi Conspiracy – In 1663, the Turks resumed the war in Hungary, aimed to occupy northern Hungary which was ruled by the Habsburgs, whereby to secure for the Turks a route to Vienna. They occupied Érsekújvár (now Nové Zámky, Slovakia). In 1664, the Imperial Army, led by Count Raimondo Montecuccoli, won a major victory over the Turks at Szentgotthárd (St Gotthard). However, the Austrian Government of Lipót I (Leopold) (1654-1705) signed a disgraceful peace treaty for Hungary at Vasvár on 10 August 1664. The Treaty left in the hand of the Turks all their new acquisitions, whereby the Habsburgs wanted to keep the Turks from attacking Vienna. The bad treaty caused such an outcry in Hungary that even the aristocrats turned against Emperor Leopold (Lipót) I. They regarded Leopold unfit to rule and did not even fulfill his royal oath regarding the defense of the country. Now they decided, on the basis of jus resistendi, enshrined in the Hungarian Golden Bull, (the Constitution) (1224), to look for a better ruler. The organizing group included: the Palatine, the Archbishop of Esztergom, Hungary's Chief Justice, the Regent of Transylvania (now in Romania) and many others, and they began discussions with foreign powers. The conspiracy was discovered by the Viennese police force. The two leaders, Count Ferenc (Francis) Wesselényi, the Palatine, and the Archbishop of Esztergom had passed away in the meantime. Count Miklós (Nicholas) Zrinyi, the outstanding military commander became victim of a suspicious 'hunting accident', while the remaining leaders, Count Ferenc (Francis) Nádasdy, Chief Justice of Hungary, Count Ferenc Kristóf (Francis Christopher) Frangepán and Count Péter Zrinyi were arrested, Ferenc Rákóczi I was ransomed. The three members of the high nobility were sentenced to death by the Austrian Court of Justice. On 30 April 1671 they were beheaded in Vienna (Wiener Neustadt). On the same day Ferenc (Francis) Bónis was executed in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). Several others who were arrested were imprisoned; finally, the estates of 300 participants were confiscated. Hungary was made a Province of Austria. Ilona, the daughter of Péter Zrinyi, escaped but his son was caught, and thrown into an Austrian cellar-prison, where this last male member of the Zrinyi family, deprived even of his name, died as 'Gnade Péter' after 20 years in prison. The case of freedom was kept alive through Péter Zrinyi's escaped daughter, Ilona Zrinyi, also her son, Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II, and Ilona Zrinyi's husband Count Imre (Emery) Thököly, all of whom slipped out from the hands of his enemies. – B: 1231, 1288, T: 7103. → Vasvár Peace Treaty; Czegédi, István; Lipót I King and Emperor; Wesselényi, Count Ferenc; Zrinyi, Count Péter; Rákóczi I, Prince Ferenc; Frangepán, Count Ferenc Kristóf; Nádasdy, Count Ferenc; „Decade of Mourning”.

Wesselényi, Count Ferenc (Francis) (Count of Hadad and Murány) (1605 - Zólyomlipcse, now Lupča, Slovakia, 23 March 1667) – Military commander, palatine. In his youth he converted to Catholicism. He was raised at the Jesuit school in Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia). His physical quality predestined him for a military career. As a young man, he participated in several battles against the Turks. He also helped Poland with troops against the Russianas and Tartars and he was granted Polish citizenship and an estate. He was made a count by Ferdinand II of Austria and was appointed Commander of the castle of Fülek (now Filakovo, Slovakia). In 1647, he was appointed General and he fought against the Swedes and later against Prince György (George) György Rákóczi I (1630-1648) of Transylvania (Erdély, now Romania). In 1644, he occupied the castle of Murány (now Muráň, Slovakia). On 15 March 1655, he was elected Palatine by the Diet in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). In 1661, he had to check the revolting Imperial troops reluctant to leave Hungary. In 1662, he took part in the debates on protestant matters in favour of the protestants. In 1663, he fought against the Turks. In 1665, he joined the conspirators holding their meetings in Trencsén (now Trenčín, Slovakia) and Zólyom (now Zvolen, Slovakia) but he died before the conspiracy was discovered. His widow was interned in Vienna and his estates were confiscated. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7103.→Wesselényi Conspiracy.

Western Hungary – The westernmost part of Historic Hungary, called Sentinel Region (Őrvidék) now known as Burgenland, Austria. After the break-up of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy in 1918, the Austrian Government submitted its claim to the western strip on 17 November 1918. Article 27 of the Versailles–Trianon Treaty of 4 June 1920, annexed the territory to Austria. According to the 1910 census 291,800 people lived on the 4,046 km<sup>2</sup> area. Among them 217,072 were German-speaking (74%), 43,633 Croatian (15%) and 26,225 (9%) Hungarian. The disputed area was to be handed over to Austria on 28 August 1921. Earlier, an armed uprising in Western Hungary began unfolding, helped by the Ragged Guard (Rongyosgárda). The uprising was successful, it established the Lajta Banate (Lajta Bánság) as an independent entity. The area had also been discussed for Czech initiative as the site of a Czech Corridor to Yugoslavia. Finally, consultations started in Venice under Italian auspices. The Agreement of Venice led to a referendum – the only one allowed and held after the dismemberment of Hungary. The referendum was held on 14 December 1921.

The settlements involved in the plebiscite were: Ágfalva, Balf, Sopronbánfalva, Fertőboz, Fertőrákos, Harka, Kópháza, Nagycenk and the town Sopron. Though the smaller villages tended to bend towards Austria, finally the Hungarian majority of Sopron proved decisive. Of all those 26,900 with voting right 24,063 voted (87.7% participation rate) 15,334 fő (65.16%) voted for Hungary, 8,227 persons (34.84%) for Austria (mostly those with German mother tongue), and with 502 invalid votes. Of all the 35,009 inhabitants of Sopron 18,994 had voting right; here with 89.2% participation rate 72.7% voted for Hungary. Seven villages outside Sopron with 7,900 voting right and 83.9% participation rate 54.6% voted for Austria. Majority vote for Hungary occurred only at Nagycenk, Fertőboz és Kópháza; while Ágfalva, Balf, Sopronbánfalva and Harka remained with Austria. In memory of the Sopron plebiscite the Hungarian parliament in its enactment of the plebiscite, in act XXIX of year 1922 rewarded thee town of Sopron with the title Civitas fidelissima, i.e. Most Faithful Town, where soon afterwards the so-called Fidelity Gate was erected on the southern side of the 61 m high Fire Tower.

Following the annexation, protests and small fightings started to erupt in another ten villages. As a result plebiscite was extended and held also in these villages, which led to the return to Hungary, between 10 January and 9 March 1923, the following settlements: Narda (formerly Kisnarda and Nagynarda), Felsőcsatár (formerly Alsócsatár and Felsőcsatár), Vaskeresztes (at the time Németkeresztes and Magyarkeresztes), Horvátlovő, Pornóapáti, Szentpéterfa, and also Ólmod. Szentpéterfa for playing the leading role in the plebiscite issue later received the title of "Communitas Fidelissima", i.e. Most Faithful Village. In addition to the above yet another village returned to Hungary along the western edge of the new borders created by the Treaty of Trianon: the village Szomoróc of County Vas, whose inhabitants in armed fightings, and helped by the border guards stationed there forced out the occupying forces on 1 August 1920. Although the village came under Serb-Croat-Slovene occupation, after lengthy negotiations the village Szomoróc again joined Hungary on 8 February 1922. Now with the neighboring village of Kercaszomor it is sometimes regarded as one settlement.

Today, Hungarians are well represented in Alsóőr and Felsőőr (Unterwart and Overwart), and also Felsőpulya and Órsziget. There are significant numbers of Hungarians in Kismarton and Boldogasszony. In 1991, the Hungarian population of Burgenland was 6,800. The gradual decrease of the population effects all populations of Burgenland, because they slowly move into more favorable areas of Austria. – B: 1031, 1078, 1230, 1134, 2061, T: 7103, 7456. → Rugged Guard; Lajta Banate; Civitas Fidelissima; Trianon Peace Treaty.

Weszelszky, Gyula (Julius) (Aknaszlatina, now Szolotivno, Ukraine, 10 May 1872 - Budapest, 20 June 1940) – Physician. In 1895, he became a pharmacist in the Medical School of University of Budapest, obtaining his Doctorate of Chemistry in 1898. From 1896, he was demonstrator under Professor Béla Lengyel in the Chemistry Department No. 2 there. From 1898 to 1937, he was Professor of Pharmaceutical Probation-course. He became also an Honorary Lecturer in Inorganic Chemistry in 1912. From 1918, he was Head of the Department of Radiology. He was engaged in the study of radioactivity, the healing-effect of radiation and medicinal mineral waters. He worked out a method for the analysis of emanation-measurement of mineral waters. His works include: Chemical investigation of the products of the Hévíz-Lake of Keszthely (A keszthelyi Hévíz-tó termékeinek chemiai vizsgálata) (1911), On the Radioactivity and Origin of the Mineral Waters of Budapest (A budapesti hévizek radioaktivitásáról és eredetéről) (1912), The radioactivity (A radioaktivitás) (1917); On the Juvenile Waters (A juvenilis vizekről) (1927). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Weszprémi Codex – A manuscript compiled for the use of the Clarissa Nuns in the beginning of the 16th century. It is a small codex on 75 octavo paper folios with a truncated end: a valuable Hungarian language relic. It is the work of two anonymous scribes. The codex contains a homily on the sufferings of Christ, and a work by St Bonaventura on the perfections of life. István (Stephen) Horváth, who first made its existence public dedicated it to the memory of István (Stephen) Weszprémi, physician, and one time health officer of the City of Debrecen, after whom the codex is named. It is in the collection of the Library of the University of Budapest. – B: 1078, 1257, T: 7617. → Weszprémi, István.

Weszprémi, István (Stephen) (Csanády, Tsanádi) (Veszprém, 13 August 1723 - 13 March 1799) – Physician, medical historian. In the Reformed College of Debrecen he was a student of István (Stephen) Hatvani. From 1752 on, he was on scholarship in Zurich, in 1753 at Utrecht, in 1754-1755, he did medical studies in London. In 1756, he obtained a medical degree from Utrecht. From 1757, he was Senior Physician of Debrecen for 42 years. Empress Maria Theresa awarded him with a gold medal. Weszprémi was one of the greatest Hungarian polyhistorians of the 18th century. He refuted the immortality of the soul. In 1755, to fight the bubonic plague he suggested protective inoculation. His works on pathological anatomy were pioneering. In extensive correspondence he collated the biographies and bibliographies of medical men. The resulting 4-volume work treats the course of life, professional activities of the Hungarian and Transylvanian physicians, but in his notes there was plenty of space for cultural history as well. The Hungarian Medical Historical Society established an István Weszprémi memorial medal to be yearly awarded to a researcher of medical history. His works include: The Grand Question debated or an Essay to prove that the Soul of Man is not neither can it be immortal (Dublin, 1755), Succincta medicorum Hungariae et Transylvaniae biographiae, I-IV (1774-1787). – B: 0883, 1730, T: 7456.→Veszprémi Codex.

‘Whip of God’ (Flagellum Dei, ‘Isten Ostora’) – In Western European legends this moniker was the dreaded name, later the title and symbol of Attila, the Hun. These legends suggested that also Attila addressed himself as such. According to surviving medieval Hungarian legends, during the western military campaigns, tribal leader Lehel called his troops ‘whips of God’. – B: 1078, 1020, T: 7658.→Attila; Lehel, Horn of.

White Army – Name of every army, which fought the Communist Red Army. During 1919 in Russia, the armies commandeered by generals Demikin, Wrangel and Kolcsak were known as the White Armies. In Hungary, the army of Admiral Miklós Horthy was likewise known by the same name. – B: 1078, T: 3233.→Horthy, Miklós.

White Color – The Ural-Altai nations identified everything that was excellent and of quality by the color white. The Sun rose from the East; therefore the color of the East was white. This adjective frequently designated Eastern nations. According to Procopius, the eastern Huns were called White Huns, because they did not mix with foreign races. In regard to towns, the adjective ‘white’ meant the capital city; therefore the capital of Pannonia was Székesfehérvár (fehér=white), the country in Transylvania under the authority of the gyula was called Gyulafehérvár. The capital of the Avars – at the confluence of the Danube and Sava (Száva) rivers – was called Nándor, or Nándorfehérvár, which later became the capital of the Bulgarians under the name ‘Bolgár-Fehérvár’, the present day Belgrade, Yugoslavia. In the same manner the name of the Croatian capital – imitating the Avar practice is ‘Tenger-Fehérvár’, later Zara. In Hungarian traditions the color of white in every case means purification, innocence and virginity. In Christianity, white denotes divine light, perfection, purity and innocence. On the other hand, among equestrian peoples white color signified religious differences. – B: 0942, 1188, 1136, T: 7682.

White Horse – The high regard for the white color by early Hungarians gave the white horse a special significance. Its presentation as a gift was considered to be a special honor. During the sacrifice to the gods, so often mentioned by the chronicler Anonymus, a white horse was offered. In the daily life white signified the ruler or someone in high regard. In all the legends concerning the land in the Carpathian Settlement we find mention of the Hungarians purchasing the land for a white horse. Although a legend is not a historic fact, it shows the memory of an ancient legal practice behind it. It was the symbolic act, later the white flag, the calling upon the submission or surrender of land. – B: 0942, 1020, T: 7682.

White Horse Legend – This legend preserves ancient Hungarian unwritten laws from the Settlement era. Medieval Hungarian historians used part of this oral tradition in their works about the different phases of the Settlement of Hungary. They bought the lands bordered by the Bodrog, the Sajó, and the Danube and Tisza rivers from the Bulgar chief Zalán (Szalán), possibly the last Khagan of the Avars, for 12 white horses. Árpád bought the area of Bihar for a white horse from Mén-Marót. The Ancient Chronicle and its sequels contain this legend in a more complete form. It says the Hungarians exchanged one white horse, a golden saddle and a bridle to the Bulgar chieftain in exchange for land, pasture and water. The legends surrounding land acquisitions reflect an ancient unwritten custom, a symbolic ceremony equivalent to a contract. – B: 1134, 1020, T: 3240.→ Árpád; Szalán, Prince; Mén-Marót; White Horse Sacrifice.

White Horse Sacrifice – According to ancient belief, the ruler is the descendant of the Sun, hence the connection between the Sun and the white horse was established. Originally, the cult of the white horse was practiced among the people of the desert spreading to the Iranian and Indian people. Their early writings mention, that the white horse is the beast of the Sun. Since the Sun rose from the east, the color of east is also white. The sacrifice of the white, never harnessed nor ridden horse was carried out facing the East. – B: 1151, T: 7682.→ White Horse Legend.

Whitehorse, Son of – One of the most unique Hungarian totemistic tales whose hero is empowered with superhuman characteristics. Such features unmistakably attach these tales to the Sun-cult. At the same time he is a nation founder who defeats his adversaries in the ‘Kőmorzsoló’ (Stone-grinder), the ‘Fanyűvő’ (Tree- uprooter) and the ‘Vasgyűrű’ (Iron-ring). These are symbolic figures of the national social order and become his servants. He also defeats the Lord of the Underworld, pursues him, and enters the underworld. On ‘duck’s leg rotating castles he triumphs over the six, the twelve and the twenty three headed dragons to free the three princesses. In his travels he finds the nest of a giant bird and saves the young birds in a hailstorm. The grateful griffin takes him up to heaven but during their flight the food supply runs out and our hero cuts into one of his thighs and gives it to the bird. On arrival the bird swallows him then regurgitates him, making his twice as strong and handsome as before. He then marries the youngest princess. The variations on the legend are recognized in the tales of the Planet Saver, John Strong, and Dragon Slayer and in certain aspects of the Golden Haired Twins. While similar themes are evident in other parts of Europe, their stories are not as richly illustrated and forceful as this one. It is the most popular version of the Hungarian fairy tales, and there are more than fifty slightly different versions of it. – B: 1501, T: 3240.

White Huns – Hephtalites in part, the successors of the Kushans. The Kiderite Kingdom, created between ca. AD 400 and 450 in Gandhara and Kashmir, connected the two confederations. These peoples were also the descendants of the Yuezhi, and for a few decades created an independent Principality headed by Prince Kidara. They rid themselves of the weakening Sassanian over-lordship; but their rule did not last long. The Hephtalites consisted – as their Greek name suggests – of seven tribes. In large part they were the western branch of the Hsiung-nu (Huns), and following numerous break-ups, moved southwest. First they occupied the Oxus watershed, then Bactria, where the Kushans and the Kidarites joined them. According to stone and coin inscriptions, the Hephtalites considered themselves by blood and legal right the successors of the Kushans – as they in fact were. The seven tribes’ other members were the predecessors of the Jassi (Yazigs), the Sakarauls (a.k.a. Saka uraka, i.e. Royal Scythians), the Petchenegs (or Patzinaks; in Hungarian: pecsenyeg or besenyő) and the Sabirs. The first notable Hephtalite ruler, Khingila I successfully defeated the Persians, also mentioned by Greek historian, Procopius (ca. 500-565 AD). However, in 484 AD, they suffered a defeat from the Persian king Kobad (488-497 and 499-531). As a result they moved toward east to conquer India. An able tegin (leader), Toramana (485-520 AD) led the seven tribes, which very quickly occupied the same territories that formerly belonged to the Kushans. Toramana's son, Mihirakula (520-544 AD) enlarged the empire. However, due to his destruction of the Buddhist temples and priesthods, created much antipathy among the Hindus. They united against him and a local ruler defeated them in Bengal. Mihirakula however survived, fled to Kashmir, where he ruled until his death. His younger brother, Pravarasena I, then Pravarasena II, Lakhana and Khingila II ruled for another 100 years in Kashmir and in the eastern part of Punjab. About 50% of the Hephtalites settled in India and in the mountainous Hunza Valley. Some of the Djats of Punjab, the Rajputs of Rajanistan and the people of Gujarat are their descendants, as evidenced by their traditions and culture. However, the Hephtalite leaders and warriors fled westward in ca. 560 AD, when they suffered defeat from the Turkish Kaganate. Previously the Turks defeated the uar-huns or var-huns, i.e. the Avars and the kindred Zhuan-Zhuans. These two tribes also joined the Hephtalites. It seems that the more numerous Avars took over leadership of the tribal confederation, as Byzantine sources already refer to them as Avars. In 565 AD the Avars requested from Emperor Justinian II permission to settle. After years of fighting the Avars defeated the Gepids, then occupied from the west and the east Pannonia Inferior and Pannonia Superior, i.e. the present-day Great Hungarian Plains and Transylvania in the Carpathian Basin. This is how the Avar Empire came into being and the Avars became the immediate predecessors of the Hungarians. Therefore, the Hungarians have on the one-side Saka (Scythian)-Hephtalite-Avar predecessors. – B: 7694, T: 7617.→Avars; Kushans; Scythians, Petchenegs; Sabirs; Jazygs; Yuezhi.

White Mourning – Originally, the customary color worn in time of mourning was white, not black. The Hungarian wife of King Louis X of France, Princess Klemencia (sister of Károly Róbert, King of Hungary) after the premature death of her husband, becoming a widow at the young age of 22, retired to a cloister and wore white clothing until the end of her life. As the French historian wrote, the members of the Hungarian royal family wore mourning of white. In Hungary the custom of mourning in white survived to the 20th century in the Ormánság and Sárköz. The natural white and rough home woven linen was considered suitable for such purpose because it was simple, not decorative. The attire varies according to local custom, from a full dress, a complete outfit, to only a scarf, or ribbon. – B: 1134, T: 7682.

White Terror – The consequence of the counter-revolutionary movement. When the dictatorship of the proletariat usurped power in Hungary in 1919 for 133 days, it used terror bluntly and shamelessly, calling their own rule the Red Terror (vörös terror). When the majority of the population regained power, some elements, which were embittered by the atrocities committed by the red terror, used similar actions for revenge, which was called for the sake of distinction White Terror (fehér terror). It ended when the majority firmly established its power and the threat of the red terror's return was eliminated. As soon as the majority's power was stabilized, the short-lived white terror stopped. On 24 and 25 of September in 1919 US Army colonel Nathan Horowitz – on the instruction of the Military Control Commission of the Entente Forces – inspected the headquarters of Admiral Miklós Horthy, Commander in Chief of the Hungarian National Forces, at Siófok and other nearby towns in the vicinity of Lake Balaton, to investigate the rumors about the excesses of the White Terror. In his report Colonel Horowitz called the rumors unfounded. – B: 1078, 1230, T: 3233.

Wiener Neustadt's Hungarian Mementos – Avar-founded settlement, located south of Vienna and often mentioned in Hungarian historical records. King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus)(1443-1490) started from Wiener Neustadt against Vienna on 13 January 1487, which he then occupied by an agreement on 17 August of the same year. It is very likely that was the occasion he gave the citizens of the city the Corvin goblet. From that time the city cherishes the portrait of Mátyás, as well as the complete harness of a saddle horse, another gift of the king. In the fort, built by the Babenberg family in 1192, several Hungarians were imprisoned, among them Count Péter Zrínyi, Count Ferenc Kristóf (Francis Christopher) Frangepán and Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II. In its munitions-chamber both Zrínyi and Frangepán were beheaded on 30 April 1671. An inscription can be found in the old arsenal as a reminder of the site and on the wall of the parish church, at the base of the tower, a Latin-inscribed headstone serves as a reminder of the two who were executed. Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II, captured in Sáros in 1791, was imprisoned in the same jail, from where his grandfather, Péter Zrínyi was taken to the scaffold. However, he escaped on 7 November the same year with the help of Gottfried Lehman, an imperial captain. In the Babenberg fort the Theresianum Military Officers' Academy was founded in 1752: the first such institution in the world. The first Hungarian officers were trained in this Academy also. During the Viennese uprising in 1919, the Academy's Hungarian students marched onto Vienna to provide safeguard to Károly IV (Charles), King of Hungary and his family in the Castle of Schönbrunn, in place of the escaped guards. – B: 0942, 1138, 1020, T: 7668.

Wiesel, Elie (Máramarossziget now Sighetu Marmatiei, Transylvania, Romania, 30 September 1928 -) – Writer, human rights activist. He attended school at his birth place and Debrecen. In 1944 he and his family were deported by the Nazis to Auschwitz. His mother and younger sister perished, his two older sisters survived. Elie and his father were later transported to Buchenwald, where his father died shortly before the camp was liberated in April 1945. After the war Wiesel studied in Paris and later became a journalist. The French writer, Francois Mauriac, persuaded him to write about his experiences in the death camps. The result was his internationally acclaimed memoir, La Nuit (The Night), which has since been translated into more than thirty languages. In 1978, US President Jimmy Carter appointed him Chairman of the President's Commission on the Holocaust. In 1980, he became the Founding Chairman of the United States Holocaust Memorial Council. He is also the Founding President of the Paris based Universal Academy of Cultures. He is a devoted supporter of Israel, and he has also defended the cause of the Soviet Jews, the Nicaragua's Miskito Indians, the Argentina's Desaparecidos, the Cambodian refugees, the Kurds, the victims of famine in Africa, victims of apartheid in South Africa, and victims of war in former Yugoslavia. Since 1976, he has been the Andrew W. Mellon Professor in the Humanities at Boston University. He is a member of the Faculty in the Department of Religion as well as the Department of Philosophy. Previously, he served as Distinguished Professor of Judaic Studies at the City University of

New York (1972-1976), and the first Henry Luce Visiting Scholar in Humanities and Social Thought at Yale University (1982-1983). He is the author of more than forty books of fiction and non-fiction, including: A Beggar in Jerusalem, The Testament, The Fifth Son, and two volumes of his memoirs. For his literary and human rights activities, he has received more than one hundred Honorary Doctorates and awards including the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the U.S. Congressional Gold Medal and the rank of Grand-Croix in the French Legion of Honor. In 1986 he won the Nobel Prize for Peace. A few months later, Marion and Elie Wiesel established The Elie Wiesel Foundation for Humanity. – B: 1037, 1077, T: 1077, 7103.

Wife (feleség) – In very ancient times, and in modern times as well, the term literary meant the “half of the family-estate” – through marriage the female partner is legal owner of half of their common earnings. In other words, she legally owns half of everything, sharing the commonly earned estate with her husband. – B: 0942, T: 3233.

Wigner, Eugene Paul (Wigner Jenő Pál) (Budapest, 17 November 1902 - Princeton, NJ, USA 1 January 1995) – Physicist and mathematician. He was born into a middle class

Jewish family. During his childhood illness, he developed an interest in mathematical problems. From 1915 to 1919, together with John von Neumann, Wigner studied at the Lutheran High School of Fasor (Fasori Evangélikus Gimnázium), Budapest, instructed by the noted mathematics teacher László (Ladislav) Rátz. Later, the family converted to Lutheranism. In 1921, Wigner studied chemical engineering in Berlin. He also attended the colloquia of such luminaries as Max Planck, Werner Heisenberg, Albert Einstein and others. Wigner also met the physicist Leo Szilárd, who became his closest friend. A third experience in Berlin was formative: Wigner worked at the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute for Physical Chemistry and Electrochemistry, and there he met Michael Polányi, who became Wigner's teacher. In the late 1920s, Wigner explored the field of quantum mechanics at a fundamental level. During a period at the University of Göttingen, Wigner studied independently. He laid the foundation for the theory of symmetries in quantum mechanics and, in 1927 he introduced what is now known as the Wigner D-matrix. Wigner and Hermann Weyl introduced the group-theory into quantum mechanics. In the late 1930s, he extended his research into atomic nuclei. He developed an important general theory of nuclear reactions. By 1929 his papers were drawing notice in the world of physics. In 1930, Princeton University recruited Wigner, which was timely, since Hitler soon rose to power in Germany. From 1936, Wigner worked at the University of Wisconsin. There he met his first wife, Amelia Frank, who died unexpectedly in 1937; in 1941, Wigner married for the second time. On 8 January 1937, Wigner became a naturalized citizen of the United States. In 1938, Princeton University invited Wigner again. In 1939 and 1940 he played a major role in prompting the U.S. Government to establish the Manhattan Project, which developed the first atomic bomb in 1945. After working briefly in Chicago and at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory, Tennessee, he returned to Princeton University. Wigner received the Nobel Prize in Physics in 1963 “for his contributions to the theory of the atomic nucleus and the elementary particles, particularly through the discovery and application of fundamental symmetry principles”. Wigner laid the foundation for the theory of symmetries in quantum mechanics and his research into the structure of the atomic nucleus and also for his several mathematical theorems. In 1960, Wigner published an article on the philosophy of mathematics and of physics: The Unreasonable Effectiveness of Mathematics in Natural Science. His other works include Physical Theory of Neutron Chain Reactors, with A.M. Weinberg (1958); Gruppentheorie und ihre Anwendungen auf die Quantenmechanik der Atomspektren (Group Theory and its Applications to the Quantum Mechanics of Atomic Spectra), Symmetries and Reflections: Scientific Essays (1970), The Recollections of Eugene P. Wigner (1992), and Philosophical Reflections and Syntheses (1997). Near the end of his life, Wigner's became more philosophical; he became interested in the Vedanta philosophy of Hinduism. Apart from the Nobel Prize, Wigner received a number of awards and prizes, including the U.S. Medal for Merit (1946), the Enrico Fermi Prize (1958), the Max Planck Medal of the German Physical Society, the George Washington Award of the American-Hungarian Studies Foundation (1964), the Semmelweis Medal of the American-Hungarian Medical Association (1965), and the National Medal of Science (1969). He has received honorary degrees from many Universities, and was a member of a number of learned societies worldwide. He was a member of the General Advisory Committee to the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission. Wigner is regarded as “the Silent Genius”, and some even considered him the intellectual equal of Albert Einstein. – B: 1196, 1031, T: 7103.→Szilárd, Leó; Neumann, von John; Polányi, Michael; Teller, Ede.

Will-o'-the Wisp (Marsh Fire, bolygó tűz) – An expression which is part of the richest and best-known legendary figure, the ‘lidérc’ (Hungarian for „goblin”). By popular belief the goblin lives in the swampy marshland of the Nagy Alföld (Great Plain), where the small roaming marsh-flames are seen as the reappearance of a dead lover or a dead spouse. In Transylvania similar personifications appear as fiery small-shawls. These appearances generally indicate some devilish connection and its human figure personifies the very devil. In Transdanubia some rituals preventing these appearances were practiced. People thought to stop its wanderings with a belt buckle or by the linking of the fingers. – B: 0942, T: 3240.

Willow Twigs; Blessing on Palm Sunday – The Sunday preceding Easter Sunday is named Dominica Palmarum or Palm Sunday by the Roman Catholic Church to mark the arrival of Jesus in Jerusalem. On this day the Church blesses the procession bearing palm leaves. It was a known event by the 7th century ‘Missal of Bobbio’. In countries without access to palm branches, the congregation used budding early twigs, such as willows, as in Hungary. Many beliefs are attached to the blessed willow twigs. They were not to be taken into the house but suspended under the eaves or hung over the barn beam to keep the home dwellers safe from fire or lightning. – B: 1134, T: 3240.

Wilson’s Forteen Points – The U.S. joined the Allies of World War I, in fighting the Central Powers, on 6 April 1917. By early 1918, it was clear that the war was nearing its end. President Woodrow Wilson prepared a Peace Plan after World War I, and he delivered it in a speech to a joint session of Congress on 8 January 1918. The peace plan based on the research of the Inquiry, a team of about 150 advisors, into the topics likely to arise in the anticipated peace conference. The Fourteen Points outlined the basic principles of the after-war Peace Treaties. Point 10 refers to Hungary, and it spelled out: The peoples of Austria-Hungary, whose place among the nations we wish to see safeguarded and assured, should be accorded the freest opportunity to autonomous development. Wilson's speech on 8 January 1918, outlined the basic principles upon which the peace treaties ought to be based: free trade, open agreements, democracy and self-determination. People in Europe generally welcomed Wilson's intervention, but his Allied colleagues: Georges Clemenceau, David Lloyd George and Vittorio Emanuele Orlando were skeptical of the applicability of the Wilsonian peace-plan. The Fourteen Points became the basis for the terms of the Central Powers' surrender at the end of World War I. However, soon after the armistice on 11 November 1918, the opposition to the Fourteen Points among the British, French and Italian leaders became clear. Ceausescu demanded war reparation and strong states created from the detached parts of Germany, Austria and Hungary, against Germany from the East. The Versailles Treaty with Germany imposed harsh punishment on Germany both financially and territorially, which led to the rise of Hitler and the Nazism in the 1930s, and ultimately led to World War II. Although the Fourteen Points promised that peoples of Austria-Hungary should be accorded the freest opportunity to autonomous development, this was not valid for the Hungarians who, although they formed 54% of the population of the Kingdom of Hungary, were left with only 32% of their pre-war territory by the Treaty of Trianon leaving 3.5 million ethnic Hungarians in successor states, who treated Hungary as free booty, subjected to exploitation, intimidation and persecution, which continue even to the present. When President Wilson realized that his peace-plan was bypassed, he became offended and returned home. The Fourteen Points intended to create a just peace in Europe, in reality it became a huge trap: a 1000 year old kingdom was dismembered and Hungary is still suffering from it. – B: 1031, T: 7103. → World War I, Hungary in; Trianon Peace Treaty; Vienna Award I; Vienna Award II; World War II, Hungary in; Paris Peace Treaty.

Winkler Codex – A Franciscan manuscript, presumably written for the Clarissa nuns in 1506. The Codex, with a truncated beginning and end, is a valuable Hungarian language relic. Its scribe is unknown. It contains a perpetual calendar, hymns, New Testament verses, prayers and meditations on 184 folios. It was named after Mihály Winkler, Canon of Pécs, who donated it to the University of Budapest Library, where it is today. – B: 1078, 1257, T: 7617.

Winkler, Lajos (Lewis) (Arad, now in Romania, 21 May 1863 - Budapest, 14 April 1939) - Pharmacist, research chemist. He obtained his Pharmaceutical degree from the University of Pest in 1885, and his Ph.D. in Pharmaceutics. He started work at the Department of Chemistry of the Medical School, by 1890 he was demonstrator, in 1893, Honorary Lecturer in 1902, Associate Professor in 1909, Professor of Analytic and Pharmaceutical Chemistry, Head of No.1 Chair of Chemistry. He was engaged mainly in studying analytic chemistry, gas-analyses, gravimetry and examination of water and medicines. His "Winkler's iodometric determination" became world-famous. For analytic measurements he constructed precision instruments of high accuracy; studied the absorption coefficient of gases in solvents; he was the first to determine the connection between the solubility of gases and their internal friction. He was one of the initiators of modern training of pharmacists in Hungary. Winkler edited the Chemical Journal (Kémiai Folyóirat), from 1895 to 1896, and was Correspondent for the Hungarian Pharmaceutical Gazette (Magyar Gyógyszerészeti Közlöny), for three decades. In honor of his achievements a memorial medal was established. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1896, ordinary, 1922). His works include: Determination of Oxygen Dissolved in Water (A vízben feloldott oxigén meghatározása) (1888), Trink- und Brauchwasser (1905, 1911, 1921), Untersuchungsverfahren für das chemischen Laboratorium, I-II (1936). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Winter, Ernő (Ernest) (Győr, 15 March 1897- Budapest, 1971) – Engineer. He obtained a chemical engineer diploma in 1925. He developed tungsten lamps and electron tubes. He worked first at the United Incandescent Factory, and later at Tungstam Incandescent Factory, Újpest (suburb of Budapest). In its research laboratory, established in 1923, for improving light sources, mainly electric bulbs, where Ernő Winter worked, along with others, including Zoltán Bay. They developed tungsten or wolfram technology for the production of more reliable and longer-lasting coiled-filament lamps. In the beginning of 1930s he worked at the Audion Laboratory, concentrating in electron-tube research and development. Winter, together with Károly (Charles) Czukor, was successful in this field. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy Sciences (correspondent in 1951, and regular in 1956). He was recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1950, 1953), and other stated decorations. – B: 1031, 1740, T: 7103. → Converter Tube with Deflection Control; Bay, Zoltán.

Winterl, József Jakab (Joseph, Jacob) (Steyr, Austria, 15 April 1739 - Pest, 23 November 1809) – Physician. He obtained his medical degree from the University of Vienna in 1764, and he also received a Ph.D. in Art in 1766. He was practicing physician in Vienna from 1764 to 1767; and senior physician of the mining towns of the Northern Hungary (now in Slovakia), from 1767 to 1770. He became Professor of the Chairs of Chemistry and Botany at the University of Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia), where he remained until his retirement. He was adherent of the dualistic chemical methods, and first to deal with electro-chemistry; he was well-known analyst of mineral water and he was noted for visual instruction in botany. In 1784, he established the University Botanical Garden at Pest and he was the founder the fruit-growing on the Great Hungarian Plain (Nagyalföld). He was a famous researcher of floras: follower of the botanical system of Linnaeus. His works include: De metallis dubiis (1770), Systematis chemici (1773), Index horti botanici Tyrnaviensis (1775), Über das Brownische System (1798), De aqua soteria thermarum Budensium (1804). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Winternitz, Arnold (Klein-Tomanin, Bohemia, now Czech Republic, 2 August 1872 - Budapest, 25 November 1938) – Physician, surgeon. He obtained his medical degree from the University of Budapest in 1896, after which he worked in the Department of Pathological Anatomy until 1897; thereafter he was correspondent for the Surgical Clinic there from 1897 to 1901. He was senior physician of the Stefánia Hospital of Budapest from 1901 to 1911, that of the Telep Street Hospital during the years 1911-1919, and Senior Physician of St. István (Stephen) Hospital from 1919. He became Honorary Lecturer in 1906. In 1915, he was made Titular Associate Professor at the University of Budapest. He was dealing mainly with surgical pathology, with tuberculosis and with thoracic and cerebral surgery. His works include: The Surgical Complaints of the Cervix (A nyak sebészi bántalmai) (1901), Surgical Treatment of Pulmonary Tuberculosis (A tüdőgümőkór sebészi kezelése) (1924). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

‘Wise Man of the Homeland’ (A Haza Bölcsé) → Deák, Ferenc.

Witch – She has a dual role in the Hungarian folk beliefs.

(1) She is a fairy creature. In the Hungarian collection of tales they are old women with superhuman powers. She is much like an old sorceress. Generally, she is the mother of the heroine’s archenemy, who concocts all the incredible tasks and with her superhuman power endangers the hero’s life. In spite of her lowly qualities she is a destructive force.

(2) She is a living human person with healing and malefic qualities. Until recently, people still believed in her existence. The most well known witches were mentioned as "de maleficis, veneficis" in the law books of King István I (St. Stephen) (997-1038). In the later period of witch-hunts the concept of witches, imported from Western Europe, became apparent in the Hungarian witchcraft trials. The notion of witches of the Middle Ages, conspiring with the devil, became an integral part of Western European beliefs. Due to the witch-hunt their cult became unified all over Europe and survived. – B: 1134, T: 3240.

Witch-hunt – A search for suspected persons who allegedly practiced witchcraft and some black art, or persons accused of heresy or dealing with the devil. Witch hunt was often triggered by moral panic, mass hysteria and resulted in lynching, or torture in order to force them to confess their guilt, and usually executed by burning at the stake. There are historical instances also legally sanctioned and involving official witchcraft trials. The classical period of witchhunts in Europe falls into the Early Modern period or about 1480 to 1700, spanning the upheavals of the Reformation and the Thirty Year’s War, resulting in an estimated 40,000 to 100,000 executions. In Hungary there was sporadic witch-hunt from the early 16th century to the middle of the 18th, but there were very few known executions. The term "witch-hunt" is often used by analogy to refer to panic-induced searches for perceived wrong-doers other than witches. – B: 1231, 1031, T: 7103.

Witch Trials – The movement originated in Western Europe during the Middle Ages in order to extirpate witchcraft. In ancient Roman times the persecution of Christians started because it was seen as a subversive force. Christianity viewed the traditions left behind from earlier times as superstition. According to the files on the witchcraft trials, they were exterminated. The Church was the leading initiator and inquisitor of the witchcraft trials throughout Europe. Hungary also conducted numerous witchcraft trials. King Kálmán (Coloman) (Könyves Kálmán) (1095-1116) had already published the Book of Law I at the Meeting at Tarcál, around 1100, abolishing the witchcraft trials. Still, until the end of the 17th century a major charge against them was the use of destructive magic, and the punishments were light (flogging, exiling). On 28 July 1728, on an island close to the city of Szeged (today it is known as Boszorkánysziget, Witch’s Island) five men and six women were burned at the stake and one man was beheaded. Further twenty-eight persons received prison terms for witchcraft. Queen Maria Theresa (1740-1780) decreed that irrefutable evidence was needed before anyone could be convicted of witchcraft. – B: 1230, 1134, T: 7668.

Wittmann, Ferenc (Francis) (Hódmezővásárhely, 16 January - Budapest, 3 March 1932) – Physicist. He completed his studies at the University of Budapest and at the Polytechnic of Budapest. He was an assistant to the professors of Experimental Physics at the Polytechnic in 1878, teacher of technical physics from 1892 and was invited to membership of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1908. His investigations into the time process of alternating current are considered pioneering. He is the inventor of the oscilloscope (a cathode ray oscillograph) that bears his name. He was also deeply involved with problems of radio technology. – B: 0883, T: 7675.

Wlachs→Vlachs

Wlassics, Baron Gyula (Julius) (zalánkeményi) (Zalaegerszeg, 17 March 1852 - Budapest, 30 March 1937) – Lawyer, politician and cultural politician. After his Legal studies in Hungary he went on a study trip abroad and, thereafter, he briefly worked in the judiciary and also for the Minister of Justice; from 1882 he was deputy prosecutor; from 1886 a deputy attorney general. During 1890 and 1895, and again from 1903 to 1906, he was Professor of Criminal Law at the University of Budapest. From 1892 he was a Member of Parliament for the Liberal Party; in connection with the Bills for Church Policy, he took a stand on a marriage registry. From 15 January 1895 to 3 November 1903, Baron Wlassics was Minister of Education and Religion in the Bánffy and Széll Governments. During his ministerial work, he initiated a number of civil reforms, such as admittance of women to the faculties of arts, pharmaceuticals and medicine; submitting of compulsory copies of printing works; foundation of the School of Arts, etc. From 1906 until 1935 he was President of the Administrative Court. In 1916 he was granted a baronetcy. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1886, ordinary 1892, honorary 1919, vice-president from 1898-1901). In 1918 he became President of the Table of Magnates, and from 1927 to 1935 that of the Upper House of Parliament. In 1920 he received the Grand Prix of the Academy. From 1923, he was a member of the Board of Arbitration in The Hague. His works include Cultural-political Questions (Kulturpolitikai kérdések) (1909); Foreign Policy of Count Gyula Andrassy (Gróf Andrassy Gyula külpolitikája) (1913), and Neutrality in the World War (Semlegesség a világháborúban) (1917). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Wodetzky, József (Joseph) (Versec, 15 March 1872 - Budapest, 17 March 1956) – Astronomer. He studied at the Universities of Budapest and Paris and became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) of the Department of Cosmology at the University of Budapest in 1914. From 1923, he was Professor at the University of Debrecen and a privat dozent of the University of Budapest. Between 1932 and 1942, he was Head of the Department and Institute of Astronomy of the University of Budapest. His specific areas of interest were astro-mechanics, astronomy, and relativity. Together with Antal (Anthony) Tass he founded the Stella Astronomical Society and was editor of the periodicals Stella and Astronomical Papers. He was very active in popularizing astronomy and founded the Astronomical Observatory of Debrecen. – B: 0883, 1020, T: 7674.

Wohl, Janka (Jane) (Pest, 1846 - Budapest, 23 May 1901) – Poetess, writer, translator of literary works. Together with her sister, Stephanie Wohl, she edited the journals Fashion (Divat) from 1870 to 1872, and Womens' Work Sphere (Nők Munkaköre) from 1872 to 1873, which merged with Hungarian Bazaar (Magyar Bazár). For female readers, they published fashionable short stories by women writers from abroad. She translated widely from English, but also from French and German. In the 1870s and 1880s the two sisters kept a literary salon, where, among the guests, were such notabilities as Ferenc (Franz) Liszt, János (John) Arany, Ágoston (Austin) Trefort, és Mór (Maurice) Ballagi. She translated from Dickens, Sainte-Beuve, etc. works, some of which appeared under the name Camilla Zichy. She edited The Modern Woman's Breviary (A modern asszony breviáriuma) (1895). Her works include My Poems (Költeményeim) (1861), and My First Album (Az én első albumom) (1892). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Liszt, Ferenc; Arany, János, Trefort, Ágoston, Ballagi, Mór.

Wojatsek, Károly (Charles) (Udvard, now Dvory nad Žitavou, Slovakia, 29 September 1916 - Vancouver, 7 January 2008) – Linguist, historian. He completed his Hungarian, Slovakian and Czech language studies, as well as literary and historical studies at the Universities of Brünn, Pozsony and Debrecen. After obtaining his teacher certificate at Debrecen in 1940, he was a high school teacher in Hungary between 1940 and 1944, and in Czechoslovakia between 1944 and 1948. In 1948, he escaped to the West and became a student at the University of Fribourg, Switzerland where he obtained another teacher's diploma. On emigrating to Canada he continued his studies in Montreal and Toronto where he gained a teacher's diploma and a PhD in 1956. Between 1957 and 1960 he taught in high schools in the province of Ontario. Between 1960 and 1965, he was Professor of Hungarian and Czech Languages and Literature at the University of Colorado. He was Professor of History at Bishop's University, Lennoxville, Québec from 1966 to his retirement in 1986. In the meantime from 1967-1968, he taught German History at the Université de Sherbrooke in Québec. He was a member of the Hungarian Mother Tongue Conference's patronage, published essays on history, education and linguistics. His books on Hungarian topics were published in English. His books include: Hungarian Textbook and Grammar, published in 5 editions, From Trianon to the First Vienna Arbitral Award, and The Hungarian Minority in the First Czechoslovak Republic, 1918-1938 (1980). – B: 1672, 0893, T: 7669, 4342

Wolf, Emil (Budapest, 1886 – Belgium, 15 July 1947) – Chemist. After receiving his diploma in chemical engineering from the Budapest Polytechnic he worked in several German factories, and for a short while he worked at Gedeon Richter's Factory, Budapest. In 1910, with chemical engineer György (George) Kereszty, founded the Alka Chemical Works, which eventually became the Chinoin Pharmaceutical and Chemical Products Works, Budapest. The founding of the independent Hungarian pharmaceutical industry is the work of Wolf, the pioneer in this field, along with G. Richter. Both in the domestic field and abroad the Chinoin name became well known in veterinary science, in the botanical fields and in human therapeutics. Drugs such as atropine, synthetically produced papaverin, ultraseptil and vitamin preparations, as well as several hundred pharmaceutical specialties made his name famous. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Wondrous Stag Legend (Csodaszarvas legenda) – The central figure of the Hun/Hungarian origin legend is a white stag, which lured the hunters, brothers Hunor and Magor, the ancestors of Huns and Magyars, and led the way to good hunting grounds. Its figure was found previously in Scythian art. The oldest illustration of the golden-stag traced back to the 7th century BC, was discovered in the kurgan grave finds of Kelermes, in a small creek of the Kuban area of South Russia. Its figure was also incorporated into Christian legends, e.g. the Hubertus legend, where it is no longer the hind calf, but a stag adorned with candles on its antlers and is identified with Christ. The Stag Legend is the oldest Hun-Hungarian origin-legend from the Óskronika (Ancestral Legend), which was taken up by the Pozsony Chronicle, and Simon Kézai adopted it into the Gesta Hungarorum between 1282 and 1285. Subsequently, Márk Kálti, into the Képes Krónika (Illuminated Chronicle) in 1385, János Thúróczy into the Chronica Hungarorum in 1487, and also Mahmud Terdzsüman into the Tarih-i Üngürüş in 1555, all adopted the Legend. A stag played the role as dominant animal in Anonymus' chapter describing the establishment of the fortress at Bars. According to Thúróczy's Chronicle a stag also led Kings Géza and László to the site where they were expected to build a church out of gratitude for the victory at Cinkota. Still another stag led King László I (St Ladislas) to the place where Várad (now Oradea, Romania) was to be built and it led Tribal Leader Gyula to the location where Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia, Romania) was to be founded. The Stag legends also appear among the Greek, Latin and German legends. – B: 1150, 0942, 1020, T: 7659.

Wood Carving – In the strict sense only curved, wedged and round sculptures or wooden objects make up this category in Hungarian folk art. Broadly speaking they involve the application of several techniques such as chiseling, etching, piercing, hammering, branding, in-laying and turning. Woodcarving was always a male occupation in Hungary and was practiced by the peasants, the herdsmen, and the cottage industry and master craftsman. Its largest pieces were connected to architecture; these were gateposts, doors, well sweeps, main girder beams, porch columns, parapets, gables and window trellises. Professionals such as carpenters, local cabinetmakers and Szekler gate makers made them all. Always, local carvers made the wooden headstones in the territories of the Reformed Church and the wooden crosses in Catholic territories. It was popular to decorate tools and all kinds of household items. Among them are the oxbows, the head of the cart shafts, forage ladders, and the herdsman's sticks. There are a lot of carved wooden tools used by women such as laundry beaters, distaff nails and spindle rings. They were usually made as gifts of love. Woodcarving is found all over the Hungarian language territory but its most important center is Kalotaszeg (now Țara Călatei, Transylvania, Romania). The so-called herdsmen style is derived from peasant woodcarvings. It flourished in the 19th century and left a legacy of prolific, richly varied and unmistakably Hungarian relics. Master craftsmen made the small crosses, the Madonna and other saintly statues (Madonna of Kiskun) placed in the sacred corner of the households, also the big crosses erected along the roadside. The mask-making custom is localized more to the areas of the counties of Baranya, Heves and Hajdú also to the Csallóköz (now Žitný ostrov, Slovakia) region where the so-called busó and the borica mask is made. – B: 1134, T: 3240.

Wooden Churches – Carpenters used the materials at hand to construct the edifices of worship. Wood is used predominantly in forested areas where stone materials are rare. Wooden churches are found usually on the Russian plains and in the Carpathian highlands. The builders employed the general wood technique architecture. The Greek Orthodox Churches display Byzantine style and the churches from Kalotaszeg (now Țara Călatei, Transylvania, Romania) show Gothic style. The followers of Martin Luther preferred wooden structures to stone similar to the church of Kézsmárk (now Kežmarok, Slovakia). – B: 1144, T: 7663.

Wooden Dulcimer – Similar to the xylophone, it is an idiophonic musical instrument consisting wooden rods of varying dimensions. It differs from other xylophone types in that the system of its scale is the same as that of the common corded dulcimer, enabling a dulcimer player to easily play on a wooden dulcimer. The rods are carved out of cylindrically turned wood or carved from wood of broomstick thickness. Of the evenly decreasing lengths of pieces, the longest is 400 mm; the shortest 250 mm. The tone of the rod is altered by sawing off the end of a rod, thus shortening it; if a sound is to be still deeper, a ‘belly’ or an indentation is cut around the middle at the lower part of the rod. Its sound is, as generally of the xylophones, a kind of a knocking, sharp, dry wooden sound. Dulcimer players play this instrument mostly as a curiosity, using it to play one or another virtuoso variation. One can play two tones or broken chords the same as on the common dulcimer. The wooden dulcimer is unique to Hungary. – B: 1134, T: 7684.

Wooden Plank Ceiling – In contrast to the open roof structure where the wooden planks are secured to the main beams, these ceilings are constructed of wooden planks in many different variations reflecting the Renaissance and Baroque architecture. Amongst the Hungarian village churches there are a group of churches with painted wooden plank ceilings, which were constructed until the 19th century. – B: 1020, T: 7663.

Wooden rail-track of Brád – Some primitive rail tracks were used in the mines of Transylvania (Erdély, now Romania) already in the early 1500's; they can be considered as the forerunner of today's railways. The mine cars were mounted on rolling wooden axles fitted out at their ends with stabilizing wheel-rims and pushed by men or, when several cars linked, pulled by horses on wooden rails. One of these simple wooden tracks, dating from the early days, was still in use in the 19th century in the Apostol Mine No.XII of Brád of County Hunyad. One segment of this wooden rail track, complete with the switches and car, ended up in Berlin, Germany, where it has survived World Wars I and II. It is exhibited under Catalogue No. 152, as a carefully kept memento of the history of transportation in the ‘Museum of Transport and Technology’ (Museum für Verkehr und Technik) 9. Trebbiner Strasse, Berlin. The original text, posted in front of the wooden tracks follows in English: ‘Wooden rail tracks from the 16th century. The tracks and car were obtained from a Hungarian gold mine (Apostle Mine, Brád - Transylvania) in 1889. – The tracks and ties (sleepers) were made of round timber. The ends of the tracks were flattened. The tracks' gauge is about 48 cm.- The single piece of movable lever which unites in itself the tongue and heart-piece serves to set the switch. The car, which belonged to the tracks, has wheels made of single pieces of wood. – B: 1078, 1020, T: 7674.

Wooden Tower – Tall wooden beam structure erected by carpenters which often served as a belfry and a watchtower. Although stone and brick towers were common in Hungary since the early Middle Ages, most of the towers were wooden structures until the end of the 18th century. The majority of the surviving wooden towers in Hungary were built in the 17-18th centuries with a few surviving from the 16th. Master carpenters living in towns and villages used construction techniques of the late Gothic or Renaissance style originating from the 14-15th centuries. These towers stood apart from the churches but occasionally they were an integral part of wood-framed churches. Hungarians loved the steep, very tall spires, which were erected in the axis of the main body of the tower. While the cross section of the main tower bodies was square, the spires were polygonal, steep pyramids or cones. A central mast supported the tall, slim structures. It was also customary at some places, to flank the main spire with four turrets. When the wooden spire was built on the top of stone or brick tower its supporting wooden base was constructed within the masonry structure. The gallery, spire and the turrets were built on the crown of the brick or stone structure. The stone or brick walls provided extra support to the wooden structure, while the shingle roof of the spire provided protection for the tower. The style and construction techniques were very similar throughout Hungary. Erection of wooden towers ceased during the 18th century. – B: 1134, T: 7663.

Wood Sculpture – Most of the representations in Gothic wood sculpture consist of altarpieces, statuettes of Madonna or of a favorite saint. Examples of Hungarian wooden sculptures can be found in Szepesség area, around the High Tatra Mountains of the Upland (now Slovakia). One of the outstanding examples of the 14th century is the Madonna statue at Szlatvin, created between 1340-1350. Its modeling is similar to the French ivory carvings: straight stature, slim, slender proportions, and characteristic handling of drapery. Similarly created statues can be observed at the Luzinc altar and in the Maria Magdalena Church at Wroclaw, Poland. – B: 0899, T: 7675.

Words, List of – The forerunner of the dictionary: a collection of words commonly used in a particular era. It is essentially a compilation of conceptually grouped words. From the 17th century it was an aid used in the learning of languages. Over time, wordlists multiplied and the multilingual lists became more wide spread. The best-known Hungarian wordlists were: the The Königsberg Fragment and its Ribbons (Königsbergi Töredék és Szalagjai) with 159 Latin and 100 Hungarian words from the second part of the 14th century; the Wordlist of Beszterce (Besztercei Szójegyzék) with 1316 Hungarian words from about 1380-1410; the Wordlist of Schlägli (Schlögli Szójegyzék) with 2140 Hungarian words from 1400-1410; and the Wordlist of Sopron (Soproni Szójegyzék) with 217 Hungarian words from 1430-1440). Other known wordlists included: the Marmelius' Lexicon (Marmelius-féle Lexicon) with Latin-German-Hungarian wordlist from 1533, and Gábor Pesti's Catalogue of Six Languages (Nomenclature sex linguarum): a compilation of six languages from 1538. – B: 1150, T: 7669.

‘Workers’ Guard’ (Munkásőrség) – After the Soviet Army defeated the 1956 Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight, the Hungarian Communist Party under the new name of Magyar Szocialista Munkás Párt (MSZMP, Hungarian Socialist Workers’ Party) was reinstalled by the Soviet Union. To protect their power and prevent another revolution, the MSZMP set up what, in fact, amounted to their private army. On 19 February 1957, the Presidential Council, by order-in-council of 1957:13, established the Workers’ Guard, which was organized territorially on a military basis into regiments, battalions and companies encompassing the entire country. Pursuing its ‘top secret’ resolution of 3075/1957, (02. 18), the Kádár Government placed the Workers’ Guards under the direct control of the MSZMP. In essence the Workers’ Guard was a party army comprised of Communist party members over 18 years of age. They received military training in the handling of firearms, but were outside the control of the Ministry of Defense. They were a more refined and organized version of the ‘pufajkások’ (an irregular group formed by the communists after the defeat of the revolution to terrorize the population and beat up lesser participants in the revolution). They were used in large-scale security checks especially in the border zones and as guards at party celebrations or mass rallies. In the secret resolution of 3163/1989 (06. 15) on 15 June 1989, the Hungarian Government abolished party control over the Workers’ Guard and in October 1989 Parliament dissolved the whole organization. – B: 1230, 0538, 1153, 1231, T: 7665. → Kádár, János.

World Federation of Hungarians (Magyarok Világszövetsége – MVSZ) – Established on the initiative of Count Pál (Paul) Teleki and Baron Zsigmond (Sigismund) Perényi on the occasion of the Second World Congress of Hungarians held in Budapest on 18 August 1938. Its aim is to join all Hungarians torn away by the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon of 1920, and by emigration to the West. The World Federation fosters the feeling of belonging together, and strengthening connections. It supports all activities aimed at preserving and developing the Hungarian language and culture of those living outside Hungary; furthermore, it follows with interest the results achieved by Hungarians living abroad, as well as their communal Hungarian life. The planned congress for the year 1943 did not take place because of World War II. In the post-war period, in Communist Hungary under Soviet military occupation, the activities of the World Federation were renewed, but it proved unsatisfactory because it was politically directed, diverging from the basic principles laid down at its inauguration. It did not serve the cause of Hungarians living in various lands and, as a result, only an insignificant percentage of Hungarians maintained connection with the Federation. After the end of the Soviet occupation, in 1992 a new governing body took the lead under the presidency of Sándor (Alexander) Csoóri, and Parliament voted for a financial support of 260 million forints per annum. However, the relations between the World Federation working in Budapest and the Hungarians living in minority status in the surrounding countries in the Carpathian Basin, and Hungarians sporadically scattered in foreign countries did not return to normal. In 2000, Miklós István (Nicholas Stephen) Patrubby from Transylvania, was elected its President. In the same year, the Parliament withdrew all financial support from the World Federation. As the largest Hungarian civil organization, it turned its activities to vital Hungarian problems. It initiated an action to abolish the Beneš Decrees, and it took this matter to the European Union and, in connection with this, it published a White Book (Fehér Könyv). It keeps alive

the matter of the massacre in Délvidék (Serbia) after World War II, and the masses of Hungarians deported from Carpatho-Ukraine (Subcarpathia). It supports the Szekler Hungarian and Transylvanian National Council, and fights for Szekler autonomy in Transylvania under Romanian rule. The 6th World Congress organized in 2004 in Budapest, under the title Hungarians and the East (Magyarság és Kelet), set out to conduct research on the eastern roots and relatives of Hungarians, with an important lecture by the Italian linguist Professor Mario Alinei on the Hungarian-Etruscan connections; his book was translated and published by the World Federation under the title: Ancient Link (Ősi Kapocs). Regarding the dual citizenship issue, a national referendum was initiated by the World Federation on 5 December 2004. As a result of the counter-propaganda of the Government parties, the referendum closed without success, urging the nation for self-examination. The 7th World Congress was held under the slogan Turn-around (Fordulat) and it passed resolutions on numerous decisions about the protection of Hungarians. 230 lectures were given and, on this occasion, the Congress had a number of books published, such as Selected Studies in Hungarian History (Magyarságtudományi Tanulmányok), edited by László (Ladislav) Botos; Hungarian World Encyclopedia (Angol nyelvű magyarságlexikon), edited by Dr. József (Joseph) Pungur; and Autonomy and the New World Order (Autonómia és az új világrénd) by Dr. Sándor (Alexander) Balogh. Some years ago, the World Federation introduced its identification certificate called Home-letter (Honlevél), and its illustrated monthly magazine under the same name. In 2010, it launched the monthly series entitled Hungarian Studies (Magyarságtudományi Füzetek), which is directed toward the younger generation. In 2010, the World Federation initiated the revision of the unjust Trianon (1920) and the Paris (1947) Peace Dictates, which dismembered Hungary, throwing 3.5 million ethnic Hungarians under the rule of hostile nations. – B: 1020, 7103, T: 7456.→Teleki, Count Pál; Csoóri, Sándor; Patrubby, Miklós; Beneš, Eduard; Alieni, Mario; Trianon Peace Treaty; Paris Peace Treaty.

World Heritage of Culture and Nature – The agreement consisting of 38 articles dealing with its protection was passed by the general meeting of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) in Paris on 16 November 1972. According to the agreement, by “heritage of nature” are meant those physical, biological, geological and physiographical formations and growths, endangered animal and plant species and their areas of habitat and breeding ground, nature-scenes, areas of nature, which are outstanding from an aesthetic or scientific point of view. To be considered “cultural heritage” are those monuments, architectural, large-scale sculptural and artistic creations (paintings), archaeological elements, structures, inscriptions, building-ensembles, buildings, groups of buildings, sites, human creations, combined creations by humans together with nature, as well as areas containing archaeological sites, which by means of their style, characteristics, and degree of harmonizing with their environment, are of outstanding value historically, artistically, aesthetically, ethnologically, anthropologically and from any other scientific points of view.

In accordance with Article 5, the participating states undertake to develop the appropriate general policy, to institute the organizations needed for the performance of tasks, to carry out the necessary legal, scientific, technical, administrative and financial measures, and the promotion of the establishment and development of national or regional training centers encouraging scientific research. In accordance with Article 6 by such heritage is meant the heritage of the whole world (on Earth); its preservation is the task, in terms of cooperation, of the entire international community. In Hungary in 1998, there were four areas included in the UNESCO records: (1) Aggtelek National Park, (2) Budapest and Banks of the Danube Protected Ensemble, (3) Hollókő Environmental Protection Area, (4) Pannonhalma Benedictine Arch-Abbey. In addition museum villages; monuments protection; nature conservation. – B: 1020, T: 7456.

World Tree – An imaginary gigantic tree, which connects the three worlds: the netherworld, the middle world and the upper world. In the Hungarian folk tales it is known as the ‘tree reaching heavens’ and ‘the tree without top’. The sun and moon are between its branches. Only one select person can look at it. It is a characteristic motive of Hungarian folk tale, but also in Hungarian religious faith. According to this belief only the táltos (shaman) knows its whereabouts. The imaginary sun and moon connection with the world tree is the characteristic of the Asiatic nations, a part of the shamanistic world view. – B: 1134, T: 7682.

World War I, Hungary in

Preliminaries

From the time of the Napoleonic Wars, there was no major war in Europe that involved many nations. International conflicts were solved in peaceful ways and by conferences. However, with time progressing, tension among the nations of Europe was growing. During the 19th century all major European nations became wealthy and powerful, due to the industrial revolution, new inventions and accumulating capital; searching for new markets was also on the agenda of the rich nations, as well as rivalry. With all these the nationalistic movements grew, seeking independence from the tutelage of ancient kingdoms. A Pan-Slav movement was born and strengthened among Slavic nations, seeking unification of all Slav nations with Russia at the helm.

After Austria annexed Bosnia and Montenegro in 1908, resentment toward the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy grew and developing into hostility after the Balkan Wars (1912-1913). When the heir of the Habsburg Monarchy Franz Ferdinand's plan for "trialism" became known: adding a third, a Slavic entity to the Dual Monarchy, his assassination had been decided by the Black Hand and the Narodna Odbrana, Serbian secret societies, timed to coincide with the military exercises of the Austro-Hungarian Army in Bosnia in summer, 1914. The Serbian Government knew the plan, and Prime Minister Pasic, even warned the Viennese Court in a hypothetical way, but it was not taken seriously.

However, the plan was real, well organized and serious. There were seven would-be assailants planted at the roadside, in Sarajevo on 28 June 1914, where the open motorcade of the Archduke was to pass by. These were: Mehmedbasic, a 27-year old carpenter; Vaso Cubrilovic, a 17-year old student armed with a revolver; Nedelko Cabrinovic, a 20-year old idler; Cvetko Popovic, an 18-year old student; standing close to 24-year old Danilo Ilic, the main organizer of the plot; he had no weapon. The final two of the seven conspirators were further down the road: Trifko Grabez, a 19-year old Bosnian going to school in Belgrade, and also the 19-years old student Gavrilo Princip, the actual assailant, who with two revolver shots murdered the heir to the throne, Archduke Franz Ferdinand and his wife Sophie Chotek.

The assassination shocked the world, especially the people of the Monarchy. The Emperor Ferenc József's (Francis Joseph) closest advisors considered what to do about Serbia's role in the plot. The first Austrian reaction to the killing was divided. The chief of staff, General Franz Baron Conrad von Hoetzendorf, wanted a military response to Serbia, because the Monarchy was surrounded by enemies who needed to be defeated one-by-one, before they could combine. Serbia instigated uprising by the Serbs within the territory of the Monarchy. If the Serbs succeeded then the other nationalities in Austria like the Poles, Croats, and Ukrainians would also break off. The only real opposition to a policy of war came from the Hungarian Prime Minister, Count István (Stephen) Tisza. Tisza took the risks of war more seriously than Conrad. He realized that in case of a Habsburg victory the Monarchy certainly would annex Serbia. In this case either the Slavic population of Hungary would increase, leaving the Magyars as a minority in their own country, or trialism would replace the dualist system, again decreasing Magyar influence.

In the meantime Vienna approached Berlin for Germany's support in case of war. After the Berlin Government responded with the so-called "blank check," the war party saw no further reason to seek peace. When the Austrian Council of Ministers met again on July 7, the majority favored war. To satisfy Tisza, the council agreed to present a final letter of demands to Serbia, instead of declaring war at once. Serbia's refusal to comply would then become the excuse for war. Within a week, Tisza himself consented to this plan: his only reservation was insistence that no Serbian territory be annexed after the war. The final 10-point ultimatum was finalized on 19 July, and sent on 23 July, and demanded a response within 48 hours.

The Serbs in turn failed to do their utmost to defuse the crisis. When Serbia first received the ultimatum, Prime Minister Pasic indicated that he could accept its terms, with a few reservations and requests for clarification. In the meantime, it became clear that Russia would unconditionally support Serbia. After that, Pasic gave up seeking peace. In a long reply Serbia rejected the key points of the ultimatum, having known that it certainly would lead to war. The Serbian army began to mobilize even before the reply was complete. Because the Serbian reply did not accept every point, Austria broke off relations on July 25. The tough positions taken by both Austria and Serbia brought the situation too close to the brink to step back, and in a few days matters were out of control. Again, the specific arguments raised by either side mattered less than their mutual willingness to take risks. This policy of brinkmanship made war more likely than negotiation.

Austria declared war on Serbia on 28 July 1914. A short war was generally expected. However, imperial, territorial and economic rivalries rapidly led to the World War I, or the "Great War", between the Central Powers (Austria-Hungary, Germany, Bulgaria, and Turkey) and the Allies (U.S., Britain, France, Russia, Belgium, Serbia, Greece, Romania, Montenegro, Portugal, Italy, and Japan).

Events of War, Hungary was involved

The Serbian campaign expected to end with an early and easy victory. However, the Serbian Army stood firmly, using their rugged terrain skillfully, and successfully rebuffed the larger Austro-Hungarian Army. It was helped by Russia's invasion on the Eastern Front. In 1915 the Austro-Hungarian Army resumed its offensive in the south front, and brought Bulgaria into the engagement as an ally. After the Serbian forces were attacked from both the north and east, it led to the occupation of the whole of Serbia. However, the remnants of the Serbian Army retreated to Greece, and remained operational in a newly established base. The front stabilized around the Greek border, through the intervention of a Franco-British-Italian force which had landed in Salonica. In 1918, the Allies, under the French General Franchet d'Esperey leading a combined French, Serbian, Greek and British army, attacked the Monarchy from Greece. His initial victories convinced the Bulgarian Government to sue for peace. He then attacked north and defeated the German and Austrian forces that tried to halt his offensive. By October 1918, his army had recaptured all of Serbia and was to invade Hungary. It is noteworthy to mention the heroics of the Hungarian Army units with their obvious bravery. The offensive halted only because the Hungarian leadership offered to surrender in November 1918.

Human losses: total dead 996,000, including military losses 260,000 with the Serbian forces, 80,000 with the Austro-Hungarian forces 13,000 with Montenegro forces and POW deaths in captivity of 93,000. Civilian dead were as follows due to famine and disease 400,000, killed in military operations 120,000 and 30,000 dead in Austrian prisons or executed.

On the Eastern Front the Great War began on 17 August 1914, when Russian First Army invaded Eastern Prussia, and the Russian Second Army attacked the German Eighth Army. The German counter-offensive led to the Battle of Tannenberg, ended by 30 August with German victory. The Russians were also defeated in the Battle of Masurian Lakes. In the south of Poland, Austrian-Hungarian Chief-of-Staff Conrad von Hoetzendorf launched his own attack northward toward Warsaw. The Russians however, on 30 August opened their offensive. The Austro-Hungarian Army had to retreat, and the province of Galicia was abandoned. The year ended with Russia trying assaults into the Carpathian passes. Von Hoetzendorf appealed to the Germans to support an offensive, which he hoped would force the Russians away from the Carpathian Mountains. The Germans agreed on a thrust deep into Russian lines out of East Prussia. The resulting "winter war" proceeded well into Russia, but petered out when the Austro-Hungarian forces in the south failed to dislodge the Russians. Instead they suffered another embarrassing defeat, and even lost control of the Dukla Pass of the Carpathian Mountains, a prime route towards the Hungarian Plains.

By May of 1915, the Germans took over command of the Eastern Front and used many of their units to support the increasingly fragmented Austrian formations. Their next offensive came on 1 May, with a powerful attack on the Russian lines at Gorlice. This offensive penetrated nearly 200 km in two weeks, and triggered the collapse of the entire Russian Southern Front. German and Austrian formations pushed northwards toward Warsaw, capturing it in August. In September the German Army attacked toward Riga. Now the entire Russian front line broke up. Only at the end of September could the Russians form a new line. Shortly after this, Russian Czar Nicholas assumed personal command of the army, which was an unfortunate decision. The Central Powers' gain, to date, included Poland, Lithuania and Latvia.

The next major offensive was undertaken by Russian General Alexi Brusilov. By June of 1916, Brusilov's army, were poised along the Galician border facing the Austrian Army. On 4 June the Russians attacked and penetrated deep into Austrian positions, By the time the offensive was two months old, the entire Austro-Hungarian Empire was in danger of collapsing. Romania then entered the war on the side of the allies, and greedily invaded Transylvania instead of preparing an adequate defense. This mistake gave the Germans the opening they needed, and the ensuing counter-offensive achieved the total collapse of Romania to the Central Powers. Germany and Austria gained control of vast coal and wheat fields, although they also added a 200 km front to their lines. Brusilov continued his summer offensive in September, and came to a halt after the seizure of Bukovina and Galicia. Bad news was mounting in Europe: Russia slowly edged toward an open revolt and the Dual Monarchy edged toward dissolution.

By 1917, the Russian Army suffered repeated catastrophes, by March, some army units began ignoring their orders. This situation was made worse by growing strength in Communist groups, which staged a revolt in Petrograd. After the Czar abdicated, a provisional government was formed with Alexander Kerensky at its head. He ordered General Brusilov to organize another offensive in Galicia. But this offensive ran into the strong wall of German resistance, who first held off, then counter-attacked the Russians. This was the last effort for the Imperial Russian Army, which virtually disintegrated as open civil war swept across Russia.

After a heavy armed conflict in the Russian civil war, finally, the "Red" Communists forced the "White" Russians from power. The Treaty of Brest-Litovsk was finally concluded with the new Bolshevik Government on 3 March 1918, stripping Russia of all provinces west of the Ukraine. That treaty was annulled by the Armistice of 11 November 1918, and the new government in Moscow eventually re-established its presence in all the previously held lands. Human losses of Russia: 2,006,000 military dead (700,000 killed in action, 970,000 died of wounds, 155,000 died of disease and 181,000 POW deaths); 3.9 million Russian POWs were in German and Austrian hands; civilian deaths: 1,500,000. Human losses of the Monarchy in World War I: 1,507,000 total loss of life, 1,100,000 military deaths, 3,620,000 military wounded, 1,700,000 POW in Russia, 467,000 civilian death.

The Romanian Campaign. The Kingdom of Romania was ruled by kings of the House of Hohenzollerns from 1866. The King of Romania Carol I, had signed a secret treaty with the Triple Alliance in 1883, which stipulated that Romania would be obliged to go to war only in the event Austro-Hungarian Empire was attacked. After World War I started, Romania remained neutral, later joined the Triple Entente on 17 August 1916, and demanded recognition of its rights over the territory of Transylvania (Erdély), which with a growing Romanian population had been a part of Historic Hungary. However, the Allies had secretly agreed not to honour the territorial expansion of Romania when the war ended. Romania declared war on the Central Powers on 27 August 1916. The Romanian Army consisted of over half a million poorly trained men and officers and inadequate equipment. The Bulgarian and the Ottoman Army also helped the Central Powers.

On the night of 27 August, three Romanian armies launched attacks through the Carpathian Mountains into Transylvania. The only opposing force was the Austro-Hungarian First Army, which was pushed back. In a short time some towns were captured and the outskirts of Sibiu (Szeben (now Sibiu) were reached. The first counter-attack came from Bulgaria, where General August von Mackensen was in command of a multi-national army of Bulgarian divisions, a German brigade and the Ottoman VI Army Corps whose units began arriving on the Dobrudja front. On 15 September, the Romanian War Council decided to suspend the Transylvanian offensive and destroy the Mackensen army group instead. Even Russian reinforcements arrived to halt Mackensen's army but they did not succeed. When General Falkenhay became the overall commander of the Central Powers' forces, he successfully ousted the invading Romanian army from Transylvania by the end of 1916. The war brought a complete disaster to Romania. The Germans, Hungarians, Austrians, Bulgarians and Ottomans had conquered Wallachia and Dobruja, while Transylvania was liberated; more than half of the Romanian Army was captured. In 1917, a French expeditionary corps under the command of General Henri Berthelot, re-trained and re-supplied the Romanian Army, together with a disintegrating Russian Army. After the Soviet Union signed the Brest Litovsk Treaty on 3 March 1918, the surrounded Romania had no choice but to sue for peace in the Treaty of Bucharest, on 7 May 1918. However, after the successful Allied offensive on the Thessaloniki Front, which removed Bulgaria from the war, Romania re-entered the War on 10 November 1918, and on 1 December re-entered Transylvania, and after occupying it, marched toward Hungary and having defeated the Hungarian Red Army, occupied Budapest. The Romanian army left Hungary after Miklós (Nicholas) Horthy, the Commander of the Hungarian National Army entered Budapest with his troop on 16 November 1919.

Human losses: Total dead 748,000, including military losses 220,000 for the Romanian forces, and 150,000 for the Austro-Hungarian forces, POW deaths in captivity 48,000. Civilian dead due to famine and disease 200,000, killed in military operations 120,000 and died in Austrian prisons 10,000.

The Italian Campaign. Italy was a member of the Triple Alliance together with Germany and Austro-Hungary. However, around the turn of the millennium, Italy approached France and England. This was because on the one hand, Austria was Italy's traditional enemy in the 19th century, and Italy could not expect Austrian support for her territorial expansion. On the other hand, Italy pondered which of the alliances would yield more advantage. Trieste, Istria, Zara and Dalmaia all were Austrian possessions. In fact, a secret agreement signed with France in 1902, practically took out Italy from the Triple Alliance. Immediately after the outbreak of the conflict, on 3 August 1914, the Italian Government declared that Italy would not commit its troops to the Triple Alliance. The London Pact, signed on 26 April 1915, without the approval of the Parliament, spelled out, that in case of victory Italy was to be given Trentino and South Tyrol, Trieste, Gorizia Grandisca and Istria without Fiume (now Rijeka, Croatia), parts of western Carniola with Idrija and Ilirska Bistrica, and north-western Dalmatia with Zadar and most of the islands, but without Split. Other agreements concerned the sovereignty of the port of Valona, the province of Amntalya in Turkey and part of the German colonies in Africa.

In April 1915 Italy joined the Entente and on 3 May 1915 officially rejected the Triple Alliance. On 23 May 1915, Italy declared war on Austria-Hungary, followed by Germany fifteen months later. Italy thenceforth entered the war under the impetus of a relative minority of its population and politicians. The front on the Austrian border was 650 km long, difficult terrain stretching from the Swiss border to the Adriatic Sea. Italians had numerical superiority but was squandered because of the lack of strategic and tactical leadership. The Italian commander-in-chief was Luigi Cadorna, a proponent of the frontal assault, which caused the meaningless death of thousand of his soldiers. His plan was to attack on the Isonzo Front, with the goal of breaking through the Karst Plateau into the Carniolan Basin, taking Ljubljana and threatening Vienna. The campaign soon turned into a trench-warfare. The main difference was the fact that, instead of in the mud, the trenches had to be dug in the Alpine rocks and glaciers, often up to 3,000 m altitude. From 1916 to 1918 the Italian Army launched 11 Isonzo Battles, with enormous sacrifice in death and wounded, without any major success. In the summer of 1917 the Austrian-Hungarian Army received essential reinforcement from the Eastern front due to the peace treaty with Russia, and German troops were transferred to the Isonzo Front. On 24 October 1917, the troops of the Central Powers broke through the Italian lines in the upper Isonzo, converging on Caporetto. From there the Austro-Hungarian forces advanced some 150 kilometres. The defeat of Caporetto caused the disintegration of the whole Italian front of Isonzo. The situation was re-established on the Piave River at the price of 700,000 dead, wounded and prisoners. On 8 November 1917 Commander Cadorna was replaced by Armando Diaz. Under his leadership the Italian army on 24 October 1918 launched a major attack against the Austrian forces along the entire front, initiating the battle of Vittorio Veneto, a village where one of the main actions was fought. In early November 1918, the Italians entered Trent and Trieste, and on 4 November 1918, the Austro-Hungarians signed an armistice at Villa Giusti, near Padua. Finally, on 2 June 1919, the Treaty of St. Germain established peace with Austria. However, it did not give Italy what she expected in accordance with the provisions of the Treaty of London. Italian human losses: 600,000 dead, 950,000 wounded and 250,000 were crippled for life.

Aftermath: the Peace treaties

The Treaty of Trianon with Hungary: signed at the Grand Trianon Palace in Versailles on 4 June 1919. Hungary signed a cease-fire at Padua on 4 November 1918, though its army was stationed outside Hungary. Furthermore, Hungary was forced to demilitarize its army, after which Czech, Serbian and Romanian troops invaded the defenseless country. The French Colonel Vix demanded new borders inside the country. Finally, a Red Hungarian Army was organized to withstand the invaders. By the time of the Peace Treaty, most part of the country was occupied by the invaders, whereby creating a fait accompli. The peace treaty (rather dictate) established the new borders of Hungary and regulated its international situation. Hungary lost over 72% of her historical territory, which left 64% of the inhabitants, including 3.5 out of 10.7 million ethnic Hungarians, living outside Hungary. The territory of Hungary was reduced from 325,111 km<sup>2</sup> to 93,073 km<sup>2</sup> and its population from 20.9 million to 7.6 million. Hungary lost five of its ten most populous cities as well. Transylvania (Erdély) (larger than the truncated Hungary) was ceded to Romania, northern part of Hungary (Upland, Felvidék) and Sub-Carpathia (Kárpátalja) to the newly created state of Czechoslovakia; Croatia and southern Hungary (Southland, Délvidék, Vajdaság) to the Kingdom of Serbs, Croats and Slovenes (later Yugoslavia), and Burgenland (Western Borderland, Őrvidék) to Austria. Hungarians were deeply disappointed because the promised plebiscites of the Wilsonian self-determination on debated territories, were not held, and most Hungarian settlements, consisting of more than 3 million Magyars, were situated in a 20–50 km wide strip outside and along the new borders in now-foreign territory. More concentrated groups could be found in Czechoslovakia (Northern Hungary and Sub-Carpathia or Kárpátalja), Serbia (Southland, Voivodina or Vajdaság), and Romania (Partium, and Szeklerland in Transylvania or Erdély). The Treaty demolished the 1000 year old Kingdom of Hungary, and punished its people, submitted 3.5 million ethnic Hungarians to peoples with different culture, language and customs, who regarded them as booty, for exploitation oppression, and persecution. In addition, Hungary had to pay indemnity to its neighbors. However, Hungary recovered some parts of lost territories with treaties in 1938 - 1940 under the auspices of Germany and Italy. It was later reduced to boundaries approximating those of 1920 by the Peace Treaty of Paris, signed after World War II on 10 February 1947.

The Treaty with Germany was signed at Versailles on 28 June 1919. Of the many provisions in the treaty, one of the controversial required Germany to accept sole responsibility for causing the war, later known as the “War Guilt” clause. Germany had to make substantial territorial concessions: Alsace and Lorraine was ceded to France, Northern Schleswig Holstein to Denmark; Western Prussia, part of East Prussia and Memelland ceded to Poland; Saarland was put under the League of Nations, Eupen and Malmedy ceded to Belgium, despite plebiscite to the contrary; Danzig became Free Stadt of Danzig; the Brest-Litovsk Treaty was annuled, and German colonies were divided between Belgium, Britain, France and Japan. Moreover war reparations were demanded from Germany: 226 billion Reichsmarks, which was reduced in 1921 to 132 billion Reichsmarks (then $31.4 billion). The German army was limited to a maximum of 100,000 men, and a ban placed upon the use of heavy artillery, gas, tanks and aircraft. The German navy was similarly restricted to shipping under 10,000 tons, with a ban on submarines.

The Treaty with the Republic of Austria was signed at Saint-Germain-en-Laye on 10 September 1919. The treaty declared that the Austro-Hungarian Empire was to be dissolved. The Republic of Austria was reduced to German-speaking Alpine part of the former Austrian Empire, and the crownlands were incorporated into the newly created states of Czechoslovakia, Poland, and Yugoslavia (the “successor states”) and by cession: Trentino, South Tyrol, Reiset, Istria and several Dalmatian islands to Italy and Bukovina to Romania. So, it lost land to Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Poland, Romania, and Italy. Burgenland, then partner with Austria in the Dual Monarchy, was awarded to Austria. The treaty included 'war reparations' of large sums of money, directed towards the allies, to pay for the costs of the war.

After the war, the Paris Peace Conferences imposed a series of peace treaties on the Central Powers thus creating serious internal conditions with grave consequences. On 11 November 1918, the Central Powers signed an armistice with the Allied Powers expecting a just peace to be established, based upon the 14 Peace Points of the American President Woodrow Wilson. This did not happen. Instead the French Prime Minister, George Clemenceau’s dictated peace treaties in form of a harsh punishment was forced upon the Central Powers. With it the Allied Powers sowed the seeds of World War II. – B: 1031, 2060, T: 7103.→Hungary, History of; Trianon Peace Treaty; Vienna Award I; Vienna Award II; World War II, Hungary in; Some of the persons and events have their own article.

World War II, Hungary in

Preliminaries

The Peace Treaties of 1919-1920 closed World War I. However, these treaties, instead of being based on the promised Wilsonian 14 points, which would have created a just and lasting peace in Europe, they were actually based on the French Prime Minister (‘the Tiger’) Clemenceau’s plan, which from parts of the defeated Germany and Austro-Hungarian Monarchy created new, or enriched old pro-France states, in order to encircle Germany from south and east, thereby hoping to prevent Germany to start another war in the future. These peace treaties were not negotiated but in fact dictated; they were also unjust because defeated nations were sliced into pieces and ceded to alien and hostile states; they were counter-productive, because instead of securing a lasting peace in Europe, they fell victim to France’s foreign policy, and after twenty years, they led to World War II.

As to Hungary: the Trianon Treaty proved the most severe among the treaties. The Hungarian delegation was not allowed to the negotiating table but was confined to a hotel; the treaty text was presented to the delegation only for comment; take it or leave it, in the latter case with serious consequences. The Historic Hungary lost 2/3rd of its territory and 1/3rd of its ethnic Hungarian population, that is 3.5 millions. The territory of Hungary was reduced from 325,111 km<sup>2</sup> to 93,073 km<sup>2</sup> and its population from 20.9 million to 7.6 million. Hungary lost five of its ten most populous cities, most of its mines, forests and industries as well. Before ethnic Hungarians constituted 52% of the country population in Historic Hungary. Alien people from neighboring countries infiltrated, settled and multiplied on Hungarian territory during its thousand years history, and from the middle of 19th century they wanted to create their own state within the state of Historic Hungary or to join their newly-created country. It is one thing to cede them the region where their majority lived, but it is quite another thing to drive 3.5 million ethnic Hungarians into minority status, without a plebiscite and against their will. Purely Hungarian-populated areas were ceded from Hungary, including a strip along the southern Slovakian border, including the Csallóköz island (now Žitný ostrov) of the Danube; Hungarian populated counties in Sub-Carpathia ceded to the newly created Czechoslovakia, while the eastern belt of the Great Hungarian Plain (Partium) and Szeklerland in Transylvania ceded to Romania; the Southland, including Vojvodina (Vajdaság) was added to Yugoslavia. The 3.5 million Hungarians were subjugated to alien and hostile nations, with different culture, language, religion and costume. They were oppressed, exploited or driven out. The treaty dealt with Hungarians as if they were aboriginals of a 19th century colony in Africa. The Trianon Treaty demolished a thousand years old Christian European Kingdom and collectively punished – which was unacceptable then, and now. The outcome of the Treaty of Trianon is to this day remembered in Hungary as the Trianon trauma. This was the attitude of most Hungarians, between the two world wars, the Dictated Treaty of Trianon causing deep humiliation. Consequently, the successive Hungarian Governments, starting with Count István (Stephen) Bethlen Government, pursued two main goals: first, to organize life of normality in conditions of great severity inside truncated Hungary, and second, to review and reverse the Dictated Trianon Treaty. The first goal was achieved splendidly in the field of economy, education, health and culture, despite the world economic and financial crisis of the late 1920s, and early 1930s. As to the second goal: for 15 years, Hungarian governments pressed the Entente Powers for a territorial revision to be decided along ethnic lines, but to no avail. Only the Italian leader Benito Mussolini understood Hungary's concern and tried to help, despite the fact that Italian and Hungarian armies faced each other in bitter battles during World War I. When Adolf Hitler came to power in Germany, Prime Minister Gyula (Julius) Gömbös, expecting more results, turned to him in connection with Hungarian foreign policy and soon Hungary joined the Axis powers as a result.

In the fall of 1938, at the Munich Agreement, where Adolf Hitler demanded and received the German Sudetenland from Czechoslovakia, Hungary wanted the return of the Hungarian populated southern part of Slovakia, and the southern part of Sub-Carpathia; these were finally returned to Hungary when Italy and Germany sponsored the First Vienna Award on 2 November 1938, returning an area of 11,927 km<sup>2</sup> with a population of 1,060,000, 84.1 % Hungarian; leaving 70,000 Hungarians in Slovakia. When the Czechoslovak Republic was dissolved on 14 March 1939, Slovakia declared itself an independent state. On 15 March, Carpatho Ukraine (Sub-Carpathia or Kárpátalja or Ruthenia) declared its independence, which was rejected by Hungary, and between 15 and 18 March, Hungarian armed forces re-possessed the rest of Sub-Carpathia. The region was given special autonomous status.

In June 1940, a Soviet ultimatum demanded Bessarabia and Northern Bukovina from Romania which had been incorporated into Romania after World War I and the Romanian Government had to give in. This encouraged the Hungarian Government to resolve the question of Transylvania (Erdély), which became part of Romania by the Trianon Treaty (1920). The Axis Powers suggested to the parties that they solve their problems by direct negotiations, which started on 16 August 1940 in Turnu Severin, but it led to nowhere. Romania asked the Axis powers for arbitration. The ministers of foreign affairs of the Axis, Joachim von Ribbentrop of Germany and Count Galeazzo Ciano of Italy, announced the award on 30 August 1940 at the Belvedere Palace in Vienna. As a result of the Second Vienna Award, the northern half of Transylvania with 43,492 km<sup>2</sup> area and a population of 2,578,100 was transferred to Hungary. The rest of Transylvania, known as Southern Transylvania, with 2,274,600 Romanians and 363,200 Hungarians remained in Romania. The new border was guaranteed by both Germany and Italy, and it was internationally accepted.

On 20 November 1940, under pressure from Germany, Hungarian prime Minister Count Pál (Paul) Teleki signed the Tripartite Pact. In December 1940, Teleki also signed a "Treaty of Eternal Friendship" with the Kingdom of Yugoslavia, under the Regent Prince Paul. In March 1941, Prince Paul signed the Tripartite Pact on behalf of Yugoslavia. Two days later, a Yugoslavian coup d'état removed Prince Paul, replaced him with pro-British King Peter, and Yugoslavia withdrew from the Tripartite Pact. Hitler to prevent the postponement of the planned German invasion of Soviet Union, decided to crush Yugoslavia at once. Hitler asked the Hungarian government to support his invasion of Yugoslavia, promising the return of some territory (part of the Southland) to Hungary in exchange for military cooperation. On 3 April 1941, unable to prevent Hungary's neutrality Count Teleki committed suicide. Days after Teleki's death, the German Army invaded Yugoslavia and quickly crushed Yugoslavian armed resistance. Croatia declared its independence and Yugoslavia fell apart. The Regent, Miklos Horthy ordered the Hungarian Third Army to retake the ethnic Hungarian-populated territories of the Southland: the interfluvial-area between the Danube and its tributary River Tisza and the Hungarian-populated enclaves of Baranya (Baranja) and Muraköz (Muranje) to protect ethnic Hungarians against possible atrocities by Serb partisans.

War against Soviet Union

After Germany had quickly overrun Yugoslavia and Greece, it started the war of formidable proportions against the Soviet Union on 22 June 1941. Slovakia, had already entered the war against Poland in 1939 (at the time of the partition of Poland), now immediately joined in the war against the Soviet Union, together with Romania and other countries. Hungary was the last participant in the war, starting on 27 June, as a result of an alleged Soviet aerial bombardment of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). In the Parliament, Prime Minister László (Ladislav) Bárdossy presented a state of war between Hungary and the Soviet Union. Hungary had to be cautious entering the war against the Soviet Union, despite the first-hand experience with communism rule during the 4 months in 1919 of the Hungarian Soviet Council Republic. First, the Hungarian Army served as a policing-force behind the lines in the territories already occupied by the German forces. However, Hungary was soon commissioned to front-line service, holding a 200 km front in the Voronezh (Voronyezs) area along the River Don. The Hungarian 2nd Army was unsuited for front-line battle because of a lack of modern heavy weaponry. After the German military disaster at Stalingrad in early 1943 and the withdrawal from the Caucasus Mountains, the Soviet Army launched its winter-offensive against the 2nd Hungarian Army's bridgehead at Uryv on 12 January 1943. Demonstrating great courage and heroism, the 2nd Hungarian Army was forced to withdraw from the banks of the Don, when the Soviet troops outflanked them and in this great 'battle of the Don' suffered devastating losses between 12 and 30 January 1943 with 100,000 dead, 60,000 taken prisoners in Russia and only 40,000 returning to Hungary. The material losses were also very heavy. The sacrifices of the 2nd Army thus prompted a political decision to save Hungary from the consequences of her participation in a losing war: henceforth, Hungary sought contact with the Allied Powers to negotiate the terms of a separate peace. However, there were no secret moves with the Soviet Union.

Aware of Prime Minister Kállay's policy of deception and fearing that Hungary might conclude a separate peace with the Allies, on 19 March 1944 Hitler ordered Nazi troops to occupy Hungary. Regent Horthy was confined to the Royal Castle, in essence placed under house arrest. Döme (Dominic) Sztójay, a National Socialist, became the new Prime Minister. During the Kállay Government Jews in Hungary still could live in relative freedom, restricted but not subjected to physical harm. But after the German occupation the deportation of Jews commenced to the concentration camps in German-occupied territories. In August 1944, Regent Horthy replaced Sztójay with the anti-Fascist General Géza Lakatos, a daring move under German military occupation. Under the Lakatos regime, acting Interior Minister Béla Horváth ordered Hungarian gendarmes to prevent any Hungarian citizens from being deported. At one point in time, Horthy, the former Admiral of the Habsburg Monarchy, ordered a Hungarian panzer unit from Esztergom to Budapest for the protection of the Jewish Ghetto there.

On 23 September 1944, Soviet forces crossed the Hungarian border. On 15 October, Regent Horthy made the famous announcement over the radio that Hungary had signed an armistice with the Soviet Union but the remaining Hungarian army units continued fighting against the invading Soviet forces. The Germans kidnapped Horthy's son Miklós (Nicholas) Horthy Jr, whereupon Horthy was forced to abrogate the armistice, deposed the Lakatos Government, and named the leader of the Arrow Cross Party Ferenc (Francis) Szálasi, who formed a new "Government of national Unity (Nemzeti Összefogás Kormányja). Finally in the untenable situation Regent Horthy, as head of state, resigned; he was taken to Germany as a prisoner of the occupying German forces. He survived the war and spent his last years in Estoril, Portugal. During the Arrow Cross reign persecution of Jews and Gypsies resumed, so the secret rescuing of Jews continued with the activity of the Swedish diplomat Raul Wallenberg from the Swiss Embassy, as well as by the churches (including Cardinal Mindszenty) and individuals, families. In the war-ravaged Europe Hungary was the last refuge for Jews, Polish refugees, and Allied POWs.

Towards the end of World War II Hungary became a battlefield. The second biggest tank-battle of the war was fought in the east of the Great Plain, east of Debrecen, from 16 September to 24 October. The German-Hungarian tank-formation scored an important victory here, holding up the Soviet advance into Hungary for a considerable period. They encircled and destroyed three Soviet tank corps of a Mobile Group. By 24 December 1943 Soviet and Romanian army units encircled Budapest and thus the Siege of Budapest started with bitter street fightings which ended on 13 February 1945, with a destroyed city and enormous loss to both sides as well as civilian life. However, on 6 March 1945, the Germans launched their Lake Balaton Offensive, attempting to hold on to Germany's remaining source of oil (in Transdanubia). Their operation failed. By 19 March 1945, Soviet forces had recaptured what they lost during the 13-day offensive. The Soviet conquest of Hungary officially ended on 4 April, in practice on 12 April 1945.

After the war

The Soviet occupation of Hungary, as they named it officially, was euphemized as "liberation". Nonetheless, Soviet forces remained "provisionally" in Hungary until 16 June 1991. First, the occupation forces relied on free robbery of civilians, and mass raping of women in all ages. Hungarian civilians in both gender, were randomly rounded up and taken for a 'malenki robot' (small work), and they were transported in cattle wagons to the Soviet Union for slave labor, never to see them again. From Sub-Carpathia 50,000 civilians were taken, from northern Transylvania 200,000, from Slovakia 50,000 taken to Czechland (Silesia) for forced work, 70,000 involved in exchange of citizens and 100,000 was expelled to Hungary. In southern Hungary the Tito partisans tortured and massacred 50,000 ethnic Hungarians, including whole families and whole villages. In January 1945, ethnic Germans from Hungary, 100,000 to 170,000 were arrested and transported to the Soviet Union as forced laborers. In some villages, the entire adult population were taken to labor camps in the Donets Basin. Many died there as a result of hardship and ill-treatment. At a later stage some 200,000 ethnic Germans were forcibly removed from Hungary and deported to the two Germanies.

On 28 December 1944, a Provisional National Assembly and a Provisional Government were formed in Debrecen under acting Prime Minister Béla Miklós. On 20 January 1945, representatives of the Provisional Government signed an armistice in Moscow. In the meantime the prominent leaders of the 1919 Communist Government, who escaped and lived in the Soviet Union, were transported back to Hungary and became leaders of the Communist Party. This group included: Mátyás (Matthew) Rákosi, György (George) Lukács, Zoltán Vass. They all received important positions and prepared the Communist takeover of Hungary in 1948. In the meantime the rebuilding of Hungary had begun, and simultaneously the so-called "People's Tribunals" (Népbíróságok) forced out of office and punished the leading intelligentsia of the nation. The transformation of Hungary into a Communist state had thus commenced.

Hungary in the presence of foreign occupation force was forced to sign the Peace Treaty of Paris on 10 February 1947. The Treaty declared that "The decisions of the Vienna Award I and II are declared null and void" and Hungarian boundaries were returned to the former frontiers as they existed on 1 January 1938, except a minor loss of territory on the Czechoslovakian border near Bratislava. Two thirds of the ethnic German minority was deported to Germany in 1946-48, and there was a forced "exchange of population" between Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

Hungary again lost all the territories that it gained between 1938 and 1941, before she entered the war. The Soviet Union annexed Sub-Carpathia (Kárpátalja), which never was part of the Soviet Union and the earlier Russia, and it is now part of the Ukraine, by virtue of inheritance, after the dissolution of the Soviet Union. In addition Hungary had to pay $300 million in reparation, and finance a large Soviet occupation force. On 1 February 1946, the Kingdom of Hungary was abolished, and replaced by the Second Republic Hungary, in reality becoming a Soviet satellite. The People Republic of Hungary was declared in 1949, and despite the Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1956, it lasted until the Bloodless Revolution of 1989, when on 23 October, the Third Republic of Hungary was declared with a multi-party system. – B: 1031, 1230, 1275, 1383, T: 7668.→Hungary, History of; World War I; Vienna Award I; Vienna Award II; Paris Peace Treaty; Some of the persons and events have their own word article, as indicated.

Worthless Money (Hungarian: fabatka) – "Batka" was a completely devalued coin of Silesian origin in the 16th century. Fa meaning „wood”, and batka was a ridiculous, worthless counterfeit coin, made out of wood. Today it is used in vernacular Hungarian to express the worthlessness of something: "I wouldn't even give a fabatka for it"; or 'It isn't worth a fabatka'. – B: 1078, T: 3233.

Würtz, Ádám (Tamási, 2 June 1927 - Budapest, 13 May 1994) – Graphic artist. His family had connections with New York: his ancestors worked in the Metropolitan Opera there as costumier. Würtz completed the School of Arts of Budapest in 1953. His teachers included Sándor (Alexander) Bortnyik and Bertalan (Bartholomew) Pór. Later, he continued his studies in Austria, Germany, Italy, Switzerland, England, Poland, the Soviet Union, Romania, Greece and China. He was best known as an illustrator of graphics for books; he achieved the greatest success with his illustration of the works of Shakespeare and the poet Attila József. His one-man shows have been seen in Budapest since 1964, but he had shows also in Frankfurt, Prague, Helsingborg, Bologna and New York. In the USA, his first exhibition was held in the mid-1980s; later, he did some of his paintings in the United States, when he worked there for a while. His paintings are characterized by the application of mixed techniques. Byzantine icons and Hungarian folk art mainly influenced his style. His illustrations appeared next to the text as complements. Many public collections hold his works, including the Hermitage, St Petersburg, the Metropolitan Gallery, Budapest, Hungarian National Gallery, Budapest, and the Klingspor Museum, Frankfurt. He won a number of prizes in Hungary and abroad, among them the Munkácsy Prize (1957, 1966, 1970), the Golden Pen, Belgrade (1968) and IBBY Prize, Tokyo. The International Würtz Foundation was formed in 1996; its president is Ádám Würtz Jr., also a graphic artist. A school in Tamási bears his name. – B: 1031, 1654, T: 7456.→Bortnyik, Sándor; Pór, Bertalan; József, Attila.

X

Xantus de Vesey, John (János) (Csíktaplóczai Vesey Xántus János) (Csokonya, north of Bars, County Somogy, 5 October 1825 - Budapest, 13 December 1894) – Zoologist, ethnographer and writer. He studied law, and became a lawyer. He served as an officer in the Hungarian National Army throughout the 1848-1849 War of Independence. After the surrender, he was captured, was enrolled in the Austrian army as a private and exiled to Prague; but because of his illness, he was freed. He took part in revolutionary activity and he was arrested again, but escaped and emigrated, first to London, then to the United States. He tried various occupations, including working as a day laborer, wood-cutter, bookseller, druggist, teacher in Latin and Greek, giving lessons in piano-playing and working as a hospital steward in the US Army. In the army, he met William A. Hammond, a collector for a well-known zoologist. Working under Hammond as an assistant surgeon, he developed an interest in natural history and became a gifted collector himself. He made a topographic survey in the mid-west of the US and collected ethnographic materials among Indian tribes. In 1853 he took part in the natural-scientific expedition of Prince Paul of Wittenberg, with whom he traveled through Texas and parts of Mexico, collecting zoological material. In 1855 he was a member of the committee for carrying out the geographical survey of Kansas and collected vast material in natural science. In 1857 and 1858 he carried out research in California for the Smithsonian Institute, collecting zoological, mineralogical, botanical and ethnographic material. Between 1858 and 1861 he served as a captain in the US Navy. In 1861 he returned to Hungary and gave lectures at the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, where he was a corresponding member; a little later, he went to the USA again. Xantus de Vesey became the Mexican Consul for the USA in 1862 but in 1864, he went to Hungary again and became Director of the Botanical Gardens and later Director of the Budapest Zoo. In 1869 and 1870 on behalf of the Hungarian Government, he took part in an East-Asian expedition, collecting zoological material. For 30 years until his death, he served as Director of the Zoological Gardens of Budapest and as Curator of Ethnography at the Hungarian National Museum, Budapest. After 1871 he was also President of the Ethnographic Society and Vice-President of the Geographic Society. Among his vast collections, the ethnographic material did prove outstanding. Several animal and plant species had been named after him, including the animal species: Xantus's Murrelet (Synthliboramphus hypoleucus, a tiny bird), Xantus's Hummingbird (Basilinna xantusii, a medium-sized hummingbird), Xantus Swimming Crab (Portunus xantusii); also some plant species such as: Xantus clarkia or Gunsight Fairyfan (Clarkia xantiana), Xantus Spineflower (Chorizanthe xantii) and Xantus's Milkwort (Popygala xanti). Xantus wrote some 200 articles in scientific journals and he was the author of a number of books, including his important travelogues of Borneo, Java and Ceylon (Sri Lanka), which contain many historically significant data. A secondary school for tourism in Budapest and a Museum at Győr bear his name. – B: 1068, 1078, 0883, 1257, 1031; T: 7103, 7456.

Xantus, Gábor (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 5 April 1954 - ) – Director of films, scenarist and cameraman. He completed his tertiary studies at the University of Bucharest and, from 1971 he was an associate of Romanian Television in Kolozsvár while, from 1975 he worked as an associate editor for the firm. From 1985 to 1989 he prepared documentary films. In December 1989 during the Romanian Revolution, he was a participant in the re-establishment of the radio in Kolozsvár and, at the same time, he took part in organizing the first independent broadcasting of the local TV-studio. From 1990 he was manager, cameraman and co-editor of the Hungarian broadcasting service of the Romanian Television. He founded and led the independent documentary-film and video workshop of Kolozsvár, which is named after him. He also took part in founding the Duna Television Foundation of Budapest. He is a member of the International Documentary Association (IDA); since 2006 he has been a member of the Hungarian Art Academy. He has been co-author of several hundred TV-productions and author of about 90 films, among them: The Glacier Lakes of the Carpathians (A Kárpátok gleccsertavai), documentary (1982) and With Raised Head (Emelt fővel), portrait of Áron Márton (1993-1994). His prize-winning works include: Dream Under the Snow (Hó alatt álom) (1992) and Vision on the Banks of the Lake (Tóparti látomás) (1995). His distinctions include: Prize of the International TV and Video Festival of Chateau Renault (1990, 1993) and the Prize of the Romanian TV-artists' Society (1991, 1995, 1997, 1998). – B: 1031, T: 7456. → Jakobovits, Márta; Jakobovits, Miklós.

Y

Yalta Conference – Summit meeting in the Russian holiday resort of Yalta on the Crimean Peninsula, held by the leaders of the three Allied Powers of World War II: Churchill, Roosevelt and Stalin, between 2 and 12 February 1945. The aim of the summit conference was to complete plans for the defeat of Germany and the foundation of the United Nations. With the assistance of military experts, the coordination of the final military operations was worked out. Significantly, the Soviet Union undertook to declare war on Japan 3 months after the end of the war in Europe. The occupation zones of Germany were worked out, the Allied Control Commission was set up, in which France was also invited to take part, and the German reparation was also broached. The question of the territorial subdividing of Germany was left open. The new borders of Poland were agreed upon after heated arguments. Stalin got his way in keeping the occupied areas of eastern Poland and he also succeeded in supporting the Lublin Government under Soviet control, as opposed to the Émigré Government in London. The western Polish border was not finalized at the conference. An agreement was reached for the leading war criminals to be put on trial. The Allied leaders agreed on their common politics to be followed after the liberation of Germany and the other occupied countries, also on the settlement of matters in connection with the occupation of Germany and on the problems related to Poland and Yugoslavia. After the end of the war, in the 'spirit of Yalta', Soviet refugees found in Western Europe were forcibly returned to the Soviet Union. As to the eastern European countries, it was decided that they would have free elections. Actually, they gradually came under Soviet influence with the help of Communist puppet regimes, which ruled over them for 45 years. According to many observers, the seriously ill Roosevelt was too much under the influence of Stalin, who, exploited Roosevelt's weakness and thus became the winner in the majority of the contested problems. Already at Yalta, the differences between the three powers were becoming evident. Eight sessions were held and one summary statement was issued. – B: 1153, 1871, 1998, T: 7456.→Churchill, Sir Winston; Roosevelt, Franklin Delano; Stalin, Joseph; Teheran Conference.

Yazigs→Jazigs.

Ybl, Ervin (Budapest, 14 January 1890 - Budapest, 11 August 1965) – Art historian. He received a doctorate of law and a Ph.D. from the University of Budapest. For a number of years he ran the fine arts column of the paper Budapest News (Budapesti Hírlap); later, he was in charge of the art section of the Ministry of Public Education and Religion as Head of Department. In 1931 he became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) in Italian sculptural history at the University of Budapest. From 1 July 1941 he was a titular associate professor. He is the author of numerous studies, articles and critiques in journals and papers in Hungary and abroad. He specialized mainly in Italian sculpture, Baroque architecture and 19th century Hungarian Art. The King Stephen Museum of Székesfehérvár received his bequest and his original hand-written texts are also held there. His works of art include: Donatello (Brussels, 1930), Sculpture of Toscana in the Quattrocentro. vols. i,ii (Toscana szobrászata a quattrocentroban I-II) (1930), Life and Art of Károly Lotz (Lotz Károly élete és művészete) (1938), Masters and Masterpieces (Mesterek és mesterművek) (1938), Miklós Ybl (1956), Tivadar Csontváry (1958, in English as well), and The French and English Renaissance and Baroque Art vols. i,ii (A francia és angol renaissance és barokk művészet I-II) (1960). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Ybl, Miklós (Nicholas) (Székesfehérvár, 6 April 1814 - Budapest 22 January 1891) – Architect. After graduation from the Vienna Polytechnic, he started to work for Mihály (Michael) Pollack, in 1832. Few years later, in 1836 he joined Henrik Koch's Firm. He continued his postgraduate studies in Munich and in Italy. After finishing his studies, he returned to Hungary. He got into partnership with Ágoston (Augustine) Polláck, and opened a designing office. He designed the castle for Count Batthyány at Ikervár, the mansions of Fót and Radvány, and the church of Kaplony. His first important work of art was the Roman Catholic Church at Fót. It was designed in Romantic - Romanesque style with oriental motives. Later, from 1860, he turned to the Italian Renaissance style in his designs. His most famous buildings lent a defining character to Budapest: buildings like the St Stephen Cathedral (Basilica), the University of Economics, the Palace Garden Kiosk, the Bazaar row, the throne room and the new wing of the Royal Palace toward Krisztinaváros (Christine City). His most significant work of art is the Opera House, which was built between 1879 and 1884. He built many churches and mansions in the country. He was the greatest Hungarian architect of the second half of the 19th century. A commemorative award in his name was established in 1953. – B: 1078, 0883, T: 7663.

Yeniköy – Settlement and summer resort in Turkey on the European coast of the Bosphorus. The Sultan of Turkey had one of his summer residences here and the building of the Austro-Hungarian embassy was also built here. On 16 July 1719 the Sublime Porte settled exiled Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II here, transferred from Adrianople and, after the amelioration of the international situation, returned him to the city of Tekirdag (Rodosto). – B: 1078, 1230, T: 7456. → Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc.

Yolande, Saint → Jolán, Saint.

Yolland, Arthur (Hoylake, England, 24 August 1874 - Budapest, 12 November 1956) – Literature historian, linguist. In 1896 he obtained a B.A. degree from Cambridge University, after which he worked as a teacher at the Francis Joseph Boarding School of Budapest and, from 1898 he was a language master in English at the University of Budapest, concurrently a teacher of English at the College of Commerce, as well from 1901. He earned a Ph.D. in Arts from the University of Budapest in 1905. During 1906 and 1907 he pursued further studies in English Language and Literature at the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. From 1908, he was an associate professor of English Language and Literature at the University of Budapest and, from 1914 to 1946 he was professor there. A corresponding member of the Kisfaludy Society from 1909 and member of the Lafontaine Literary Society from 1923. Yolland published English-Hungarian and Hungarian-English dictionaries, translated Hungarian literary and scientific works into English and wrote English-language studies on Hungarian history and culture. He is the author of a biography of the famous novelist Mór (Maurice) Jókai in English, and he translated into English Jókai's novel of 1865 entitled By the Time we Become Old (Mire megvénülünk). His other works include: An English Translation of Petőfi (Egy angol Petőfi fordítás) (1904), Shakespeare and the Bible (Shakespeare és a Biblia) (1910), Life and works of Charles Dickens (Dickens Károly élete és munkái) (1912) and Hungary (1917). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Jókai, Mór; Petőfi, Sándor.

Young Agreement – A new financial plan drawn up by the American finance expert Owen D. Young, in relation to the reparations payment by the defeated nations of World War I, which he presented to the Reparations Council of Hague in 1929, accepted by the Council on 28 April 1930. This agreement was to succeed the earlier Daves-plan for regulating the reparations question. Besides the exact determination of the reparations burden for Germany, it also dealt with the reparations payment by truncated Hungary. This plan prescribed that Hungary was bound to pay 200 million gold crowns between 1924 and 1943 and, in addition to this, was bound to pay 297 million gold crowns between 1944 and 1966. With this, all of Hungary's war debt would be considered settled. After the outbreak of the world economic crisis in 1931 Germany was given a moratorium for the payment and, after Hitler came into power, he unilaterally discontinued the reparation payment. In the case of Hungary during World War II, the remaining debts lost their validity and lapsed. – B: 1078, 1138, T: 7456. → World War I, Hungary in; Trianon Peace Treaty.

Younger King (Rex iunior) – It was the title of the crown prince of Hungary – introduced in the House of Árpád – who was crowned while the king was still alive. It was King István I, (St. Stephen) (997-1038) who introduced this title for his son Imre (Emeric), thereby breaking away from the institution of ducatus, which was the dual rulership of the kende and gyula of earlier times. This led to considerable conflicts between the supporters of the old traditions and the supporters of the younger king. During the rule of King István V (Stephen) (1270-1272), this title was abolished, since there were no direct lineage claimants to the throne by this time. – B: 1141, 1020, T: 7665.

Young Shepherd – Assisting the head shepherd, responsible for guarding the herd. He is young and usually single, engaged by the head shepherd only for one season of grazing. Due to the great number of herds in the Hungarian plains several of them are needed for all the animals. The head shepherd is usually seconded by either the eldest or the cleverest herdsman called “old” shepherd while the youngest was called “small” shepherd. – B: 1134, T: 3240.

Yuezhi (Yüeh-Chih) – Chinese name for an ancient Central Asian people. They are believed to have been the same as or closely related to the Tocharians, who evidently spoke the proto-Indo-European Tocharian language. They settled in the Tarim Basin area, in today’s Gansu and Xinjiang Provinces in China. Following a defeat by the Hiung-nu (Huns) in 162 BC, the Yuezhi fled from the Tarim Basin toward the west, and settled north of the Oxus in modern-day Kazakhstan and Uzbekistan. They displaced the Sakas (Scythians) who lived there previously, before being driven out by the Wusun in 132 BC. The Yuezhi then fled to the region of Bactria in modern-day Afghanistan. As they settled in Bactria, the Yuezhi became Hellenized to some degree, as suggested by their adoption of the Greek alphabet and by some remaining coins, minted in the style of the Greco-Bactrian kings, with the text in Greek. By the end of the 1st century BC, the Yuezhi extended their control over the northwestern area of the Indian subcontinent, founding the Kushan Empire, which was to rule the region for several centuries. They converted to Buddhism and their interactions with Greek civilization helped the Gandharan culture and Greco-Buddhism flourish. In the early 1st millennium AD, Central Asian peoples including the Yuezhi were among the first to translate Buddhist scriptures into Chinese. Major Yuezhi translators included Lokaksema and Dharmaraksa. – B: 1031, 2017, T: 7617. → Huns; Kushans.

Yugars (Jugars) – At the far end of China, in the Tarim Basin, in today’s Xinjiang live the Yugars, that is, the yellow Uyghurs, in Uyghur Autonomic Territory. Their population is estimated to be 9,000,000. Their decorative art and treasure-trove of melodies are similar to those of the Hungarians, and also their customs of eating. Chinese explorers consider territories inhabited by them as a “living ethnographic museum”. The Yugars are also known for their unusual folk music. Their folk songs with their descending melodies, built on the pentatonic scale, are related only to the Hungarian folk songs in the Carpathian Basin that being at the western end of the Great Migration. Also the burial customs of this fragment of a people are similar to those of the Magyars during the time of the settlement period in the Carpathian Basin. While studying at Göttingen, Sándor (Alexander) Kőrösi Csoma de Kőrös (1784 -1842), listened to Professor Blumenbach’s lectures: based on the Chinese yearbooks, this scientist traced the origin of the Hungarians from the Uyghur people. Csoma de Kőrös considered it his main goal in life to discover the countries of the Uyghur and Yugar people, whom he believed were the progenitors of the Hungarians. After a long period of preparation, he set out for Asia in 1842. Unfortunately he died on the way. Following the route of Csoma de Kőrös, István (Stephen) Kiszely started out and discovered the Uyghur people in 1888. According to the eminent linguist Zoltán Gömböcz, the Uyghur people are the ancestors of the Huns and Magyars; he states that Yugria is the original home from where the Huns and Magyars moved to the Carpathian Basin. The Uyghurs and Yugars avow their relationship to the Hungarians. Currently Lajos (Louis) Máté, László Bárdy, András Zsolt Bíró and others are studying the Hungarian connections with the Uyghur people. – B: 1904, T: 7684.→Uyghurs; Kőrösi Csoma, Sándor; Kiszely, István.

Yugoslavia (1929-2006) – A newly formed state of diverse components of ethnic groups in the Balkans. In 1918 as an outcome of World War I, the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes was formed. Croatia, Slovenia, Bosnia and Herzegovina had been part of the fallen Austro-Hungarian Empire; Serbia while Montenegro existed as an independent state (Macedonia was then part of Serbia). In 1929 the name of the Kingdom of the Serbs Croats and Slovenes was changed to the Kingdom of Yugoslavia. In 1945 following World War II, the monarchy became a Communist Republic under Prime Minister Josip Broz Tito, and was later called the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia. It was composed of six republics: Serbia, Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Macedonia, Slovenia and Montenegro as well as two provinces, Kosovo and Vojvodina. In Vojvodina, formerly part of Historic Hungary, the Yugoslav partisans mass-murdered more than 40,000 ethnic Hungarians, including women and children. The former partisan Commander, Josip Broz Tito's tight reign on Yugoslavia kept ethnic tensions in check until his death in 1980. Without him, ethnic and nationalist differences began to flare up, including violence against ethnic Hungarians in Vojvodina (Vajdaság). In June 1991, Slovenia and Croatia each declared independence. With 90% of its population ethnic Slovenians, Slovenia was able to break away with only a brief period of fighting. But because 12% of Croatia's population is Serbian, the remaining Yugoslavia fought hard against its secession for the next four years. As Croatia moved toward independence, it evicted most of its Serbian population. In January 1992 Macedonia declared independence. In April, Bosnia and Herzegovina declared independence. The most ethnically diverse of the Yugoslav republics, Bosnia was 43% Muslim, 31% Serbian, and 17% Croatian, according to the 1991 Yugoslavian census. Ethnic tensions grew to a breaking point, and Bosnia erupted into war. Thousands died in the war and ethnic cleansing, and more than a million people were displaced. By the time a tenuous peace was achieved in 1995 the country has been partitioned into three areas, each governed by one of the three ethnic groups. Each enclave is now made up of roughly 90% of its own ethnic group. Serbia and Montenegro formed the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, with Slobodan Milosevic as its leader. This new government, however, was not recognized by the United States as the successor state to the former Yugoslavia. In November 1995, Bosnia, Serbia, and Croatia signed the Dayton Peace Accord to end the war in Bosnia. In 1996, in the southern Yugoslavian province of Kosovo, the militant Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA) began to attack Serbian police. In March 1998, Milosevic sent troops to Kosovo to quash unrest in the province. A guerrilla war broke out. A year later, after peace talks failed, NATO carried through its threat to launch air strikes on Serbian targets. In 2000, Vojislav Kostunica won an election. Then a popular uprising began. A general strike was called and one million people flooded Belgrade. Mobs attacked the Parliament building security forces either joined them or retreated. Milosevic' support crumbled and he resigned. Kostunica took office. The U.S. and the European Union began to lift the economic sanctions, and offered aid. In 2001, Milosevic was arrested by Yugoslavian authorities and charged with corruption and abuse of power and handed over to United Nations International Criminal Tribunal at The Hague, where he later died. In February 2003, an agreement was made to form a new state, replacing Yugoslavia with a loose federation called Serbia and Montenegro. A month later, the Prime Minister of Serbia, Zoran Djindjic, a reformer who helped bring about the fall of Slobodan Milosevic, was assassinated. In May 2006, Montenegro held a referendum on independence and Serbia acknowledged the end of the union. The EU and the United States recognized Montenegro on 12 June and it became the 192nd member of the UN on 26 June. Kosovo, the secessionist Albanian-populated province finally gained independence from Serbia on 17 February 2008. Although Kosovo is recognized as an independent state by many member states of the UN and the EU, Serbia still refuses to recognize its independence. – B: 1031, T: 1031, 7103.→Atrocities against Hungarians.

Yugoslav Labor Camps – After the defeat of the 1956 Hungarian Revolution by the Soviet army, many people in order to escape from the restored Communist system attempted to reach the West through Yugoslavia. The Yugoslav authorities in general did not deport the refugees back to Hungary; a small number of refugees were allowed to cross into Italy or Austria, but the majority, about 98% was forced into labor camps. Many died in these camps, though most of them were eventually allowed to leave the country for the West. - B: 1620, T: 7665.

Z

Záborszky, Kálmán (Coloman) (Chovan) (Szarvas, on the Great Hungarian Plain, 18 January 1852 - Budapest, 16 March 1928) – Music educator and pianist. He also appeared under the name Chovan (Slovakian = orphan). He first studied music with his father, a church organist, and later continued in Vienna. Between 1887 and 1889, he taught at the Horak Piano School in Vienna, and later became its director. From 1889, he was the successor of Francis (Ferenc) Erkel at the Music Academy of Budapest. From 1891 to 1916, he was professor of the training institute for piano teachers. In Vienna, his numerous published works made him a prominent figure in the international musical life. As a professor of the Music Academy, he was instrumental in the development of Hungarian music education His pedagogical works are perennial. – B: 1197, 0883, T: 7684.→Erkel, Ferenc.

Zab tributaries of the Tigris River – In Iraq, along the upper course of the River Tigris, the three left tributaries are: the Black Zab (Zab al Asfal), the Little Zab (Zab al Kabir) and the Great Zab (Zab al Saghir) Rivers. All three originate in the mountains of Kurdistan, heading southwest. In 1951, in the Shanidar valley, near the little town of Rawandiz, S. Ralph Solecki, Professor of Archaeology at the University of Michigan, was carrying out some excavations, when, from the lowermost layer, he unearthed the bones of a domesticated sheep. According to radiocarbon dating, the excavated skeletal material is dated to 9217 BC + or – 300 years. On the basis of the evidence of the excavated material from the lowermost layer of this site, this place represents the earliest agricultural center. The Sumerian clay tablets alongside the Zab tributaries mention an ancestral tribe, referred to as the ‘SA-people’, whom some historians call “Subarians”. This tribe might have constituted the ancestors of the Sabirs, who, in the opinion of Sir Leonard Woolley, professor of archaeology, must have developed the first important civilization of the Ancient East about 10,000 BC. – B: 1020, T: 7456.→Sabirs.

Zách, Baron János Ferenc, (John Francis; Zach, János Xavér) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 13 or 14 June 1754 - Paris, France, 3 or 4 September 1832) – Astronomer and geodetic. He graduated from the Military Academy of Vienna, and was later appointed a Major by the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha. From 1783 to 1786, he was a tutor in London in a German nobleman’s home. From 1787 to 1806, he was Director of the Observatory he had founded in Seeberg near Gotha, Germany. In 1796 he founded the first astronomical journal, the Allgemeine geographische Ephemeriden, and later the Monatliche Correspondenz, which he edited in Gotha until 1817. In these journals, he gave accounts of several Hungarian astronomical and geodetic projects. From 1815 he lived in Genoa, Italy, and oversaw the construction of the observatory. In 1827, he moved to Paris and wrote many astronomical works in French. His works include Novae et correctae tabulae motuum solis (1797), and Tabulae speciales aberrationis et mutationis, vols i-ii (1806). In 1832 he became an elected member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He was elected a member of the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences in 1794. The No. 999 planetoid Zachia and a volcano of the Moon bear his name. A memorial plaque has been placed on his house in Budapest. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7674.

Zách, Felicián (Záh) (? - Visegrád, 17 April 1330) – Nobleman of ancient stock, the Zách Clan of the Nógrád branch. He was a follower of the oligarch, Máté (Matthew) Csák, and took part in the meeting of Pilis in 1308. With Máté Csák, he kept attacking the clergy faithful to King Charles Robert (Károly Róbert, 1307-1342). However, he switched sides in 1318 to become the King's supporter. It was in the spring of 1330 that he committed the unsuccessful attempt on the life of King Charles Robert (Károly) at Visegrád. He wounded the King, cut off four fingers of the Queen, and it was only with greatest difficulty that the King's retinue could save the royal children. Zách was cut down at the scene and, as a reprisal three entire generations of his descendants were wiped out. The reason for the attempt was to take revenge for the alleged injury to the personal honour of Zách's daughter Klára, committed by the Queen's brother, Kázmér, an act that cannot be historically confirmed; even the verdict of the barons faithful to the king, which was issued a month later, could not justify the punitive action. See: Henrik Marczali (1899) The Litigation of Felicián Zách (Zách Felicián pöre); also the famous ballad Klára Zách by the great lyric poet János Arany. – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.→Csák, Máté; Károly I, King; Lajos I, King; Visegrád; Arany, János.

Zádor, Dezső (Desider) (? 1870 - Berlin, 27 April 1931) – Opera singer (baritone). He appeared mainly on German stages in Wagner operas. From 1913, he regularly sang as a guest artist at the People's Opera (Népopera), Budapest while, at the same time, he was a permanent member of the Court Theater of Dresden. During 1918-1919, he was Director and senior Manager of the Opera House, Budapest. Later, he was a member of the Städtische Oper, Charlottenburg. He was a manager for the première of Béla Bartók's one-act opera, Bluebeard's Castle (A kékszakállú herceg vára). – B: 1445, T: 7456.→Bartók, Béla.

Zádor, István (Stephen) (Nagykikinda, now Kikinda, Serbia, 15 January 1882 - Budapest, 24 May 1963) - Painter and designer. After completion of his high school studies, he worked as a bank clerk until 1906; but from 1901, he attended the courses of the School of Decorative Art in Budapest. From 1906 to 1909, he lived in Paris and obtained admission to the Ecole des Beaux Arts. He planned to become a portrait painter but he also painted croquis. His teacher was T.A. Steinlen. In 1909 and 1910, he furthered his studies at the School of Art of Florence. In World War I, he was a war correspondent. In 1918, he was awarded a small gold medal for his painting Dining Room (Ebédlő). In 1916 and in 1918, he exhibited from his works at the National Salon and the Ernst Museum, Budapest. In 1918 and 1919, he prepared revolutionary report drawings; after the fall of the Council (Soviet) Republic in Hungary (August 1919), he lived, for a while, at Weimar and Munich; later, he returned to Hungary. In 1921-1922 he organized a one-man show at the Ernst Museum. He was one of the founding members of the Szinyei Society. Zádor was a successful portrait painter, e.g. he made the well-known portrait of actress Gizi Bajor; he was also an eminent designer. From the fall of 1938, he worked in the Netherlands. He had a number of exhibitions abroad as well. In 1958, together with sculptor Jenő (Eugene) Grantner, he organized a collective exhibition. His books are entitled Memorials of a Wartime Painter 1914-1918 (Egy hadifestő emlékei 1914-1918) (1934), and Budapest 1945 (1945). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1958. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Bajor, Gizi.

Zádor, Zoltán (Balla) (Pest, 3 May 1835 - Nagyenyed, now Aiud, Romania, 24 December 1882) – Actor, stage manager and translator of literary works. As the son of well-to-do parents, he began studying medicine at the University of Pest; but he abandoned it and joined György (George) Molnár's Troupe in 1858. Later, he played in the best-known country theaters with Endre (Andrew) Latabár and József (Joseph) Szabó. He was a member of the People's Theater (Népszínház) of Buda, run by György Molnár; he was also a member of the People's Theater of Pest for two years. From 1877 until his death, he played in the Transylvanian venues of Andor Sztupa's Troupe. Although he was mainly a popular operetta buffo, he also played tragic character roles with success. As a manager, he chiefly staged comedies, operettas and folk plays. Among his roles were the Doge in Shakespeare's Othello; Polonius in Shakespeare's Hamlet; Cromwell in M. Jókai's Milton; Kanchukoff in Souppé's Fatinica; Frick and Prosper in Offenbach's La vie parisienne (Parisian life, Párizsi élet), and Lecocq in: Mrs. Angot's Daughter (La fille de Madame Angot – Angot asszony leánya). His translations of German plays include August von Kotzebue's Ladies' Tailor Fips (Schneider Fips – Fips a híres nőiszabó); Mór Morländer's Theatrical Oddities (Színházi furcsaságok), and Grange's The Swallow (A fecske). – B: 1445, T: 7456. → Latabár, Endre; Szabó, József (2).

Zadravecz, István O.F.M. (Stephen) Csáktornya, 30 June 1884 - Zsámbék, 13 November 1965) – Roman Catholic Bishop. He joined the Franciscan Order in 1898. He completed his Theological Studies in Rome, where he was ordained in 1907. From 1908, he was a teacher at the College of the Order at Baja, from 1911 in Gyöngyös, from 1915 to 1920 Franciscan Prior and Parish Priest in Szeged. In 1919, he joined the Counter-revolutionary (White) Detachments in Szeged. He consecrated the flag of the Prónay Detachment and carried out recruiting for the national army, headed by Miklós (Nicholas) Horthy, the former Rear-Admiral of the Habsburg Monarchy's Navy, soon to become the Regent of Hungary for 25 years, with whom a life-long friendship developed. From 1920 to 1928, he was Field Bishop of the National Army. Bishop Zadravecz took part in the organizing of the National Army in Transdanubia, preaching national solidarity under the Holy Crown of King István I (St Stephen, 997-1038). He opposed all inhuman acts and terror. In 1927 he was forced to resign from his position as Field Bishop for political reasons. During World War II, he rescued persecuted Jews. After 1945 he was arrested and imprisoned for two years, living in the countryside, in the Franciscan monastery of Máriagyüd. From 1953 he lived in Pilisszentlászló and, from 1955 in Zsámbék. He was banned from Budapest, but he disregarded the ban. In 1950 he became leader of the Anti-Communist Hungarian Christian National Party and he remained active after the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight as well. He effectively spread his Christian and patriotic Hungarian message from the pulpit, during religious retreats and over the radio. To him the Holy Crown of Hungary was the gift of God and it must be deserved; national dignity and the right for the Holy Crown may be ensured by the strength of national solidarity, by following the Christian faith with the commandments of Christ. Bishop Zadravecz always took a strong line against all cruelty and terror. He also participated in the "missionary church" movement and edited the journal Holy Land (Szentföld), later the Catholic Encyclopedia (Katolikus Lexikon). His works include Kapisztrán (1921); Alverna (1926), and The Holy Land (A Szentföld)

(1931). Many of his orations remained in manuscript. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Prónay, Pál; Horthy, Miklós; Holy Crown, Hungarian.

Zágon István (Stephen) (Tiszaszőlős, 30 October 1893 - Budapest, 10 January 1975) – Playwright and humorist. He obtained an Engineering Degree from the Budapest Polytechnic, followed by engineering practice during 1920-1921. From 1921 to 1923, he was an artistic leader and drama critic of the Andrassy Boulevard Theater (Andrássy úti Színház) of Budapest and later, at the Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház), and the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház). From 1928 to 1933, he was, at first, an outside consultant for the paper National News (Nemzeti Újság), and later, for the Pest News (Pesti Hírlap). His first successful play, entitled: Marika appeared on stage at the Renaissance Theater (Renaissance Színház), and later, at the Burgtheater of Vienna. His humane, forgiving humor is reflected by his very popular humoresques, short stories, cabaret jokes, musical and prose comedies, as well as his radio readings and song lyrics. His feature films include the Pastry Shop of Buda (Budai cukrászda) (1935), which became well known. His feuilletons were very popular. His last writings, under the title A Little Old Man's Diary (Egy kis öreg naplójából) appeared in the humorous weekly Goose Mat (Ludas Matyi). In his works, he demonstrated a gentle sense of humor and caricatured the absurdities, big and small, of everyday life. His humoresques include It Could Happen to Anyone (Mindenkivel megtörténhetik) (1932) and Sunny Side (Napos oldal) (1945). He authored one novel: Rose Queen (Rózsakirálynő) (1930). His comedies include The Land of Promise (Az ígéret földje) (1933); the Spring Wind (Tavaszi szél) (1938), and the Checkmate (Sakk-matt) (1941). His musical comedies include Yellow Lily (Sárga liliom) (1933); Black Peter (Fekete Péter) (1943), and Little Kathleen (Kis Katalin) (1946). He was the author of a number of translations and transcriptions. He belongs among the classics of Hungarian humorous playwrights. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Zágráb Chronicle (Zágráb now Zagreb Croatia) – It was first written in 1334 and expanded in 1354, recounting the founding of the Zágráb (now Zagreb, Croatia) Church and events surrounding it. It also records events from the time of the Settlement of the Hungarians in the Carpathian Basin in 896 AD, to the death of Prince Stephen (István) in 1354, the younger brother of King Louis the Great (Lajos I). Data contained therein was used in the compilation of the Chronicon Varadiense (Várad Krónika). – B: 1230, T: 7617.→Lajos I, King; Várad Chronicle.

Zahn, János György (John George) (? - 1873) – Glass manufacturer. He founded his factory in 1839, in the tiny village of Kisaranyos (now Zlatno, Slovakia). He won first prizes at exhibitions held in Hungary and in other countries (London, Paris, Vienna) with his iridescent glasses, glass coins and glass chandeliers (rivaling the Venetians in quality), also of glass lamps and candlesticks. He did all this with the help of the inventions of Leo Valentine Pantocsek, who worked with him. Kisaranyos is 10 km northwest of Aranyosmarót (now Zlaté Moravce, County Bars, in Slovakia); it is situated on the eastern slope of the Great Tribecs Peak, 829 m, 20 km northeast of Nyitra (now Nitra, Slovakia). Zahn is regarded as the pioneer of artistic colored-glass manufacturing in Hungary. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Záhony, Railway Transfer Station – Transfer area of the Hungarian State Railways at the Záhony border station on the Hungarian-Russian frontier, built step-by-step and developed since 1976. It was one of the largest overland crossing places in Europe. The transfer station was necessary because of the 89 mm difference between the standard gauge of 1435 mm used in most of Europe, and the Russian broad-gauge of 1524 mm. The transfer area is in the outskirts of the villages of Eperjeske, Fényeslitke, Komoró, Mándok, Tornyospálca, Tuzsér and Záhony. It has been developed over an area of 80 km<sup>2</sup>, where the transfer of goods is carried out by various mechanized equipment: timber and wooden goods, (saw-logs of timber, sawn timber, etc.) with grabber-cranes. Individual goods, like industrial products, beef cattle, etc. with bucket conveyers; containers with special container cranes; bulk goods with (a) closed wagons (for grain, etc.), with motorized wheel-barrows, in (b) open wagons (iron-ore, coal, furnace coke etc. by emptying the wagons and with scoop cranes; liquids are pumped out from tanker cars. For many years, the transfer-work was done by means of wheelbarrows in the open air. The first, more than 500 m long covered hallway was more up-to-date and not affected by the climatic conditions. As a matter of interest: the coal-tar, which radiates ultra-violet rays, can only be transferred at night for safety reasons, and should not be handled by people with blue eyes and blond hair, as they are more sensitive to this radiation. The bogies of the Tisza Express, run between Kiev and Budapest, also had to be transferred here. The traffic of the transfer area in 1981 was 13 million tons for incoming goods, of which 10 million tons was for import, and 3 million tons transit goods going to other European countries. In 1981, 7000 persons were working in the transit area: railwaymen/women, skilled laborers and semi-skilled workers. The daily requirement in rolling stock is 1200 empty goods wagons, their registration service being directed by a computer-system. The mechanization and the day-to-day working time involve considerable industrial casualty-rates; a broom-making workshop was established in the area to employ disabled workers. The quantity of outgoing export-goods from Hungary amounted to 4 million tons; their service was only temporary because, on the opposite shores of the Tisza River in the vicinity of Csap (Čop), a similar transfer station was established. – B: 1138, 1153, T: 7456

Zajti, Ferenc (Francis) (Újfehértó, 18 km south of Nyíregyháza, 5 March 1886 - Budapest, 29 June 1961) – Writer, painter and Orientalist. He studied at the Reformed College of Debrecen; then, in 1905 and 1906, he studied at the Simon Hollósy's School of Painting in Munich. Later, he studied Reformed Theology, gaining his qualification in 1918. In 1905 he started studying the Scythian-Hungarian relationship. From 1907 to 1926, he worked as a clerk at the Budapest Town Hall. In the 1910s, he was in close contact with Tivadar Csontváry. From 1933 until his retirement in 1946, he was in charge of the Eastern Collection of the Metropolitan Library. In 1929, he went on a study and collecting trip to India and, between 1930 and 1932, he studied the Hungarian-Turkish connections in Constantinople and Ankara. With Lord Rothermere, he was a member of the Hungarian Revisionist Movement. He was the Deputy President of the Hungary-India Society. He translated the Zend-Avesta of Zarathustra (1919). He edited the Avesta Library (1925). As an artist, he was a follower of Simon Hollósy, mainly painting landscapes. His works include The Religious Beliefs of Early Hungarians (Az ősmagyarok hitvilága) (1918, 2006); The Childhood of Jesus (Jézus gyermekkor), illustrated with his 40 pictures (1921); Hun-Hungarian Ancient History (A hun-magyar őstörténet) (1928); Hungarian Millennia (Magyar évezredek) (1939, 1999); Memorandum (1943), and Reigning Prince Árpád's Conquest of the Carpathian Basin (Árpád fejedelem honfoglalása) (1944). He had exhibitions in the National Salon several times. On the day of his passing, his residence was burglarized, and the greater part of his valuables became lost. Some of his pictures are in the National Gallery, Budapest. His biographical film was made in 2000. There is a Cultural Center named after him at Újfehértó. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Hollósy, Simon; Csontváry, Tivadar; Rothermere, Lord; Justice for Hungary; Irredentist Movement in Hungary.

Zajzoni Rab, István (Stephen) (Zajzon, now Zizinu in Romania, one of the seven “Csángó” settlements, 15 km east of Brassó, now Braşov, Romania, 1832 - 15 May 1862) – “Csángó” poet. His secondary schooling was completed in the high school in Brassó; thereafter he went to Pest (later Budapest) and joined the service of the orientalist János (John) Repiczky. In 1859 he participated in the anti-Habsburg youth activity led by the eminent writer Mihály (Michael) Táncsics. In 1860 he was arrested and kept in prison from February to September. After he was freed, a serious illness cut his life short. His writings include The Bugle of Hungarians (A magyarok kürtje) (1857); Prison Songs (Börtön dalok) (1861), and His Selected Poems (Válogatott versei) (1959) – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Táncsics, Mihály; Repiczky, János; Csángó.

Zákány, Antal (Anthony) (Bócsa, 15 km east of Kiskőrös, 8 September 1918 - Szabadka, now Subotica, Serbia, 28 February 1987) – Writer and poet. Having completed four years of primary school, he worked as a cake-shop apprentice, a laborer in a cannery, and as a bricklayer. After 1945, he found employment as an assistant in the Municipal Library at Szabadka. In 1958, he joined the daily, Hungarian Word (Magyar Szó) as a correspondent. He became a well-known Hungarian poet in minority status, living in what was Yugoslavia at the time. His works include Above and Below (Fönt és alant) poems (1954); Sunshine in the Mud (Napfény a sárban) poems (1959); Enchantment (Varázslat) poems (1961); During an Earthquake (Földinduláskor) poems (1965); Iron Is Not Bread (A vas nem kenyér) poems (1974), and Near the Face of the Sun (Közel a nap arcához), collected poems. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Zakar, András (Andrew) (Margitta, now Marghita, Romania, 30 January 1912 - Székesfehérvár, 31 March 1986) – Roman Catholic priest, historian and scholar. After completing his high school studies in the Piarist High School of Budapest, he obtained an Engineering Degree from the Budapest Polytechnic. From 1936, he studied at the Theological Faculty of the University of Budapest. In 1940, he was ordained in Esztergom. From 1941, he worked in the office of the diocesan bureau of Esztergom. In April 1944, he became Private Secretary of the Primate of Hungary, Cardinal Jusztinian Serédi. From 17 October 1945, he continued working in the same capacity, when Joseph Mindszenty was appointed Archbishop of Esztergom, the highest clerical position in the Catholic Church of Hungary. From 1946, Zakar was made Papal Chamberlain. On 19 November 1948, he was arrested and, at the notorious Communist show trial of Cardinal Mindszenty, he was indicted as a third-rate prisoner with the trumped-up charge of forwarding Hungarian secrets of internal political and international nature, as well as information about the economic situation to the American Embassy. He was sentenced to six years' imprisonment. He was freed in 1953. Until his retirement in 1957, he worked at a number of presbyteries in Budapest. In his retirement years, he lived mainly in the clerical home at Székesfehérvár. After his rehabilitation in 1970, he lived in Budapest for some years. Apart from his clerical work, Zakar was engaged in considerable scholarly work, mainly in history and philosophy; he also exerted a courageous effort in showing Sumerian-Ural-Altaic linguistic affinities by using the glottochronological method, with Hymes' 100-item test list (comparing Sumerian and Hungarian words); cf. Current Anthropology 12: 2, 1971, and Magyar Múlt (Hungarian Past) 1: 2-3, 1972. In the field of philosophy, there is his study entitled The Fundamentals of Thought (Magyar Múlt 9: 1, 1980). His historical works include the essay: Suppressed Chapters from the History of Hungary (1976); A Sumér Hitvilág és a Biblia (Sumerian Beliefs and the Bible) (1973), and the unpublished study: Towards the Ancient History of Hungary (A magyar őstörténet felé). – B: 0883, 7456, T: 7456.→Serédi, Jusztinián O.S.B.; Mindszenty, József; Ural-Altaic Languages: Sumerians.

Zakarias, Attila (Zágon, now Zagon in Romania, 21 October, 1954 - ) – Architect, developer, researcher of folk architecture, and musician. He finished his studies of higher learning at the University of Ion Mincu Architecture (1980); between 1980 and 1990, he was the architect of the Planning Institute of County Sepsiszentgyörgy (now Sfântu Gheorghe, Romania). He opened his own office in 1990. He has completed numerous architectural plans, among them the Protestant Prayer Hall and Youth Center of Illyefalva (now Ilieni, Romania); the church fortress' restoration; the plans of the Reformed church of Sepsiszentgyörgy, and that of the Reformed complex on Aradi utca in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania); the upgrading of the Kolozsvár Bishopric, and prefabricated wooden homes (Holland, Hungary, Austria, France and Romania) (1993-1994). Zakarias is the author of many ethnographical studies (1977-1990). He has traveled to all the Szekler villages and those of the diaspora, and has made measurements, drawings and photographs of architectural monuments. Between 1976 and 1980 he started the Dance House (Táncház) movement and established the Regös' Ensemble. He performs on Hungarian TV, and appeared on the first of the Dance House's records. The areas of his research are the survey of the folk architecture of the Szekler Land (Székelyföld) and Erdély (Transylvania, now both in Romania). He has had exhibitions in Sepsiszentgyörgy (1988), Budapest (1990), and Holland (1991). His musical activities include recordings, concerts, individual programs (1973-1976), a small CD, with an individual program (1977). At the Siculus Festival, he received the following awards: folk artistic form: first prize for a composer; the Performance Prize, and the Popular Prize (1973). Other awards are the Kós Károly Prize (1991), the Memorial Medal (1994) and a scholarship to the Central European University. – B: 1036, T: 7684.→Szeklers.

Zakariás, János S. J. (John) (Nagyszombat, now Trnava, Slovakia, ca 1720 - Komárom, 14 September 1772) – Roman Catholic missionary. After he joined the Jesuit Order in 1740, he received his education in Nagyszombat and in Trenčín (now Trenčín, Slovakia), where he was a teacher in 1745. He was ordained in 1745, and joined the missions. He worked first in Spain, where he taught at a missionary school. In 1750 he sailed from Cadiz to Cartagena, Colombia, South America. Through the Panama route he arrived in Callao, Peru. The region of his missionary work was the River Mamore and its tributaries; later, he moved to northern Bolivia. As his notes indicate, he worked among the Mojo, Conichana, Cayuvava, and other Indian tribes, perhaps until the Order was dissolved. In 1767 he returned to Europe and, from 1770 on, he was Rector in Komárom. His letters, written mostly in runic script, describe his travels and work. In one of his letters from Peru, dated 16 April 1756, sent to József Brantkovics S.J. in Nagyszombat, he reports in both the Latin and Hungarian languages, the cruel treatment of the natives by the Spaniards. Written in Hungarian runic script, which could not be read by the censors, he wrote: “Those captured, are taken to work in mines, and other lowly jobs, and the aged are simply killed so that they cannot spread the terrible news; others are deprived of their guiding finger used in archery; babies are torn from their mothers’ bosom and smashed against the first wooden post they come to. And to easier ensnare the incautious, they sent a man from among them who, with his garment and appearance, falsely presented himself as a missionary” The letters of other Hungarian Jesuits in South America also used the Hungarian runic writing for secrecy. The letters are in the archives of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in Budapest, under Number Acad. 103-xA638. – B: 1614, 1020, T: 7103. → Jesuits, Hungarian, in Latin America; Hungarian Runic Script; Forrai, Sándor.

Zakariás, József (Joseph) (Budapest, 25 March 1924 - Budapest, 23 November 1971) – Soccer-player, Olympic champion (1952). He worked as a civil servant. He was a member of a number of sports clubs: Előre, Textiles, Bástya of Budapest, and he was left halfback of Red Flag (Vörös Lobogó) of Budapest. His teams, the Bastion (Bástya) (1951) and Red Flag (1953), won the National Football Championships and the Central European Cup (1955). He participated in the Helsinki Summer Olympic Games (1952), where his National Team won the Championship; in the Europe Cup, where his National Team was the winner (1953), and in the World Championships of Bern (1954), where his National Team was placed second. He was a member of the famous Hungarian Golden Team, which defeated England in London at 6:3 in 1953, and in Budapest at 7:1 in 1954. He was in the National Team 35-times during the 1947-1954 period. – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Golden Team, The; Bozsik, József; Budai, László; Buzánszky, Jenő; Czibor, Zoltán; Grosics, Gyula; Hidegkúti, Nándor; Kocsis, Sándor; Lantos, Mihály; Lóránt, Gyula; Puskás, Ferenc; Match of the Century.

Zákó, András (Andrew) (Reszneki) (Brassó, now Braşov, Romania, 23 March 1898 - Munich, 13 March 1968) – Army officer. He received his commission in Budapest in 1916. He served in World War I from 1916 to 1918, in the Szekler Infantry Regiment of Brassó, and later, in the 38th Assault Battalion. He received several decorations, among them the Officers’ Silver Bravery Medal. After the war he served in Class 2 of the General Staff, and he became Leader of the Intelligence Subclass. From 1940 to 1942 he was Colonel of the General Staff and a lecturer on the subject of the Operational Service of the General Staff. In the fall of 1943, he was made Commander of the 27th Szekler Light Division of Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mureş, Romania) and on 21 March 1944, he advanced against the Russian Forces in the Northeastern Carpathians. In October 1944, he led the 2nd Division of the General Staff as Brigadier General. In May 1945, he became a prisoner of war of the American Army. He was a guard at the refugee camp in Absam near Innsbruck. On 23 October 1948 in Klagenfurt, he founded the Fraternal Community of Hungarian Fighters (Magyar Harcosok Bajtársi Közössége – MHBK), fighting against Communism to liberate Hungary and secure her freedom. Until the end of his life, he was the main organizer of the MHBK Community which, by the end of 1952, was active in 23 countries, with its center in Absam, Austria; and, from 1955, in Munich, Germany. Its journal, On the Road of the Armies (Hadak Útján) was published from 1948. His book is entitled: Fall Battles 1944 (Őszi harcok 1944) (1991). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Zala, György (George) (Mayer) (Alsólendva, 16 April 1858 - Budapest, 31 July 1937) –

Sculptor. He completed his studies at the Model Drawing School, Vienna, and at the Munich Academy. His first significant creation was the work in marble of Mária and Magdolna in 1884. After this he completed the abandoned marble work by Zoltán Huszár: the Szabadságszobor (Statue of Liberty) at Arad, followed by many memorial sculptures, such as the Honvédszobor (Statue of a Homeguard) that stands at Buda Castle. Later, together with six other sculptors, he commenced the most demanding assignment: the Budapest Millennial Monument. The statue of Erzsébet Királyné Elizabeth, Queen Consort of Emperor and King Ferenc József I (Francis Joseph) (1830-1916) is his masterpiece. He created representative portraitures and sepulchral monuments as well.

In 1937, Zala was invited to become a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He was an important representative of the official art scene at the turn of the 19/20th centuries, as well as the most significant master of Neo-Baroque monument sculpture. The Hungarian National Gallery retains thirty of his masterpieces. – B: 0883, 1144, T: 7675.→Erzsébet, Queen; Ferenc József I (Francis Joseph) Emperor and King.

Zalánfy, Aladár (Bártfa, now Bardejov, Slovakia, 11 March 1887 - Budapest, 15 May 1959) – Organist and expert on organs. He was a student of János (John) Koessler and K. Straube. He was a teacher at the National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede), the Metropolitan and Higher Music School (Székesfővárosi és Felsőbb Zeneiskola), and, from 1920 to 1950, at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. From 1914, he was organist of the St. Stephen (István) Basilica of Budapest and, from 1922 until his passing, he was organist of the Lutheran Church on Deák Square, Budapest, and was also music director of the Lutheran Church District. He gave a number of solo recitals, as well as concerts with orchestral accompaniment. He published books on Choir Music, Lutheran Choir Book, Harmonium Textbook, and special works on organ building. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Koessler, János.

Zalán, Magda (Medgyes, now Mediaş, Romania, 22 May 1936 - ) – Journalist, reporter, writer and translator of literary works. She was three years old when she moved from Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) to Budapest, where she completed her schooling. In 1961, she obtained a Teacher's Certificate in English and Hungarian studies from the University of Budapest. Between 1955 and 1965 she was an associate for the Cultural Program of the Hungarian Radio. In 1965 she did not return from a western trip and settled in Italy. In Rome, she worked for the Italian Radio and Television, as well as for several Italian periodicals and papers. She wrote articles, short stories and radio and television plays. In October 1975 Zalán emigrated to Canada. She settled in Toronto, where she produced interviews and literary programs in English for CBC Radio and Television. She worked for two English periodicals and, in 1979, she created a Literary Cabaret under the name of Podium. Her Hungarian short stories, literary essays and interviews appeared in the periodicals New Horizon (Új Látóhatár), the Literary Paper (Irodalmi Újság), the Menora, and the Rainbow (Szivárvány). She translated from the works of contemporary Hungarian writers into Italian and English. In 1985, she became an associate for the Hungarian Department of Voice of America (Amerika Hangja), in Washington, D.C. In 1987, one of her plays was presented at the Summer Festival in Washington. Her main works include In a Big Ugly House far from Here, short stories (Victoria - Toronto 1982); Stubborn People, literary portraits (Toronto 1985); A Piece for Four-Hands (Négykezes) stories; Shadow of Cloud on Water... (Felhő árnyéka vizen...) biographical sketches; Cini, Slingshot of God (Cini, Isten csúzlíja) co-writer; the Last Dance of Nijinsky (Nizsinszkij utolsó tánca) translation; and the Returning Cheerful Farmer (Hazatérő vidám földműves). She is a recipient of the Pro Cultura Hungarica Reward (1999). – B: 1672, T: 7684.

Zalán Prince→Szalán Prince.

Zalavár Abbey – In the 7th century, the newly converted Christian Avars founded a Monastery of the Eastern rite on the island formed by the River Zala, near the present day village of Zalavár. In 796, the Monastery was destroyed during the Franco-Avar war. In 847, the area was donated to Duke Pribina for vassalage, but ecclesiastically it was under the authority of the Archbishop of Salzburg. To convert the remaining Avars, and to serve the new Bavarian settlers, a wooden church of the Western rite was built on the ruins of the old church. In 1019, King St. Stephen I (István) of Hungary (977-1038) replaced the wooden church with a basilica and a monastery in honor of St Adrian. In the vicissitudes of history the Abbey was ruined. Excavation from 1946 onwards uncovered a number of Avar and Slav tombs, carvings, building and other remnants of the Abbey. – B: 1230, 1020, T: 7103.

Zalka, Máté (Matthew) (Béla Frankl) (Matolcs, County Szatmár, now in Romania, 23 April 1896 - Huesca, Spain, 11 June 1937) – Author and general. He graduated from the Higher Commerce School of Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, Romania). During World War I, he fought on the Italian front at Doberdo; later, he was transferred to the Russian front where, in June of 1916, he was wounded and captured. He escaped from a Siberian prison camp in 1919, formed a partisan group and joined the Red Army in 1920. He took part in the occupation of Krasnoyarsk. From 1920 on, he was a member of the Russian Communist Party. Following the civil war, he was in Moscow and was occupied with literary works. His first essay appeared in 1924, followed by his first novel, published in Russian. His themes were mostly on World War I and the Russian civil war. Zalka's writing style is noted for its sense of adventure. In 1936 he joined the Spanish anti-fascist fighters. Here, as a general, he was involved in organizing the national brigade, under the name of Pál Lukács. He died in 1937 aged 41, in the battle at Huesca. His main works are: Doberdo (1936, 1947); Complete Works (Összes munkái) (1948); Selected Stories (Válogatott elbeszélések) (1952); Ivanov and Other Stories (Ivanov és más elbeszélések) (1954); The Planets Return (A bolygók visszatérnek) (1966), and The Singing Prison (Az éneklő börtön) (1966). – B: 0883, T: 7667.

Záray, Márta (Tatabánya, 28 August 1926 - Budapest, 31 March 2001) – Dance-and-song actress. She completed the National School of Dramatic Art in 1946. In 1950 she appeared as a singer at the Emke Coffee House (now Hotel Ibis), Budapest, where she became acquainted with János (John) Vámosi, who had been singing there since 1949; they got married in 1953, and afterwards they formed a duo, and became popular singers. Many TV and Radio recordings preserve her memory. Her pieces include In Every Woman's Life (Minden asszony életében); Hour Glass (Homokóra) and I was Like That (Olyan voltam én); also duets such as A Frame of Mind (Egy hangulat); Duck Dance (Kacsatánc), and Two of Us on the Road (Ketten az úton); her recordings include Hungaroton-Favorite, Hungaroton-Worry (Gond), Hungaroton-Pepita. Among others she received the SZOT Prize (1979), and the EMERTON Prize (1989, posthumously 2002). – B: 1980, 1031, T: 7456.→Vámosi, János.

Zarzura Oasis, Egypt – Zarzura, the enigmatic oasis, consisting of three valleys, is already noted in the Book of Alchemy from the Middle Ages. The Bedouins of the desert have been weaving legends about an oasis named after a bird, the size of a starling. It was referred to as an abandoned city in ruins or as an oasis filled with palm trees; but no one could state this with certainty. In the 1920s, the lure of discovery attracted a number of expeditions to the eastern slopes of the Gilf Kebir, but even the caterpillar vehicles of Kemal el Din could not manage the shifting sand dunes. With fanatical perseverance and willpower, László Ede (Leslie Edward) Almásy succeeded in laying the foundation for an aerial survey and, on 1 May 1932, flying a two-seater Moth-type sports plane, he spotted the much sought-after oasis, and followed up with a ground visit a year later. An expedition, organized by the Hungarian Geographical Museum in Érd, reached the oasis discovered by Almásy, surrounded by steep walls in the valley, in March 1993. Little vegetation was found in the oasis: only tufts of grass of gray-green color and a shrub-like wattle of miniscule leaves, a species of true acacia, Acacia ehrenbergiana. – B: 1020, T: 7456.→Almásy, László Ede; Vadi Sura, Egypt.

Zas, Loránt (Roland) (Szász) (Budapest, 9 March 1938 - California,USA, 8 July 2011) – Poet and writer. He graduated from high school in 1956. Following the crushed Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1956, he was arrested on the false accusation of establishing an anti-state organization in 1957, and was imprisoned. After obtaining his freedom, he worked as a day laborer and later as an electrician. From the Technical College of Electrical Industry (Felsőfoku Villamosipari Technikum), he obtained the qualification of a production engineer. In August of 1967, he escaped to Italy. In January of 1968, he emigrated to the USA. He studied at the University of California, Los Angeles (UCLA), and in 1972 obtained an Electrical Engineering Degree. Since 1975, he has been working at the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics (AIAA). He started writing poetry in prison. His first single volume appeared in 1973. He has published eight volumes of poems and two volumes of prose. A number of his poems and shorter prose works appeared in the periodicals Literary Journal (Irodalmi Újság); New Horizon (Új Látóhatár); Here and There (Itt-Ott), the Chronicle (Krónika), Rainbow (Szivárvány), and Our Homeland (Hazánk). In 1973-1974, he edited the journal, The West (Napnyugat), in Los Angeles. His major works include Chess (Sakk) poems (Los Angeles, 1973); Imprisoned (Ülsz); Anomalous Notes from the Diaspora (Rendhagyó jegyzetek a diaszpórából) poems (Los Angeles, 1977); Jézust kiáltó (A Cry to Jesus) poems (1980); Eroazia (1986); Go and Carve an Altar (Oltárt faragj) poems (1989); In the Name of Your Nation (Nemzeted nevében) poems (Budapest, 1991); Under the Blue Winter Sky (Téli, kék ég alatt), and The Book of Courage (A bátorság könyve.). He is regarded as one of the truthful poets of the Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1956. He received the 1956 Memorial Medal, and he was decorated twice by the Congress of the USA. – B: 1672, 1988, T: 7684, 7103.

Zászkaliczky, Pál (Paul) (Rád, 20 December 1905 - Fót, 6 August 1962) – Pastor and Dean of the Lutheran Church. He studied Theology in Sopron, and later in Helsinki. He was Assistant Pastor in Békéscsaba and Budapest, then Parish Pastor at Pitváros. From 1934 he was Parish Pastor in Fót, and from 1940, Dean. He was an adherent and active worker of Home Missions, giving numerous public lectures in various parts of the country. From 1948, for a number of years, he participated in the work of the Old-Testament Special Committee of the Bible-Translating Committee. In 1950, he was suspended from his position for a number of months. From 1957, he was Assistant Bishop of the Southern Lutheran Diocese. He was co-editor of the monthly Toward Emmaus (Emmaus felé). His works include History of the Finnish Christianity (A finn kereszténység története) (1937); Life of William Malmivaara (Malmivaara Vilmos élete) (1937); The Sanctification of Waiting (A várakozás megszentelése), meditation, and the On the Third Day He Defeated Death (Harmadnapra legyőzte a halált), meditation. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Zászkaliczky, Tamás (Thomas) (Budapest, 26 December 1943 - ) – Organist. He completed his course in organ playing at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, in 1969. Thereafter, he furthered his studies in Helsinki on a scholarship from the Sibelius Academy of Music. As an organist, he gave numerous concerts in Budapest, in country towns and abroad, especially in France (Notre Dame in Paris), in the Scandinavian countries, Germany, England, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the Netherlands and Switzerland. His repertoire includes J. S. Bach's better-known organ compositions (e.g. The Art of Fugue), works of early German composers, like Buxtehude, Bruhns and Pachelbel; early French composers' works, like Couperin, Grigny and Raison; works of early Italian masters, like Frescobaldi and Gabrieli, as well as works by 19th and 20th century composers, such as Liszt, Schumann, Brahms, Franck and Kodály. He is also active in his study of music history, concentrating on music for keyboard instruments of the 16th to 18th centuries. From 1985 until 1992, he participated in publishing the collection of all the organ works of J. S. Bach. In 2008, he published his volume dealing with the organs of Hungary, with photographs by Tamás Diener, entitled: The Illustrated Chronicle of the Organ (Az orgona képes krónikája) (2008). He is President of the Hungarian Bach Society. – B: 0878, 1982, T: 7456.→Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán; Liszt, Ferenc.

Zathureczky, Ede (Edward) (Igló, now Spišská Nová Ves, or Iglov, Slovakia, 24 August 1913 - Bloomington, IN, USA, 31 May 1959)

– Violinist. From 1929, he was an instructor at the Academy of Music, Budapest; between 1943 and 1956 its principal. After leaving Hungary in 1956, he first went to Vienna, then settled in the USA. From 1957 until his death, he taught violin at Indiana University, Bloomington. He is considered to be one of the most outstanding members of the generation of violinists after Jenő (Eugene) Hubay. His virtuoso techniques, a sense of refined form and style manifested in his play, soon gained him world renown. He gave successful concerts in Western Europe as well as the United States. He was an outstanding performer of romantic and modern violin literature. Even as a pedagogue he had achieved distinction. – B: 1197, 0883, T: 7684.→Hubay, Jenő.

Zathureczky, Gyula Albert (Julius) (Oszeny, County Temes, 5 July 1907 - Munich, 6 June 1987) – Newspaper reporter, writer and editor. He studied Law at the University of Debrecen. He began his career as a reporter in 1927 for the Trans-Tisza News (Tiszántúli Hírlap). In 1928, he became an Associate at the Hungarian News Agency (Magyar Távirati Iroda – MTI), while he also worked for papers and magazines of Budapest. In 1938, he became Head of the Foreign Reporting Column at the paper Independence (Függetlenség). His book entitled Transylvania, Since They Are Calling it Something Else (Erdély, amióta másképp hívják), appeared in 1939. From 1940, he was in Berlin, a correspondent for the State Periodicals and an associate for Pester Lloyd. After the return of a part of northern Erdély (Transylvania) to Hungary (1940-1945), from 1941 to March 1944, he was Editor for the daily Opposition (Ellenzék) in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). After the German occupation of Hungary in 1944, he resigned from this job. In August 1944, he became an associate for the Evening Hungary (Esti Magyarország). At Christmas of 1944, as a reserve Lieutenant, Zathureczky became a Russian prisoner of war; he returned from Russia in 1947. In March of 1948, he escaped to the West. From April 1948 to September 1949, he worked at Radio Rot-Weiss in Salzburg. In 1950 he was the announcer and editor of the Hungarian broadcast of Tirol Radio in Innsbruck. From August 1951 to July 1972, he was (under the name of Miklós Újházi), an editorial associate for Radio Free Europe in Munich, and later its announcer. In his journalistic activities, he dealt with the question of minorities, the history of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), and the problems of Hungarians living there. He published in the papers Hungaria (Hungary); the New Path of Hungary (Új Magyar Út); Guardian of the Nation (Nemzetőr); New Europe (Új Európa), and Hungarians in Canada (Kanadai Magyarság), among others; he also published in German and Austrian papers and magazines. He collaborated in editing the periodical On the Path of Armies (Hadak Útján). He was an active member of several international societies dealing with questions of minorities. His works include One Has to Go to the End of the Road (Az úton végig kell menni), the story of his captivity (Rome, 1954), in German: Du musst den Weg zu Ende gehen (Zürich, 1963); Der Volksaufstand in Ungarn (The People's Uprising in Hungary); Mit den Augen eines Protestanten (With the Eyes of a Protestant) essay (1962); Die siebenbürgische Frage, die Sachsen (The Question of the Transylvanian Saxons), study in cooperation with Aladár Kovách (Munich 1965), and Transylvania, Citadel of the West, study (Gainesville, 1965). – B: 1672, T: 7684.

Závodszy, Zoltán (Bátorkeszi, 18 July 1892 - Budapest, 8 October 1976) – Singer (tenor). He studied with the famous Wagnerian tenor, György (George) Anthes. In 1920, the Opera House of Budapest made a contract with him and, between 1920 and 1921, he did further studies on an Opera House scholarship. He was the solo singer of the Opera from 1921 to 1948. He became a life member of the Opera House in 1943, and was also a teacher at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest (1945-1949), at the Vienna Conservatorium und darstellende Kunst until 1972, and at the Hochschule für Musik from 1957 to 1962. His work as a translator of lyrics of musical compositions was also significant. First and foremost, Závodszy gave memorable renditions of heroic tenor roles in Wagnerian music dramas which, in Hungary he sang in Hungarian. He translated into Hungarian the librettos of a number of Wagner's operas, and more than 600 songs (Lieder) by Schubert, Schumann, and others. He kept the strong carrying capacity and evenness of his voice to his old age; he was seventy when, as Walter von Stolzing in Wagner's Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg he reaped a sweeping success. His roles included Erik in Wagner's Flying Dutchman (A Bolygó Hollandi); title roles in Tannhäuser and Lohengrin; Tristan in Tristan und Isolde; Siegmund in The Valkyries, and Prince Galicin in Borodin's Prince Igor. He also held song evenings in the early 1970s. In 1975, the Hungarian Television prepared a portrait film on him. Streets in Budapest and Pilisvörösvár, and a Music Circle bear his name. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456. → Tábori, Piroska; Anthes, György.

Zayugróc Manuscript – A collection of melodies originally written for the violin, dating from 1730, and a source of 350 compositions, mainly dance pieces. Judging from the place names, it originated in the region of Northern Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia). The first part, entitled Hungarici Saltus 1730 a Dionisio, contains 65 Hungarian dances. Also included in the work are Polish, Wallachian and Gypsy dances, as well as a series of popular social dances of the period. The collection is held at the Matica Slovenska Library of Túrócszentmárton (now Martin, Slovakia). – B: 0886, T: 7617.

Zechmeister, László (Ladislav) (Győr, 14 May 1889 - Pasadena, California, USA, 28 February 1972) – Chemical engineer. He began his higher education at the Budapest Polytechnic, and completed it at the Zürich Polytechnic, where he first obtained a Degree in Chemical Engineering and, in 1913, he obtained a Ph.D. Thereafter, at the Kaiser Wilhelm Institut in Berlin, he was a colleague of R. Willstätter. From 1921 to 1923, he worked at the College of Agriculture and Veterinary Science of Copenhagen. On returning to Hungary, he became an Honorary Lecturer (privatdocent) at the Budapest Polytechnic. From 1923, he was Professor of Chemistry in the Faculty of Medicine at the University of Pécs. In 1940, he traveled to the USA to give a series of lectures. In Pasadena he became Professor of Organic Chemistry until his retirement in 1959. He briefly visited Hungary in 1971, to be made an Honorary Doctor in the Faculty of Medicine of Pécs University. He played an important role in the introduction of the chromatographic method between 1923 and 1933. Together with László (Ladislav) Cholnoky, he was among the first researchers to introduce the chromatographic method in preparative organic chemistry; they used it successfully in the chemical separation of organic materials. His works include Introduction to Trimetry (Bevezetés a trimetriába) (1925); Die chromatographische Absorptionsmethode, with L. Cholnoky (Vienna, 1937, 1938; London, 1943, 1948); Progress in Chromatography 1938-1947 (1950), and Cistrans Isomeric Carotenoids, Vitamins A and Arylpolyens (Wien, 1962). He was member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (correspondent 1930, ordinary 1940, honorary 1948-1949). – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Cholnoky, László.

Zékány, János (John) (Karácsfalva, now Karacsin, Carpatho-Ukraine, near Tiszaújlak, ca. 1670 - ?, after 1731) – He was a tutor of Russian Czar Peter II. He studied in Hungary and at the University of Vienna. When Czar Peter the Great visited Vienna, the Jesuits recommended that János Zékány go to Petersburg, to the Czar's court as a tutor. With his students, he traveled throughout Europe. In addition to educating the Crown Prince, the Czar appointed him Director of all his property. In this capacity, he uncovered Menchikov's frauds but, as a result of this, Zékány was forced to flee. In 1717, he returned to Hungary, to his village, Karácsfalva. In 1718, the Czar recalled him several times, but Count Sándor (Alexander) Károlyi did not allow him to return to the Russian Court. Fragments of his correspondence in this matter survived. – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Károlyi, Count Sándor.

Zelk, Zoltán (Zelkovits) (Érmihályfalva, now Valealui-Mihai, north of Tasnád in former County Szilágy, Romania, 18 December 1906 - Budapest, 23 April 1981) – Poet and prose writer. He was the son of a village cantor. At Miskolc, he completed four years of primary school and two years of high school. From 1919 he lived in Budapest with his family. From the time of his father's death in 1920, he worked as a shop assistant. From 1921 he worked at Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, Romania). He took part in the youth movement of Transylvania. In 1925, Lajos (Louis) Kassák published Zelk's first poem: Somebody... (Valaki...), in his paper, entitled 365, and shortly afterwards, he published some other poems of Zelk's in his papers Work (Munka,) and Document (Dokumentum). In 1925, Zelk took on casual jobs in the English Park, in hotels and coffee houses in Budapest. He joined the Socialist Workers' Party. He came under police surveillance for the first time in 1927; then he was arrested and deported to Romania. In 1928, he fled back to Hungary under the assumed name Zoltán Szatmári. In 1928, for the first time, a poem of his appeared in the influential journal West (Nyugat). About his first volume of poems, entitled: Blood Bursts Forth on Your Wrist (Csuklódon a vér kibuggyan) (1930), the poet Miklós (Nicholas) Radnóti wrote an appreciative critique in the journal Contemporary (Kortárs) (1930). In 1937, Zelk was again arrested, but the literary public opinion, and especially the good offices of the writer Julius (Gyula) Illyés, freed him. In his volume of poems of 1942, he collected all his poems written between 1936 and 1942. In World War II, he worked as a forced laborer in the Ukraine (1942-1944). During the right-wing rule of Szálasi, he escaped from the forced labor service in Russia. Irén Bátor his wife, a writer, hid him in their home in Zugló, a suburb of Budapest. From the spring of 1945, he was editor of the cultural column of the daily Freedom (Szabadság), later an associate for the paper, People's Word (Népszava); then he became a proofreader for the Athenaeum Publishers. Further selected poems of his appeared, written in 1945. Between 1948 and 1953, Zelk's poetry was deliberately devoted to party-mindedness. He founded a children's paper, entitled: Little Drummer (Kisdobos). Due to his political stance during the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he was sentenced to 3 years' imprisonment. He received amnesty and freed in late 1958. His writings could only be published from 1962 on. A volume of his poems appeared in 1963. From 1964, sketches, notes and short stories appeared in the magazine Life and Literature (Élet és Irodalom) and, from 1965 to 1967, in the Mirror (Tükör). In 1973, he published his collected poems written between 1925 and 1972, under the title: Seagull (Sirály). He appeared in a film, and a Zelk-evening was held at the Literary Stage (Irodalmi Színpad). His last book of poems was Bowing to the Otherworld (Főhajtás a túlvilágra) (1988). His unpublished prose works appeared in a volume edited by his second wife, Elizabeth Sinka (1985), and a volume of poems edited also by her in 1988. Zelk was awarded the Baumgarten Prize (1947), the Attila József Prize (1951, 1974), and the Kossuth Prize (1949, 1954). A school at Nyíregyháza bears his name. – B: 0883, 1031, 1257, T: 7456.→Radnóti, Miklós; Illyés, Gyula; Kassák, Lajos.

Zelnik, József (Joseph) (Gyula, 19 July 1949 - ) – Ethnographer. He completed his higher education at the University of Budapest. From 1973 he was an associate at the Peoples' Institute of Cultural Education (Népművelési Intézet), Budapest. Between 1979 and 1980, he was Editor of the periodical Connections (Kapcsolatok). Between 1980 and 1982, he worked as a professional counsellor of UNESCO, and as editor of the international periodical Folklore Bulletin; between 1982 and 1986, he was Editor of the periodical Folklore, Society, Art (Folklór, Társadalom, Művészet). From 1986, he was Director of the Information Company on Public Culture (Közművelődési Információs Vállalat); from 1988, he was a professor at the University of Applied Arts (Iparművészeti Egyetem); since 1989, he has been the President of the Association of Hungarian Culture (Magyar Kulturális Szövetség); since 1992, he has been Editor-in-Chief of the periodical Ecoregion (Ökotáj), and from 1998, of Hungarian Culture (Magyar Kultúra). Between 1992 and 1993, he was President of the Management of the Duna TV; since 1993, he has been President of the Foundation of Culture and Free Learning (Művelődési és Szabadművelődési Alapítvány). Since 1996, he has been a member of the National Radio and TV Corporation (Országos Rádió és TV-testület). Since 1998, Zelnik has been a member of the Presidential Committee of the Hungarian Cultural Association (Magyar Művelődési Társaság), the editorial committee of the Roman Catholic weekly, New Man (Új Ember), on the advisory board of the Hungarian Heritage Award (Magyar Örökség Díj), and a member of the Hungarian Wine Academy (Magyar Bor Akadémia). Since 2002, he has been an honorary member of the Hungarian Academy of Arts (Magyar Művészeti Akadémia), and since 2004, a full member of the same. Among his main works are: Old and New Forms (Régi és új formák) editor (1977); Heritage and Creativity (Hagyomány és kreativitás) editor (1982); Folklore and Cultural Alternatives (Folklór és kulturális alternatívák) editor (1983); The Video Village (A video falu) editor (1984); Occupation of the Festival (Az ünnep megszállása) (1989); Back to the Festival (Vissza az ünnephez) (1994); The Silk Zones of Hungarian Culture (A magyar kultúra selyemövezetei) (1998), and Pilgrimage to the Wine. From Dionysios to the Eucharist (Zarandoklat a borhoz. Dionüszosztól az eucharisziáig) (2000). – B: 2099, T: 7684.

Zemplén, Győző (Victor) (Nagykanizsa, 17 October 1879 - Monte Doloro, Italy, 29 July 1916) – Physicist. He completed his university studies in Budapest, as a member of the Eötvös College (1896-1900). In 1902, he obtained his doctorate and was chosen as a research student, and later as an assistant professor working with the great Loránd Eötvös. Two years later, he went on a study tour to Göttingen and Paris. From 1905, he was an honorary lecturer (privatdocent) at the University of Budapest and, from 1907, at the Polytechnic of Budapest. In 1912, he became Professor of Theoretical Physics. In his research, he dealt with the theory of relativity and that of radioactivity. He gave a new explanation to the Michelson-experiment: that is, coming from its source, light spreads with different speeds in different directions. In his lectures, he explained the Maxwell-type electrodynamics and theory of kinetic gas. In 1914, he prepared a method of sound measurement of the location of batteries at the front. Zemplén translated P. Curie's and M. Sklodowska's work relating to the examination of radioactive materials (Budapest, 1906). He fell in battle during the First World War. There is a hydrodynamic thesis named after him. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1908). His major works include Non-continuous Phenomena in Electrodynamics (Nem folytonos jelenségek az elektrodinamikában) in the Mathematical Physics Journal (1906); Electricity and its Practical Uses (Az elektromosság és gyakorlati alkalmazása) (Budapest, 1910), and The Concept of Space and Time in the Principle of Relativity (A tér és az idő fogalma a relativitás elvének világitásában) in the Journal of the Hungarian Society of Philosophy (1914). In 1898, he received the Pasquich Award and, in 1901 the Thank Award. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7684. → Eötvös, Baron Loránd.

Zempléni Árpád (Imrey) (Tállya, 11 June 1865 - Budapest, 13 October 1919) – Poet and translator of literary works. He studied at the Reformed College of Sárospatak; thereafter, he attended lectures on Philosophy at the University of Budapest. From 1896 to 1919, he was an archivist at the Hungarian Agrarcredit Institute (Magyar Földhitel Intézet). From 1902, he was a member of the Petőfi Society and, from 1911, a member of the Kisfaludy Society. His short story The Hammer (A kalapács) (1909) was rewarded with the Nádasy Prize by the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. His esthetic and sociological articles are liberal in tone, while his short stories are characterized by psychological observations. He borrowed the topics for his poetic works from Hungarian-related, mainly Vogul epic works, which were allied to his Turanism. His translations of literary works are of some importance (Vigny, Leconte de Lisle, Maupassant, Verlaine, Carducci, Stecchetti and Fogazzaro). His works include Poems of Árpád Zempléni (Zempléni Árpád költeményei) (1891); New Poems (Új versek) (1897); Didó (1901); Revenge (Bosszú) (1908); Turanian Songs (Turáni dalok) (1910); The Bridegroom of Death (A halálvőlegény) (1912); Ermine (A hermelin) (1913); (Vasfő and Imoe), Vogul fable (1919), and From the Posthumous Poems of Árpád Zempléni (Zempléni Árpád hátrahagyott verseiből) (1939). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Zempléni, Géza (Trencsén, now Trencin, Slovakia, 26 October 1883 - Budapest, 24 July 1956) – Chemist. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Budapest in 1904, and his Dip. Ed. in 1905. The same year, he was appointed a demonstrator for the Chemistry Department at the Mining and Forestry Academy at Selmechánya (now Banská Stiavnica, Slovakia), and the Academy moved to Sopron in 1920; in 1906, he was assistant lecturer there. In 1907, on a state-financed scholarship, he went to Berlin to study the chemistry of enzymes. Returning to Selmechánya in 1910, he worked at the Academy and, in 1912, became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) at the University of Budapest. From 1913 on, he was Professor of the newly created Chair of Organic Chemistry. He became a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1923. During the years of World War I, Zempléni studied industrial problems in chemistry. He played a significant role in the development of the organic-chemical industry in Hungary. As a result of his pioneering work, Hungarian organic chemistry became an advanced, world-standard discipline. His more than 200 published works dealt largely with the chemistry of sugars (sucroses). During 1929, he developed a procedure in organic chemistry, internationally known by the name of sucrose “breaking down a la Zempléni”. He was also a well-known pedagogue. – B: 1230, 0883, T: 7456.

Zempléni, Kornél (Cornelius) (Debrecen, 4 September 1922 - ) – Concert pianist. He studied piano first at the Debrecen Conservatory of Music (Debrecen Városi Zeneiskola) with Emil Szabó; later at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, (1940-1946) under Ernő (Ernest) Dohnányi and Béla Böszörményi-Nagy. After graduation, he taught at the National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede) in Budapest from 1947 to 1967, and taught piano at the Béla Bartók Musical High School (Bartók Béla Zeneművészeti Szakiskola), and then at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Higher Music School (Liszt Ferenc Zene Iskola), where he was leader of a department from 1947 to 1967, and university lecturer from 1982 to 1989. From 1984, he was a teacher at the University of the Arts in Osaka, Japan. He gave concerts in Europe and overseas. His performances featured compositions of J. S. Bach, Mozart, Debussy, Kodály and Béla Bartók. He made many recordings, mostly works of Bartók (including his Piano Concerto No. 1, under the baton of János Ferencsik in the 1960s in a church in Budapest), and other Hungarian composers, but also of some J. S. Bach's keyboard works. Most of his recordings were made by Hungaroton. Zempléni's distinctions include the Liszt Prize (1954, 1963), the Merited Artist title (1976), the Béla Bartók-Ditta Pásztory Prize (1997) and the Leo Weiner Memorial Medal (2008). – B: 1852, 1974, T: 7103.→Szabó, Emil; Dohnányi, Ernő; Kodály, Zoltán; Bartók, Béla; Ferencsik, János.

Zempléni, Mária (Mary) (Budapest, 21 February 1949 - ) – Singer (soprano). From 1968 to 1975, she studied at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music and became a solo singer at the Opera House. Earlier in her career, she excelled mainly in soubrette roles with her bright, refined rendition. Her ability in molding characters is combined with her elegant stage appearance. She often sings in oratorios and song recitals, and is a regular participant in Haydn and Vivaldi concerts. She has sung in the leading roles of several contemporary Hungarian operas, like in Zs. Durkó's Mózes; and S. Balassa's Outside the Door (Az ajtón kívül). She has made successful appearances in a number of European cities. Her roles include Pamina in Mozart's Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola); Margaret in Gounod's Faust; Mimi, Musette in Puccini's La Bohème (Bohémélet); Micaela in Bizet's Carmen; Cherubino in Mozart's Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága); Norina in Donizetti's Don Pasquale, and title role in R. Strauss Jr's Salome. In 1987 she received the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Prize. – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Zend, Róbert (Budapest, 2 December 1929 - Toronto, 27 June 1985) – Poet, literary translator and newspaper reporter. He pursued linguistic and literary studies at the Universities of Budapest and Pécs. He graduated in 1953 at the Department of Philosophy of the University of Budapest. He left Hungary in 1956, and settled in Canada in 1957. He wrote more and more in English. He worked for the CBC Radio and Television in various areas. He wrote poetry, short stories, essays and documentary films. From 1973 on, several of his books appeared in English. In 1969, he obtained a Master's Degree in Modern Italian Poetry. As a literary translator, he translated the works of contemporary writers, as well as Imre (Emeric) Madách's work: The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája) into English. During the last years of his life, he also published works in Hungarian. His poetry appeared in the periodicals New Horizon (Új Látóhatár); the Hungarian Workshop (Magyar Műhely); the Literary Journal (Irodalmi Újság); the The Rainbow (Szivárvány), and the Menora. His main works include From Zero to One, poems (Vancouver, 1973); Arbor Mundi (The World Tree) poems (1982); Beyond Labels, poems (Toronto, 1982); Oab, vols. i, ii, poems (1983, 1985); The Three Roberts, Première Performance, poems (1985); The Three Roberts: On Childhood (Ontario, 1985); The Three Roberts: On Love, poems (1985); Poetry, Pictorial Poetry (Versek, Képversek) (Paris, 1985), and Iron Caricatures from Wood (Fából vaskarikatúrák) (1993). He was a remarkably free spirit, and contributor to Toronto's experimental literary culture in the 1960s and 1970s. – B: 0892, 1672, T: 7684.→Madách, Imre.

Zenta (now Senta, Serbia) – Town in the southern part of the Danube-Tisza Interfluve on the right banks of the Tisza River, at 83m above sea-level, in the former County Bács-Bodrog of the ethnically Magyar (Hungarian) Southern Hungary in the Carpathian Basin. It is now in Dunavska Banovina in Serbia. Population: 28,588 (ethnically Magyar) in 1901; 32,044 (Magyars and Serbs) in 1931; 24,987 in the 1970s, and 22,819 in 1990 (79% Magyar). The inhabitants of this river port are mainly engaged in agriculture, but has some factories manufacturing food-products, soap, candles, textiles and furniture. It has a well-developed commercial life. On its central square stands the St. Stephen Church, incomplete since the Yugoslav occupation. The one-time Yugoslav-Hungarian Party was formed in Zenta in 1922. In World War II, after the German forces defeated Yugoslavia, and it broke up into its constituent republics, Hungary was free to retake the Bácska region (the southern part of the Danube-Tisza Interfluve); Zenta was also returned, and came under Hungarian administration. After the War, it was ceded to the reconstituted Yugoslavia. Since its disintegration, Zenta is under Serbian sovereignty. It was in the fields of Zenta that Prince Eugene of Savoy won a decisive victory over the Ottoman Turks on 11 September 1697, thus freeing Hungary from Turkish rule, leading to the Peace of Karlóca (1699), marking the beginning of the end of the Ottoman Empire. – B: 1068, 1582, 1789, 1816, 7456; T: 7456.→Karlóca, Peace of; Savoyenor, Eugen von; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Zentai, Anna (Budapest, 29 June 1924 - ) – Actress. After completing her studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, she became a member of the National Theater of Szeged, where she played prosaic roles, operettas and operas. From 1950 to 1979, she was a member of the Operetta Theater, Budapest. Since then, she has been working as a freelance artist. Her success was due to her natural, inborn acting abilities. She was an excellent soubrette and naïva prima donna. She appeared regularly as a guest artist at the Budapest Opera House, as well as abroad. Her roles have included Emily in T. Wilder's Our Town (A mi kis városunk); Rosina in Rossini's The Barber of Seville (A szevillai borbély); Cherubino in Mozart's Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága); Iluska in P. Kacsóh's John the Hero (János vitéz); Mi in F. Lehár's The Land of Smiles (A mosoly országa); and Stázi and Cecilia in I. Kálmán's The Gypsy Princess (A csárdáskirálynő). She was awarded a number of prizes including the Mari Jászai Prize in 1957, and the Merited Artist title (1968). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Zentai, János (John) (Gerényes, south of Dombóvár, 18 December 1907 - Pécs, 4 October 1973) – Ethnographer and museologist. At the Law Faculty of Eger, he obtained a notary's diploma in 1949. Until 1965, he worked in Public Administration and, from 1965 until his death he was the Ethnographic Museologist at the Janus Pannonius Museum of Pécs. He carried out ethnographic research, chiefly in County Baranya, and especially in the "Ormányság" area, covering the entire Hungarian linguistic area of the Carpathian Basin. He also investigated the grave-markings of Protestant Cemeteries. His articles and studies appeared in ethnographic journals and yearbooks, as well as reports and articles in the local press of County Baranya. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456. → Kiss, Géza; Keresztes, Kálmán.

Zenthe, Ferenc (Francis) (Rameshofer) (Salgóbanya, now belongs to Salgótarján, 24 April 1920 - Budapest, 30 July 2006) – Actor. Due to World War II, he had to give up his studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest in 1942. After the War in 1945, he was contracted with the Pécs Theater (Pécsi Színház); from 1946, he became a member of the Kisdalud Theater (Kisfaludy Színház) of Győr; from 1949, of the Csokonai Theater (Csokonai Színház), Debrecen. From 1952, he acted at the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), Budapest. His ability to create atmosphere, as well as his humor asserted him effectively in character roles. His roles included Bottom and Puck in Shakespeare's Midsummer-Night's Dream (Szentiványéji álom); Elbow in Shakespeare's Measure for Measure (Szeget szeggel); Shepherd in Shakespeare's The Winter's Tale (Téli rege); Scapin in Molière's The Schemings of Scapin (Les Fourberies de Scapin, Scapin furfangjai); Virág úr in Áron Tamási's Deceptive Rainbow (Csalóka szivárvány); Geoffrey in R. Harwood's The Dresser (Az öltöztető), and Warrington in Edward Bond's Lear. He appeared successfully in numerous films and TV plays. There are more than 45 feature and TV films to his credit, including Lieutenant of Rákóczi (Rákóczi hadnagya) (1953); The Captain of Tenkes (A Tenkes kapitánya) (1964); The Black Town (A fekete város) (1971); Sir John Falstaff (1977); Petőfi (1980); Neighbors (Szomszédok) (1987-1999), and Sobri (2003). He was awarded a number of prizes, including the Mari Jászai Prize in 1954 and 1968; he received the Merited Artist title (1975), the Outstanding Artist title (1989), the Officer's Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary in 1995, and the Kossuth Prize in 1997; he was elected Member of the Society of Immortals in 1998, and was named Actor of the Nation in 2005. A memorial park is named after him, and his bust was erected at his birthplace. – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456, 7103.

Zerkovitz, Béla (Szeged, 11 July 1881 - Budapest, 23 October 1948) – Composer, theater director and architect. He obtained a Degree in Architecture and began work as an engineer at the Hungarian State Railways (Magyar Államvasútak – MÁV). In 1919 he petitioned for retirement, so that he could devote himself fully to composing. He was one of the best-known and most criticized representatives of the contemporary Hungarian so-called “light music”. He always wrote the text of his Music Hall songs himself, such as: Kathy, my Heart's Little Kathy... (Kató, szívem kis Katája...); Falling Leaf (Hulló falevél); My Swallow, Where Do You Fly (Fecském hova szállsz). He also started to write lyrics, scripts, and was engaged in composing music. His songs were performed in music halls around the country at the turn of the 20th century; then, from 1907, at the Bonbonnière Cabaret, and at the Modern Stage Cabaret. From 1918, with one break, he was Director of the Royal Music Hall (Orfeum), for eighteen years. He earned his great and well-deserved successes with almost a hundred operettas; they conquered the Viennese musical stages as well, and were often revived. His works include Rain of Gold (Aranyeső) (1913); Die Wundermühle (1914); Gold Pheasant (Arany fácán) (1917); Kissable Woman (Csókos asszony) (1921); Musician Ferkó (Muzsikus Ferkó) (1926), and Falling Leaf (Hulló falevél) (1936). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Zétényi, Zsolt (Veszprém, 9 August 1941 - ) – Jurist, lawyer and politician. His mother was a teacher, his father was a Judge. He matriculated in 1959 in Rákospalota; in 1964 he obtained a Degree in Political Science. Finishing his specialty as a Judge and Prosecutor, he acted as legal consultant for decades, dealing with the law of economics. In the 1970s, he was a practicing lawyer, and has been one again since 1994. Since 1986, he has been a member, later managing secretary, then chief secretary of the Endre Bajcsy-Zsilinszky Society. In 1989 he participated in the Opposition Round Table (Ellenzéki Kerekasztal) at the negotiations with the State Party. From 1990 to 1994, he was a Member of Parliament and Vice-President of the Committee on Human Rights and Cases of Minorities and Religion. From 1987 to 1995, he was a member of the Hungarian Democratic Forum (Magyar Demokrata Fórum – MDF); in 1993-1994, he was member of its Presidency. Since 1997, he has been a member of the Council of the Hundreds (Százak Tanácsa); since 1994, a member of the Society of Hungarian Expert Inventors and Thinkers (Magyar Alkotók és Gondolkodók Szakértői Társaság), as well as member of other organizations; since 2004, he has been President of the National Law Defense Foundation (Nemzeti Jogvédő Alapítvány), and that of the Board of Hungarian Conservative Foundation (Magyar Konzervatív Alapítvány). He represents those and their relatives who were injured in the past despotism in courts and in procedures under other authorities. Among his books are More Light! (Több fényt!) studies, speeches, thoughts (1995-2006); The Value of the Concept of the Holy Crown Today (A Szentkorona-eszme mai értéke), and Historical Constitution – The Ancient Constitution of Hungary (Történelmi alkotmány – Magyarország ősi alkotmánya). – B: 2100, T: 7684.

Z. Gács, György (George) (Zarler) (Budapest, 18 October 1914 - Budapest 1 May 1978) – Painter and industrial designer. He studied at the Free Schools of János (John) Vaszary and István (Stephen) Szőnyi. In 1934 he joined the work of the Socialist Artists' Group; from 1935, he was a student at the Academy of Applied Arts in Budapest, under the direction of Ágost (Austin) Benkhard and, from 1937 to 1940, István Szőnyi. The title of his thesis was: The Relationship between Architecture and Painting (Az építészet és a festészet kapcsolata). From 1940 to 1944, he taught at an Apprentice Training School (Tanonciskola). He took part in a number of collective shows, e.g. Youths of Szinyei (Szinyei Fiatalok) (1939, 1941), the Fall Exhibition of Balaton (1940), and the 16th Spring Salon (1941). From 1945 to 1953, he taught at the High School of Applied Art (Képzőművészeti Gimnázium) and, between 1950 and 1952, he was also its Principal. From 1953 to 1965 he was Head of the Department of Decorative Painting at the Academy of Industrial Art. His first one-man show was at the Adolf Fényes Hall, Budapest in 1957, his works concentrating more and more on the influence of art on architecture. In 1955, he was commissioned to prepare the glass cupola for the Béla Bartók House of Culture (Bartók Béla Kultúrház) at Dunaújváros, and also some glass windows and compositions of graffiti, artificial stone and enamel (e.g. at the Ervin Szabó Library on Török Street in Budapest). From 1965, he held the Chair of Silicate Industry at the Academy of Industrial Arts, until his retirement in 1978. He also taught at the Academy of Applied Arts (1962-1978). From the 1960s, he developed new techniques in glass, ceramics, concrete, and various metals. At his 1968 show, he only appeared with his plastic art in glass. He began to create works in the spirit of neo-constructivism. His radiation mobiles were exhibited at the Museum of Industrial Art in 1970. His last work was a glass composition on the wall of the Entrance Hall of the Puppet Theater, completed in 1976. He was killed in a car accident. Z. Gács was the author of The Technology of Painting (A festészet technológiája) (1953). A memorial exhibition of his works was held at the Béla Bartók Street Gallery in September 1978. He was awarded the Munkácsy Prize in 1956 and the Merited Artist title in 1970. – B: 0883, 1654, T: 7456. → Vaszary, János (1); Szőnyi, István.

Zichy, Count Ágost (Penzing, near Landsberg, Bavaria, 14 June 1852 - Vienna, 4 October 1925) – Explorer. He studied at the Universities of Vienna and Budapest, where he obtained a Ph. D. in Law in 1875. With his brother, József (Joseph) Zichy, he carried out an extensive East-Asian exploration trip from 1875 to 1877. They traversed through the southeastern Indian colonies of the time, then went to Siam (now Thailand), from there to China and Japan, and returned to Hungary through Central Asia. He gave a series of lectures on his experiences and observations, at the Geographical Society in 1877. In the following year, he spent six months in America. From 1879, he was a Member of Parliament and, from 1883 to 1892, he was Governor of the Hungarian Harbor of Fiume (now Rijeka, Croatia). He was a member of the Upper House of Parliament. From 1911, he was made Earl Marshal; in 1918, he relinquished this honour. His works include Study on Japanese Art (Tanulmány a japán művészetről) (1879); Dominion of Canada (1879), and Boro-Budur on the Island of Java (Boro-Budur Jáva szigetén) (1881). He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1880). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Zichy, Count Géza (Sztára, now Staré, in Slovakia, 23 July 1849 - Budapest, 14 January 1924) – Pianist, composer and writer. He was a student of Mayerberger in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) and of Robert Volkmann and Ferenc (Franz) Liszt in Pest. In 1863, aged 14, during a hunting expedition, with his own rifle, he accidentally shot and badly mangled his right arm. As a pianist, made his first public appearance at a concert in Pozsony in 1866 aged 17, and had a great success with his one-handed piano playing. The following year he had a concert at the Hungarian Capital of Pest. From 1875 to 1918, he was President of the National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede), acting as the Patron of Hungarian musical life. Between 1891 and 1894, as the Administrator of the Opera House, Budapest, he introduced autocratic rule, whereby causing a number of conflicts; he largely brought about the early resignation of Gustav Mahler, the director at the time, who, as a result of the clash, left for Hamburg in 1890, well before his term expired. In 1878, Zichy played in Germany, in 1879 in Paris and, between 1880 and 1890, in Russia, Germany, France, Belgium, Austria, Romania and the Scandinavian countries. He donated the proceeds of his concerts to charitable and cultural purposes. Between 1895 and 1916, he was a guest of the Opera House as composer, conductor and pianist. In World War I, he generously helped the disabled soldiers in various ways, and he wrote for them his Book of the One-handed Man (A félkezű ember könyve) (1915). With his one-handed technique of piano playing, he achieved an unparalleled virtuosity. He was a writer of novels, plays and poems. He was a member of the Kisfaludy (1878) and Petőfi Societies (1876), and an honorary member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. His literary works include The Novel about Dream (Az álom regénye) (1872); The Battle of Love (A szerelem harca) drama (1876); More Recent Poems (Újabb költemények) (1892); Rákóczi Trilogy (1905, 1909, 1912), and Ten Commandments (Tízparancsolat), comedy (1898). He also wrote his memoirs, as well as his travelogues in German and in Hungarian. He was a composer of piano concertos, piano pieces, operas, e.g. Master Roland (Roland mester) (1899), choral works, church music, and songs. He was a recipient of a number of distinctions, among them the Great Cross of the Franz Joseph Order, and the Leopold Order. – B: 0883, 1068, 0425, 1789, T: 7456.→Liszt, Ferenc; Mahler, Gustav.

Zichy, Count István (Stephen) (Bábolnapszta, 31 March 1879 - Aba, 11 January 1951) – Historian, painter and graphic artist. In his younger years he wanted to be an artist. He was a student of Simon Hollósy in Munich, then he did art studies at Nagybánya (now Baia Mare in Romania) and Paris. His works appeared in several art exhibitions. Later in his life, he carried out research work in the field of Hungarian ancient history. From 1913 to 1919, he was in charge of the Hungarian Historical Gallery, a division of the Museum of Fine Arts in Budapest. In 1931, he became an honorary lecturer (privatdocent) at the University of Budapest. From 1934 to 1944, he was Director of the Hungarian National Historical Museum. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1925). His historical works include Ancient History and Culture of the Hungarians up to the Conquest (A magyarság őstörténete és műveltsége a honfoglalásig) (1923); Additions to the Questions About the Culture of the Eurasian Horse-riding

Nomads (Az euráziai lovasnomád műveltség kérdéséhez) (1939); Hungarian Ancient History (Magyar őstörténet) (1939), and Alexander Csoma de Körös (Kőrösi Csoma Sándor) (1942). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Hollósi, Simon; Madsar; Kőrösi Csoma, Sándor.

Zichy, Count Jenő (Eugene) (Sárszentmihály, near Székesfehérvár, 5 July 1837 - Meran, South Tirol, 26 December 1906) – Politician, geographer and explorer. He began his career as the Chief Administrative Officer of County Fejér, southwest of Budapest. In 1861, and from 1865 until his death, he was a Member of Parliament; until 1870, he was a member of the Deák Party, then an independent member; later, until 1903, he was with the Liberal Party, then until his death, again an independent member. From 1881 to 1906, he was President of the National Industrial Association, which initiated lower level technical education in 86 towns in Hungary. He dealt with industrial and economic problems. The organization of the National Exhibition of 1879 at Székesfehérvár is linked with his name. In the 1890s, he conducted three exploring, ethnographic and archaeological expeditions: one into the Caucasus Mountains (1892), another into Western and Southern Siberia, across Mongolia and the Gobi Desert, as far as Beijing (1895-1896); and a third expedition also into Central Asia during 1897-1898. His main aim was to search for the origin of the Magyars. He was an honorary member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1899). From his bequest, his rich private museum passed into the metropolitan property of Budapest, and finally to the National Museum. His works include My Caucasian and Central Asian Travels, vols. i, ii (Kaukázusi és közép-ázsiai utazásaim, I-II) (1897), and My Third Asian Travel, vols. i-v (Harmadik ázsiai utazásom I-V) (1900-1905). – B: 0883, 1068, 1816, T: 7456.→Deák, Ferenc.

Zichy Land (Zemlya Frantsa Josifa), Russia – Uninhabited archipelago in the North Pole region, part of Franz Joseph Land. An Austro-Hungarian Expedition discovered the Zichy tract of land on 30 August 1873, while exploring Franz Joseph Land. Due to the state of the ice, it was only on 1st November that they could land on the islands. Trips were organized and led by Gyula (Julius) Payer during the winter of 1873/1874. Some of the names given to geographic locations include Budapest Cape, Deák Land, Fiume Cape, Simonyi Glacier, Littrow Cape and Rath Cape. The name of the archipelago first appeared in print on G. Payer's map. Since the Habsburg Monarchy did not lay claim to the Islands, they were annexed by Russia in 1914. – B: 0906, 1020, T: 7456.→Payer, Gyula.

Zichy, Mihály (Michael) (Zala, 14 October 1827 - St. Petersburg, 29 February 1906) – Painter, graphic artist. From 1842, he read Law at the University of Pest and, concurrently, he was also a student at the School of Painting run by Jakab (Jacob) Marastoni. In 1844, he settled in Vienna, where he studied under Waldmüller. It was here that his first important work, the painting Lifeboat (Mentőcsónak) was completed: a favorite theme of the Romantic period, carried out with profound psychological expressive power. In 1847, on the recommendation of Waldmüller, he became the drawing-teacher of a relative of the Russian Czar. By painting a portrait study of the first independent Hungarian Prime Minister, Count Lajos (Louis) Batthyány, he pledged his support to the Revolution and War of Independence (1848-1849). From 1850, he worked for a photographer as retoucher, while he also appeared with numerous pen drawings, aquarelle and oil-portraits. By 1853, he was the Czar's Court painter. Apart from immortalizing court life, he found many opportunities during his travels for depicting the life of the common people. In 1857, Zichy founded the so-called Friday Society for the support of needy painters. In 1868, he painted the picture Autodafé, an evocative scene of the horror of the Spanish Inquisition. In 1871, he set out on a grand tour of Europe, and in 1874, he settled in Paris. Ágoston (Augustine) Trefort commissioned him to paint Queen Elizabeth Placing a Wreath on Deák's Bier (Erzsébet királyné koszorút helyez Deák ravatalára). In 1875, this was followed by the Revelry of Henry III (III. Henrik tivornyája). For the Paris World Fair in 1879, he appeared with the painting Triumph of the Genius of Destruction (A rombolás géniuszának diadala), a bold expression of anti-militarism, because of which the French authorities forbade its exhibition. In 1881, he left Paris and, after brief stays at Nizza, Vienna and Zala, he returned to St. Petersburg. Thereafter he was mainly engaged with illustrating. His best creations were expressed in this genre: the illustrations for the epic drama of Imre (Emeric) Madách The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája) and János (John) Arany's 24 ballads (1894-1898) in facsimile edition. With great drawing ability and dramatic power, he enlivened the works of Lermontov, Gogol, Puskin, Madách, Arany and Petőfi. The deep political, philosophical and moral message expressing progressive thoughts secured an extraordinary and lasting effect. Mihály Zichy is an important figure in Hungarian Romantic Art. There is a School named after him in the Transdanubian town Kaposvár, and a Memorial Museum in the village of Zala, south of Lake Balaton. – B: 0883, 0934, 1031, T: 7456. → Batthyány, Count Lajos; Erzsébet, Queen; Deák, Ferenc; Arany, János; Madách, Imre; Petőfi, Sándor; Trefort, Ágoston.

Zilahi, Károly (Charles) (Zilahi-Kiss) (Zilah, now Zalău, Romania, 28 October 1838 - Buda, 15 May 1864) – Newspaper reporter, poet and critic. He studied at the Reformed College of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). In 1857 he went to Pest to continue his studies at the Law School of the University. He started working as a reporter and critic at papers of Transylvania early in his career. In 1860 he studied in Vienna. He played a leading role in the circles of university youth, for which he was banished from Pest. He had his tuberculosis treated frequently in Austria and Italy. He became acquainted with the important writers of his times, such as Pál (Paul) Gyulai, Zsigmond (Sigismund) Kemény and János (John) Vajda. In his later critiques, he passionately turned against the views and literary politics of Pál (Paul) Gyulai. In his lyrical poetry, Zilahi broke away from the customary style; he represented a kind of opposition with his new manner of expression, his drama theory, and his stand for free criticism. In 1863 he was an associate of the Hungarian Press (Magyar Sajtó) and, in 1864, that of the papers of the Capital City. His works include The Works of Zilahi-Kiss-Károly, vols. i, ii (Zilahi-Kiss-Károly munkái, I - II), with the biographical introduction of János (John) Dömötör (1865), and the Selected works of Károly Zilahi-Kiss (Zilahi-Kiss Károly Válogatott Művei) with an introduction by Kálmán (Coloman) Vargha (0961). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7684. → Gyulai, Pál; Kemény, Zsigmond; Vajda, János.

Zilahy, Irén (Irène) (Kaposvár, 10 August 1904 - Budapest, 3 April 1944) – Actress. She was planning to become a physician, but she decided on a theatrical career instead, which she began in the company of some of his friends in Arad, Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, Romania) and Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania). She moved to Budapest when Transylvania (Erdély) was ceded to Romania as per the Treaty of Trianon (1920). From 1927 until 1930, she was a member of the City Theater (Városi Színház), Budapest, playing also at the Theaterette of Buda (Budai Színkör) (1928-1930, 1932). Later, she contracted only for roles at the King Theater (Király Színház) (1930-1931), the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház) (1931), and the Chamber Theater (Kamara Színház) (1936). In 1931, she went abroad, appearing in Vienna, and played in French and German feature films. After she married, she withdrew from public appearance. She was killed in the early days of the bombing of Budapest during World War II. She won the adulation of her audience in prima donna roles with her excellent singing voice, charming appearance and playing that was free from poses. Her roles included Kristina in Gy. Jarnó's The Forester's Daughter (Az erdészleány); Baba in L. Lajtai's Stories About the Typewriter (Mesék az írógépről); Zsuzsi in L. Lajtai's The Old Summer (A régi nyár), and Cica in J. Sándor's Weekend. Her feature films include Paprika (1933), Tovaritch (1935), and the Csárdás (1935). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Zilahy, Lajos (Louis) (Nagyszalonta, now Salonta, Romania, 27 March 1891 - Újvidék, now Novi Sad, Serbia, 1 December 1974) – Writer, poet, playwright, journalist, publicist. His father was a public notary and his mother was the daughter of the landed gentry from Transdanubia. He read Law (while he worked at a solicitor's office in Nagyszalonta), and obtained his degree in Law from the University of Budapest; but he switched to journalism. During World War I, he was seriously wounded near Lemberg, Poland (now Lviv, Ukraine) in 1916; as a result, he was exempted from further military service and was able to work as an associate editor for the papers Hungarian Observer (Magyar Figyelő) and Midday News (Déli Hírek). He began his literary career as a lyric poet. His first volume was published in 1916 under the title Poems (Versek). From 1917, his love passages and songs were performed at the Apollo Cabaret, the Modern Theater, and the Andrassy Avenue Theater, Budapest. During the time of the Communist dictatorship of the Council (Soviet) Republic, from 21 March to 1 August 1919, he stayed in Vienna, where he prepared a counter-revolutionary paper for publication. After his return to Hungary, he published a volume of one-act plays entitled The Ox and Other Comedies (Az ökör és más komédiák). After 1919, he worked for various newspapers and wrote plays, short stories and novels. Zilahy's first novel, Deadly Spring (Halálos Tavasz), published in 1922, achieved great success with its romantic sentimentality. Between 1923 and 1943, his plays appeared on stage at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, and other leading theaters, e.g. The Ghost (Hazajáró lélek), staged at the National Theater in 1923. With his play The Sun is Shining (Süt a nap), featuring village life after World War I, he won the Vojnits Award of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences and, in 1925, he was elected member of the Kisfaludy Society. His novel Two Prisoners (Két fogoly) (1926), featuring the emotional crisis caused by the war, made him the celebrated writer of the middle class. In 1930, he worked in the editorial office of Evening Papers (Estlapok). He married Piroska Bárczy. Between 1934 and 1936, he edited the paper Hungary (Magyarország), and from 1940 to 1944, he was Editor-in-Chief for a weekly, entitled Bridge (Híd); as his associates, he won over such outstanding figures as Zsigmond (Sigismund) Móricz, László (Ladislav) Németh and Lajos (Louis) Nagy. Under the name School of Excellence (Kitünők iskolája), he launched a foundation for gifted youth. Under the name Pegazus, he started his own film studio to create artistic Hungarian films. Zilahy's novels were bestsellers, popular also abroad, and his plays were often performed both in the Capital and in the countryside. Eleven of his novels and plays were adapted for films. He was considered one of the most popular writers, and played an important role in the literary life of the country. His works were published in more than 30 volumes. In 1943, his anti-National Socialist play Wooden Towers (Fatornyok) was put on at the Chamber Theater of the National Theater, which featured the lack of assimilation of German settlers in Hungary; after the German occupation in 1944, the play was banned. In 1945, he became President of the Hungarian-Soviet Friendship Society, and co-edited the journal Literature and Science (Irodalom és Tudomány), with Albert Szent-Györgyi, the eminent Nobel Prize winning biochemist. He played a role in public life also after 1945. In 1948, he emigrated to the USA and settled in New York. While he published very seldom in émigré Hungarian papers, the émigré Hungarian publishers reprinted his one-time popular novels. Many of his novels were translated into English, German, Italian, Spanish and Japanese. In 1970, the last Zilahy premiere was held in Szabadka (now Subotica, Serbia). In the last decades of his life, he spent considerable time in the Bácska area (now in Serbia, formerly part of the Kingdom of Hungary), where he died in the town of Újvidék after he bought a house there. According to his will, he was buried in Budapest. In his plays and novels, he dealt mainly with the changed social and economic situation of the middle class; he also asserted the necessity of reforms (without revolution) and, later in his life, he supported the intellectual resistance. His plots, his technique and his style were elegant and grand, yet he still managed to be popular. He achieved success with works of peasant and civic themes as well. He was honored with the Corvin-Wreath in 1930, and the Corvin Chain in 1944. He supported Regent Miklós (Nicholas) Horthy's official policy, but he was also in touch with the young writers and the intelligentsia, many of whom criticized that policy. After the outbreak of World War II, he increasingly turned against the official Hungarian policy. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding; director 1945-1949). He visited Budapest in 1973. His plays include The Ox (Az ökör) (1917); The Sun is Shining (Süt a nap) (1924); The General (A tábornok) (1928); Something is Drifting on the Water (Valamit visz a víz) (1928); The Virgin and the Kid (A szűz és a gödölye) (1937); The Homeless Town (A földönfutó város) (1939); My Great-Great-Grandmother (Szépanyám) (1943); The Angry Angel (A dühödt angyal) (1953); Century in Scarlet (Bíbor évszázad) (1965), and The Witch of Imbrosz (Az imbroszi boszorkány) (1970). – B: 0231, 0883, 1068, 1257, 1445, 7456, 1031, T: 7617, 7456. → Móricz, Zsigmond; Németh, László; Nagy, Lajos; Szent-Györgyi, Albert; Horthy, Miklós.

Zimányi József (Joseph) (Budapest, 5 December 1931 - Budapest, 16 September 2006). – Physicist. He took his high school matriculation at the nationalized Piarist High School, Budapest, in 1950. It was the experiment of the moon-radar of Zoltán Bay that attracted him. In 1950, he started his studies in physics at the University of Budapest, where his professors were Lajos (Louis) Jánossy, Károly (Charles) Novobáczky and Jenő (Eugene) Poczsa. After finishing his university studies, he became employed as a research physicist at the Department of Nuclear Physics of the Central Physics Research Institute (Központi Fizikai Kutató Intézet – KFKI), led by Károly (Charles) Simonyi. After obtaining his qualification, he received a job there. In the beginning, he examined the spin and parity of induced nucleus. In the 1956 Revolution, he produced and handed out fliers, therefore he was, for several years, not allowed to travel to the West, and could not fill any top positions. In 1972, he obtained the title of Doctor of Physical Sciences. In 1969, he received permission to travel to the Niels Bohr Institute in Copenhagen, to where he was a returning visitor and where he fell in love with heavy ion physics. In 1978, the Bondorf-Garman-Zimanyi hydrodynamic model was published. He started to examine the theory of quark-gluon-plasma. He urged Hungarian officials to join the European Organization for Nuclear Research – CERN, which came to be realized in 1992. In 1990, the Hungarian Academy of Sciences elected him to be a corresponding member and, in 1995, a regular member. In addition, he was also a member of the RHIC accelerator PHENIX-experiment. He undertook a wide range of organization of scientific projects, and participated at home and abroad in international public life. He was one of the pioneers of nuclear physics and high-energy physics in Hungary. He was also one of the pathfinders for utilizing computer science in physics. He received numerous prizes, such as: the Prize of the Academy, the Imre Bródy Prize, the Széchenyi Prize, the Officer's Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary, and the Arnold Ipolyi Prize. – B: 1031, T: 7684. → Bay, Zoltán; Jánossy, Lajos; Novobáczky, Károly; Simonyi, Károly.

Zimányi, Rudolf O.Ciszt. (Rudolph) (Hódoscsépany, County Borsod, 13 May 1923 - Irving, Texas, USA, 1955) – Cistercian monk, theologian and poet. He studied Theology and Philosophy at the College of the Cistercian Order at Zirc. He was ordained in 1947. At first, his Order sent him to Paris to study French, Literary and Esthetical studies; then in 1951 it posted him to the United States to continue his studies in Buffalo, NY. From 1954, he taught in a high school and, from 1959, he was Professor of French Literature at the University of Dallas. Later on, he did scientific and pastoral work in Milwaukee, WI. He wrote poetry and studies. His main works are: Pascal in the Works of Francois Mauriac (Pascal dans l'oeuvre de Francois Mauriac) (1964); In the Old Circle (A régi körben) (Rome 1968), and Thirst (Szomjúság) (Oakville, ON, Canada, 1973). – B: 1672, T: 7684.

Zimmermann, Ágoston (Augustine) (Mór, 3 December 1875 - Budapest, 6 October 1963) – Anatomist. He completed his veterinary studies at the University of Budapest in 1895. From 1896, he was a demonstrator at the Veterinary Department. In 1903 he obtained his Ph.D. and became an assistant lecturer. In 1910, at the Faculty of Arts, he became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent), and later, in the Veterinary Department, he became Professor in the Chair of Anatomy and Zoology. For a long time, he edited the journal Veterinary Papers (Állatorvosi Lapok). In 1939 and 1940, he was Vice-Chancellor of the Budapest Polytechnic. He retired in 1946. He was President of the Natural Science Society. It is to his merit that he extended the scope of anatomy beyond its descriptive nature to the explanatory and interpretative level. His published works include Ontogeny (Fejlődéstan) (1917) and Anatomy of Domestic Animals (Háziállatok anatómiája) (1920). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1922, ordinary 1934, honorary 1942). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1957. A high school at Mór bears his name. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Zipernowsky, Károly (Charles) (Vienna, 4 April 1853 - Budapest, 29 November 1942) – Mechanical engineer and inventor. He began his career as a pharmacist; then he studied at the Budapest Polytechnic, obtaining his diploma in 1878; in the same year, András (Andrew) Mechwart invited him to organize the electrical section of Ganz and Co. Works, which developed from the small workshop on Kacska Street in Buda to the famous Ganz Electrical Works. Earlier on, his activity covered the improvement of electric illumination and D.C. machinery; later, it shifted to A.C. generators and even introduced multiphase systems, patenting 40 inventions. His most significant invention in the development of electrotechnics is the one patented together with Otto Bláthy and Miksa (Maximilian) Déri: a transformer, with transmission ad libitum and with an enclosed iron core and a current-distributing system with alternating current for parallel-switched transformers. His most successful undertaking was in Italy, where he constructed a transmission line from the Tivoli Power-plant to supply Rome with electrical power (1892). From 1893 to 1924, he was Professor of the newly established Chair of Power-current Electrotechnics at the Budapest Polytechnic. From 1905 for 33 years, he was President of the Electrotechnical Society, which, in 1911 established an annual commemorative medal in his honor. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1893). His works include Secondary Generators or Transformers, co-authored with Déry and Bláthy (1885, 1886); Distribution of Electric Current by Means of Transformers (Elektromos áram elosztása transzformátorok segítségével) (1887), and High Velocity Electrical Railways (Nagysebességű elektromos vasutak) (1891). A Mechanical School in Pécs bears his name. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456. → Mechwart, András; Bláthy, Ottó Titusz; Déri, Miksa.

Zipser Anthem → Cipszer Anthem.

Zipsers → Cipszersz.

Zirc, Cistercian Abbey – The Abbey was founded by King Béla III (1172-1196) for the members of the French Cistercian Order. The members of the Order, besides their daily duties, were studious individuals who read books and taught the people. The great Turkish invasion of 1526 destroyed the Abbey, which was rebuilt from 1727 on, with some extension. The first church was built in the 13th century, and the present church was constructed between 1732 and 1752. In 1812, it became the seat of the Order's Provincial. In 1948, the Communist Government dissolved most of the religious orders, but the Cistercians were allowed to maintain five high schools, twelve parishes and two technical schools under strict government control. When further repressions were introduced against the churches, some members emigrated to the United States and founded a monastery in the city of Irving, TX. When the Communist rule in Hungary started to crumble, prior to independence in 1990, on 18 August 1989, a part of the Abbey was returned to the Order and the seminary could resume its work. However, the high school could not be opened at this time due to the advanced age of the teaching staff. Today the Abbey and its Baroque church are protected historical sites. – B: 1288, 1144, 1153, T: 7103.

Zirkuli, Péter (Szatmárnémeti, now Satu Mare, Romania, 24 September 1948 - ) – Writer, poet and literary translator. In 1968, he obtained a Degree in Education to teach Hungarian Literature at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). Between 1968 and 1971, he studied Hungarian Literature and Philosophy at the University of Budapest. From 1971 to 1974, he taught as an Assistant at the Hungarian Faculty of the University in Bucharest, and did newspaper reporting. In 1974, he resettled in Hungary. In Budapest, he worked as a teaching assistant, scientific co-worker, and publishing editor. Since 1980, he has lived in Paris. Since 1986, he has been a teacher at the Institute of Eastern Languages and Culture (Institut National des Langues et Civilisations Orientales – INALCO). From 1989, he worked as a special correspondent for Radio Free Europe (Szabad Európa Rádió) from Paris. He is, first of all, a thinker and an analyst, who reflects on the surrounding world and shares his opinion. His main works include The Shining Moment (A fényes pillanat) (Budapest, 1988); Encounters (Találkozások), essays, drafts and studies (Budapest, 1988), and An Exciting Country (Izgalmas ország) (Budapest, 1991). His latest works include Selected Poems (Válogatott versek); Katalin (poems), as well as Fad and the Norm (A hóbort és norma). – B: 1036, 1672, T: 7684.

Zirzen, Janka (Janet) (Jászberény, 23 May 1824, her date of baptism - Budapest, 28 December 1904) – Educator. Her midwife mother had her educated with the help of her relatives. After unsuccessfully experimenting with a school for girls at the family home, she became a governess in Eger. The burghers of her native town called her back, however. In 1846, she again opened her school, which was active till 1849; thereafter she was a governess again. In 1866 she moved to Pest (later to become Budapest) and participated in the organization of women's education. The result was the Teacher's College of Buda, which, from 1869, developed into the Elizabeth College for Women (Erzsébet Nőiskola); she became its principal until her retirement in 1896. She was the author of a book on The History of the First Five Years of the Budapest Royal College for Women Teachers (A Budapesti m. kir. áll. Tanítónőképezde öt évi fennállásának története) (1874). She was an outstanding figure of women's education in Hungary. A street in Budapest and a student's hostel in Jászberény bear her name. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Zita, Queen (Mária Adelgunda Mikaela Rafaela Gabriella Jozefa Antónia Luiza Ágnes) (Castle Pianore, Italy, 9 May 1892 - Zizers, Switzerland, 14 March 1989) – Princess of Bourbon-Parma, Empress of Austria and Queen of Hungary, wife of King Károly IV (Charles) (1916-1918). Her childhood was spent at the castle of Schwarzau, the home of Prince Robert of Parma. From 1902 to 1908, her high school studies were at the College at Zangberg (Bavaria), run by the Salesian nuns, then continued in the Convent of the Benedictine nuns on the Isle of Wight. She married Archduke Charles (Károly) Francis Joseph after the assassination of Crown Prince Francis Ferdinand on 28 June 1914. Following the death of Emperor and King Francis Joseph (Ferenc József) on 21

November 1916, she became Empress of Austria and Queen of Hungary. She was ceremonially crowned Queen of Hungary in the Matthias (Mátyás) Church, the Coronation Cathedral of Buda, on 30 December 1916. After the collapse of the Habsburg Monarchy, she moved to Switzerland with her family. She was in Hungary for the last time with King Károly IV in Tihany in 1921. She was imprisoned after the “Battle of Budaörs” incident on 21 October 1921. The Allied Powers banished her with her husband to the Island of Madeira. After the death of King Károly IV (10 April 1922), she took refuge in Spain. She reared and educated her eight children in a Hungarian environment. During World War II, she lived in the USA. From 1982, her home was the Zizers Convent near Chur in Switzerland, where she died, aged 107, and she was laid to rest in the Capuchin Crypt in Vienna. Her eldest son, Otto Francis Joseph relinquished his claim to the throne in 1961; he died on July 4, 2011. Otto Habsburg had been a Member of the European Parliament. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Károly IV, King; Habsburg, Otto von.

Zither – A stringed musical instrument, called cimbalom in Hungarian, found on the Great Plains (Nagyalföld). It is the most widely used Hungarian folk instrument. Often it is decorated with the image of a horse head. Its origin reaches back to ancient times. The instrument is 50–70 cm long, 25–35 cm wide, 5 cm high with 31–43 strings stretched across the top flat surface. Of these, a few are called primary strings. Its resonant flat or log-shaped body is made of wood. The sounding of the instrument is generated by striking the strings with the bottom end of a goose feather. There are two types of zithers: 1. The diatonic zither, on which cross grooves run along the fingerboard under all the 2x2 or 3x3 strings. 2. The chromatic zither: different grooves are located under the pair of two frets of the zither strings. A gifted player can play not only songs on these instruments but also other kinds of music, only limited by the techniques of the instrument. – B: 1197, 1078, T: 7684.→Cimbalom.

Zitterbarth, Mátyás (Matthew) (Pest, now Budapest, 1803 - Pest, 14 November 1867) – Architect. He is the most important member of the Austrian Zitterbach family, who settled in Hungary. In addition to designing dwelling houses, the construction of the Magyar Theater of Pest is linked to his name; the old National Theater on Kerepes St., now Rákóczi Boulevard (1835-1837), was pulled down; apart from its cultural-historical significance, it was remarkable architecturally as well. Between 1838 and 1841, he also designed the Western Block of the County Hall of Pest, the frontal and arcaded design of which was quite an original conception. His architectural design is featured in the Institute for the Blind (Vakok Intézete) (1841-1842), and the one-time hospital for poor children, built in 1845. Besides Mihály (Michael) Pollack and József (Joseph) Hild, he was the most outstanding master of the classicist architecture of Pest. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Pollack, Mihály; Hild, József.

Zobor (9th century) – A presumed prince in the Avar Empire. After the dissolution of the Avar Empire in the Carpathian Basin, a part of the Avar population, for some reason, moved northward to the mountainous region, where they settled and could have intermingled with pockets of Slavs. They were still under the rule of their ruling prince as late as 870 AD. According to the chronicler Anonymus, at the time of the Hungarian Settlement in the Carpathian Basin around 895, near the Rivers Vág and Garam, Prince Zobor ruled from his capital in Nyitra. This region, the Upper Land (Felvidék), the northern part of the Historic Kingdom of Hungary, constitutes Slovakia now. – B: 1078, 1020, T: 7658.→Anonymus.

Zoborhegy Abbey – In historic Upper Hungary (Felvidék, now in Slovakia), this Abbey was founded by King St Stephen (István I, 977-1038) for the Benedictine Order on the slopes of the Zobor Mountain (Zoborhegy). In 1464, the Archbishop of Esztergom owned the monastery. In 1695, Italian Camaldolese friars settled there and built a new church and monastery. After Emperor and King József II (Joseph, 1780-1790) dissolved all the religious Orders, the church's furnishings were transferred to the parish of Zobordarázs (now Dražovce, in Slovakia) in 1782. At present the monastery is a sanatorium. – B: 1020, T: 7103.→József II, King.

Zöld Péter (Mádéfalva, now Siculeni, Romania, 21 September 1727 - Csíkrákos, now Racul, Romania, 25 June 1795) – Historian and Rpmian Catholic priest. He studied Philosophy and Theology at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). Zöld was one of the most determined opponents of the Szekler Border Guard system. In the inquest following the massacre in Mádéfalva, he was cruelly imprisoned. After 13 months he escaped and went to those Szeklers who fled to Moldova, east of Transylvania, and to the Csángó-Magyars living in Moldova. He worked there for five years as a pastor; then, having received amnesty, he returned to Szeklerland in Transylvania with many of his followers. He worked as a parson at Csikdelne (now Delnița, Romania), Csikszentimre (now Sântimbru, Romania), and finally Csíkrákos. He was one of the first historians of the Csángó-Magyars. His main work was On the Magyars of Moldova (A moldvai magyarokról) (1783). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→ Mádéfalva's Peril; Csángó.

Zoli the Clown (Zoltán Hirsch) (Dombóvár, 6 February 1885 - Auschwitz, 1944 or 1945) – Acrobat and dwarf. He began his career with his partner, the dwarf Max Schumann and his circus. He traveled all over the world. At the Olympic Circus, London, he appeared most frequently as its star. In Budapest, he appeared from 1914 in various tent-circuses, always in his favorite site, the City Gardens (Városliget). Later in his life, he rarely went abroad. His successes were mainly due to his ingenious ad-libs. When the German forces occupied Hungary in 1944, he was carried off to a concentration camp, finally to Auschwitz. He was author of the Small Man's Great Life (Kis ember nagy élete), autobiography, (no date). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Zolnai, Béla (Székesfehérvár, 10 March 1890 - Budapest, 26 May 1969) – Literary historian and linguist. He studied at the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest, and at the University of Paris. From 1914 to 1923, he was a high school teacher in Budapest; from 1923, an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) at the University of Budapest. From 1924, he was an acting professor at the University of Pécs; he was a professor at the University of Szeged from 1925, and at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) from 1940 to 1945, when Northern Transylvania was returned to Hungary. From 1945 until his retirement in 1950, he worked as a professor at the University of Budapest. From 1927 to 1942, he founded and edited the journal of historical ideas, the Széphalom. He strongly opposed the ideology of National Socialism and chauvinism, and criticized the followers of the conservative trend, who attacked Ady, the great poet, and the Progressive Circle in the literary review, the West (Nyugat). The associates of Széphalom were: Antal (Anthony) Szerb, Gyula (Julius) Juhász, Dezső (Desider) Kosztolányi, Lőrinc (Lawrence) Szabó, and Miklós (Nicholas) Radnóti. Zolnai also edited Études Françaises. He published numerous articles and studies on the history of literature, stylistics, linguistic and esthetics, which appeared in journals in Hungary and abroad. He was a correspondent of the Encyclopaedia Britannica and the French Revue des Études Hongroises, and also of the Hungarian Etymological Dictionary (Magyar Nyelv Értelmező Szótára) (1959). As an author, he sometimes appeared under the pen name Péter Garázda. Treating the history of ideas, he studied Rákóczi and Mikes, e.g. Rákóczi the Writer (1934) and Ideals of Mikes (1937), which led to his works on Jansenism. His favorite field of study was of the spirit and atmosphere expressed in words: Fate of Words (Szavak sorsa) (1939), and Language and Atmosphere (Nyelv és hangulat) (1964). He translated into Hungarian from the works of P. Bourget, M. Maeterlinck and R. Rolland. He was awarded a Doctorate in Literature in 1955. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1940, ordinary 1948-1949). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Szerb, Antal; Juhász, Gyula; Kosztolányi, Dezső; Szabó, Lőrinc; Radnóti, Miklós.

Zolnai, Gyula (Julius) (Nagysomkút, now Șomcuta-Mare, Romania, 3 December 1862 - Budapest, 24 December 1949) – Linguist. He completed his higher studies at the University of Budapest, after which he taught at high schools in Eger (1887-1888), Székesfehérvár (1888-1893) and Budapest (1894-1906). In 1895, he became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) at the University of Budapest; from 1905 at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania); from 1918 at the University of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), and he transferred later to the University of Pécs because of the Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920), taking both Pozsony and Kolozsvár from Hungary. At Pécs being Professor of Hungarian and Comparative Finno-Ugrian linguistics until his retirement in 1930. In 1898, the Hungarian Academy of Sciences commissioned him to plan, organize and edit a comprehensive dictionary of the Hungarian language; he began the collecting work in 1906. In 1905-1906, he was a co-editor for the linguistic journal Hungarian Language (Magyar Nyelv). He also edited and published the Diploma Records Dictionary (Magyar Oklevélszótár), started by Stephen (István) Szamota (1906). Zolnai was active in several aspects of linguistics; he dealt chiefly with the history of language and syntax. With a large part of his scientific work, he served the correct usage of language. He translated the poems of many Finnish poets, and translated into Hungarian the Finnish folk-plays of Aleksis Kivi (originally Stenwall). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1897, ordinary 1924, honorary 1945). His works include Etymologies (Szómagyarázatok) (1890); Early Hungarian Language Records Prior to the Era of Printing (Nyelvméleink a könyvnyomtatás koráig) (1894); Zur sprachlichen Differenzierung; and Our Foreign Words and the Language Reform (Idegen szavaink és a nyelvújítás) (1937). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Szamota, István.

Zolnay, László (Leslie) (Budapest, 16 March 1916 - Budapest, 8 June 1985) – Archeologist and doctor of historical sciences (1984). He studied Latin and History at the University of Budapest; in 1938, he obtained a doctorate in Philosophy, Esthetics and Art History. He was a lector at the publishing office of the Franklin Society, and an assistant editor for the periodical Mirror (Tükör). From 1939, he was an associate of the daily Fresh News (Friss Újság); from 1941, he was Manager, and later Managing Director of the publication of the General Printing Office and Graphics Ltd (Általános Nyomda és Grafikai Rt.). From 1949, for a short time, he was an associate on the Radio; the same year, he became employed at the excavations under Buda Castle. In 1951, he was dismissed because his views were objected to. In 1952, he worked at the Museum in Eger. From 1953, he was Director of the Balassi Bálint Museum in Esztergom. Zolnay organized the Christian Museum there and also the material of the Treasury and Castle Museum. From 1960, he was an associate at the Art-Historical Documentation Center and, from 1961, Chief Associate of the Historical Museum in Budapest. His more important excavations are: Cloister of the Hermits of St. Paul at Budaszentlőrinc; the great Synagogue of Buda, and a 13th Century Royal Residence. From 1967, he continued his excavations under Buda Castle; in 1974, he brought a Gothic sculpture find to the surface. His main works include Medieval Jewry of Buda (Buda Középkori Zsidósága) (Budapest, 1968); Holidays and Week Days in Medieval Buda (Ünnepek és Hétköznapok a középkori Budán) (Budapest, 1975, 1985); The Gothic Sculpture Find of Buda Castle (A budavári gótikus szoborlelet), together with Ernő Szakál (Budapest, 1976); Treasures of Hungary (Kincses Magyarország) (Budapest, 1977); From the Centuries of Hungarian Music (A magyar muzsika századaiból) (Budapest, 1977); Buda, the Damned. The Golden Age of Buda (Az elátkozott Buda. Buda aranykora) (Budapest, 1982), and Our Fame and our Ashes (Hírünk és hamvunk), remembrances (Budapest, 1986). – B: 0883, 1440, T: 7684.

Zolnay, Pál (Paul) (Budapest, 26 March 1928 - ? 17 October 1995) – Film director and dramaturge. He studied at several universities and he was accepted at the Academy of Dramatic Art only in 1953. He started his carrier as an assistant to Zoltán Fábri. His short films, among them The Engagement (Eljegyzés), produced in 1959, caused quite a bit of controversy. He could shoot his first feature film only in 1961. He made several types of film such as reports, literary work, game shows and also films for TV. He also played in several films: Diary to my Lovers (Napló szerelmeimnek); Mill in Hell (Malom a pokolban); Diary for my Children (Napló gyermekeimnek); Colonel Redl (Redl ezredes); Hungarian Requiem (Magyar rekviem); Indian Winter (Indián tél), and Blue Box (Kék doboz). After the change of the political system in 1990, Zolnay worked as a dramaturge in several documentaries, discussing social and economical problems. It was in 1996 that a portrait film was shot with the incurably ill artist, entitled Filmsámán. He created several epoch-making films such as Photography (Fotográfia) (1972), and Shaman (Sámán). Among his feature films is You Were a Prophet, Sweetheart (Proféta voltál szívem) (1968). Among his TV films are After the Flood (Árvíz után) (1971); Petőfi's Minutes (Petőfi percei) (1973); Sándor Wöeres (Wöeres Sándor), portrait film, and Komlódtótfalu, documentary film. His awards are: the Béla Balázs Award (1969), and the Merited Artist title (1985). – B: 1031, T: 7684. → Fábri, Zoltán.

Zolta (Zsolt, Solt) (ca 895 - ca 949) – The youngest son of Khagan (Ruling Prince) Árpád, his successor to the princely rank from 907 to 947. His birth on the Island of Csepel involved a great celebration lasting several days. While still a child, he was betrothed to the daughter of the Prince of Bihar, Mén-Marót, who passed away two years later. Her dowry was awarded to Hungary and her people were assimilated. Upon the death of Prince Árpád, Zolta, aged 12, assumed the princely position, while the affairs of the country were directed by three of its leaders (Vezér). Only scant information exists about his reign, but his name was mainly associated with peace negotiations and a final agreement with Byzantium. The ensuing peace brought wide social and cultural prosperity for the southern region of the Kingdom of Hungary (Délvidék), densely populated by Magyars (Hungarians). The Rivers Danube and Tisza became important trade routes. Both, Hungarian silver wares and horse stock were in great demand in Europe and the Near East. In Transylvania, Byzantine Christianity, (Greek Orthodox) was spreading alarmingly in the land of the „Gyulas’ (the tribe which settled easternmost within the Carpathian Basin, in Transylvania (Erdély), now under Romanian rule). The Magyars, under the general command of reigning Prince Árpád, repulsed a German attack, led by German King, Louis the Child (Gyermek Lajos), at the Battle of Pozsony (Pressburg, now Bratislava, Slovakia) in 907. Árpád died of his wounds he incurred during the battle. The Magyars also won a decisive battle against Louis on German territory on 12 June 910. Further military campaigns were directed to the west and the south, where the names of Prince Zolta’s commanders, Botond, Bulcsu and Léh (Lehel) became prominent, according to written documents. Zolta abdicated in favor of his son and successor, Taksony in 947. – B: 1078, 12030, 1153, T: 7658.→Pozsony, Battle of.

Zórád, Ernő (Ernest) (Balassagyarmat, 16 October 1911 - Budapest, 8 April 2004) – Graphic artist, illustrator and painter. He was a descendant of an untitled noble family of Upper Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia). When his birthplace and Nyitra, where his family lived, became part of Czechoslovakia as a result of the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920), they moved to Budapest. His outstanding talent became evident early on. From 1927 to 1929, he studied at the Academy of Applied Arts, Budapest, as a student of Jenő (Eugene) Haranghy. In World War II, he served on the Russian front. Afterward, he drew illustrations and caricatures for the papers Hungarian Sunday (Magyar Vasárnap), and later for the Thing of Pest (Pesti Izé). In 1951, he worked for the riddle magazine Jackass (Füles). His first pictorial novel, Winnetou, produced from the novel of Karl May, appeared in 1957. In the following decades he illustrated innumerable pictorial novels, mostly adaptations of literary works. In the 1970s and 1980s, some of his works were published in albums colored in aquarelle, also literary adaptations and historical picture novels, now the treasures of art collectors. Around 1970, Zórád first employed the collage technique, positioning figures and photographic details among the drawings. His extraordinary graphic talent was combined with wide-ranging learning, thus raising the pictorial novel to a literary level. From 1951 on, he produced many still-films, and illustrated magazines and books. He prepared many illustrations for the works of Gyula Krúdy; (Julius) Kálmán (Coloman) Mikszáth and Zsigmond (Sigismund) Móricz. He never neglected his original trade, painting, appearing with his watercolors in exhibitions in Hungary and abroad. He was a master of the watercolor and gouache. His best-known picture series records the dilapidated Tabán area of Budapest in the 1930s. His works are held in galleries in Balassagyarmat, Ipolyság (now Šahy, Slovakia) and the Municipal Art Gallery of Budapest. In 2000, he was honored with the Officer’s Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary, and the local government of District I of Budapest bestowed on him the title of “Honorary Freeman of Buda Castle”. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Krúdy, Gyula; Mikszáth, Kálmán; Móricz, Zsigmond.

Zorán→Sztevanovity, Zoran.

Zotmund (Diver Kund, Búvár Kund) (11th century) – Hungarian warrior. According to the Magyar Chronicles, in 1052, he bored holes in the Danube ships of German Emperor Henry III in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), and thus he contributed to the defeat of the invading German forces. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Zoványi, Jenő (Eugene) (Szilágyzovány, now Zăuan, Romania, 11 September 1865 - Budapest, 24 June 1958) – Historian of the Reformed Church. He was a Catholic seminarian in Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania) but, after four weeks, he converted to the Reformed faith. He studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy of Sárospatak and Utrecht. In 1889, he obtained his honorary lecturer (privatdozent) qualification from the Reformed Theological Academy of Sárospatak. He was a parish minister in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) (1891), and at Tiszaföldvár (1894). In 1901, he became a teacher of Church History at the Reformed College of Sárospatak. Because of his views on John Calvin, he lost his position in 1910. However, in 1912, he regained his position. From 1914, Zoványi was Professor of Church History at the University of Debrecen. As a result of his views, expressed during the revolutionary times of 1918 and 1919, he was dismissed from his pastoral position and, in 1922, he was put on the retired list; finally, he was rehabilitated in 1945. From 1927, he lived in Budapest. His numerous writings dealing with Hungarian Protestantism appeared in journals, also in the Theological Encyclopedia (Theológiai Lexikon), and in independent publications. His works include The History of the Enlightenment (A felvilágosodás története) (1922); The Reformation in Hungary until 1565 (A reformáció Magyarországon 1565-ig) (1922); Historical Writings of Szekfü and his Associates (Szekfü és társai történetírása) (1938), and Hungarian Protestant Church-historical Lexicon (Magyarországi protestáns egyháztörténeti lexikon) (1977). His life work is regarded as outstanding. He received an Honorary Doctorate from the University of Debrecen (1917). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Zrínyi, Countess Ilona (Helen) (Ozalj, Croatia 1643 - Nikodemia, Turkey, 18 February 1703) – She was the daughter of Count Péter Zrínyi and Katalin Frangepán. Her father was beheaded for participating in the Wesselényi conspiracy in 1671. She inherited her father’s love of liberty and her uncle’s statesmanship and military tactician qualities. She married Prince Ferenc Rákóczi I, of Transylvania (Erdély) and had two children: Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II and Júlia. After the death of her husband, she married Count Imre Thököly in 1681, the leader of freedom-fight against the Habsburgs with varying success, for the freedom of Hungary and Transylvania. At her husband’s side, she herself organized the Kuruc uprising against the Habsburgs. Her husband attempted to ease out of a provisional alliance with the Turks, who, as a waning power, were unable to withstand the pressure of the Habsburg armies. When the united Christian forces cleared Hungary of the Turks, Imre Thököly was forced to seek exile in Turkey. For three more years Ilona Zrínyi defended the Fortress of Munkács against the siege of the Imperial army. In 1688 she was forced to surrender, and the Viennese court interned her and separated her from her children, despite assurances to the contrary by the Imperial Commander. In 1691, at the battle of Zernyest, her husband exchanged her for the captive Imperial commander, Heister. The children, however, were further detained in Vienna. The heroic countess shared the exile with her husband in Turkey and died during the year her son started his freedom fight against Habsburg oppression. Ilona Zrinyi was buried in the Church of the Lazarists in Galata (Turkey). In 1906, her ashes and those of Count Imre Thököly, Count Miklós Bercsényi, and other exiles were returned to Hungary and interred by the Hungarian government amid national mourning in the St Elizabeth (Erzsébet) Cathedral in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). – B: 1078, 0883, 1138, 1288, 1153, T: 7658.→Zrinyi, Count Péter; Rákóczi I, Prince Ferenc; Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Thököly, Count Imre; Bercsényi, Count Miklós.

Zrínyi, Count Miklós (1) (Nicholas) (in Croatian: Nikola Zrinski) (? , 1508 - Szigetvár, 8 September 1566) – Owner of a large estate, aristocrat, Croatian Ban (Viceroy) and Lord Chief Treasurer. He was the great-grandfather of Count Miklós Zrinyi (Nicholas) (1620-1664). Part of his wealth came from his first wife, Katalin (Catherine) Frangepán. After the disastrous battle of Mohács (1526), he joined the party of Ferdinand I of Habsburg and, in 1529, he took part in the defense of Vienna, besieged by the Ottoman Turkish Army. From 1542 to 1556, he was Ban of Croatia, during which period he fought ceaselessly against the expanding Turkish might. He scored great victories against the Turks at Somlyó in 1542, at the castle of Kostajnica in 1556, and later at Babócs. In 1546, in the form of a royal grant, he received the area of Muraköz with the town of Csáktornya, and thus he founded his family's power. From 1561, he was Captain of Szigetvár. In 1566, Sultan Suleiman I, with his army of ninety-thousand men and 300 cannons, besieged the fortified castle, defended by Zrinyi with his 2500 fighting men. From 9 August, the siege lasted unabated, the defending force dwindled to 600, and was forced into the inner fortification. Miklós Zrinyi did not receive military relief from the imperial forces of 80,000, stationed at Győr; their water supply was running out due to the protracted drought; the moats defending the castle were running dry, and the castle was all in flames; finally, on 7 September 1566 Zrínyi, with his defending force dwindled to 300, sallied forth, still fighting and died a heroic death. 2500 Hungarians and Croats and 25, 000 Turks, as well as the Sultan Suleiman himself, died in the siege. According to the historian Ranke “no warrior ever died a more glorious death than Zrinyi”. – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.→Zrinyi, Count Miklós (2)

Zrínyi, Count Miklós (2) (Nicholas) (Ozaly, 1 May 1620 - Csáktornya, 18 November 1664) – Poet, military commander and politician; the great-grandson and namesake of the hero of Szigetvár. He was a student at the Jesuit College of Graz, then in Vienna and Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia). During his 1636 Italian trip, he became acquainted with Italian Art and Literature. On his return he relentlessly carried on the fight against the expansionist Ottoman Turks, defending his family properties in Transdanubia (Dunántúl) and Croatia, following his family's tradition. He became Captain of Croatia in 1646, and Lord-Lieutenant of County Zala until his death. In 1647, he became Ban (Viceroy) of Croatia, as a reward for his victory against the Turks at Légrád. However, he realized that the Habsburg rule actually hindered the fight against the Turks; therefore, he turned against the Viennese Court, and organized a national party. The Habsburg government prevented him from being elected Palatine of Hungary. In face of protests from the Viennese Court, he had the New Zrinyi Castle-Fort (Új-Zerinvár) built for the defense of the Muraköz area, and repulsed the Turkish attacks. In 1663 and 1664, he temporarily occupied Berzence, Babócsa, Szigetvár, took Pécs, and burnt the Turkish military bridge at Eszék (now Osijek, Croatia). The Turkish Grand Vizier moved with his army against Új-Zerinvár and, while Montecuccoli, the leader of the Habsburg Army passively waited, he captured the castle-fort and blew it up. The fighting ended with the humiliating Peace of Vasvár in 1664 between the Emperor Lipót I (Leopold) (1664-1705) and the Turkish Porta, according to which the Turks, decisively beaten at the battle of Szentgotthárd, could keep the militarily important Érsekújvár (now Nové Zámky, Slovakia) and Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania). Leopold was obliged to pull down Székelyhida and to withdraw his forces from Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). The Peace Treaty, so unfavorable to the Hungarians, paralyzed Count Zrinyi in his plan to oust the Turks completely from the Carpathian Basin. It was also one of the causes of the Wesselényi Conspiracy against Habsburg rule, in which his younger brother, Péter Zrinyi, also participated. Soon after the Peace of Vasvár, the story relates that, in 1664, Count Zrinyi was “killed by a wild-boar while hunting”, an exact repetition of the story of the death of Prince Imre (Emeric), (1007-1031), son and heir of King St. Stephen (István I, 997-1038), who also had to be done away with by power-hungry enemies trying to restore paganism. Count Zrinyi was the leading figure in 17th century Hungarian literature, who was a zealous supporter of a centralized national kingdom, and who also struggled for its realization. According to his belief, the ousting of the Turks had to be initiated and achieved by the Hungarian people, who also had to show their strength against the Habsburgs. Zrinyi's political ideas are incorporated in his great epic poem Peril at Sziget (Szigeti Veszedelem, Obsidio Sigetiana) a work of his youth, consisting of fifteen cantos, following the classical epics. Using a great deal of mention of miraculous happenings and religious thoughts he, who was also a military commander, raised to epic heights his great-grandfather's heroic castle defense, his sally through the main gate, and certain death. The epic related that God punished Hungary for her sins with the Turkish peril, but, after the glorious death of the hero of Szigetvár, Miklós Zrinyi, God's wrath was allayed and it was high time to help him to break the rod of his anger. Count Zrinyi, poet and military commander, also knew how to characterize and organize a great poem, as well as how to fight and how to respect the enemy. The majestic and masculine tone of the epic first began to be appreciated only in the 19th century, starting with Gedeon Ráday; then, in 1817 Ferenc (Francis) Kazinczy republished it, and János (John) Arany analyzed it in his study Zrinyi and Tasso. László (Ladislav) Négyessy published Count Zrinyi's poetic works in 1914; and his prose works were published by Árpád Markó in 1939. His famous political pamphlet, Medicine Against the Turkish Opium (Az török áfium ellen való orvosság) (1661-1662) urged the establishment of a Hungarian Army. The Military Academy, Budapest, and high schools bear his name. – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.→Zrinyi, Count Miklós (1); Wesselényi Conspiracy; Imre, Prince and Saint; Arany, János; Kazinczy, Ferenc.

Zrinyi, Count Péter (Verbovác, Croatia, 6 June 1621 - Wiener Neustadt, Austria, 30 April 1671) – Ban (Viceroy) of Croatia, younger brother of Count Miklós Zrinyi, poet and military commander. He was educated in Graz, Austria and, at a young age, he joined the fight against the expansionist Ottoman Turkish Empire. In 1647, as the Captain-General of Croatia (one of the Crown-lands of the Hungarian Crown), he attacked the marauding Turks (this fact was chosen to be overlooked by the Habsburgs) and had significant victories over them. Upon “complaints” from the Turkish Porta for disrupting the peace – the Peace of Vasvár (1664), so humiliating to Hungary – he was “admonished” by the War Council in Vienna several times. Péter Zrinyi translated his brother's epic work, The Peril of Szigetvár (Szigeti veszedelem) from Hungarian into Croatian. It was after his brother's death (under suspicious circumstances) in 1665 that he became Ban of Croatia.. Following the nation-wide outrage against the humiliating nature of the Peace of Vasvár, he also joined the Wesselényi movement (“conspiracy against the Court” according to the Habsburgs). After the death of the Palatine (appointed by the Habsburg Court) and the death of Archbishop György (George) Lippay, and after he came into contact with the French Court, Zrinyi became the leader of the movement. The Viennese Court discovered the plot. He was enticed to Vienna by the Habsburgs and, in April 1670, he was arrested. In Wiener Neustadt, where he was tried by a summary court (made up of strangers) and, together with two other leading members of the movement, he was beheaded. His daughter, Countess Ilona Zrinyi managed to escape, but his son was imprisoned. – B: 1068, 1230, 0883, 1136, T: 7456.→Vasvár, Peace Treaty of; Wesselényi Conspiracy; Wesselényi, Count Ferenc; Nádasdy, Count Ferenc; Frangepán, Count Ferenc Kristóf; Rákóczi, Prince Ferenc.

Zsádon, Andrea (Debrecen, 18 October 1946 - ) – Actress and singer. She completed her studies in the Vocal Department of the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. Thereafter, she was contracted to the József Katona Theater (Katona József Színház). Between 1972 and 1975, she played and sang in operas, operettas, and recited prose at the theaters of Debrecen and Szeged. From 1975, she was a soloist at the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház), Budapest. Since 1981, she has regularly appeared as a guest artist in Austria, Germany, the USA, and Japan. Her roles include Manon in Puccini's Manon Lescaut; Nedda in Leoncavallo's I Pagliacci (Bajazzók); Countess in Mozart's Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága); Marica in I. Kálmán's Countess Marica (Marica grófnő); Sylvia in I. Kálmán's The Gipsy Princess (A csárdáskirálynő); Adél, Rosalinda in J. Strauss Jr's Die Fledermaus (A denevér), and Liza in F. Lehár's The Land of Smiles (A mosoly országa). She was awarded the Mari Jászai Prize in 1987. – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Zsák, Károly (Charles) (Budapest, 30 August 1895 - Budapest, 2 November 1944) – Soccer-player and world-famous goal-keeper of his age. As early as 1909, he already played in the team of the Magyar Gymnasts' Circle (Magyar Testgyakorlók Köre – MTK), then in the Football Team (Futball Csapat - FC) of Buda, and later in the 33 FC. At barely 17, he set out on his trip abroad and, in 1912, he was included in the National Team, whose member he remained on 30 occasions. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Zsakó, Gyula (Julius) (Dicsőszentmárton, now Târnăveni, Romania, 7 March 1920 - ) – Music esthetician. He completed his high school studies in Budapest. In 1943, he obtained his Ph.D. at the University of Budapest. In 1944, he also obtained a diploma from the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. After emigrating to the West at the end of 1956, he continued his studies at the Mozarteum in Salzburg, then at the University of New York where, in 1959, he obtained a Degree in Music Theory. Later on he obtained a Ph.D. in Music History. He began his teaching career as a lecturer in music theory at Seton Hall University, in South Orange, N.J., USA. Besides his teaching activity, he published studies and articles in American specialized periodicals. After the 1956 Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight, he became Director of the Hungarian Student Service, supporting Hungarian refugee students; thereafter, for a short period, he was an associate of the Kossuth Foundation. – B: 1672, T: 7684.

Zsámár, Jenő S. J. (Eugen) (Pécs, 21 April 1904 - Changhua, Taiwan, 12 or 20 April 1974) – Jesuit missionary, writer and linguist. He completed his high school studies in Zalaegerszeg, then joined the Jesuit Order in Érd. He studied Theology at the Universities of Szeged, Innsbruck and Budapest. He was ordained in Szeged in 1931, and became a member of the China Mission in 1933. From 1934, he worked as a chaplain in Pujang; then he was appointed Dean of the Lang-ja and Chang-yuan Provinces. In 1946, he was a theology teacher and spiritualist in Hsien-hsien. His work, entitled Ascetism, Mysticism, written in Chinese, had three editions, and was also published in an abridged version. With expressions created by him, he published his work The New Dictionary of Christian Spirituality. He assembled 140,000 entries for his great dictionary (in several languages), from which Tibor P. Vajda published an assortment of 1400 words. Of his 30 published works in the Chinese language, the better-known are Contemplations on the Virgin Mary, Authenticity of the Gospels, and The Gift of Faith. From Macao he resettled in Taiwan with the Sisters of the Holy Love, which he founded. He also founded there a girls' school specialising in trade and commerce. – B: 0883, 1939, T: 7456.

Zsámbéki, Gábor (Gabriel) (Zách) (Pécs, 30 December 1943 - ) – Stage manager and theater director. After completing the Stage Managing Section of the College of Dramatic Art, Budapest in 1968, he became Stage Manager at the Gergely Csiky Theater (Csiky Gergely Színház) of Kaposvár, and its Director between 1975 and 1978. Thereafter, he worked as Senior Manager at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest and, from 1982, he was Artistic Director at the József Katona Theater (Katona József Színház), Kecskemét, from 1989 its Senior Stage Manager. From 1979, he worked as a teacher at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. Since 1989, Zsámbéki has been a member of the Europe Theater Council in Paris. As a manager, his policy was to remove all conventions, and work out new, modern interpretations. His scale of style is very wide: from dynamic grotesque to post-naturalism, and from profound human characterization to masked make-up presentation. His managing work includes C. Goldoni's The Coffee Shop (A kávéház); Machiavelli's The Mandrake (Mandragóra); Chekhov's Seagull, Ivanov, Ana the Imp (A manó); H. v. Kleist's The Prince of Homburg (Homburg hercege); A. Wesker's The Kitchen (A konyha); Molière's The Would-Be Gentleman (Le Bourgeois gentilhomme; Az úrhatnám polgár); George Dandin (Dandin György); Bertolt Brecht's Turandot, The Good Person of Sechwan (Der gute Mensch von Sezuan; A szecsuáni jólélek), and Jarry's Ubu the King (Ubu Roi – Übü király). He was awarded the Mari Jászai Prize (1973), the Merited Artist title (1981), the Kossuth Prize (1988), the Prize of French Critics, the Prize for best Performance, Caracas (1990), and the My Country (Hazám) Prize (2002). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Zsámbék Provostship – Premonstrian Provostship at Zsámbék, founded by Smaragd, Provost of Székesfehérvár, and his brother, Bailiff Egyed. King Béla IV (1235-1270) confirmed the founding in a document of 1258, and granted donations to the Order. The Monastery was probably constructed at that time. The church was built in the 13/14th centuries. The neglected state of the complex prompted King Matthias Corvinus (Mátyás I, 1458-1490) to seek permission from Pope Sixtus to transfer its ownership to the Pauline Order. The Premonstrian Order unsuccessfully protested in 1511, and again in 1520. During the Turkish rule, the buildings deteriorated, but the church was still usable until 1763, when an earthquake partially destroyed it. This church structure is a unique example of Hungarian architecture, which is a transition to the Gothic style. The damaged part was not renovated, but preserved in its semi-ruined condition by Stephen (István) Möller in 1889. The church is part of the World Heritage of Europe. – B: 1020, T: 7103. → Pauline Order; Béla IV, King; Mátyás I, King.

Zsámboki Codex – A manuscript copy containing an extract of the history of Hungary written by Antonio Bonfini, in the universal humanistic spirit of the times. Bonfini came to Hungary as an ambassador to the court of King Matthias I, (Mátyás) (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490), and later assumed permanent residency in Hungary. János (John) Zsámboki published the Codex first in 1558, followed by newer editions. The Codex was named after its first publisher. – B: 1020, T: 7617. → Bonfini, Antonio; Mátyás I, King; Codex Literature.

Zsámboki, János (John) (Zsámboki, Sámbocki, Johannes Sambucus) (Nagyszombat, now Trnava, Slovakia, 1 June 1531 - Vienna, 13 June 1584) – Historian, physician, cartographer and polyhistor. He completed his studies at the Universities of Vienna, Wittenberg, Strassburg and Paris. In 1553, at the University of Padua, he studied Medicine, financed by Archbishop Miklós (Nicholas) Oláh. In 1557, he was a professor at the University of Bologna. From 1564, he was Court Physician and Historian of the Emperors Maximilian and Rudolf. Zsámboki was one of the outstanding representatives of the philological humanism of the Danube region. He was in close contact with French and German scholars and writers. He spoke and wrote in a number of languages. He carried out research in textual criticism using his own enormous book and manuscript collection, known all over Europe; this research was eventually preserved in the Österreichisches Nationalbibliothek of Vienna. Besides his smaller monographic works, he published several valuable source materials, for example, the most complete Janus Pannonius edition (1569), and the Hungarian historical work (1490) of Peter Ransanus (1428-1491), bishop of Luceria, Italy. On the basis of Tinódi's song, he wrote down the siege of Eger in Latin. He wrote addenda to the complete Bonfini edition. With the publishing of historical works related to Hungary, he rendered an important service in the interest of acquainting people abroad with Hungary. He edited the first edition of Corpus Juris Hungarici in 1581. He is known to have prepared a number of maps on Hungary and Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). It has been proved that his emblems, published by the Plantin Press, were known and used by Shakespeare. – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.→Oláh, Miklós; Janus Pannonius; Bonfini, Antonio.

Zsebők, Zoltán (Budapest, 28 June 1908 - Budapest, 20 February 1984) – Physician and radiologist. He obtained his Ph.D. in Medicine in 1934. Between 1934 and 1939, he was Assistant Physician at the Rókus Hospital of Budapest, then Resident Physician in the Radium and X-Ray Institute. From 1939 to 1944, while part of Upper Hungary (Felvidék) was returned to Hungary by the First Vienna Award in 1938, he worked as Senior Physician at the Hospitals of Munkács (now Mukacheve, Carpatho-Ukraine) and Beregszász (now Berehove, Carpatho-Ukraine). In 1944-1945, he was physician at a field hospital. In September 1945, he became Deputy Director of the National Social Security Institute (Országos Társadalombiztosítási Intézet – OTI). From 1945 to 1948, he was Undersecretary at the Ministry of Public Welfare and Ministry of Culture. Zsebők played an important role in the restructuring of the various sections of the Medical Faculty of the University of Budapest. In 1947 he became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) in Radiological Practice; from 1948 to 1962, as Assistant Professor, he was in charge of the X-ray Department of the Surgical Clinic, Budapest. From 1962 until his retirement in 1978, he was Head of the Radiological Clinic, and Professor at the University of Budapest. It is to his credit that the latest radiological methods have been introduced in Hungary. He was President of the National Peace Council (Országos Béketanács), also Chief Curator of the Transibiscan Reformed Diocese (Tiszántúli Református Egyházkerület) and Lay President of the General Synod Reformed Church in Hungary. Zsebők was an honorary member of numerous scientific societies abroad, and a member of editorial committees of scholarly journals in Hungary and abroad. His works include Medical Radiology (Orvosi radiológia) (1974) and The Healing Ray (A gyógyító sugár) (1970). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1958. A medical clinic in Budapest bears his name. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Vienna Award I.

Zselic, Madonna of – A statuette of the Madonna, several hundred years old, was found in a dwelling in Horváthertelend in 1982. The finely worked statuette – 80 cm high, 20 cm wide, weighing 5 kilograms – was carved out of linden wood. It was originally painted; most likely, the Mother of God and her Baby wore gold or silver crowns on their heads. Its estimated age is 250 years. – B: 1020, T: 7675.

Zseliz Culture (4250 - 3750 BC) – The first archeological finds of this culture were unearthed in the vicinity of the town of Zseliz (now Želiezovce, Slovakia) in Upper Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia), hence the name of the culture. Its construction relics were also found in Pannonia or Transdanubia (Dunántúl) and elsewhere in the Carpathian Basin. Groups were also found in Szakálhát, Szilmege, and the River Szamos region, and in the Bükk Mountains. It was a Neolithic-type agriculture, adapted to the Carpathian Basin, that evolved in the area. The Mediterranean animal husbandry of sheep and goats was expanded, and included wild bullock herds, and the people kept more cattle, and later also hogs. They cultivated the areas surrounding their settlements, and the yields were increased by crop rotation. Volcanic obsidian, mined in the vicinity of Tokaj, used in making tools, expanded the trade with other regions. – B: 1230, T: 7103.

Zsélyi, Aladár (Csalár, now Čeláre, Slovakia, 12 December 1883 - Budapest, 1 July 1914) – Mechanical engineer and airplane designer. He planned the design of his airplanes on the basis of calculations and used several important innovations (positioning of motor, etc.). In 1914, with his experimental machine, he reached a top speed of 170 km/h, as opposed to the 90-100 km/h speed of other machines of the time. He was also engaged in the theory of gas turbines. In the summer of 1914, while landing on one occasion, he was injured and fell victim to a wound infection. His works include Prinzipien der Flugtechnik (1910), Mechanics (Mehanika) (1911), and The Question of Large Airplanes (A nagy aeroplánok kérdése) (1913). A street in Csömör bears his name. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456. → Pioneers of Hungarian Aviation.

Zsigmond, András (Andrew) (Brassó, now Braşov, Romania - Toronto, 18 March 1987) – Newspaper reporter. He studied theology at Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), and Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia, Romania). Following that he changed to studying philosophy. He completed a Ph.D. in Rome. Subsequently, he embarked on a teaching career. After 1947, he was imprisoned in Romania for the courageous expression of his opinions. He moved to Hungary in 1969; then, in 1970, he emigrated to Canada. From 1971 until his death, he was Editor-in-Chief of the paper Hungarian Life (Magyar Élet). – B: 1672, T: 7684.

Zsigmond, Endre (Andrew Sigismund) (Budapest, 16 January 1929 - ) – Newspaper reporter and critic. He studied Philosophy at the University of Budapest. In 1948, he escaped from Hungary, lived in France for a short while, then emigrated to Australia in 1949. In 1963 and 1964, he was one of the editors of the periodical Mirror (Tükör), published in Sydney. Thereafter, until 1967, he was a chief associate of the paper Independent Hungary (Független Magyarország). In 1965, he returned to Europe and worked in Heidelberg at an American Institution, after which, in April 1966, he was employed as an editorial associate at Radio Free Europe (Szabad Európa Rádió) in Munich. He had to stop working in October 1972 due to a sudden illness. In March 1974, he terminated his contract with the Radio. From 1968 on, he regularly wrote critiques and articles for the periodical New Horizon (Új Látóhatár), and, from January 1972 to December 1980, he was its chief associate in Munich. Besides the above mentioned periodicals and journals, he also worked for the Literary Journal (Irodalmi Újság). His major work is Poplars (Jegenyék) (Melbourne 1966). – B: 1672, T: 7684.

Zsigmond, King (Sigismund of Luxembourg) (Nuremberg, Germany, 15 February 1368 - Znojmo, Moravia, 9 December 1437) – King of Hungary, later Holy-Roman Emperor, King of Bohemia and Italy; son of Emperor Charles IV of the Royal House of Luxembourg and Princess Elizabeth of Pomerania. He was betrothed to Maria, daughter of King Louis the Great (Lajos I) of Hungary by contractual arrangement between the fathers.

Agreeing to the terms laid down by the Magnates of Hungary, he was crowned King of Hungary on 31 March 1387, by the Bishop of Veszprém. The terms were: maintain the traditional freedom of the country, exclude foreigners from the Royal Council and not award them any estates. He further agreed to empower the league of his supporting magnates to force him – should that become necessary – to honor these stipulations. By 1395, he had become engaged in hostilities with the Turks and, on 28 September 1396 in the Battle of Nikápoly (Nicapolis, now Nikopol, Bulgaria), he suffered a major defeat while leading a composite European cavalry unit. He tried to counterbalance the league of his supporting magnates by appointing foreign counselors. However, he was captured by the magnates under the leadership of the Archbishop of Esztergom and Palatine in Buda on 28 April 1401. After betrothing nine-year-old Barbara Cillei, daughter of one of his magnates, he regained the assistance of the magnates to oversee his Bohemian and German policy. However, he managed to rid himself of the league and continued administering the country independently. King Zsigmond established the “Order of the Dragon” in 1408, honoring his supporters. On 13 March 1409, he acted as arbitrator in the disposition of the Austrian provinces. After a long campaign, he was unanimously elected German Prince Elector in Frankfurt am Main on 21 July 1411. He furthered his western policy by mortgaging the cities in the County of Szepes (Spiš) in Upper Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia) to Poland. Sigismund was crowned King of Germany at Aachen on 8 November 1414. He attended the Synod in Constantinople at Christmas of 1414 to prevent the schism of the Western Church, and to reform the Church. After lengthy negotiations, through the election of Pope Martin V, he succeeded in preventing the schism. This was considered to be his greatest foreign political success. However, John Huss, the Reformer from Bohemia, was burned at the stake during the General Council of Constance, Switzerland, in 1414, despite the promise of safe conduct from Emperor Sigismund. After the death of his brother, King Venceslaus of Bohemia, Sigismund was crowned King of Bohemia in Prague on 28 July 1420. His war against the schismatic Hussites in 1421 was not successful and he suffered serious losses at Nemet Bród, Bohemia (now Vysočina, Czech Republic) in 1422. The expenses for these wars from 1420 were borne by the Hungarian nation. He reorganized the army, established militia portalis and regional banderiums. He reformed the monetary system, as well as the legal system. In 1428, he reluctantly engaged in battle with the Turks and suffered heavy losses at Galambóc. He was crowned King of Italy in Milan on 28 November 1431. While he pursued his western policies far from home, he maintained a permanent residency in Hungary. He marched into Rome, escorted by a large and splendid Hungarian contingent, on 21 May 1433, to be crowned Holy Roman Emperor by Pope Eugene IV on 31 May 1433. After that, armed with a papal agreement, he persuaded the Hussites to accept the “pact” at the Synod of Basel. Then he traveled to Prague to further promulgate the Pope’s message. He became seriously ill and died en route to Hungary. Observing his last wishes, he was buried in Várad (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania) alongside his first wife, and King László I (St. Ladislav). – B: 1230, 0883, 1153, T: 7658.→Ozorai, Pipo; Hunyadi, János; Mátyás I, King.

Zsigmond, Vilmos (William) (Szeged, 16 June 1930 - ) – Hungarian-American cinematographer. At the age of 17, while recovering from an illness, he read a book on photography, which aroused his interest in the art of lighting; thus he continued his studies in that field. He graduated from the Academy of Dramatic and Film Art, Budapest, as a student of György (George) Illés. During the time of the 1956 Revolution, he and his friend, László (Ladislav) Kovács carried, in a shopping bag, a camera that they used to take pictures of the events of the Revolution and Freedom Fight. Soon they were forced to emigrate, smuggling the pictures with them across the border. In the US, at first Zsigmond worked in a laboratory, preparing educational films on the weekends, and worked as a photographer and as a laboratory and camera assistant. In 1963, together with László Kovács, he prepared the film entitled Revolt in Hungary. He was 41 years old when, in 1971, he shot Peter Fonda's film called Hired Hands (Bérelt kezek). After that his career started to rise. Steven Spielberg made his first two films with Vilmos Zsigmond. In the Sugarland Express, with the help of a hand-held camera, Zsigmond increased the tension of the story. At the shooting of Close Encounters of the Third Kind (1978), he created a grandiose spectacle with an antiquated technique. In the 1980s, he shot many more comedies in which he, again, increased the situation with special settings, movement of the camera, and lighting affects, for example: The Witches of Eastwick (1988). Among his other successful films are The Deer Hunter (1978), The Bonfire of the Vanities (1993), The Ghost and the Darkness (1998), and the Black Dhalia (2006). He also photographed the Hungarian opera-film, Bánk bán. His television work includes The Protectors, series (1969-1970), and the mini-series Flesh and Blood (1979). Awards he received: the Academy Award (1977), the Oscar (1977), and the British Academy Award (1978). B: 1105, 1031, T: 7684.→Kovács, László (2); Koltai, Lajos.

Zsigmondy, Béla (Pest, 7 March 1848 - Budapest, 12 June 1916) – Engineer. He obtained his Degree from the Zurich Polytechnic. After returning to Hungary, he entered into partnership with his engineer uncle, Vilmos (William) Zsigmondy. It was due to his effort that most of the artesian wells of the Great Hungarian Plain were drilled, an achievement that became known abroad as well. It was to his credit that, with a new technique, he overcame the difficulties encountered, by drilling to greater depths than 500 meter. His method of employing wire cable (which he was the first to introduce), as well as of modifying the equipment already in use, also contributed to his deep-drilling successes. From 1894, he was mainly occupied with bridge construction. Under his direction were built the original Franz Joseph Bridge (now called Liberty Bridge) and the Margaret Bridge in Budapest, the Little-Danube bridge of Komárom, and the infrastructure of the River Tisza bridge of Csongrád. – B: 1078, 0883, T: 7456.→Zsigmondy, Vilmos.

Zsigmondy, Emil (Vienna, 11 August 1861 - Pic de la Meije, France, 6 August 1885) – Physician, rock-climber and alpinist. He obtained his surgeon's qualifications from the University of Vienna and became a clinical assistant professor. He started rock-climbing as a 13 year-old student and eventually scaled almost 100 peaks in the Alps, all above 3000m elevation. He was the first to climb Croda da Lago in Italy in 1884, as well as the Feldkopf in Germany, which now bears his name. One year later, he fell to his death due to rope failure while climbing the Pic de la Meije in France. His tombstone has only one inscribed word: Excelsior (Ever Upward). In addition to the outstanding achievements in his sport, he was also known as a specialist writer. His books are: Dangers of the Alps (Die Gefahren der Alpen) (1885), was published ten times in several languages; for over half a century it was the best compendium on basic knowledge about the Alps; also In the High Mountains (Im Hochgebirge) (1899). The Zsigmondy Peak at Meije Mountain, and the Zsigmondy Gorge, as well as the Zsigmondy Tower commemorate his name. Under the Zwölfer Peak in the Dolomite Range, there is a house that bears his name, and there is the Zsigmondy-Ridge in the Sexten/Sesto Dolomites in South Tyrol, Italy. One of the glaciers in the New Zealand Alps was also named after him. In the Pilis Mountains of Hungary, the memorial tablet on the site called Irongate (Vaskapu) is annually honored with a wreath placed during the memorial tours conducted by Hungarian mountain climbers. – B: 0883, 1020, T: 7675, 7456.

Zsigmondy, Richard A. (Vienna, Austria, 1 April 1865 - Göttingen, Germany, 23 September 1929) – Chemist. He began his higher studies in Vienna and continued them in Munich. At first he was interested in organic chemistry and obtained his Ph.D. in this field. Briefly he was in Berlin, then went to the Technische Hochschule of Graz (Austria), where he qualified as an honorary lecturer (privatdocent). Between 1897 and 1907, he lectured at the University of Jena, and concurrently was a scientific associate at the Schott Glass Works. From 1908 until his death, he was Professor of Inorganic Chemistry at the University of Göttingen. The center of his scientific work was inorganic colloidal chemistry. In 1903, for the purposes of such research, together with the German optician, H. Siedentopf, he designed his ultra microscope to view particles invisible under the optical microscope. By means of his slot ultra microscope, which he designed in 1913, he made it possible to count the particles observed under the ultra microscope. His research in relation to the regularity of colloidal changes of state is creative and, indirectly, encouraged further research by a number of well-known chemists. He was also the inventor of both the membrane (1918) and the ultra filters (1922), used in colloidal chemical and biological research. His works include Zur Erkenntnis der Kolloide (Jena, 1905); Kolloidchemie (Leipzig, 1925); Kolloidforschung in Einzeldarstellungen, vols, i,ii, with P. A. Thiessen (Leipzig, 1925), and Über feinporige und neue Ultra filter (Zeitschrift für angewandte Chemie) (1926). For his life's scientific achievements, he was awarded the 1925 Nobel Prize in chemistry. – B: 1078, 0883, 1153, T: 7456.→Famous Hungarians and of Hungarian Origin.

Zsigmondy, Vilmos (William) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 14 May 1821 - Budapest, 21 December 1888) – Geologist. He completed his higher studies at the Academy of Mining and Forestry of Selmechánya (now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia) in 1842, and entered into public service in 1843. In 1846, he was a mining engineer at the Austrian Proprietary National Railway Company. During the Hungarian Revolution and War of Independence (1848-1849), together with some of his colleagues he entirely transformed the iron- and steel-works of Resicabánya (now Reșița, Romania) into a plant for the manufacturing of weapons and ammunition needed for the Hungarian Armed Forces (the freedom fighters; Honvédség). For his involvement, he was incarcerated in the fort-prison of Olmütz until 1850. Zsigmondy moved to Budapest in 1860 to start a private practice in consulting engineering. He wrote his book, Mining (Bányatan) in 1864. His name became widely known, and later gained even world-renown, primarily for his successful drilling of artesian water wells. The first of these was drilled in Harkány in 1865. His most important work was the 970m deep artesian well in the City Park (Városliget) of Budapest, drilled between 15 November 1868, and 15 May 1875. The temperature of the ascending thermal water is 73°C, and the well yields 11,917 hl water per day. He formed a joint partnership with his nephew, Béla Zsigmondy, and later passed the business onto him. The Hungarian Academy of Sciences invited him to become a member in 1868. While drilling in Petrozsény (now Petroșani, Romania) in 1879, Zsigmondy discovered some rich coal seams. He presented his work dealing with his geologic and hydrologic drillings in professional journals. He was a pioneer of Hungarian geothermal research and exploration, whose objective was to harness thermal energy. The National Hungarian Mining and Metallurgical Society established the Vilmos Zsigmondy commemorative medal in his honor. – B: 1078, 0883, 1123, T: 7674.→Zsigmondy, Béla.

Zsigray, Julianna (Serák) (Törökszentmiklós, 15 February 1903 - Kiskunhalas, 21 February 1987) – Writer. She studied in Budapest; her first writings were published in the literary paper Nyugat. In 1929, she won first prize for her short stories in the periodical New Times (Új Idők). From 1930, she was an associate of the Új Idők. From 1930 to 1944 she was responsible for correcting submitted material; she was a lector, and then Editor at the book publisher Singer and Wolfner. In 1944 she was persecuted because she opposed the Germans. In her works, she depicted mainly the life of the middle class. Her writings enjoyed great popularity; several of her books were made into movies. Julianna Zsigray was not allowed to publish between 1948 and 1957. After 1957, she wrote biographical novels about composers. Her novels have been translated into Dutch and Italian; her short stories appeared in Austrian and Swiss journals. Her major works include The Marriage of Mara Szűts (Szűts Mara házassága) novel (1931); Male Purpose (Férficél) novel (1932); The Golden Bell (Aranyharang) poem (1933); Susan and the Komondor (Zsuzsa és a komondor) novel (1933); Crystal Music (Kristály muzsika) short story (1934); The Last Carnival (Utolsó farsang) novel (1934); One Man and two Women (Egy férfi - két nő) novel (1937); Elizabeth, a Hungarian Queen (Erzsébet magyar királyné) biographical novel (1938); Until Death do us Part (Holtomiglan holtodiglan) novel (1940); Two Worlds (Két világ) novel (1944); Faithfulness (Hűség) novel (1948); Palace on Sugár Boulevard (A Sugárúti palota) the life story of Ferenc (Francis) Erkel (1957); Tragic Waltz (Tragikus keringő), biographical novel of Ferenc (Francis) Lehár (1959); A Prodigal Life (Tékozló élet) biographical novel of Ede (Edward) Reményi (1963), and The Dagger and the Wig (Tőr és paróka) novel (1986) – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7684.→Erkel, Ferenc; Reményi, Ede;

Zsille, Zoltán (Budapest, 8 July 1941- ) – Sociologist, newspaper reporter. He studied Philosophy and Sociology at the University of Budapest. From 1964, he was an external associate of the Sociological Research Group (Szociológiai Kutatócsoport) of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He played an active role in the work of the Communist Youth Association (Kommunista Ifjúsági Szövetség – KISZ). His publishing activities began at that time. In 1967, he started researching privately the condition of young intellectuals. In July of that year, he began work as an assistant at the Sociological Institute. He participated in several sociological research projects and many of his articles and studies have been published. He became a scientific associate of the State Leader-Training Center (Országos Vezetőképző Központ). In 1974, he was excluded from the Party because of his conflicts with the official directives and directors of the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party (Magyar Szocialista Munkáspárt – MSZMP); in 1975, he lost his job, after which he survived on occasional jobs. He then participated in the initiatives of the opposition. In November of 1980, he emigrated to Austria. In 1981, he established the Bibó Press Agency that operated until 1987. In December of 1983, he became an employee of Radio Free Europe (Szabad Európa Rádió), as a Viennese radio and press observer. From June 1987 to 1991, he was its editorial associate in Munich. His major works include Biography of a Conceited Egoist 1956-1980 (Egy önhitt életrajza) (Paris, 1984), and The Goat that Exists (A létező kecske), study (Vienna, 1989). – B: 1672, 1257, T: 7684.

Zsindely, Endre (Andrew) (Budapest, 4 May 1929 - Männerdorf, 25 April 1986) - Reformed Church historian and theologian. At first, he studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest, beginning in 1949, then continued at the Reformed Theological Academy of Sárospatak. He also studied Law at the University of Budapest from 1947 until 1949; he left the University for political reasons and continued his education at the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest, from where he graduated in 1953. From 1953 to 1955, he worked at the Ráday Library in the Theological Academy's building. He contracted poliomyelitis in the summer of 1956, and had to travel to Zurich in 1957 for treatment. The Swiss medical treatment was so successful that Zsindely was able to work in a wheelchair. Living in Switzerland from 1957 on, he obtained his Doctorate in Divinity from the University of Zurich in 1962. His doctoral thesis was entitled: Sickness and Recovery in Late Pietism (Krankheit und Heilung im älteren Pietismus). Between 1961 and 1962, he studied at the Bossey Ecumenical Institute of the World Council of Churches in Switzerland. Between 1962 and 1965, he worked on theological research in the State Archives of Schaffhausen. From 1965, he joined the Church History Research Group of the Theological Faculty of the University of Zurich. From 1974, he was a research professor at the Central-Eastern European Reformation History Research Institute, Debrecen. From 1980 until his death, he was Professor of Universal Church History at the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest. Zsindely brought to light the written legacy of the Swiss reformer, Heinrich Bullinger. His research focused on the Hungarian aspects of questions in Church History, including Heinrich Bullinger's connections with Hungarian theologians, as well as theologians of Switzerland. At the same time, he was involved in Hungarian literary research in Switzerland and published the letters of poet János (John) Batsányi (1763-1845). His work appeared in the periodicals Reformed Church (Református Egyház), Reformed Review (Református Szemle), Theological Review (Theológiai Szemle) and New Horizon (Új Látóhatár), as well as in Swiss journals. His unpublished diary was found in 2010. – B: 0883, 1672, T: 7667, 7684. → Batsányi, János.

Zsirai, Miklós (Nicholas) (Mihályi, 10 October 1892 - Budapest, 9 September 1955) – Finno-Ugrian linguist. His university studies started in 1912, but were interrupted by World War I, in which he was in military service; he became a prisoner of war in Russia and returned to Hungary only in 1920. He resumed his higher studies at the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest, obtaining a Ph.D. in Arts. In the same College, he became a lecturer in 1924 and, from 1932, Professor of Finno-Ugrian linguistics at the University and Head of the Finno-Ugrian Institute. He was President of the Hungarian Linguistic Society (1944-1952) and Editor for the Linguistic Gazette (Nyelvtudományi Közlemények) from 1935 to 1953. Apart from Finno-Ugrian linguistics, his main fields of research were: various problems of Hungarian linguistics, problems of general linguistics, and the study of the history of Hungarian ethnicity. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1932, ordinary 1945). His works include Jugria (1930); Our Finno-Ugrian Relationship (Finnugor rokonságunk) with the First Prize of the Academy (1937), and Introduction to Our Finno-Ugrian Relationship (A finnugorság ismertgetése) (1952). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1949. There is a Miklós Zsirai Prize, founded in 1998. – B: 0883, 1031, 1257, 1956, T: 7456.

Zsitkovszky, Béla (Born: Gyula Antal Zágón) (? , ?, 1867 - ? 16 September 1930) – Photographer, movie man, one of the pioneers of Hungarian film making. He was trained as a photographer and became an independent master. He was works-manager of the photo-laboratory of the Urania Scientific Theater (Uránia Tudományos Színház), Budapest, until 1907. He was Co-Editor for the official magazine The Light (A fény) of the National Association of Hungarian Photographers. In 1901, with his self-made cine-camera, he shot the first Hungarian feature film, The Dance (A tánc). In the first decade of the 20th century, Zsitkovszky prepared a number of newsreels and documentary films. In 1906, the film report on the return from Turkey of the ashes of the exiled Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II, and his exiled companions is linked to his name, as is also the film-report prepared on the flight to Budapest by the French pilot Blériot in 1909. He was the cameraman of such famous actors such as Mihály Kertész (Michael Curtiz), Paul Lukas and others, when the feature-film production had started. In 1913, he was one of the founders of the Pedagogic Film Studio (Pedagógiai Filmgyár) where, from 1919 until his passing, he prepared educational films. In 1915, he led the technical column of the weekly paper Cinema Week (Mozihét). His films include Cannon and Bell (Ágyú és harang) (1915); The Cave Dwellers (A barlanglakók) (1915); The Condemned (Az elítélt) (1916); Mother's Heart (Az anyaszív) (1917), and Ordeal by Fire (Tűzpróba) (1917). – B: 0883, 1719, T: 7456. → Kertész, Mihály; Lukas, Paul.

Zsitvatorok, Treaty of – The Peace Treaty held at the mouth of the Zsitva River on 11 November 1606, concluding the Fifteen-Year War of 1591 to 1606. With the mediation of Prince Gábor (Gabriel) Bocskai, the Peace Treaty was undertaken between Emperor and King Rudolf I (1576-1608), and Sultan Osman Ahmed I, with his two allies. After the initial Christian successes, the balance of forces evened out, so in 1606 the situation ended essentially without much change, compared with the original condition. The need for concluding the Treaty mainly arose because the Ottoman Empire was tied down by uprisings in Asia Minor, and by attacks from Persia. The Treaty stated that both parties would keep their occupied areas; the Emperor's obligation to pay tax ceased and instead he would pay the Sultan 200,000 forints once and for all. It was to be forbidden to attack castles or to take prisoners, and the existing prisoners were to be extradited. The castles of Eger, Kanizsa (Nagykanizsa) and Esztergom would remain in Turkish hands. The Treaty was undertaken for 20 years, and was regarded as a complement to the Peace of Vienna. It was the first Peace treaty since 1526, in which the Sultan treated the Habsburg monarch as equal partner. The decline of the Turkish rule in Hungary began with the signing of this treaty. The Treaty of Zsitvatorok was largely the result of Bocskai's military and political skill. – B: 1031, 1068, T: 7456.→Bocskai, Prince Gábor; Vienna, First Peace of.

Zsitvay, Tibor (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 10 November 1884 - Alpnachdorf, Switzerland, 9 July 1969) – Politician. He read Law at the University of Budapest; he was also President of the University Circle, the Athletic Club of the University of Budapest (BEAC), and the University Tourist Association, founded by him. From 1909 to 1919, he was a consulting attorney for the Hungarian State Railways (Magyar Államvasútak – MÁV), after he had passed his final law examinations. In August 1919, after the fall of the Council (Soviet) Republic, he was one of the founders and program preparers of the Christian National Party (Keresztény Nemzeti Párt). In 1919-1920, he was Government Commissioner and Lord-Lieutenant of the town of Kecskemét. Early in 1920, he left his Party and worked again as an attorney. From 1920 to 1926, he was Attorney General and Assistant Manager of the MÁV. With the program of the Christian Smallholder and Civic Party (Keresztény Kisgazda Földműves és Polgári Párt), he was Parliamentary Representative of Kecskemét from 1922 to 1927. He was President of the Parliamentary Committee for the investigation of the political background of the Frank-forgery in 1926. From October 1926 to February 1929, he was the President of Parliament; from 1927 to 1931, he was Member of Parliament for Rétság, and Minister of Justice from 4 February 1929 until 1 October 1932. He was Member of Parliament for Kecskemét (1931-1939). In the fall of 1938, he left the Government Party. To his credit were the introduction of the New Military Penal Code, a Parliamentary Act for the simplification of legislation and several legislations in the field of Economic Law. In 1944, he emigrated to the West and settled in Switzerland. His works include White Carnation (Fehér szegfü) poems (1904), and His Speech in Parliament in the Incompatibility Debate (Beszéde a képviselő ház összeférhetetlenségi vitájában) (1932). – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.

Zsivótzky Gyula (Julius) (Budapest, 25 February 1937 - Budapest, 29 September 2007) – Athlete, who competed in hammer throwing. His career started at the Vasas Club of Kiskunfélegyháza in 1952; from 1955, he continued at the Sport Association of the Physical Training Academy (Testnevelési Főiskolai Sport Egyesület – TFSE), Budapest, and from 1958 at the Dózsa Club in Újpest. He was on the National Selected Team from 1956 to 1973. He participated in four Summer Olympic Games: he won a silver medal in Rome in 1960, and in Tokyo in 1964, and he won the Olympic Championship in Mexico in 1968. He was World Champion twice, European Champion four times, and was fourteen times National Champion between 1978 and 1970. In 1965 and in 1968, he was the Sportsman of the Year. He received the Hungarian Heritage Prize in 2000 and, in 2004, became the Sportsman of the Nation. He was bestowed the honor of Freeman of Kiskunfélegyháza and Balatonfenyves. One of his sons is the decathlete Attila Zsivótzky, the other is a former football player. – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7103.

Zsoldos, Andor (Andrew) (Budapest, 27 July 1893 - Hollywood, 28 October 1976) – Actor, writer and poet. He completed his studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, after which he worked in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), playing in Nagyvárad (now Oradea), Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mureş) and Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, all three towns in Romania since 1920). In the country towns of Hungary, he stage-managed the presentation of Shakespeare's Richard III. Later in his career he became a journalist. He authored the Singspiel entitled King Matthias (Mátyás király); it was presented in the City Theater (Városi Színház), Budapest, with Imre (Emeric) Palló and others in the leading roles. In the 1920s, Zsoldos worked in the film studios of Paris and Nice. In the USA, his play Victorious Life (Diadalmas élet) was adapted for the screen, in which Pál (Paul) Lukács played the leading role. In 1927, he moved to Berlin to work as a drama critic. Later, he founded his own film company, working with Max Reinhard. In 1933, he returned to Budapest. From 1955, he was again living in California. His main work is A Gray Speck of Dust (Szürke porszem) (Los Angeles, 1973). In the spring of 1976, he received the Herzl Prize in Israel. – B: 1445, 1672, T: 7456. → Palló, Imre.

Zsoldos, Imre (Emeric) (Budapest, 26 March 1919 - Szeged, 27 August 1985) – Trumpeter and band master. He completed a trumpet course privately under the direction of Rudolf Borst during the years between 1938 and 1941. From 1948 until his death, he was the trumpeter and Band Master of the Hungarian Radio. From the 1970s, he scored successes playing the trumpet, as a singer, as an artist playing the violin, piccolo and as a soloist in singing songs. He appeared as a guest-artist in Cuba, Switzerland, Germany, the USA, Brazil and Australia. Two independent soloist records appeared by him and twenty with a band or orchestra. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Zsoldos, Jenő (Eugene) (Budapest, 2 April 1896 - Budapest, 21 November 1972) – Literary historian, linguist and educator. He studied at the Arts Faculty of the University of Budapest, majoring in Hungarian and Latin Literature, obtaining his Ph.D. in 1923. In 1919, he taught at a High School on Tavaszmező St. in Budapest. From 1920, he taught at the Jewish Girls' High School, now called Anna Frank High School, Budapest. From 1939 until his retirement in 1965, he was its Principal. From 1936 to 1943, he edited the journal Libanon. He participated in the editing of the Hungarian-Jewish Archives. Zsoldos also worked in the linguistic field. For 30 years he was an associate for the journal Hungarian Language Watchman (Magyar Nyelvőr). He published studies mainly on the history of dictionaries, on the language of the reform era, and published language courses, also letters of Kosztolányi and Mikszáth. His works include The Bible, the Midrash and the Jew in the Letters of Mikes from Turkey (A biblia, a midrás és a zsidó Mikes törökországi leveleiben) (1931); Ferenc Kazinczy and the Jewry (Kazinczy Ferenc és a zsidóság) (1934); Hungarian Literature and Jewry (Magyar irodalom és zsidóság) (1943), and the Hungarian Grammar (Magyar nyelvtan) (1951). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Mikes, Kelemen; Kosztolányi Dezső; Mikszáth, Kálmán; Kazinczy, Ferenc.

Zsolnai, Hédi (Hedvig Zimer) (Budapest, 29 November 1924 - Munich, 22 December 2004) – Actress and singer. Early in her career, she played at the Children's Theater of Artúr Lakner. She completed the course in Performing Arts at the Musicians' Association. At her solo concerts, she recited poems of world literature, as well as folk poetry and hits; she also presented her own poems and prose writings. After 1945, in the Communist era, she was a member of the Pódium Cabaret; in 1948, a member of the Medgyaszay Theater and the Operetta Theater in Budapest. Hédi Zsolnai also worked for the cabaret ensemble called Hopefuls (Bizakodók), and then, in 1951, she became a member of the People's Variety (Népvarieté) and the Little Variety (Kisvarieté); in 1955 she was a member of the Budapest Variety (Budapest Varieté) and, in 1964, she was a member of the Merry Stage (Vidám Színpad). In 1965 she performed in Austria, Germany and France; after returning to Hungary she appeared on the Literary Stage (Irodalmi Színpad), and the Thália Theater (Thália Színház). From 1977 she lived in Munich. Her roles include Bébé in P. Ábrahám's Ball at the Savoy (Bál a Savoyban), and Paulette in E. Kemény's Black Lily (Fekete liliom). Her popular dancing songs include I Am Always Dreaming About Pest (Mindig Pestről álmodom); The Great Boulevard (Nagykörút), and After Ten Years (Tíz év után). She was author of the book Johanna in the Pub (Johanna a kocsmában) (1989). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456. → Lakner, Artúr.

Zsolnay, Vilmos (William) (Pécs, 19 April 1828 - Pécs 23 March 1900) – Ceramic artist and industrialist. He was preparing for an artist career but, at the request of his parents, he assumed his father's business in 1853, and his uncle's pottery business in 1863. Since he was not a professional ceramist, and as his business in town was too absorbing, he engaged specialists from abroad to manage the pottery plant. Privately, he learned chemistry and technology, and with the knowledge obtained from the specialists, he assumed the management of the plant by 1872. His abilities and accomplishments elevated him to the forefront of ceramic art. Some of his innovations pioneered modern ceramics and his work made him internationally famous. His inventions included the porcelain faience and the frost resistant pyro-granite used for the decoration of buildings. He also collaborated in the processing of the eozine glaze, invented by Vince Wartha, which his factory applied on ornamental pieces. – B: 0883, 1123, 1144, T: 7456. → Wartha, Vince.

Zsolt, Béla (Komárom, 7 February 1895 - Budapest, 10 February 1949) – Poet, journalist and writer. He completed his university studies in Budapest. In 1918 he began his career as a reporter in Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania). He was an associate for the papers Diary of Nagyvárad (Nagyváradai Napló), the Nagyvárad and the Evening Paper of Nagyvárad (Nagyváradai Estilap). In 1920 he edited the literary journal Spring (Tavaszi). From 1921 he was an associate of the paper The World (A Világ) published in Budapest. From 1933 he was the chief associate of the daily News (Újság) and, from 1929 he was Editor-in-Chief of the radical weekly Pen (Toll). He achieved less success with his literary works than with his journalistic work. His reading public was made up of mostly liberal citizens. His controversial articles attacking the anti-people and anti-Semitic measures gained respect for his name, generally among progressive circles. He was dragged to a forced labor camp in 1944, and to Bergen-Belsen camp, from where he got to Switzerland with the help of a friend, and he returned home from there. From 1945 until his death, he edited the civil radical weekly, Progress (Haladás). He was a Parliamentary representative of the Hungarian Radical Party, and supported the democratic transformation. He strove for the survival of the multi-party system. In his works, he criticized, with cutting irony, the moral and material decline, the fascist inhuman attitude, and the oppression of the people. His main works are Whirlwind (Forgószél) play (1919); All is in Vain (Hiába minden) poems (1921); A Just Book (Igaz könyv) poems (1924); It Ends Up in Marriage (Házassággal vegződik) novel (1926); Elizabeth-City (Erzsébetváros) play (1928); An Awkward Matter (Kínos ügy) novel (1935, 1970); A Stroke of Lightning (Villámcsapás) autobiography (1937); Lessons and Hopes (Tanulságok és reménységek) articles (1942), and National Drugstore (Nemzeti drogéria) (1979) – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7684.

Zsombolya-Burghardt, Rezső (Rudolph) (Rezső Burghardt) (Zsombolya, now Jimbolia, Romania, 18 March 1884 - Budapest, 15 May 1963) – Painter. He studied at the School of Decorative Arts (Mintarajziskola), Budapest, under László (Leslie) Hegedűs. From 1903 to 1911, he furthered his studies abroad: in Milan, Rome, Paris and London. From 1913 to 1919, he also studied in the Benczúr Master Class in Budapest. From 1904, he participated in exhibitions in Hungary and abroad. He had one-man shows at the Art Gallery (Műcsarnok) in 1927, at the Ernst Museum in 1929, and at the Art Gallery again in 1931. From 1937 till 1948, he was a teacher at the Academy of Applied Arts. From 1938, he led the Artist Colony at Miskolc, right up to its dissolution. He painted portraits, bearing witness to his realistic way of seeing a person; nude compositions in intimate mood; still life and scenes reflecting the richness of nature; and also town scenes with his fresh impressions. A number of his paintings are held in the Hungarian National Gallery, Budapest, e.g. Venice (1914); Great Winter Scene, Sunny Scene (Nagy téli táj, Napos táj) (1934); Melting Snow in the Tabán (Hóolvadás a Tabánban) (1936); Reclining Nude (Fekvő női akt) (1936); Woman with Mandolin (Mandolinos nő), and Budapest Becoming Attractive (Szépülő Budapest). He was awarded a gold medal for his painting Temptation (Kisértés) in 1920, the Munkácsy Prize in 1953, and the Merited Artist title (1959). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Zsuráfszky, Zoltán (Szikszó, 30 September 1956 - ) – Dancer and choreographer. He studied at the State Ballet Institute (Állami Balett Intézet), Budapest and graduated as a folk-dancer (1971-1975). Thereafter, he studied Pedagogy and Folk-culture at the Teacher Training Institute, Eger (1981-1985). From 1975 to 1983, he was a dancer of the State Folk Ensemble (Állami Népi Együttes). He was excellent in authentic and virtuoso performances of original dances. His choreographic activity started in the Parallel (Párhuzam) Group in 1984. He is one of the founders and leaders of the Kodály Chamber Dance Ensemble and, since 1993, he has been its Director. Between 1983 and 1988, he led the Dance Ensemble of the University of Szeged; from 1983 to 1992 he led the Vidróczki Ensemble of Gyöngyös. He participates in dance-folklore research, and teaches Hungarian dances at home and abroad. He is also involved in Romanian, Slovak, South-Slovak and Gypsy folklore research, the results of which are treasured in the archives of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. Since 1992, he has been the artistic leader of the Budapest Dance Ensemble. Since 2001, he has been the Artistic Director of the Honvéd Dance Ensemble. He was the choreographer for stage productions in Budapest and Eger. His films are Ball at Szatmár (Szatmári bál) (2004); A Sentence about Love (Egy mondat a szerelemről) (2006), and Benyovszky (2008). Among his distinctions are the Dancer of the Year Prize (1985), the For Hungarian Art Prize (1989), the Gyula Harangozó Prize (1993), the Merited Artist title (2002), the Choreographer of the Year Prize (2005), and the Outstanding Artist title (2010). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7103.

Zsurzs, Éva (Budapest, 29 September 1925 - Budapest, 6 September 1997) – Director of motion pictures. In her youth she appeared in the Workers' Home of Csepel as part of the workers' drama circle of the Csepel Works. In 1951 she began working for the Hungarian Radio in the newly formed Studio Section, where she familiarized herself with their professional knowledge. At the Hungarian Radio, she was one of the stage managers of the bi-weekly one-hour broadcast entitled Artist Evening (Művészet). In 1957 she was transferred to the newly established Hungarian Television (MTV). She mainly scored success with her literary film adaptations. Her most successful TV plays were the Black Town (Fekete város); Testament of Agha Koppány (A koppányi aga testamemntuma), or Abigél, a serialized version of Magda Szabó's novel. Her last film was The Herdsman (A csikós), produced in 1993. She was Vice President of the Associations of Artistic Unions and Senior Manager of Hungarian Television. She died in poverty. Her more than 50 TV films include Golden Pheasant (Aranyfácán) (1959); Elektra (1962); The Philosopher (A filozófus) (1971), and Kreutzer Sonata (1987). For her film The Woman in the Barracks (A nő a barakkban), she was awarded the Gold Nymph Prize at the Television Festival of Monte Carlo in 1962. She received the Kossuth Prize (1993). – B: 1031, 1445, T: 7456. → Szabó, Magda.

Zugor, István (Stephen) (Székesfehérvár, 21 February 1903 - Budapest, 1 July 1984) – Minister of the Reformed Church and lexicographer. He studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest from 1921 to 1927. He spent the 1923-1924 sessions at Bethel, Germany, and the 1928-1929 sessions for further studies at the University of Utrecht. In 1964, with the Stipendium Bernardium scholarship, he completed at Utrecht his compilation work for a dictionary, lasting for several decades: the first Dutch-Hungarian Dictionary (1968), and the Hungarian Dutch Dictionary (1979); both of them had several editions. This was his life's magnum opus. He was ordained in 1930. From 1927, he was an assistant minister in Budapest; from 1930, he was a parish minister in Kalocsa and, from 1935 until his retirement in 1964, in Bia (adjoining Biatorbágy). From 1952 to 1959, he was Deanery Council Magistrate. He left behind the manuscript of a 75-thousand word great-dictionary. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Zwack, József (Joseph) (? 1821 - Budapest, 7 February 1915) – Distiller. He was a court physician in Vienna for Emperor József II (Joseph) in 1790. After he had learned the distilling trade, he set up a modest workshop at the Marocco-Court; after it was pulled down, he transferred it to the Üllői Avenue in Pest. His 20 year-old son, József, founded J. Zwack & Co. in 1854. This became the first patented liqueur factory in Hungary. With the gradual development of the liqueur and rum production and distillery, his preparations became marketable abroad. Actually, it became the leading distillery in Central Europe, producing over 200 liqueurs and spirits, exported all over the world. The plant was reorganized in 1892, and excelled with its modern technical equipment. His distillery, the Unicum Zwack Plant is still operating. One of their famous products is the Zwack Unicum, a 40% alcohol-herbal liqueur, made with a secret blend of more than 40 different herbs and spices. A school in Békéscsaba bears József Zwack's name. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7103.

Zwack, Péter (Budapest, 21 May 1927 - Italy, 5 August 2012) – Businessman, diplomat. He was born into a Christian family with Jewish background. His father was the owner of the Unicum Liqueur Factory, Budapest. Péter survived the holocaust, matured in 1945, and in 1947 he left for Italy. Later he moved to the USA, where he continued his studies and obtained a degree. First, he worked in smaller jobs, and in 1952 he became manager of the Alcohol Import Company at New Haven, Conn. In 1954 he became a co-owner of a wine-import company at Chicago, Ill. After the Hungarian Revolution of 1956, he founded the “First Aid for Hungary” Company with the former American president Herbert Hoover, Sergeant Shriver Jr and Tibor Eckhardt. They helped Hungarian refugees with $120,000. In 1970 he returned to Europe and managed the family Firm at Vienna; soon he returned to Italy. In 1988 he returned to Hungary. In 1990 he was appointed Ambassador to Washington DC. With Emil Underberg he privatized the Budapest Liqueur Company, and in 1991 they established the Zwack Unicum Corporation. In 1994 he was elected member of the Parliament. Two of his children now manage the Unicum Corporation. Peter Zwack was one of the most colorful members of the Hungarian political and business life. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Zwack, József; Eckhardt, Tibor.

APPENDIX

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL NOTES

B: Bibliography Numbers

- 0870: Hont, Ferenc (ed.): Színházi Lexikon, (Gondolat Kiadó, Budapest, 1969).
- 0871: B. Fábri, Magda (ed.): Új kortárs magyar színész lexikon (Magazin Holding KFT, Budapest, 1999).
- 0872: Simon, L. Andrew: Made in Hungary, (Hungarian Contribution to Universal Culture) Corvinus Virtual Library (corvinuslibrary.com; Internet Website).
- 0873: Hermann, Péter (ed.): Ki-Kicsoda 2000 (Magyar és nemzetközi életrajzi lexikon, kortársaink életrajzával) (Greger-Biográf, Budapest, 1999).
- 0874: Hermann, Péter (ed): Biográf Ki Kicsoda 2002, (Enciklopédia Kiadó, Budapest, 2001).
- 0875: Stanik, István (ed): Erdélyi Magyar Ki Kicsoda 2000, (RMDSZ – Scripta Kiadó, Budapest-Nagyvárad 2000),p.847.
- 0876: Markó, László (ed): Új Magyar Életrajzi Lexikon, I-II kötet, (Magyar Könyvklub, Budapest 2001,1198), p.1206.
- 0877: Péter, László (ed): Új Magyar Irodalmi Lexikon, I-III, (2.jav.böv. kiadás, Akadémia Kiadó, Budapest, 2000).
- 0878: Almási, Éva (ed): Kortárs magyar írók 1945-1997, I-II, Bibliogr. és fotótár, (Enciklopédia Kiadó, Budapest, 1998).
- 0879: Élesztős, László. (ed): Magyar Nagylexikon 1-3 kötet, (Akadémia Kiadó, 1994-1995., 5-13 kötet, 1997-2001).
- 0880: Paczolay, Gyula: János B. Decsi and his Adagia, (Acta Ethnographica Hungarica 45, No.3-4, 2000) pp. 271-294).
- 0881: Encyclopedia – Britannica Online Encyclopedia, (Britannica.com; Internet Website).
- 0882: Romániai Magyar Irodalmi Lexikon 1-3 kötet, Balogh, Edgár (ed), Kritérium Kiadó, Bukarest, 1981, 1991,1994.
- 0883: Kenyeres, Ágnes (ed): Magyar Életrajzi Lexikon I (A-K,1967), II.(L-Z,1969), III (kieg.kötet A-Z,1981).
- 0884: Kenyeres Ágnes (ed): Magyar Életrajzi Lexikon. Pótkötet (1978-1991) (A-Z.1994).
- 0885: Rózsás, János (ed): Gulág Lexikon (Püski, 2000).
- 0886: Brockhaus-Riemann: Zenei Lexikon I-III (ed. Antal Borkay) (Zeneműkiadó, Budapest 1985).
- 0887: Zádor, Anna, Genthon, István (eds): Művészeti Lexion I-IV (Akadémiai Kiadó, Budapest 1965-1968).
- 0888: Erdély Története I-III (Akadémiai Kiadó, Budapest, 1986).
- 0889: Kosztin, Árpád: Magyarellenes román kegyetlenkedések Erdélyben (Bíró Family Kft. Budapest, 1998).
- 0890: Vofkori, László: Székelyföld utikönyve I-II (Cartographia, Budapest, 1998).
- 0891: Egyed, Ákos: Erdély 1848-1849. I-II (Pallas Akadémia, Csíkszereda 1998-1999).
- 0892: Miska, John (ed): Blessed Harbours. An Anthology of Hungarian Canadian Authors (Guernica, Toronto, 2002).
- 0893: "Hungarian Studies Review" (János Miska comp.) vol.XXV, Nos. 1-2 Spring-Fall,1998, National Széchényi Library, Hungary) pp. 93-116.
- 0894: Bibó István Gimnázium website, Kiskunhalas (Internet Website).
- 0895: Filozófiai kislexikon (M. Rosental, P. Jugyin eds.) (Kossuth Kiadó, Budapest, 1964) pp.411-412.
- 0896: Encyclopedia (enciclopeia.com; Internet Website).
- 0897: Kulcsár, Péter: Bevezető Baranyai Decsi János Magyar Históriajához (Helikon, 1982), p.24.
- 0898: Magyarország története III/1 526-1686 (Budapest, 1985) p. 818.
- 0899: Glatz, Ferenc (ed.): A magyarok krónikája (Magyar Könyvklub, Budapest, 1995).
- 0900: Kovács, Endre (Biography MS., Budapest).
- 0901: Pungur, József: Ákom, Lajos, in "Hívó Szó" (Ref.Egyházi Értesítő, XII.2. 1997). p.20.
- 0902: Balassa, Imre: Sándor Erzsí (Zenemű Kiadó, Budapest, 1968).
- 0903: Etude Music Magazin (Piladelphia, October, 1930).
- 0904: Szilvay, Géza (Biography, MS., Helsinki).
- 0905: Gárdonyi, Zsolt (Internet home page).
- 0906: Bethlen Almanac, Yearbooks (The Bethlen Home, Ligonier, PA).
- 0907: Szinnyei, József: Magyar Írók élete és munkája, (mek.oszk.hu; Internet Website).
- 0908: Mikola, Nándor: Manuscript.
- 0909: Magyar Nemzet, Newspaper (Budapest, 11 April, 2001).
- 0910: Ladányi, Sándor: Egyetemi előadások 1 (MS., Budapest, 2002).
- 0911: Ladányi, Sándor: Egyetemi előadások 2 (MS., Budapest, 2002).
- 0912: Magyar, Csaba: Biography of Magyar Adorján,(Manuscript, Zelenika, Serbia-Montenegro, 2002).
- 0913: Bottyán, János: A Budapesti Teológia híres diákjai, (Pamphlet, Budapest, 1951).
- 0914: Havadtóty, Sándor: Autobiography, (in Székely Nép, 29 February, 1996).
- 0915: Forró, Sándor: Autobiography, (Manuscript, Poughkeepsie, NY., USA, 2002).
- 0916: Pungur, József: Megújulás (Emmaus, Kecskemét, 1993).
- 0917: Demmer, György: Manuscript (Ottawa, 2002).
- 0918: 168 Óra, Közéleti Hetilap (Budapest, August 29, 2002).
- 0919: Romániai Magyar Szó (6-7 April, 2002, Románia).
- 0920: Magyar Nagy Lexikon, XII (Magyar Nagy Lexikon Kiadó, Budapest, 2001), pp. 495-497).

- 0921: Borbándi, Gyula: Emigránsok (A Magyar Nyelv és Kultúra Nemzetközi Társasága, Budapest, 2002).
- 0922: Pungur, Joseph: Protestantism in Hungary, in Protestantism and Politics in Eastern Europe and Russia. The Communist and Post-Communist Era. Ed. S. P. Ramet (Duke Univ. Press, Durham and London, 1992).
- 0923: Magyarországi egyházak, felekezetek, vallási közösségek, 2001-2002 (Nemzeti Kulturális Ö.M., Budapest).
- 0924: Részünk és Jogunk, ed. Z. Barabás, (Királyhágómelléki Református Egyházkerület, Nagyvárad, 1997).
- 0925: Pándy, Bertalan: Tradíció és megújulás: A Szlovákiai Ref. Keresztyén Egyház (Internet online).
- 0926: Csete-Szemesi, István: A gyülekezetépítő egyház és tajai (Manuscript, Debelyacsa, Serbia, 2002).
- 0927: Kettős, János: A Horvátországi Magyar Reformátusság. (Manuscript, Kopács, 2000).
- 0928: Magyar Távirati Iroda (Online, 10 October, 2002).
- 0929: Pap, Géza: Autobiography, (Manuscript, Kolozsvár, 2002).
- 0930: Ludanyi, Andrew: The Benes Decrees and the Fate of Hungarians in Slovakia (Online, 2002).
- 0931: Magyar Protestáns Pantheon (Church. Lutheran/Reformation, Online, 2002).
- 0932: Veszprém Megyei Életrajzi Lexikon (Internet Website 2002).
- 0933: Horváth, Loránd: Autobiography (Manuscript, Toronto, Ont., 2002).
- 0934: Képzőművészet Magyarországon, (Internet Website).
- 0935: Visuart, (Internet Website).
- 0936: Dudas (Internet Website).
- 0937: Kontextus, (Internet Website).
- 0938: Magyar Rádió, Ki-kicsoda? (Online, 2002).
- 0939: Romániai Magyarság (Hungarian newspaper, Bukarest, 7 November, 2002).
- 0940: Zoványi, Jenő: A magyarországi protestáns egyházak történeti lexikonja, 5.ed. (Budapest, 1997).
- 0941: Lévai, Attila: Reformed Bishops in Slovakia, (Manuscript, Komarno, Slovakia, 2002).
- 0942: A Pallas Nagy Lexikona, (mek.oszk.hu; Internet Website).
- 0943: Erdő, Péter: Biography, (Manuscript, 2002).
- 0944: Szabó, Ferenc: Biography, (Manuscript, 2002).
- 0945: Magyar Katolikus Lexikon, vols. i-vii, ed. I. Diós, (Szt.István Társulat, Budapest, 1993).
- 0946: Bethánia CE Szövetség, (Internet Website).
- 0947: Parochia net. (Internet Website).
- 0948: Kovács, Bálint: A Keresztyén Ifjúsági Egyesület Története 1883-1950, (KIE Szeniorok Pógyor I. köre, Bp.,1998).
- 0949: Soli Deo Gloria Református Diákszövetség, (Internet Website).
- 0950: Jewish Library (Internet Website).
- 0951: hvg (Internet Website).
- 0952: akm. externet.hu.
- 0953: Glöckner, Péter: Autobiography (Manuscript, 2002).
- 0954: Pungur, Joseph, ed: A Theology of National Minorities (Emmaus, Kecskemét, 2001).
- 0955: Selmeci, József: Autobiography, (Basel, Manuscript, 2003).
- 0956: M. Lázár, Magda: Straky T., Szatmári E.: Debrecen zenei élete a századfordulótól napjainkig, (Debrecen, 1975).
- 0957: Sz.István Egyetem Prospektusa (Gödöllő, 2003).
- 0958: Debreceni Református Hittudományi Egyetem Prospektusa, (Debrecen, 2003).
- 0959: Országos Katolikus Névtár II. Szerzetesi kötet (Budapest, 2001).
- 0960: Peko, Aliz, M. Adrien: A Miasszonyunkról nevezett szegény Iskolanővérek Magyarországon, (Manuscript, 2003).
- 0961: Parliamentary Briefing of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, (Budapest, 2003).
- 0962: Németh, Emma: Katolikus felsőoktatás (Manuscript, Budapest, 2003).
- 0963: Németh, Emma: Katolikus Egyetem, (Manuscript, Budapest, 2003).
- 0964: Németh, Emma: Apor Vilmos Katolikus Főiskola (Manuscript, Budapest, 2003).
- 0965: Németh, Emma: Vitéz János Római Katolikus Tanítóképző Főiskola, (Manuscript, Budapest, 2003).
- 0966: Bodo, Eva: Order of English Ladies, (Manuscript, Budapest, 2003).
- 0967: Kovács, Melinda: Kaposvári Egyetem. Tájékoztató, (Manuscript, Kaposvár, 2003).
- 0968: Sz. Varga, Edit: Veszprémi Egyetem. Tájékoztató, (Manuscript, Veszprém, 2003).
- 0969: Prominent Hungarians (Internet Website).
- 0970: A Pécsi Egyetem. Tájékoztató, (Pécs, 2003).
- 0971: Kőmives, Veronika (ed): Welcome to Semmelweis University (Pharma Press, Budapest, 2001).
- 0972: Martonyi, János-Ruszly, József: A JATE története. A Szegedi Tudományegyetem múltja és jelene, (Szeged, 1999).
- 0973: Eötvös Loránd Tudományegyetem. Pamflet (Internet Website, 2003).
- 0974: Debreceni Egyetem Informtion Pamphlet (Debrecen, 2003).
- 0975: Miskolc University Informtion Pamphlet (Miskolc, 2003).
- 0976: Budapesti Műszaki Egyetem, Information Pamphlet (Budapest, 2003).
- 0977: Liszt Ferenc Academy of Music, Information Pamphlet (Budapest, 2003).
- 0978: Földváry, Gábor: Geology of the Carpathian Region (World Science, Singapore, 1968).
- 0979: Hungarian Fine Arts Univesity, Information Pamphlet, (Budapest, 2003).
- 0980: University of Applied Arts, Information Pamphlet, (Budapest, 2003).
- 0981: University of Western-Hungary, Information Pamphlet, (Sopron, 2003).

- 0982: Zrinyi Miklós National Defence University, Information Pamphlet, (Budapest, 2003).
- 0983: University of Kolozsvár, Information Pamphlet, (Kolozsvár-Cluj-Napoca, 2003).
- 0984: Sapientia University, Information Pamphlet, (Kolozsvár-Cluj-napoca, 2003).
- 0985: Fellowship for Religious Education in Europe, (ETRE-Edinburgh Conferende Report).
- 0986: Jewish University, Information Pamphlet, (Budapest, 2003).
- 0987: Central European University (Internet Website, Budapest, 2003).
- 0988: Magyar Nemzet (Internet Website, 2001 évi összefoglaló, (Budapest, 12 April, 2002).
- 0989: Kövér, László; Németh Zsolt, Biography (Parliament Internet Website).
- 0990: Medgyessy, Péter, Biography (Parliament Internet Website).
- 0991: Kuncze, Gábor, Biography (Parliament, Intenet website).
- 0992: Mádl, Ferenc, Biography (Parliament Internet Website).
- 0993: Göncz, Árpád, Biography (Parliament Internet Website).
- 0994: Kovács, László, Biography (Parliament, Internet Website).
- 0995: Dávid, Ibolya, Biography (Parliament, Internet Website).
- 0996: Bolyki János: Laudatio of István Tökés, (Manuscript, Budapest).
- 0997: Miklósházy, Attila, Biography (Mansucrypt, Toronto, 2003).
- 0998: Ádám, János S.J.: Magyar Jezsuiták vallomásai, (ed.) F..S. J. (Anima Una, Budapest), pp. 12-23.
- 0999: International Society for Encyclopedia of Church History in Hungary (Magyar Egyháztörténeti Enciklopédia Munkaközösség – METEM).
- 1000: Tempfli, Emerich: Károly Pakocs Biography (Manuscript, Austria, 2003).
- 1001: James J. John: Astrik L. Gabriel , (Tongerloo, Netherland, 2002).
- 1002: Canadian Who's Who, 2000 (University of Toronto Press).
- 1003: Élet-Hungarian Life , Weekly, (Toronto, 18 January, 2003).
- 1004: Taiwan Region (Chinese Province Archive).
- 1005: Far Eastern Economic Review, (9 May, 2002).
- 1006: Fábíán, Béla: An Undelivered Eulogy, (America, vol. 81, 1949), pp.667-668.
- 1007: Szöllödi, Ágnes: A Magyar Pax Romana, (Manuscript, Budapest, 2003).
- 1008: Benyik, György: Szegedi Nemzetközi Biblikus Konferencia, (Manuscript, Szeged, 2003).
- 1009: Seregély, István: Walk in Freedom. The First 12 Years of Renewal, 1990-2002 (Manuscript, Eger, 2002).
- 1010: Britannica Hungarica, (Magyar Világ, Budapest, 1994-2001).
- 1011: Szilas, L.: Jesuit Historical Institute, Rome, Italy; Horvath, T.: Regis College, Toronto, Canada.
 In the year of 2001 the Roman Catholic Church in Hungary published an encyclopedic book on A Thousand Years of Christianity in Hungary with 31 scholarly essays and a catalogue of historical documents, artistic objects, paintings, statues, and mintage demonstrating Christian live as lived by the Hungarian people over the past millennium - exhibited first in the Museum of Vatican City, 10 October 2001 - 12 January 2002, and then in Hungarian National Museum Budapest, January - May 2002. Bangha, Béla: "Magyarország". Katolikus Lexikon, Budapest, 3 1932, pp. 244-245. Hermann, E.: A katolikus egyház története Magyarországon 1919-ig. Munich, 1973. Juhász, W. & M. Tomka: "The Catholic Church in Hungary" New Catholic Encyclopedia 2. end. vol. 7, pp. 209- 223. Washington, DC. 2003. Kiss, J. Sziklay J.: A Katolikus Magyarország 1001-1901 (Budapest, 1902). Szilas, L.: Kis magyar Egyháztörténet (Róma, 1982). Tóth, E: "Christianity in Pannonia Prior to the Hungarian Conquest (Before 970)." A Thousand Years of Christianity in Hungary, edited by Zombori I., and al. (Budapest, 2001) pp. 20-26..
- 1012: Csepregi, Márta: Schmidt, Éva, (Manuscript, 2002).
- 1013: Temesi, József, Orosz, Róza: Information, written (Budapest, 2002).
- 1014: Radio Netherlands: Worldwide Hot Spots, (4 Augsut, 1990).
- 1015: University of Debrecen, Information Pamphlet (Debrecen, 2002).
- 1016: Tóth, Károly: Gyökerek, Távlatok, (Budapest, 1958).
- 1017: Majorné, Beniczky, Julianna: Másokért egészen – CS. I. emlékezete (in Ref.Lapja, Budapest, 22 October, 2000).
- 1018: Csurka, István, Biography, (Parliament website).
- 1019: Torgyán, József, Biography (Paliament website).
- 1020: Bagossy, László (ed.): Encyclopaedia Hungarica vols. i-iv, (Hungarian Ethnic Lexicon Foundation, Calgary, AB., Canada, 1992-1998).
- 1021: Pirigyí, I.: A görög katolikus magyarság története (1982).
- 1022: Péntes, János: A Délvidéki Katolikus Egyház (Manuscript, Szabadka, 1993).
- 1023: Unitarian Church, (Internet Website, uuca.org).
- 1024: Erdélyi Magyarság – Vallási Élet. Unitárius Egyház (in Magyarok a Világban – Kárpát Medence).
- 1025: Hamvas, József: Hungarian Milestones on the Road of Science, (Rákóczi Foundation, 1996).
- 1026: Magyar Kutatók Külföldön, (Magyar Tudományos Akadémia, Elnöki Bizottság, Budapest, 1998).
- 1027: Majnek, Antal; Bendász, Dániel; Szabó, József; Hetényi, "Papi Sorsok." I.
- 1028: Székely, László: Magyar Tudósok Nyugaton, (Manuscript, Budapest, 2003).
- 1029: Simon, L. Andrew: Biography (Manuscript, 2003).
- 1030: Szűrös, Mátyás Biography (Magyar Nemzet, Budapest, 9 April, 2002).
- 1031: Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia (Internet Website).

- 1032: Balázs, Béla: Biography (Manuscript, 2003, Calgary)
- 1033: Magyar Távirati Iroda (Budapest, 27 April, 2003).
- 1034: Sz. Rencsik, István: Erdélyi Magyarság 1990-2002, (Manuscript, 2003).
- 1035: Magyaródy, Szabolcs: Biography, (Hamilton, Ont., Manuscript, 2003).
- 1036: Erdélyi Magyar Ki-Kicsoda, 2000, Stanik, István (ed), (RMDSZ és Scripta kiadó RT, Nagyvárad).
- 1037: Amerikai Magyarok Arcképcsarnoka, Tanka, István (ed) (Médianux, Salgótarján, 2003).
- 1038: Intel Executive Bio (Internet Website, 2003).
- 1039: The Fullbright Project, (Washington, DC.,USA).
- 1040: Durkó kiállítás, Szeged (Internet, website).
- 1041: Pal, George, Biography (Internet, website).
- 1042: Legalább ennyit (Internet website).
- 1043: Aki otthonos az egész naprendszerben, (in Fizikai Szemle, 2000/8, Internet Website).
- 1044: Zombori, István, METEM, (6720, Szeged, Dugonics tér 12).
- 1045: Hetényi Varga, Károly: Szerzetesek a horogkereszt és a vörös csillag árnyékában (Lámpás kiadó, Abaliget, 2000), pp. 271-092.
- 1046: Perry, John F: St.Paul's College (University of Manitoba, Canada).
- 1047: Farkas, Béla: Stefan von Apathy (Nekrológ, Rivista di Biologica, Rome, 1923).
- 1048: Bud, R.: The use of life: a history of biotechnology (Cambridge U.P. 1993).
- 1049: Nagy, Tibor, Biography (Manuscript, Budapest, 2003).
- 1050: Korányi, András: Lutheran Church in Hungary (Manuscript, Budapest, 2003),
- 1051: Kormányzati Portál (Országinfo, Magyarország. hu; Internet Website),
- 1052: Soros.org /S.Bio. (Internet Website).
- 1053: Rózsás, János: Gulág Lexikon (Püski, Budapest, 2000) p.314.; Szabó, György: Rózsa Tódor püspök hitvallása és vértanúhalála. (Kárpátaljai Magyar Könyvtár 104.), Munkácsi Görög Katolikus Egyházmegye (Intermix Kiadó, Ungvár-Budapest, 2000) pp 61. Christopher Andrew - Vasili Mitrokhin: The sword and the shield. The Mitrokhin Archive and the secret history of the KGB. (Basic Books (New York), 1999) p 358.
- 1054: Bonner, A. (trans.): The Complete Works of François Villon.(A Bantam book, New York, 1960); Bovy, A.: Adanet le Roi et son oeuvre, (Brussels, 1898). Révai Nagy Lexikona, under 'Berta'; Simrock, B., Die Spinnerin (Frankfurt AM, 1855); Wurtz, John S.: Magna Charta Pedigrees of Barons.
- 1055: Andras, E. J. Morel: Kirche im Übergang. Die Katholische Kirche Ungarns, 1945-1982 (Wien, 1982); Németh, E. Magyar Katolikus Püspöki Konferencia Titkársága. Budapest. Hetényi, V. K. Szerzetesek a horogkereszt és a vörös csillag árnyékában I-V. (Budapest 2002). Révay, E. Edit,(OLI Vallásszociológia Központ Budapest). Stark, T. Hungarian Jews during the Holocaust and After the Second World War, 1939-1949: A Statistical View. (Boulder: East European Monographs, 2000). Tomka, M. "The Church under Communism" "The Catholic Church in Hungary", (New Catholic Encyclopedia, 2. ed. vol. 7., Washington, DC. 2003) pp. 221-223).
- 1056: Szabó, József and Herdics, György (jopasztor.sk; Internet Website).
- 1057: Tempfli, Emerich: Katolikus Egyház a Vajdaságban (Manuscript, Königstein, Germany).
- 1058: Hetényi Varga, Borbála: Hetényi Varga, Károly, Biography (Manuscript, Pécsvárad, 2003).
- 1059: Geocities.com. Internet Website, Athens/Ithaca,7730.
- 1060: Tempfli, Emerich: Katolikus magyarok lelkipozódása Romániában, (Manuscript, Königstein, Germany, 2003).
- 1061: Ki Kicsoda (MSZP, Arcképcsarnok, Internet Website).
- 1062: Határon túli Magyarok Hivatala (Internet Website).
- 1063: University of California (Info., Internet Website).
- 1064: Várszegi, Asztrik: en Kriszto (Communio.hu, Vigilia).
- 1065: Todocive.com/bio (Internet Website).
- 1066: Kormányzati Portál (Országinfo, Internet Website).
- 1067: UCC-SPS- Nation Builders (1988, Canada).
- 1068: Új Idők Lexikona (Singer and Wolfner Irodalmi Intézet, Budapest, 1939, 1941, 1942).
- 1069: Balázs, Géza: The Story of Hungarians (Corvina, Budapest,1997).p.18.
- 1070: Rada, Tibor: A Ludovika Akadémia Története (Manuscript, Calgary, 2003).
- 1071: Magyar Nemzet, Daily (Budapest, August 23, 2003).
- 1072: Rózsás János: Gulág Lexikon (Püski, Budapest 2000), p. 314. Szabó,György: Rózsa, Tódor püspök hitvallása és vértanúhalála (Kárpátaljai Magyar Könyvtár), p. 104. Munkácsi Görög Katolikus Egyházmegye (- Intermix Kiadó, Ungvár-Budapest, 2000), 61 pp. Christopher Andrew - Vasili Mitrokhin: The sword and the shield, (The Mitrokhin Archive and the secret history of the KGB (Basic Books, New York, 1999, p 358).
- 1073: Vászolyi, Erik: Ausztrália benszüllött nyelvei (L'Harmattan, Budapest, 2003.)
- 1074: Wikipedia: the free encyclopedia (Internet Website).
- 1075: Sisa, Stephen: The Spirit of Hungary, (Rákóczi Foundation, 2nd edition, Toronto), p.186.
- 1076: Sisa, István: Autobiography (Manuscript), 2003.
- 1077: Wiesel, Elie (eliewieselfoundation.org. Internet Website).
- 1078: Révay Nagy Lexikona, (Révay Kiadás, Budapest, 1922).

- 1079: Új Idők Lexikona, (Singer és Wolfner Irodalmi Intézet, Budapest, 1940), p. 4587.
- 1080: Prominens Hungarians, (Budapest, 1979), p.249, 286.
- 1081: Famous Hungarians, (Hungarian org. Internet Website, Hungary Human Rights Foundation, USA).
- 1082: After Almanach Biography (Internet Website).
- 1083: Szőke, József, Viczián, János (eds): Ki Kicsoda Kassától Prágáig, (Babits Kiadó, Szekszárd, 1993).
- 1084: Ábel, András: Autobiography, (Manuscript, 2003).
- 1085: Új Idők Lexikona (Singer és Wolfner Irodalmi Intézet, Budapest, 1936).
- 1086: Klein, George: Autobiography, (Manuscript, 2003).
- 1087: Mrs L. Dálnok: Dálnok, Lajos' Biography, (Manuscript, 2003).
- 1088: Tóth, Lajos: Máté János Biography, (Manuscript, 2003).
- 1089: Kárpáthy, George: Autobiography (Manuscript, 2003).
- 1090: Nagy Magyarok (sulinet.hu; Internet Website).
- 1091: OSZK (Széchényi Library,e; Internet Website)
- 1092: Teleki Téka (netronch.internet; Internet Website).
- 1093: Leskó, János: Hungarians in Kazachstan (Manuscript, 2003).
- 1094: MVSZ Erdélyi Társasága (Bulletin, 26 October, 2003).
- 1095: Egyed, Attila: Notes (Manuscript, 2000).
- 1096: Bánosi, György, Verese gyházi Béla: Eltűnt népek, eltűnt birodalmak kislexikona, (Anno Kiadó, 2000); The Chambers's Encyclopaedia, 1966; The Columbia Encyclopedia, ed. W. Bridgwater & S. Kurtz , 4th ed. 1975;
- 1097: Encyclopaedia Britannica, 1968; Új Idők Lexikona, 1941, p.5471; The Penguin Atlas of Ancient History, by Colin McEvedy, 1967; The Penguin Atlas of World History, by H. Kinder & W. Hilgemann, 1964.
- 1098: Hungarian-American Coalition (Newsletter, March, 2000, Washington.D.C.).
- 1099: Hunginfo, 96 events, (Internet, 2003).
- 1100: Hungarian National Museum (Internet, Website, 2003).
- 1101: Papp, Ákos: Autobiography (Manuscript, 2004).
- 1102: Új Idők Lexikona, vol.17, (1940); pp.4329-433; Benkő, Loránd & Imre, Samu: The Hungarian Language (1972); Szabó, T. Attila Finno-Ugrian origin and relationship of our language (in Hungarian, Magyar Múlt 25: 77-79, (1998); Vámszer, Márta) Finno-Ugrian character of our language (in Hungarian, Magyar Múlt 24: 56-59, 1997).
- 1103: King Matthias' Black Army (szd.edu.hu; Internet Website, 2004).*
- 1104: Bakos, István, Király, István J, (eds): Magyar Nemzetismeret (Internet Website, 2004).
- 1105: Sulinet (Internet Website, 2004).
- 1106: Heti Válasz Budapest, March 25, 2004, (Radio Online).
- 1107: Szilas, László SJ: A Katolikus Egyház története Magyarországon, (Manuscript, 2003).
- 1108: Murányi, Gábor: Review of Pünkösti's book on Rákosi, in HVG, 2003.
- 1109: Boross Péter, Biography (Parliament, website).
- 1110: Pozsgay Imre, Biography (Hoover Newsletter, Spring, 1997).
- 1111: Révész, Sándor: Aczél és kora (Sík kiadó, Budapest, 1997).
- 1112: Ki-kicsoda (Ersébetvárosi MSZP Internet Arcképcsarnok, mszp 007. hu; Internet Website).
- 1113: Martonyi János, Biography (WDR Europa Forum, Internet Website).
- 1114: Kiss, János, Biography (Central European University, Website).
- 1115: European Forum, (Internet Website).
- 1116: Faris, J.D: Catholic Christianity, 2002.
- 1117: Pirigyi, I.:A görög katolikus magyarság története, 1982.
- 1118: Ladányi, Boglárka, Luzsányi, Mónika: Felhők fölött, zöld pokolban ( Harmat, Budapest, 2003).
- 1119: Szabadi, Sándor (transl.): A. Dante's Isteni színjáték (Püski, Budapest, 2004).
- 1120: Magyar Színház (Internet online)
- 1121: Encyclopedia En carta (Internet Website).
- 1122: Híres Magyarok (mimi.hu; Internet Website).
- 1123: Nagy, Ferenc: Magyarok a technika és a tudomány történetében (BME, Budapest, 1992).
- 1124: Képzőművészet Magyarországon (Internet Website).
1125. Roth. A: Obituary on Lord Peter Bauer (The Guardian Review, 6 May, 2002).
- 1126: EPMSZ (Internet Website).
- 1127: Hidas, Péter I: A Brief Outline of the Jews in Hungary (Westmount, Canada, 1992, abridged).
- 1128: Emlékkönyv. Jó pásztor volt (Intermix, Ungudu, 2003).
- 1129: Bárány, George's Biography (Internet Website).
- 1130: Hidas, Péter I: Biography (Manuscript, 2004).
- 1131: Hungarian Federation in the Netherland (Internet Website).
- 1132: Külföldi Magyar Cserkészövetség (Internet Website).
- 1133: A Pallas Nagy Lexikona (Internet Website).
- 1134: Magyar Néprajzi Lexikon I-IV (Akadémia Kiadó, Budapest, 1977-1982) (mek.ro; Internet Website).
- 1135: Gulyás, Balázs Biography (Internet Website).
- 1136: Magyar Irodalmi Lexikon I-II (Akadémiai Kiadó, Budapest, 1963-1965).

- 1137: Intertanko.com (Internet Website).
- 1138: Új Magyar Lexikon, I-VI és Kieg, (Akadémiai Kiadó, Budapest, 1960).
- 1139: Diós, István: A szentek élete (Szt. István Társulat, Budapest, 1984).
- 1140: Museum.hu (Internet Website).
- 1141: Beöthy, Zsolt: Magyar Irodalomtörténet I-II (Atheneum, Budapest, 1889, 1890).
- 1142: Glatz, Ferenc: A Magyarok Krónikája (Magyar Könyvklub, Budapest, 1995).
- 1143: Ács, Tivadar: Magyarok az észak-amerikai polgárháborúban (Pannónia, Budapest, 1964).
- 1144: Művészeti Lexikon I-IV (Akadémiai Kiadó, Budapest, 1965-1968).
- 1145: Manga, János: Magyar pásztorfaragások (Corvina, Budapest, 1983).
- 1146: Hungarians in Alaska (Hungarians in the U.S. (www. hhr. org).
- 1147: Statistics Canada (Government of Canada, 2001).
- 1148: Ancient Routes (Internet Website).
- 1149: Varga, Pál: Nagy Magyar Feltalálók (Zrinyi, Budapest, 1958).
- 1150: Benedek, Marcell: Magyar Irodalmi Lexikon I-III (Akadémia Kiadó, Budapest, 1965).
- 1151: László, Gyula: A honfoglaló magyar nép élete (Magyar Élet, Budapest, 1944).
- 1152: Révész, Imre: Magyar református egyháztörténet 1520-1608 (Debrecen, 1938).
- 1153: Akadémiai Kislexikon I-II (Akadémiai Kiadó, Budapest, 1989).
- 1154: Museum.hu (Internet Website).
- 1155: Saáry, Éva Biography (Manuscript, Switzerland, 2004).
- 1156: Kando.hu (Internet Website).
- 1157: First World War (Internet Website).
- 1158: Kerényi, Károly ( in Wordiq.com (Internet Website).
- 1159: Hegedűs, Géza: A magyar kultúra arcképcsarnoka (Interpopolar, Szentendre, elektronikus változat).
- 1160: Kereső Lexikon (netlexikon.hu; Internet Website).
- 1161: Kibédy, Ervin (in Romániai Magyarság, paper, 26 April, 2004, Bucharest).
- 1162: Vitalis, Eszter: Czako Jenő Biography (Manuscript, Vancouver, 2004).
- 1163: Bitskey, István: Emlékezés Klaniczay Tiborra (in Magyar Tudomány, 2002/11, Budapest).
- 1164: Jankovics, József: Klaniczay Emlékkönyv (Balassi Kiadó, Budapest, 1994).
- 1165: Dodnár, György: Czine Mihály, 1929-1999 (History.hu Website).
- 1166: Magas, Dóra: Fülöpp József Biography (Manuscript, Calgary, 2004).
- 1167: Gyurcsány, Ferenc Biography (in mszp.hu (Internet Website).
- 1168: The Gypsy Ethnic Minority (Government report No J/3670, Budapest, 1998).
- 1169: Fehér, Ferenc, Göncz, László (in Vajdasági Magyar Irodalom, Internet Website).
- 1170: Marton, Ilona Obituary (in Magyar Szó, paper, Újvidék-Novi Sad, 7 September, 2004).
- 1171: Horváth, Gyula Biography (naplo.hu Internet Website).
- 1172: Madas, Edit: Középkori prédikációirodalmunk történetéből (Kossuth Egyedtemi Kiadó, Debrecen, 2002) p. 256.
- 1173: The Catholic Encyclopedia (newadvent.org; Internet Website).
- 1174: Walter, Anna (Mrs. Fehér): From the Cuneiform to the Rovás (Magyar Őskutatás, Buenos Aires, 1975).
- 1175: Heves, Gábor: Magyar rovásírás (Gödöllő, 1997, Internet Website).
- 1176: Gyarmath, Jenő: Mezopotámiai emlékek Magyarországon (Budapest, 1995).
- 1177: De Annivards (St. Michaelis School, Merelbeke, Internet Website).
- 1178: Magyar Rádió Kincsestár (Internet Website).
- 1179: Sulkowszky, Zoltán: Motorral a Föld körül (Magyar Könyvklub, Budapest).
- 1180: Ponori Thewrewk, Aurél: Csillagászat-történet (Budapest, 1988).
- 1181: Művészeti Lexikon I-IV (Akadémiai Kiadó, Budapest, 1965-1968).
- 1182: Austrian-Hungarian Expedition (Internet Website).
- 1183: The Libray of Congress, Country Studies (Internet Website).
- 1184: Kieselbach, Tamás: Modern magyar Festészet 1892-1919, vols. I-II (Szerző kiadásda, Budapest, 2003).
- 1185: Bucsay, Mihály: Belényesi Gergely, Kálvin magyar tanítványa (Egyháztörténet, Budapest, 1944).
- 1186: Gelencsér, András: Boldog Apor Vilmos Püspök (Új Ember, paper, Budapest, 26 May, 2002).
- 1187: Shagya Arabian (white arabian.com, Internet Website).
- 1188: László, Gyula: A honfoglaló magyarság élete (Magyar Élet, Budapest, 1944).
- 1189: Balaton, Lake (Globalnature, Intgernet Website).
- 1190: Bánfihunyadi, János (A magyar vegyészet arcképcsarnoka, Internet Website).
- 1191: Billingsley, K. Lloyd: Death of an UN Diplomat...(Washington Times, 24 November, 1999, Internet Wesite).
- 1192: Baronage (baronage.co.uk; Internet Website).
- 1193: Gábor, Dénes (Carlage.org.lb, Internet Website).
- 1194: Polányi, János Biography (Utoronto.ca, Internet Website).
- 1195: Wigner, Euget Biography (Encyclopedia. Com, Internet Website).
- 1196: Szent Györgyi, Albert Biography; Polányi, John ; Wigner, Eugen Paul(Nobelprize.org, Internet Website).
- 1197: Szabolcsi, Bence, Tóth, Aladás: Zenei Lexikon (Zeneműkiadó, Budapest, 1965).
- 1198: Battery of Dead (Battlefield anomalies.com; Internet Website).

- 1199: Gyilkos tó (Echr.ro Internet Website).
- 1200: Flags of 1849 returned (Fotw.wexillum.com Internet Website).
- 1201: History of Hungarian Bible (Bible.com Internet Website).
- 1202: Vietorisz, Lajos: Bible History in Hungary (Victoria, BC., Canada).
- 1203: Biró József, László Biography (Biro Pen-Ballpont Pen, ideafinder.com Internet Website).
- 1204: Bodrogköz (Zrva.hu Internet Website).
- 1205: Boldogkőváralja (Internet Website).
- 1206: Új Film Lexikon I, II (Akadémia Kiadó, Budapest, 1971, 1973).
- 1207: Book publicity (Frankfurt.matav.hu Internet Website).
- 1208: Border battles (Historicaltextarchive.com Internet Website).
- 1209: Gyepű (Szepi.hu Internet Website).
- 1210: Pongrácz, Gergely: Korvin köz 1956 (Chicago, IL, 1982).
- 1211: Ruzsa, Jenő: A kanadai magyarság története (Toronto, ON., 1940).
- 1212: First World War (and zum.de; Internet Websites).
- 1213: Buda Castle District (Hungary.com; Internet Website).
- 1214: Visegrad Group (Visegrad.group.com Internet Website).
- 1215: Csapody, Csaba: History of Bibliotheca Corvina (Corvina.oszk.hu Internet Website).
- 1216: Budapest, History of (after Abby Japew paper, Internet Website).
- 1217: Budapest Ostroma (Hungarian online resources, Internet Website) and Ungvári, Krisztián: Fortress Budapest, 1988).
- 1218: Budavár visszavétele (dark.freeweb.hu Internet Website).
- 1219: Hadú, Dénes: Magyar Szórvány Nyugat Csehországban (Confessio, Magyar Ref. Egyház, Budapest, 1986); Kopré, József, (Kovács, Bálint 's article, Confessio, 1995.2.).
- 1220: Székelyek szavai és kifejezései (Transindex, Internet Website).
- 1221: Hungary, the Medieval Period (exploitz.com Internet Website); also Földváry, Gábor Z : Era of "Adventures or deterrent campaign?" (in Magyar Mult 3 (3), 1-36pp. Sydney, Australia, 1974); also Vajai, Szabolcs: Der Eintritt des Ungarischen Stämmebundes in die Europäische Geschichte in Studia Hungarica 4, Hungarian Institute Munich, 863-933 pp.
- 1222: Statistics Canada – 2000 Census (Government of Canada).
- 1223: Historicaltextarchive.com (Internet Website).
- 1224: Magyar Emberjogi Alapítvány-HHRF (hhrf.org. Internet website).
- 1225: Celladam (Internet Website).
- 1226: Vajda, Pál: Nagy Magyar feltalálók (Zrinyi, Budapest, 1958).
- 1227: Gesta Hungarorum (sk-szeged.hu Internet Website).
- 1228: Híres Magyar Templomok (Móra. Budapest, 1989).
- 1229: Hungaria Online Resources (Hungaria.org. Internet Website).
- 1230: Magyarország történeti kronológiája (Akadémiai Kiadó, Budapest, 1981-1982).
- 1231: Markó, László: Általános történelmi fogalomgyűjtemény (Novotrade, Budapest, 1990).
- 1232: Constitutions of Hungary (Oefre.unibe.ch Internet Website).
- 1233: Crowning (Danubiusmagazin.hu Internet Website).
- 1234: Balogh, Edgár: Romániai Magyar Irodalmi Lexikon (Kriterion, Bukarest, 1981, 1991. 1994).
- 1235: Csíksomlyó Pilgrimage (Udayton.edu.mary Internet Website).
- 1236: Szapolyai Chapel (Slovenskyraj.sk Internet Site).
- 1237: Kiskunság Nemzeti Park (rkk.hu Intenet Website).
- 1238: Új Magyar Évezred (UME, 2004, III. Home.iae.nl; Internet Website).
- 1239: Czidra, László Biography (zeneforum.hu Internet Website).
- 1240: Dacia (History of Carpathian Basin (Biology.iostate.edu Internet Website).
- 1241: Horváth, Jenő: Erdély és a Románság kialakulása (Geocities.com Internet Website).
- 1242: Daruvar, Yves de Biography (isbn db.com Internet Website).
- 1243: Debály, Ferenc: Szászrégen és vidéke (Regen-vidéke.home.ro; Internet Website).
- 1244: Bíró, Bucsay, Tóth, Varga: A Magyar Református Egyház Története (Kossuth, Budapest, 1949).
- 1245: Egg (Geocities.com Internet Website).
- 1246: Duray, Miklós Biography; Iszfahan Kodex; Tökés, Itván, (Hungarian Human Right Foundation; Internet Website).
- 1247: Beke, Albert Biography (Manuscript, Budapest, 2004).
- 1248: Beke, Albert: Arday, Géza Biography (Manuscript, Budapest, 2004).
- 1249: Balog, Sándor Biography (Manuscript, USA 2004).
- 1250: Oszie, Zoltán: Association of Christian Intellectuals (kees.hu Internet Website).
- 1251: Boros János (org): The Philosophy of Ágnes Heller International Conerence (Colbud.hu Internet Website).
- 1252: Balogh, Edgár Biography (Server 2001.hu Internet Website).
- 1253: Mariska, Zoltán: Magyar filozófusok: Gy.Bartók, Gy. Lukács (Manuscript, Budapest, 2004).
- 1254: Böhm, Károly Biography (Szegedi Egyetem, Internet Website).
- 1255: Benedek, István (Hungarian Mountaineering and Sport Club Association, Budapest, 1994).
- 1256: Tóth, Gyula: Bor Ambrus (Magyar Irodalom, elte.hu Internet Website).

- 1257: Péter, László (ed): Új Magyar Irodalmi Lexikon I-III (Akadémia Kiadó, 2-ik kiadás, Budapest, 2000).
- 1258: Erdély- Ma (1 February, 2005, Internet Website).
- 1259: Bull's Blood Wine Background and Information in Sangina Listing (lisashea.com.wine Internet Website).
- 1260: Eggenhoffer, Teréz: Amagyar hegymászás arcképcsarnoka (endre.home.com.ch Internet Website).
- 1261: Erdős, Paul, Obituary (The London Times, 25 September, 1996, math-inst.hu Internet Website).
- 1262: Esterházy Family (Gilbert-collection.org.uk Internet Website).
- 1263: Paczolay, Gyula: Fülöp, G. Dénes Obituary (Manuscript, Budapest, 2005).
- 1264: Tuba, Lajos: Magyarok Csehországban (Magyar Szó, Újvidék, 26 Február, 2005).
- 1265: Magyarok Németországban (Németországi Magyar Szervezetek Szövetsége-BUOD, buod.de Internet Website).
- 1266: Furkó, Zoltán Biography I(Manuscript, Budapest, 2005).
- 1267: Csányi, Sándor Biography; Kiegészés 67 (gportal.hu; Internet Website).
- 1268: Gilby, Caroline: Obituary of Tibor Gál (Decounter.com Internet Website).
- 1269: Roszik, Gábor: Tessedik Sámuel Alapítvány (Gödöllő, Június 30. 1991).
- 1270: Mádéfalvi Disaster (geography. hu; 7 January 2004).
- 1271: Csohány, János: Biography (Manuscript, Debrecen, 2005).
- 1272: Botos, László: Hungarian Holocaust (Manuscript, Cleveland, OH.,USA, 2005).
- 1273: Földváry, Gábor: Atrocities against Hungarians (Manuscript, Matraville,Australia, 2005).
- 1274: Baráth, Tibor: Magyar Történet – Nyugati Magyarság (Lille, France, 1951).
- 1275: Doni katasztrófa (gportal.hu; Internet Website).
- 1276: Tamásy, Károly : Loránt Daday Biography (Manuscript, Budapest. 2005).
- 1277: Szeitz, András: The Hungarian Coat of Arms (in Don Mabry: Historical Text Archive, Internet Website).
- 1278: Erdélyi, Arthur: Biography (st.andrews. ac.uk; Internet Website).
- 1279: Nobel Prize Winners and Famous Hungarians (vebenetics.com; Internet Website).
- 1280: Greguss, Pál: Biography (greguss@bme.hu).
- 1281: Grossmann, Marcel: Biography (icra.it; Internet Website).
- 1282: Csupó, Gábor: Biography (lanecasualties.com; Internet Website).
- 1283: Benedek, László: MiniBio (frankfob.netscape.net; Internet Website).
- 1284: Radich, Géza: The Origin and Short History of Hungarians (mvsz.de; Internet Website).
- 1285: Corvinus Virtual Library (hungarianhistory. com; Internet Website).
- 1286: Botos, László: Hungarian History (Manuscript, Cleveland, OH., USA, 2005).
- 1287: Queen Elisabeth Biography (kaiserjaeger.com; Internet Website).
- 1288: Bodolai, Zoltán: Hungarica (Hungarian Publishing Co., Sydney, Australia, 1968).
- 1289: Forrai, Sándor: Az ősi magyar rovásírás az ókortól napjainkig (Analógia Kiadó, Lakitelek, 1994).
- 1290: Einstein's Letters to Roosevel (hypertextbook. com; Internet Website).
- 1291: The Easter Page (holiday. net; Internet Website).
- 1292: Bán, István: Észtországi Magyarok (Manuscript, Tartu, Esthonia, 2005).
- 1293: Esztergom Cathedral (invitation.hu; Internet Website).
- 1294: Medieval Monuments...(152.66.73.137; Internet Website).
- 1295: Kertész, Stephen D: Between Russia and the West (Corvin Virtual Library, hungarianhistory.com; Internet Website).
- 1296: Fodor, István: The Restitution of Works of Art in Hungary (archives.gov; Internet Website).
- 1297: Nagy, Iván: Magyarország családai és nemzetségei I-XIII (Pest, 1857-1868, Budapest, 1959, 1968).
- 1298: Gál, József: Biography (megszállottak.hu; Internet Website).
- 1299: Vietorisz, Lajos: Ocean Flights from Gander (Manuscript, Victoria, BC., Canada, 1998).
- 1300: Brugmara, Carlo: Red Cell Dehydration...(64.233.167; Internet Website).
- 1301: Historical textarchive (Internet Website).
- 1302: Gelencsér, Péter's Biography (artists-worldwide.net; Internet Website).
- 1303: Gemenc (ecotours.hu; Internet Website).
- 1304: Kollányi, Károly. Trianon boszorkánykonyhája (Kráter Műhely Egyesület, Budapest. 1993).
- 1305: Mohai Szabó, Béla v.: A Genfi Reformációi Emlékmű (Manuscript, Buenos Aires, Brazília, 1985).
- 1306: Ponticulus Hungaricus – Életrajzok (members.iif.hu; Internet Website).
- 1307: Gidran horse (ansi.okstate.edu; Internet Website).
- 1308: Aquincum, Gorsium (cryingvoice.com; Internet Website).
- 1309: Chambers' Encyclopaedia (1966); Uj Idők Lexikona (1936-1942), Encyclopaedia Britannica (15th edn., 1977, 2002); Columbia Encyclopedia (3rd edn., 1968); Colin McEvedy: The Penguin Atlas of Medieval History (1961); Colin McEvedy: The Penguin Atlas of Modern History (1972); Bálint Hóman Vol.2 in B. Hóman & Gy. Szekfű (1936): Magyar Történet (History of Hungary) I-V (1935-1936); István Kniezsa: Magyarország népei a XI. században (The peoples of Hungary in the 11. c.) (1938); Gyula László: A honfoglalókról (1973); Csaba Csorba: Árpád népe (1997); C.A. Macartney: Hungary and her successors (1968); György Györffy: István király és népe (1977); Chambers: Dictionary of World History (1994) B.P. Lenman et al.
- 1310: Chambers's Encyclopaedia 1966, 6: 291-294; Colin McEvedy: The Penguin Atlas of Medieval History, pp. 20-52 (1961); Uj Idők Lexikona 4329-4331, 4362-4366 (1936-1942); C.A. Macartney Hungary and her Successors (1968); Pallas Nagy Lexikona; Encyclopaedia Britannica 15th edn. 1977, 2002, p.836; István Erdélyi: The Art of the Avars, 68-69 (1966);

- László, Gyula: A honfoglalókról (1973); A "kettős honfoglalás" (1978); Arthur Koestler: The Thirteenth Tribe (1976); Csaba Csorba: Árpád népe (1997); Csaba Csapodi: Az Anonymus-kérdés története (1978).
- 1311: Ferenczi, Sándor (home.earthlink.net; Internet Website).
- 1312: Clemenceau, George; Ciano, Geleazzo Ribbenrop, Joachim von (spartacus.schoolnet.co.net; Internet Website).
- 1313: Clemenceau, George (fideszfrakció.hu; Internet Website).
- 1314: Dinnyés, Lajos (Rákossalva Társaskör; Internet Website).
- 1315: Grósz Trial (G.J.in mek.oszk.hu; Internet Website)
- 1316: Gyula (cryingvoice.com; Internet Website).
- 1317: Hoppál, Mihály: Gravemarkers (ling.kwg.tu-berlin.de; Internet Website).
- 1318: Gravemarkers, Balatonudvari (geoaching.hu; Internet Website).
- 1319: Grey Cattle (ansi.okstate.edu; wwf.hu; Internet Websites).
- 1320: Magna Hungaria (idg.hu; Internet Website).
- 1321: The Corona of St Stephen I (historicaltextarchives.hu; Pap, Gábor: Ten Timely Cautions (free.x3.hu; Internet Websites).
- 1322: Nagy, Géza: A magyar viseletek története (Franklin kiadó, Budapest, 1900).
- 1323: Gypsy Bands (fiddlingaround.co.uk; Internet Website).
- 1324: Jamboree 1933 (pinetreeweb.com; Internet Website).
- 1325: Golden Train (boyalngblog.com; Internet Website).
- 1326: Golden Train (iksz.fw.hu; Internet Website).
- 1327: Pax Ting (wagggworld.org; Internet Website).
- 1328: Kiszely, István: Magyarok és a Kelet-kutatás (istvandr.kiszely.hu; Internet Website).
- 1329: Janitsáry, Miklós (pano-rama.hu; Internet Website).
- 1330: Lax, Peter D: Eric. W. Weissfein (mathworld.wolfram.com; Internet Website).
- 1331: Kulcsár, Gyula (culevit.hu; Internet Website).
- 1332: Kishon, Ferenc (Magyar Nemzet Online, 20 Január, 2005).
- 1333: Ladányi, Sándor: In Memoriam Jakos Lajos (Reformátusok Lapja., 44.sz. Budapest, 1989).
- 1334: Bölcskei, Gusztáv (Református Püspöki Hivatal, Debrecen, 1996).
- 1335: Imre, Sándor (p.h.p.arcanum.hu; Internet Website).
- 1336: Hoppál és társa: Jelképtár (Helikon kiadó, Budapest. 1990).
- 1337: Kiss, Gábor: Erdélyi várak és várkastélyok (Panoráma kiadó, Budapest, 1990).
- 1338: Horthy, Miklós: Emlékirataim (Toronto, ON., Canada, 1974).
- 1339: Hadrovics, László; Hajmássy, László; Abóth, Sándor; Lichtenstein, György; Zsámár, Jenő S.J. (nevezetes zalaiak.hu; Internet Website).
- 1340: Feldebrő; Tokaj; Hollókő; Pásztó (vendegvaro.hu; Internet Website).
- 1341: Hedvig, Saint (polishamericancenter.org; Internet Website).
- 1342: Müldner, David; Haynau, Julius F von (Autro-Hungarian Army.co.uk; Internet Website).
- 1343: Bernáth, Tibor: A magyar népek őstörténete I-III (Montreal, Qc. Canada, 1975).
- 1344: The Columbia Encyclopedia, sixth ed., 2001 (bartleby.com; Internet Website).
- 1345: Hungarian Dogs (geocities.com; Internet Website).
- 1346: Orbán, Balázs: A székelyföld leírása I-VII (Pest, 1868).
- 1347: Herzl, Tivadar in Israel and Zionism (jafi.org.ill; Internet Website).
- 1348: Országinfo (magyarország, hu; Internet Website).
- 1349: Geoimages.berkeley.edu; (Internet Website).
- 1350: Biró, Zsuzsa in Transindex (geocities.geography.hu; Internet Website).
- 1351: Chain Bridge (talkingcities.com.uk; Internet Website).
- 1352: Molnár, V. József: Húsvéti Népszokások a Kárpát medencében (gondola.hu; Internet Website).
- 1353: The Holy Crown of Hungary (c.3.hu; Internet Website).
- 1354: The Holy Right Hand (historicaltextarchive.com.hu; Internet Website).
- 1355: Sáfár, István: Az árpádkori Buda nyomai a Pilisben (Internet Website).
- 1356: Cseres, Tibor: Vérbosszú Bácskában (Magvető, Budapest, 1991).
- 1357: Nagy, Iván: Magyarország családjai és nemzetiségei I-XIII (Pest 1857-1868, Budapest 1959, 1968).
- 1358: Nagyrévi dr, Nappel Gy: Huszárok (Corvina, Budapest, 1973).
- 1359: Hamvas, József: Magyar mérföldkövek a tudomány országútján (Rákóczi Alapítvány, Toronto, ON.,Canada, 1996).
- 1360: Howe, Lori: Halas Lace (suite 101.com; Internet Website).
- 1361: Szabolcsi, Bence: A Concise History of Hungarian Music IV (mek.oszk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1362: Detre, Csaba: Hun szavak, szövegek (varga.hu; Internet Website).
- 1364: Borbándi, Gyula: Emigráció és Magyarország (Magyar Protestáns Szabadegyetem, Basel-Budapest, 2000).
- 1364: Bagossy, László: Civitas Fidelissima (Manuscript, Calgary, 1991).
- 1365: Meleg, Gábor: Colombia (Bogota, Colombia, 1984).
- 1366: Dreisziger-Kovács-Bódy-Kovrig: Struggle and Hope...(McLelland, Toronto, ON.,Canada, 1982).
- 1367: Nagyenyed Devastation 1849 (historicaltextarchiv. com.hu; Internet Website).
- 1368: Fortress-Churches (cimes.ro; Internet Website).

- 1369: Fatima Hungarian Cross (101.foundatrio.com; Internet Website).
 1370: Ferenczy, Noémi (hun.arts.hu; Internet Website).
 1371: Finno-Ugric Language Relation (Helsinki.fi; Internet Website).
 1372: Fertő-Hanság National Park (zol.hu; Internet Website).
 1373: Pongráz, Gergely: Corvin köz – 1956 (Chicago, IL., USA, 1982).
 1374: Four Religions, Land of (Ucevamtom.org; Internet Website).
 1375: Forchtenstein (viaimperalis.at; Internet Website).
 1376: Csonka, Emil: A forradalom oknyomozó története 1945-1956 (Veritas, Budapest, 1981).
 1377: Friedrich, Károly (Soprontv.hu; Internet Website).
 1378: Ballstones, Feleki (bk.ng.ro; Internet Website).
 1379: Gyepű-Örvidék (Domaszek.hu; Internet Website).
 1380: Nyugati magyarok (Magyaronline.net; Internet Website).
 1381: Hadifoglyok a Szovjetunióban (Heti Válasz Online, július 8, 2005, Budapest)
 1382: The Situation of Hungarians Living outside the Carpathian Basin (nyeomszsz.org; Internet Website).
 1383: Komjáthy, A.T: A Thousand Years of the Hungarian Arts of War (Corvinus Virtual Library, hungarianhistory.hu)
 1384: Figder, Éva: The Golden Train; Priskos Rhetor (historia.hu; Internet Website).
 1385: Hóman, Bálint and Szekfű, Gyula (1935-1936) Magyar Történet (History of Hungary) I-V; Új Idők Lexikona (p.519); Encyclopaedia Hungarica vol.i, p.116; Der Grosse Brockhaus I-XX, vol. I (1928), p. 704; Padányi, Viktor (1963) Dentumagyarica, pp. 386-390.
 1386: Gece, Gusztáv: Vallástörténeti Kislexikon (Kossuth, Budapest, 1971).
 1387: Árpád re: some early foreign source, see: Constantine VII: De administrando imperio, Vol. VIII; Leo VI “The Wise” (Byzantine emperor 886-912): Tactics; Theophilactos Simokatta: Historia (958) I: VII. C. 8; Annales of Fulda (839-901); Nestor Chronicles (of Kiev) to AD 1110.
 1388: Kabos, Kandra: Aba Sámuel király (1891).
 1389: Szabó, Károly: Péter és Aba (1872).
 1390: Balogh, János; Salánki, János (matud.iif.hu; Internet Website).
 1391: Tunnel of Buda (idg.hu; Internet Website).
 1392: Budapest Parliament (avienocities.com; Internet Website).
 1393: József II, King (allrefer. Com.; Internet Website).
 1394: Cseres, Tibor: Serbian Vendetta in Bacska. Kiel meeting (hungarian-history.hu; Internet Website).
 1395: Gyarmathy, Jenő: Mezopotámiai emlékek Magyarországon (Budapest, 1995).
 1396: G.B. Shaw (MVSZ Press Service, 21 June 2005, Budapest).
 1397: Five Year Plans (infoplease.com; allrefer.com; Internet Websites).
 1398: Council Republic (icweb2.loc.gov; Internet Website).
 1399: Lechfeld Battle (absoluteastronomy.com; Intgernet Website).
 1400: Gymnasium in Kastl (ungarisches-gymnasium. de; Internet Website).
 1401: Tarihi Ungurus: K.E. Grandpierre in: Magyar Múlt (1981), 125-144; Uj Idők Lexikona (1936-1942) 413, 1526, 6024; Encyclopaedia Hungarica (Vol. 3, 1996) 549-550; Kortárs (1979) 12: 1952-1969, Budapest; Korunk (1980) 5: 399-400, Kolozsvár /Cluj; Forrás (1981) 11: 67-89, Kecskemét; G. Hazai (1978); G. László (1967).
 1402: Kallós, Zoltán, Indig, Ottó, Demse, Dávidné (Erdély-ma; Internet Website).
 1403: Fenyves, Loránd; Lantos, Róbert; Fodi, John, (thecanadianencyclopedia.com; Internet Website).
 1404: Fettich, Nándor (arpad.org; Internet Website).
 1405: Finkey, József ; Born, Ignác, Farbaky, István, Hell, Máté K., Cséti, Ottó; Vitális, István, (joszerencset.hu; Internet Website).
 1406: Móra, László; Földi, Zoltán; Lenygel, Béla; Kárteszi, Ferenc; Kisfaludy, Lajos; Schulek, Elemér; Schenek, István, Sávoly, Ferenc; Sigmund, Elek; Szily, Pál; Schmidt, Eligius Róbert; Marton- Lefèvre, Júlia; Krompecher, István; Tartján, Imre; Tarján, Rezső, (kfk.hu; Internet Website)
 1407: Folklore (Hungary.com; Internet Website).
 1408: Hungarian Patent Office (hpo.hu; Internet Website).
 1409: Fine Arts in Hungary (hung-art; Internet Website).
 1410: Famous Hungarians (hungary.org; vebenetics.com; Internet Websites).
 1411: Rabi, Isidor I (physicsweb.org; Internet Website).
 1412: Stigler, George J. (search.nap.edu; Internet Website).
 1413: Alexander, Franz (ajp.psychiatryonline.org, Internet Website).
 1414: Golden Team (zoltech.net; Internet Website).
 1415: Aquincum, National Museum; Siegmeth, Károly; Staub, Móric (fsz.bme.hu; Internet Website).
 1416: Hun Capital (China.org.cn; Internet Website).
 1417: Farkas, Gyula (gap.dcs.st-and-ac.uk; Internet Website).
 1418: Brigetium (web.genie.it; Internet Website).
 1419: Physicians (orvostortenet.feeweb.hu; Internet Website).
 1420: Brentán, Károly (epa.oszk.hu; Internet Website).

- 1421: Kabay, János (kfk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1422: Carelli, Gábor, Darvas, Iván (origo.hu; Internet Website).
- 1423: Famous Hungarians and other published sources.
- 1424: Hidak Magyarországon (hidak.hu; Internet Website).
- 1425: Fenichek, Sámuel (bethlengabor.ro; Internet Website).
- 1426: Fricsay, Ferenc; Pikéthy, Tibor; Lukács, Ervin; Medveczky, Ádám; Oberfrank, Géza; Kelen, Péter; Kókai, Rezső; Palánkay, Klára; Jeney A, Zoltán; Jeney, Zoltán; Szabó, Miklós; Németh, Judit; Szervánszky, Endre; Farkas, Ferenc, Medveczky, Ádám; Eötvös, Péter hu; Internet Website).
- 1427: Színészkönyvtár (szineszkonvntar.hu; Internet Website).
- 1428: Gál, Sándor (clmc.topnet.ro; Internet Website).
- 1429: Genealogy, Lechner, Károly, Lenhossék József; Lenhossék, Mihály; Piarists (geocities.com; Internet Website).
- 1430: Anonymus (everything.com; Internet Website).
- 1431: Bodolai, Zoltán: Timeless Nation (hungarian-history.com; Internet Website).
- 1432: Gomori, George (histochemicalsociety.com; Internet Website).
- 1433: Gor Nagy, Mária (uno.hu; Internet Website).
- 1434: Kubassek, János (Magyar Nemzet Online, Október 23, 2005; Internet Website).
- 1435: Hajmássy, Ilona (vknagykoros.c3.hu; Internet Website).
- 1436: Hankóczy, Jenő (omgk.hu (MGPANTHE); Internet Website).
- 1437: Harangozó, Gyula; Keveháti, Gábor; Kun, Zsuzsa; Internet Website).
- 1438: Harsányi, Zsolt; Farago, Laura; Furkó, Zoltán; Jászói apátság; Mikes, Imre; Boros, Attila; Orbán, Gzörgy (radio.hu; Internet Website).
- 1439: Színház; Lehoczky, Zsuzsa, Sólyom, Ildikó; Szecsődi, Irén; Takács, Tamara (szinhaz.hu.; Internet Website).
- 1440: Hefty, Frigyes, Bán, Frigyes, Apor Péter, Kézai Chronicle, Augsburgi csata; Szentpétery, József; Jákó, Zsigmond Pál, Urbán, György; Rodosto; Zolnay, László; Obrusánszky, Borbála; Nádasdy Castle, Gróf Kuun Géza. (mult-kor.hu; Internet Website).
- 1441: Hell, József Károly (joszerencset.hu; Internet Website).
- 1442: Hild, József; Nemes, Endre; Millennium Monument (vendegvaro.hu; Internet Website).
- 1443: Bábolna, Arabian Horses of (shagya.net; Internet Website).
- 1444: Bezerédi, Imre (ljkmf.hu; Internet Website).
- 1445: Magyar Színházművészeti Lexikon (mek.oszk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1446: Fabiny, Tamás (evelet.hu 2005-46; Internet Website).
- 1447: Fabiny, Tibor (evelet.hu 2003-4; Internet Website).
- 1448: Iharos, Sándor (iharosalapitvany.hu; Internet Website).
- 1449: Illés, Sándor (muveszetek.com/napsziget; Internet Website).
- 1450: Ilosfalvy, Robert; Sándor, Renée, (epa.oszk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1451: Iron Curtain (gwu.edu... Internet Website).
- 1452: The virtual Jewish history (72.14.207.104; Internet Website).
- 1453: Kristó, Gyula: Szent István... (historia.hu; Internet Website).
- 1454: The Situation of Hungarians... (htmh.hu; Internet Website).
- 1455: Irinyi, János (kfk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1456: Ireland, Hungarians in (3a simpatico.ca; unltd.uk; nfh.hu; Internet Websites).
- 1457: Kiss, Ferenc (vajtful.hu; Internet Website).
- 1458: Pécs, M: The Lower Paleolithic Site at Vértesszőlős (Hungary) in Magyar Mult, 1974 3 (2) 1-12 pp.
- 1459: Bray, Warwick, and Trump, David: The Penguin Dictionary of Archeology (1972).
- 1460: Vargha, Damján: Szt. Imre Emlékkönyv (1907).
- 1461: G.Szabó, Klára : Olaszországi magyarokról (manuscript, 2006, Trieste, Italy).
- 1462: Kiegl, József (hungamb.net.sy; Internet Website).
- 1463: Kazimir, Károly (miskolcnemzetiszhaz.hu; Internet Website).
- 1464: Komlós, Attila (htmh.hu; Internet Website).
- 1465: Szlovéniai Magyar Irodalmi Lexikon (skims.ms.si; Internet Website).
- 1466: Bárdos, A Kornél (axelero.hu... Internet Website).
- 1467: Keller, Andrew (bath.ac.uk; Internet Website).
- 1468: Jandó, Jenő (filharmonikusok.hu; Internet Website).
- 1469: Jánossy, Lajos (magyar-irodalom.elte.hu; Internet Website).
- 1470: Vietorisz, Lajos: Janota, Gábor (Manuscript, 1999, Victoria, BC., Canada).
- 1471: Jány, Gusztáv; Novák, István; Khuen-Héderváry Count Sándor; Kolosváry, Gábor; Jaross, Andor, Llyod George, Lord David; (bibl.u-szeged.hu; Internet Website).
- 1472: Bartis, Ferenc: Autography (manuscript, 2003, Budapest).
- 1473: Béres, József (beres.hu; Internet Website).
- 1474: Berki, Feriz (magyarorthodoxia.hu; Internet Website).

- 1475: Berniczky, Éva (karpatlajairodalma.lap.hu; Internet Website).
- 1476: Berzy, József (hcc.org; Internet Website).
- 1477: Csík, Ferenc; Szobotka, Imre; Schmidt, Ferenc (Nevezetes Zalaiak, dmfk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1478: Dentumoger (kroraina.com; Internet Website).
- 1479: Áder, János dr (valastas.hu; Internet Website).
- 1480: Agyagfalva meeting (cchr.ro; Internet Website).
- 1481: Alföldi, Róbert ((theater.hu; Internet Website).
- 1482: Almási, László Ede; Cseh, Tamás; Schoefft, Ágoston; Sass, Flóra (lazarus.elte.hu; Internet Website).
- 1483: Gelei, József (genetics.bdtf.hu; Internet Website).
- 1484: Gergely, Ferenc; Udvardy, Erzsébet, (ujember.katolikus.hu; Internet Website).
- 1485: German Occupation of Hungary in Thousand Year of Warfare (Hungarian-history.hu; Internet Website).
- 1486: Farkas, Bertalan (magyarorszag.hu; Internet Website).
- 1487: Farkas, István, Nagy Balogh, Sándor; Nagybányai Iskola (hung-art.hu; Internet Website).
- 1488: Fodó, Sándor, Kovács, Miklós (karpatok.uzhgorod.ua; Internet Website).
- 1489: Magyar Rádió Kincsestar (kicsestar.radio.hu; Internet Website).
- 1490: László, Gyula: A kettős honfoglalás (Budapest, 1978).
- 1491: A magyar Iszlám története (magyariszlam.hu; Internet Website).
- 1492: Balogh, Edgár és Dávid, Gyula: Romániai Magyar Irodalmi Lexikon II (Nagyvárad, 1991).
- 1493: Melis, György (phoenix.szarvas.hu; Internet Website)
- 1494: Kovács, Béla (Spartacus.scholbet.co.uk; Internet Website).
- 1495: Molnár, Antal (bibl.u-szeged.hu; Internet Website).
- 1496: Kiss, Csodgor, Detre, László (sulinet.hu; Internet Website).
- 1497: DeLászló, Sir Philip (n.p.g.org.uk; Internet Website).
- 1498: Dobay, Péter (baranyinet.hu; Internet Website).
- 1499: Dobos, C. József (innovex.veszprem.hu; Internet Website).
- 1500: Fabriczy Kovács, Mihály (citadel.edu; Internet Website).
- 1501: Falvai, Sándor (hu.emb-japan.go.jp; Internet Website).
- 1502: Feszty cyclorama (Kerkay.Emese; magyar.org; Internet Website).
- 1503: Balogh, István (morahalom.hu; Internet Website).
- 1504: Badal, János; Kis, József; Moór, Mariann; Somlay, Artúr; Ranódy, László; Somlyó, István; Rozsos, István; Schubert, Éva; Temessy, Hédi (filmtortenet.hu; Internet Website).
- 1505: Dévay Nagy, Kamilla (Kronikasnet.hu; Internet Website).
- 1506: Dezséri, László; Palotay, Sándor; Péchy, Simon; Sulyok, Imre; Johannite Order, Udvaros, Béla, (lutheran.hu; Internet Website).
- 1507: Csaba, Gyula (evelet.hu; Internet Website).
- 1508: Hajdú, Júlia (freeweb.hu; Internet Website).
- 1509: Heller, István (hungarian-composers-com; hjem.get2net.dk; Internet Websites).
- 1510: László, Gyula: The Magyars of the Conquest-Period Hungary (hungarianquarterly.com; Internet Website).
- 1511: Horváth, Barna (bibl.u-szeged.hu; Internet Website).
- 1512: Horváth, Ernő (freeweb.interware.hu; Internet Website).
- 1513: Varga, Csaba : Mire lehet büszke a magyar (laly3sympatico.ca; Internet Website).
- 1514: Csap, Lajos: Report on South Africa (Manuscript, Budapest, 2003).
- 1515: Huszárik, Zoltán (europeanfilmfestival.com; Internet Website).
- 1516: Domokos, Alex (domokos.com; Internet Website).
- 1517: Ács, Mihály (lutheran.hu; Internet Website).
- 1518: Csáky, Count István (freedom.hu; Internet Website).
- 1519: Csihák, György (corvina.bibl.u-szeged.hu; Internet Website).
- 1520: Kool, Anna Maria: Az Úr csodásan működik (Harmat, Budapest, 1995).
- 1521: Cziffery, József (; Nemessúri, Mihály.; Internet Website).
- 1522: Antal, Imre (mdb.com; Internet Website).
- 1523: Arany, Sándor (vmek.miif.hu; Internet Website).
- 1524: Csányi, Sándor (tvfilm.hu; Internet Website).
- 1525: Földvály, Gábor Z : Era of "Adventures" (in Magyar Mult 3 (3), 1-36pp.Sydney, Australia,1974).
- 1526: Szabó, Károly: Population exchange (posthumous article in Felvidék-ma; Internet Portal, 27 February, 2006).
- 1527: Hollókő (holloko.hu; Internet Website).
- 1528: Földvály, Gábor Z: Era of "Adventures" or deterrent campaigns (in Magyar Mult 3 (3), 1-36pp, Sydney, Australia, 1974; also Vajay, Szabolcs: Der Eintritt des Ungarischen Stämmebundes in die Europäische Geschichte (862-933 pp) in Studia Hungarica 4, Ungarisches Institut, München, Herausgeber Georg Stadtmüller. 1968).
- 1529: Fodor, George (CV in manuscript, 2006, Ottawa).
- 1530: Fehér, János (CV in manuscript, 2006, Budapest).

- 1531: Nádai, Árpád L. (info.ober.ac.uk; Internet Website).
- 1532: Fasang, Árpád (csepelizeneiskola.hu; Internet Website).
- 1533: Nádai, Péter (kirjasto.sci.fi; Internet Website).
- 1534: Lenin Boys (gondola.hu; Internet Website).
- 1535: Provisional National Assembly (country-data.com; Internet Website).
- 1536: National Defense Banners in Transylvania from 1848 (hungarian-history.hu; Internet Website).
- 1537: Nagy, Károly (kfk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1538: Nagylak Find (hirek.ro; Internet Website).
- 1539: Bárczay, Gyula: Sorsok a Református Egyházban 1948-1988 (PSZE. Bern, 1989).
- 1540: Pólya, György (math.wichita.edu; Internet Website).
- 1541: Hóman, Bálint in Hóman-Szekfű: Magyar Történet II (Budapest, 1935).
- 1542: Nyilasi, Tibor (Új Szó, Pozsony augusztus 14, 2004, and z.borant.ca; Internet Website).
- 1543: Nagyszéksós Find (museum.hu; Internet Website).
- 1544: Halász, Imre: Magyarok az amerikai szabadságharcban (epa.oszk.hu; Internet Website)
- 1545: Csollány, Dezső: A nagyszentmiklósi aranykincs rovásfeliratainak megfejtése és történeti háttere (Budapest, 1968).
- 1546: National Parks (mfa.gov.hu; Internet Website).
- 1547: Nemes, Endre (telecom.gov.sk; Internet Website).
- 1548: Nemesszeghy, Lajosné (Kodaly-int.hu; Internet Website).
- 1549: Cavallier, József (churchhistory.org; Internet Website).
- 1550: Györfly, István (optika.hu; Internet Website).
- 1551: Magyar szellemi-kulturális élet Cseh-Szlovákiában 1921-től (foruminst.sk; Internet Website).
- 1552: Szenes, Kászló (Kroó); Kovács, Vilmos; Szabolcska, Mihály (in Magyar Irodalom Története); Komlós, Aladár ; Mücheli Kódex; Thiery, Árpád; Váradi krónika (mek.oszk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1553: Csorba, Csaba: Árpád népe (szerk. Glatz Ferenc, Vince Kiadó, Budapest 1997, Tudomány - Egyetem sorozat ); Hajdu, Peter: The Origins of Hungarian (in: Lorand Benko & Samu Imre eds., The Hungarian Language, Mouton, The Hague, Paris, 1972); Új Idők Lexikona (1938, p. 2455; 1940, pp. 4329-4330, 4362-4365).
- 1554: Pitrolffy, Tamara: Egy holland diplomata naplója (in 168 óra, Budapest, Július 19, 2006).
- 1555: Könnnyü, László (tamaslib.hu; Internet Website).
- 1556: Keleti, Ágnes (jeniskisport.net; Internet Website).
- 1557: Jagello Dynasty; Nibelung Song (infoplease.com; Internet Website).
- 1558: Jákó, Vera (in Leszler, József: Nótakedvelőknek, Budapest, 1986).
- 1559: Nagy, Géza-Nemes, Mihály-Tompos, Lilla: A magyar viseletek története (Magyar Mercurius, Budapest, 2002).
- 1560: Jeszenszky, Géza (mkogy. hu; Internet Website).
- 1561: Jews' Community in Hungary (jewishvirtuallibrary.com; Internet Website).
- 1562: Jewish Laws (mazsihisz.com; Internet Website).
- 1563: St. Jolán (katolikus.hu; Internet Website).
- 1564: Köcsögduda (magyar.org.; Internet Website).
- 1565: Jukker Horse (pointernet.psol.hu; Internet Website).
- 1566: Justice for Hungary (hungarian-history.hu; Internet Website).
- 1567: Kultsár, György (zalai.dmfk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1568: Kacsóh, Pongrác (opera.stanfrod.edu; Internet Website).
- 1569: Koncság, Nándor (in Lacza Tihamér: Magyar Jezsuiták Latin Amerikában (epa.oszk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1570: Hungarian-composers.com; Internet Website.
- 1571: Kahler, Frigyes (jak.ppke.hu & oleol.hu Internet Websites).
- 1572: Szabolcsi, Bence: A magyar zene évszázadai I. Bevezetés (mek.oszk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1573: Fehér, Máttyás Jenő: Korai magyar kagánok (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 1972).
- 1574: Károli Bible (Vizoly-hu; Internet Website).
- 1575: Kárpáti, Rudolf (sportmuzeum.hu. & users. Skynet. Be; Internet Websites).
- 1576: Kárpáti, Sándor (w3.sopron.hu; Internet Website).
- 1577: Kass, János (ivanfuchler.com; Internet Website).
- 1578: Kiskunhalas Treasure Find (halas.hu; Internet Website).
- 1579: Bodó, Sándor (museum.hu & pano-rama.hu; Internet Website).
- 1580: Kemény, Egon (magyar.radio.hu; Internet Website).
- 1581: The Penguin Dictionary of Archeology by Warwick Bray and David Trump, 1970).
- 1582: Keszthely Culture in: Der Grosse Brockhaus, Band X, 1931, (I-XXI, 1928-1935).
- 1583: Hóman, Bálint - Szekfű, Gyula: Magyar Történet I-V (Királyi Magyar Egyetemi Nyomda, Budapest, 1935-6).
- 1584: Lázár, István: Hungary-A Brief History Corvina (Corvina Books, Franklin P. House, Budapest, 1990).
- 1585: Hanák, Péter: One Thousand Years – A Concise History of Hungary (Corvina, Zrínyi P. House, Budapest, 1988).
- 1586: Kaba meteorit (kaba.hu; Internet Website).
- 1587: Reuter, Camillo: Földváry Miksa in Technical Review of Pécs (Pécsi Műszaki Szemle, 1988, 27, (4), pp.23-24).
- 1588: Osváth, Viktor (egyhazzene.hu; Internet Website).
- 1589: Nemesszeghy, Lajosné (kodaly.inst.hu; Internet Website).

- 1590: Kiss, Szaléz Affair; Rajk per; Szász, Béla; Wittner, Mária, (rev.hu/sulinet 45; Internet Website).
- 1591: Kocsis, Pál (kocsisp-mezg.sulinet.hu; Internet Website).
- 1592: Kodaly Concept (knek.oake.org; Internet Website).
- 1593: Korda, Dezső (panteon.hu; Internet Website).
- 1594: Körösi Csoma, Sándor (Dr.Kovács C. Izabella; G.Z. Földváry, Australia).
- 1595: Kovách, Andor (actufischez.ch; Internet Website).
- 1596: Kovács, Pál (users.skynet.be; Internet Website).
- 1597: Kozma, Imre (maltamiskolc.hu; Internet Website).
- 1598: Kürschak, József (www-groups.dest.ac.uk; Internet Website).
- 1599: Kovrat (geographic.hu; Internet Website).
- 1600: Kossuth's Confederation (kulugyminiszterium.hu; Internet Website).
- 1601: Kálmán, Attila (digit.drk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1602: Jako, J. Geza (enternet.org; Internet Website).
- 1603: Jászói apátság (jasov.sk; Internet Website).
- 1604: Jávorka, Sándor (bot.nhmu.hu; Internet Website).
- 1605: Jeszenszky, Géza; Gidai, Erzsébet; Raffay, Ernő (valasztas.hu; Internet Website).
- 1606: Jeges, Károly; Osztrovszky, György: Természettudományi és Műszaki ki kicsoda (OMIKK, Budapest, 1986), (kfki.hu; Internet Website).
- 1607: Ormos, Mária (baranyanet.hu; Internet Website).
- 1608: Bogár, László; Boros, Imre; Donáth, László, (mkogy.hu; Internet Website).
- 1609: Lámfalussy, Sándor; Kun, Miklós (mindentudas.hu; Internet Website).
- 1610: Lánzos, Cornelius (after JJ O'Connor and F Robertson; turnbull.mcs.st-and.ac.uk; Internet Website).
- 1611: Láner, Kornél (oldtimer.hu; Internet Website).
- 1612: László, Ervin (c3.hu; Internet Website).
- 1613: Lázár, Andor; Petróczi, Éva; Debrecen Reformed College; Dobai, István; Tóth-Máthé, Miklós; Csomós, József, (reformatus.hu; Internet Website).
- 1614: Balázs, Dénes : Magyar Utazók Lexikona (Panoráma, Budapest, 1993).
1615. Augsburg-Lechfeld Battle (Hungarian-history.hu; Internet Website).
- 1616: Lehotka, Gábor (ecb.hu; Internet Website).
- 1617: Lencz, Géza; Módis, László (debrecen.hu; Internet Website).
- 1618: A magyarok őseinek szálláshelyei... (istvandr.kiszely.hu; Internet Website).
- 1619: Hungarian prehistory (wikipedia.org; Internet Website).
- 1620: Leviny, Ernő (kanga.freeblog.hu; Internet Website).
- 1621: Happál és társai: Jelképtár (Helikon Kiadó, Budapest, 1990).
- 1622: Lipizzan horse (Lippizan.org; Internet Website).
- 1623: Lipták, Béla (environmentbase.net; Internet Website).
- 1624: Deér, József: Die Heilige Krone Ungarns(1989); Katona, Tamás (ed): A korona kilenc évszázada (Pro Memoria, Budapest, 1979).
- 1625: Lőcse Wood-carving School (slovenskyraj-sk; Internet Website).
- 1626: Laskói kódex (Új Ember, Budapest, 27 Jan. 2002).
- 1627: Bosnyák, Zoltán in Révai Lexikon (III, p.59, Budapest, 1911); Sinyei, József: Magyar írók élete és művei (III, Budapest, 1941).
- 1628: Molnár, Miklós (w3szie.hu; Internet Website).
- 1629: Lance (kelevéz) (c3.hu; 72.14.235; Internet Website).
- 1630: Hegyi-Füstös, István: Biography (manuscript, 2006, Gyömrő).
- 1631: Kiss, János (kissj-isk.sulinet; Internet Website).
- 1632: Knefler, Frigyes (theoccident.com; Internet Website).
- 1633: Balog, Zoltán (xszazadintezet.hu; Internet Website).
- 1634: Csernus, Imre (drogma.hu; gportal.hu; Internet Websites).
- 1635: Falka, Sámuel (bikfalvi) (font.hu; Internet Website).
- 1636: Boglár, Lajos (mindentudas.hu; Internet Website).
- 1637: Benko-dixliland (benko-dixie.hu; Internet Website).
- 1638: Bakos, Gáspár Áron (cfa.harward.edu; Internet Website).
- 1639: András, Imre S.J. (communio.hu; Internet Website).
- 1640: Csikós (travelintelligence.net; Internet Website).
- 1641: Erdeki, Zsolt (erdeizsolt.hu; Internet Website).
- 1642: Hunyadi, Emese (vix.com; Internet Website).
- 1643: Für Lajos; Gidai, Erzsébet; Szájer, József (mkgyo.hu; Internet Website).
- 1644: Freedom Fight of 1956, Anniversary of (Hungary. Org; Internet Website).
- 1645: Bayer, Zsolt, Bencsik, András (Geocities.com; Internet Website).

- 1646: Dance House (tanchaz.hu; Internet Website).
- 1647: Collin McEvedy: Penguin Atlas of Medieval History (Penguin Books Ltd., Harmondworth, Middlesex, England 1961).
- 1648: Finns, Bulgars in The Columbia Encyclopedia (1969).
- 1649: D s, L szl  (majaz.hu; Internet Website).
- 1650: Demj n, Ferenc (gportal.hu; Internet Website).
- 1651: Estonia in Das Grosse Brockhaus I-XX (1928).
- 1652: Ga l, Botond (digit.drk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1653: Giczy, J nos (internetto..sopron; Internet Website).
- 1654: Csernus, Tibor; Gross, Arnold; Nov k, Lajos; Nyergesi, J nos; Reiner, Imre; Sa ry,  va; Sall , Istv n; Triznya, M ty s; Kokas, Ign c; Urb n, Gy rg; Kubinyi, Anna; Z. G cs, Gy rgy; Kepeny s, P l; Szentimrei, Judit; Toncz, Tibor;  jv ry, Lajos; Vadas, Ern ; V g , J zsef; Tur nyi, G bor; Varga, Lajos N ndor; Sajdik Ferenc, Schrammel, Imre Sz nt , Tibor; Sz sz, Endre; Udvardi, Erzs bet; Urai, Erika; W rtz,  d m; R k ssy, Csaba; Tevan, Margit; Tar, Istv n; Puhl, Antal; G bor, Zolt n; G l, Andr s (artportal.hu; Internet Website).
- 1655: Bergendi, Istv n (bergendy.hu; Internet Website).
- 1656: Nemzet Sportol i (nsh.hu; Internet Website).
- 1657: Ill s, Lajos (Ma.hu; Internet Website).
- 1658: Knefler, Frigyes (jewish.history.com; Internet Website).
- 1659: Kuruc Amy (hungarian-history. hu; Internet Website).
- 1660: Hungarian bow (answer.com; Internet Website).
- 1661: Maria's lament (enc.hu; Internet Website).
- 1662: Kalm r, Tibor (Kov cs, Istv n in Juventus R di , 1999).
- 1663: Berecz, Andr s (holnap.co.yu; Internet Website).
- 1664: Gergely, Istv nn : Atz l Endre (Erd ly.com./moldvai magyars g; Internet Website).
- 1665: M d falva peril (hungarian-history.hu; Internet Website).
- 1666: L szl , Gyula: Eml kezz nk r giokr l (M ra Kiad , Budapest, 1979).
- 1667: Cartographers (lazarus.elte.hu; Internet Website).
- 1668: Malonyai, Dezs : A magyarf n p m vészete I-IV (Franklin Kiad , Budapest, 1907).
- 1669: Makovecz, Imre (makovecz.hu; Internet Website).
- 1670: Man, the Development of...by Jen  Hillebrand, 1935: Die  ltere Steinzeit Ungarns in Archeologia Hungarica; Ottok r Kadi , 1934: Der Mensch zur Eiszeit in Ungarn; M rton P csi, 1974: The Lower Palaeolithic site at V rtessz l s in Magyar M lt, 3 (2).
- 1671: Cartographers (lazarus.elte.hu; Internet Website).
- 1672: Borb ndi, Gyula: Nyugati Magyar irodalmi lexikon  s bibliogr fia (Hitel, Budapest 1991; mek.oszk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1673: St.Margit (katolikus.hu; Internet Website).
- 1674: Maros, Mikl s (hem.frystorg.com; Internet Website).
- 1675: Martinovics, Ign c (hfki.hu; Internet Website).
- 1676: Martzy, Johanna (andante.com; Internet Website).
- 1677: K ri, Edit: Kik l ttek a Kossuth t ren okt ber 25- n? (MVSZ, Budapest, 2007).
- 1678: Pongr cz, Gergely: Korvin k z – 1956 (Chicago, Ill., 1958).
- 1679: M t , J nos, Osv th, J lia, L szl , Margit; Lehoczky,  va; Palcs , S ndor; R thy, Eszter; Szalma, Ferenc; Vir g, Endre; Vasady Balogh, Lajos; (muzsika.net; Internet Website).
- 1680: Mathi sz, J nos; Szegedi, Gergely (mek.oszk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1681: M ty s Church (kulturinfo.hu; Internet Website).
- 1682: Mez , Ferenc (kfki.hu; Internet Website).
- 1683: M ria Ter zia (the New World Encyclopedia, Funk and Wagnall's Online).
- 1684: Mindszenty, J zsef (rev.hu.; Internet Website).
- 1685: Mindszenty per (catholicculture.com; Internet Website; The Life and "Crime" of Cardinal Jozsef Mindszenty).
- 1686: Szak ly, Ferenc: Moh csi csata (in Sorsd nt  t rt nelmi napok 2, Budapest, 1975).
- 1687: Mosonmagyar v r massacre (freedomfighter 56.com; Internet Website).
- 1688: Szabolcsi, Bence: A magyar zenet rt net k zik nyve (Zenem kiad , Budapest, 1955).
- 1689: Murak z (answer.com; Internet Website).
- 1690: M sz ros M rta (filmunio.hu; Internet Website).
- 1691: Moesz, Guszt v (bot.nhumus.hu; Internet Website).
- 1692: Koestler, Arthur: The thirteenth tribe (Pan. books.Ltd, London, 1976).
- 1693: Hamilton, David (ed): The MetropolitanOpera Encyc lopedia (Simon and Schuster Inc. New York, 1987).
- 1694: Walter, Bruno: Gustav Mahler (The Greystone Press Inc. New York, 1941, 1973, 1985).
- 1695: N day,  rp d L :Magyaország a XX. sz zadban (mek.oszk.hu,Internet Website).
- 1696: N das, Clan of (vas.digitkonyvtar.hu; Internet Website).
- 1697: Matolcsy, Gy rgy (Magyar Hirlap Onine, 14 April, 2007, Budapest).

- 1698: Mező, Ferenc (mfg.hu; Internet Website).
- 1699: Makay, Miklós (Holokauszt Emlékközpont, hdk.e.hu; Internet Website).
- 1700: Madarász, Imre (fox.klte.hu; Internet Website).
- 1701: Nagy-Bánki, Mátyás (digit.drk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1702: Gömörí, George's Obituary on Gáspár Nagy (news.independent.co.uk; Internet Website).
- 1703: Nagy, Gyula (Botond Somogyi közlése, Kollozsvár, 2002).
- 1704: Molnár, Miklós; Gerzson, Pál; Bilek, István; Dózsa, László; Sapszon, Ferenc; Democratic Coalition Party, (mti.hu; Internet Website).
- 1705: Baráth, Tibor: A magyar népek őstörténete, I-III (Montreal, PQ., Canada, 1975).
- 1706: László, Gyula: A nagyszentmiklósi kincs (Corvina kiadó, Budapest, 1977).
- 1707: Naksol (ncbi.nlm.nih.gov; Internet Website).
- 1708: Joó, Annamária: Séta a sírkertben (vilagjaromagazin.hu; Internet Website).
- 1709: Nemzeti Színház (nemzetiszinhaz.hu; Internet Website).
- 1710: Nagybaconi Nagy, Vilmos (kiralyihagyomanyozok.hu; Internet Website).
- 1711: Kaáli Nagy, Dezső (unitarius.uw.hu; Internet Website).
- 1712: Magyar Művészeti Lexikon (muveszet.hu; Internet Website).
- 1713: Neuman, von John (after J. J. O'Connor and E.F. Robertson in uww-groups.dc.s.-st-and ac.uk; Internet Website).
- 1714: National Philharmonic Orchestra (info.omc.hu; Interbet Website).
- 1715: Mercurius Hungaricus (iki.elte.hu; Internet Website).
- 1716: Starcevo-Koros-Cris (comp.archeology.org; Internet Website).
- 1717: Nikolsburgi abc (magtudin.org; Internet Website).
- 1718: Sugar, P.F. (ed.): A History of Hungary (Indiana University Press, 1994).
- 1719: Nagy, Attila; Lontay, Margit; Lorán, Lenke; Kautzky, József; Sándor, Anna; Joe Eszterhas; Ujlaki, László; Tordai, Teri; Tordy, Géza; Nagy Anna; Fábri, Zoltán; Newman, Paul; Zsitkovszky, Béla; Jeney, Imre; Koltai, Lajos; Antal E. Nimrod; Somogyi, Nusi; Bónyi, Adorján; Somogyi, Nusi; Szakáts, Miklós; Titkos, Ilona; Újlaky László; Makay, Margit; Victor, Gedeon; Falk, Peter M (imdb.com; Internet Website).1720: Boros, Attila (Muzsika, Aprilis, 2004, p.2.).
- 1721: Orbán, Dezső (Keptar.demasz.hu; Internet Website).
- 1722: Neoquisition Comission (forumins.sk; Internet Website).
- 1723: Neoquisition Comission (olobogomm.hu; Internet Website).
- 1724: Borbándi, Gyula: Nyugati Magyar Irodalmi Lexikon és Bibliografia (mek.oszk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1725: Sandved, K.B. (ed.): The World of Muasic (The Wawerley Music Company Ltd. London, 1954).
- 1726: Oravecz, Pál (hiki.hu; Internet Website).
- 1727: Nagy, Iván (soundven ture.com; Internet Website).
- 1728: Kiss, Ulrich: Muzsly, István SJ (in Magyar Kurir 2005 június 27 and 30).
- 1729: Ormos, Mária (mindentudas.hu; Internet Website).
- 1730: Orvosi Lexikon. Kempelen, Farkas hallgatói info. közp. (hik.hu; Internet Website).
- 1731: Okolicsányi, Ferenc; Pacséry, Imre; Miller, Albert; Sipos, Pál; Sós, József.; Mészáros, Kálmán, (jelesnapok.neumann.haz; Internet Website).
- 1732: Orsolya, Erzsébet (filmortenet.hu; Internet Website).
- 1733: Oszvald, Marika (imdb.com; Internet Website).
- 1734: Óze, Lajos (ftvdb.bfi.org.uk; Internet Website).
- 1735: Fülöp, Attila; Lehel, György; Polgár, László; Sándor, Frigyes; Capella Savaria (Bach-cantatas.com; Internet Website).
- 1736: Ladányi, Imre (artporal.hu Internet Website).
- 1737: Lázár, Lajos (filmintezet.hu... Internet Website).
- 1738: Lehel, Ferenc (hic.hu; Internet Website).
- 1739: Kovács, Mária: Hungarian Aviation, with special thanks to Mr. Attila Szabó and Mr. Gábor Fekecs. (Pioneers of) (a.i.a.a.com; Internet Website).
- 1740: Lévai, Pál; Winter, Ernő, (porta l.bme.hu; Internet Website).
- 1741: Lóczy, Lajos Jr (maf.hu; Internet Website).
- 1742: Ladányi, Andrea; Szörényi, Éva; Reviczky, Gábor; Rozsos, István; Bárány, István; Sándor, Judit; Sas, József; Schubert, Éva; Seregi, László (2); Sinka, Károly; Solti, Bertalan; Szász, Péter; Szirmai, Albert, Sztankay, István; Jelenczki, István; Mészáros, Tamás; Koloss, István; Vass, Éva; Verebély, Iván; Voight, Ági; Kéri, Kálmán; Mózes, Attila; Dózsa László; Vidor, Dezső; Vidor, Ferike; Ragályi, Elemér; Rockenbauer, Pál; Rolla, János; Leblanc, Győző; Avar István; Uhrík, Teodóra; Rév, Lívia; (port.hu; Internet Website).
- 1743: Ladik, Klára (litera.hu; Internet Website).
- 1744: Láng, Rudolf (ivanffyuhar.com; Internet Website).
- 1745: Lustig, Gábor (informed.hu; Internet Website).
- 1746: Laki, Kálmán (vfmk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1747: Páhán, István (kfni.hu; Internet Website (Nagy, Árpád: Obituary)).
- 1748: Kubala, László (in MSO; Nemzeti Sportline.hu; Internet Website)..

- 1749: Pácz, Aladár (home.frognet.net; Internet Website).
- 1750: Marton, Edwin (last.fm/music; edwinmarton.com; Internet Website).
- 1751: New Zealand, Hungarians in (teara.govt.nz; hungarianconsulate.co.nz; Internet Websites).
- 1752: Kálazdy, Móric, Ecsedy, Ildikó; Fodor, Pál; Dávid, Géza; Turks' rule in Hungary; Jetting, Károly; Vámbéry, Ármin; Tökei, Ferenc; Vászolyi, Erik; Obrusánszky, Borbála, (Terebess Ázsia Lexikon; terebess.hu; Internet Website).
- 1753: Kováts, Ferenc Jr.; Stessel, Lajos, Istvánffy, Miklós (hik.hu; Internet Website).
- 1754: Csángó (National Geographic, June 2005).
- 1755: Karácsoni, Károly (Magyar-irodalom.elte.hu; Internet Website).
- 1756: Koltay, Valéria (muzsikus.net; Internet Website).
- 1757: Kónya, Sándor (Musical Times, The, Ltd., London, 2002; musicaltimes.co; Internet Website).
- 1758: Kútvölgyi, Erzsébet (vigszinhasz.hu; Internet Website).
- 1759: Kalmár, Magda (hzo.hu; Internet Website).
- 1760: Kazár, Lajos (udvardy.adatbank.transindex.ro; Internet Website).
- 1761: Kassai, György (papirusz.hu; Internet Website).
- 1762: Marczis, Demeter (baranyanet.hu; Internet Website).
- 1763: Kniezsa, István: Magyarország népei a XI. században (Szent István emlékkönyv, Franklin Társulat, Bp., 1938).
- 1764: Kasza, Éva (Magyar Szó Online, 26-27, March, 2007, Szabadka..).
- 1765: Hofi, Géza (hofi.hu; Internet Web site).
- 1766: Delly, Rózi (Muzsika, April, 2000. No. 4. Budapest).
- 1767: Orosz, Júlia (Muzsika, December, 1997, No.12, Budapest).
- 1768: Olympic Athletes (mob.hu; Internet Website).
- 1769: Kolnai, Aurél (ceusess.com; Internet Website).
- 1770: Kugler, Henrik (gerbeaud.hu; Internet Website).
- 1771: Meduna, László (time.com; Internet Website).
- 1772: M.S.M. mester (hungarta.hu; Internet Website).
- 1773: Magyar, Bálint (mbaltisk.extra.hu; Internet Website).
- 1774: Poszler, György (emc.elte.hu; Internet Website).
- 1775: Pécsi, Sándor (tvfilm.hu; Internet Website).
- 1776: Fábry, Sándor (showder.hu; Internet Website).
- 1778: Petényi, Géza (museumpk..sote; Internet Website).
- 1779: Pető, András (peto.hu; Internet Website).
- 1780: Plász, Béla (konyvtar.univet.hu; Internet Website).
- 1781: Politzer, Ádám, (whonamedit.com; Internet Website).
- 1782: Pannonhalma Abbey (museum.hu; bences.hu; Internet Websites).
- 1783: Papp, László (mob.hu; Internet Website).
- 1784: Imre, Saint in Vargha, Domján: Memorial of St. Imre (in Szent Imre emlékkönyv, 1907).
- 1785: Partridge (iowadnr.com; Internet Website).
- 1786: Polgár, Tibor; Sarlós, Andrew (thecanadianencyclopedia.com; Internet Website).
- 1787: Pege, Aladár (dunatv.hu, 24 September, 2006; Internet Website).
- 1788: B.G. Zichy-Woinarski "A question concerning certain views of Parthian History" in Hungarian Past (Magyar Múlt) 6 (2), 61-82 Sydney.
- 1789: The Columbia Encyclopedia, ed. by William Bridgwater and Seymour Kurtz (3rd edn.,1968), Columbia University Press.
- 1790: Petróczy, István (feltalaloink.hu; Internet Website).
- 1791: Petry, Béla Albert (hungaria.org; Internet Website).
- 1792: Pikéthy Tibor (pikethy.uw.hu; Internet Website).
- 1793: Pilis Abbey; Rock Chapel Buda; (kolostorut.hu; Internet Website).
- 1794: The New World Encyclopedia, ed. Michael Upshall, (Century Hutchinson Ltd., London, UK., 1988).
- 1795: Pápai, Erika, Pápai, Erzsi; Piros, Ildikó; Végh, Péter, (magyarszinhasz.hu; Internet Website).
- 1796: Codexes (libraries.theeuropeanlibrary.org; Internet Website).
- 1797: Párta, Lilla (tancelet.hu; Internet Website).
- 1798: Gyepű (heraldikakiado.hu; Internet Website).
- 1799: Erdélyi, István: The Art of the Avars (Corvina Press, Budapest, 1966).
- 1800: McEvedy, Colin: The Penguin Atlas of Ancient History (Penguin Books Ltd.)
- 1801: Paris Peace Treaty (development.vbcom.net; Internet Website).
- 1802: Soós, Árpád dr: Párizsi békeszerződések (typescript, Debrecen, 2009).
- 1803: Pungur, Joseph dr.: Trianon from the West – Paris from the East (in Honlevél MVSZ., 6.évf.,3..sz., 2007).
- 1804: Pécsi, Sebestyén (pecsisebestyen.freeweb.hu; Internet Website).
- 1805: Parliament Building (talkingcities.co.uk; Internet Website).
- 1806: Puskás, Tivadar (sasovits.hu; Internet Website).
- 1807: Kováts, Tibor (tancelet.hu; Internet Website).
- 1808: Kőszeghy, Károly (vasidigitkonyvtar.hu; Internet Website).

- 1809: Kútvölgyi Erzsébet (vigszan haz.hu; Internet Website).
- 1810: Macartney, C.A.: Hungary and her successors (Oxford UP., London, New York, Toronto, 1937, 1968).
- 1811: Jancsovics, Antal (Muzsika, 5 September, Budapest).
- 1812: Jemnitz, Sándor (info.tmc.hu; Internet Website).
- 1813: Lakitelek (Magyar Nemzet, daily, 29 Szeptember, 2007, Budapest).
- 1814: Medak, Peter (britmovie.co.uk; Internet Website).
- 1815: Miskolczi, László (Szoboszlokepeskonyve.hu; Internet Website).
- 1816: Meyer Konversataions - Lexikon, 6th. edn., 1-21 vols. Bibliographisches Institut.Leipzig und Wien, 1903- 09.
- 1817: Kubinyi, András; Csányi, Vilmos, Ritoók, Zsigmond; Kósa, László; Kiss, Elemér; Víz, E. Szilveszter; Ritoók, Zsigmond (2); Tüskés, Gábor; Tardos, Gábor; Kulcsár, Kálmán; Toró, Tibor (1) (mta.hu; Internet Website).
- 1818: Forrai, Sándor Munkássága by Szakácsné Klára Friedrich and Gábor Szakács (typescript, Budapest, 2007).
- 1819: Kniezsa István: Magyarország népei a XI. században (in Szt. István Emlékkönyv (Franklin Társulat, Budapest, 1938).
- 1820: Zoltán, János; Radics, Béla (vadhajmultiply.com; Internet Website).
- 1821: Jereton; Rajk-per; Thoroczky Family; Újváry, Ignác, (kislexikon.hu; Internet Website).
- 1822: Rajkai, Pál (hgkmo var.hu; Internet Website).
- 1823: Kahler, Frigyes: Sortüze – 1956(Igazságügyi Minisztérium, Antológia Kiadó, Budapest,1993).
- 1824: Nagyrévi dr- Bappel, György: Hustárok (Corvina Kiadó, Budapest, 1973).
- 1825: Lukinich, Imre: Rákóczi I.II. (Franklin Társulat, Budapest, 1934).
- 1826: Cúth, János: Az év embere: Patrubby, Miklós (in Kanadai/Amerikai Magyarság, weekly, Toronto, 5 January, 2005).
- 1827: Poland, Hungarians in (electronicmuseum.ca; Internet Website).
- 1828: Hungarian POW-s in Soviet Union (hm.goc.hu; Internet Website)
- 1829: Religious Orders in Hungary, Roman Catholic:Országos Katolikus Névtár, edited by Mária Káldy, Balázs Mig. (II. Szerzetesi kötet, Szent Gellért Press, Budapest 2001); Tibor Horváth, S.J. professor of Systematic Theology, Regis College, Toronto, Canada; Peter Nemeshegyi, S.J professor and director of Faludi Academy, Budapest, Hungary.
- 1830: Reményi Schneller, Lajos (freedom.hu; Internet Website).
- 1831: Resettlement in Hungary (mek.iif.hu; Internet Website).
- 1832: Friedrich, Klára: Rovásírás (manuscript, 10 January, 2008, Budapest).
- 1833: Nadányi Chronicle in György Szabados: A Krónikától a Gestáig (Itk cikk, 209.85.173.104; Internet Website).
- 1834: Steid, Imre (library.univet.hu; Internet Website).
- 1835: Norway, Hungarians in (mbk-norvegia.org; Internet Website).
- 1836: Simonyi, Charles (edge.org; Internet Website).
- 1837: Szabados, Árpád (mke.hu; Internet Website).
- 1838: Somogyi, József (gyel.gyor.hu; Internet Website).
- 1839: Szabados, György (fono.hu; Internet Website).
- 1840: Államvédelmi Hivatal (szabadnet.origo.hu; Internet Website).
- 1841: Dusicza, Ferenc: History of the Reformed Church in Hungary (reformaus.hu; Internet Website).
- 1842: Mapsofworld.com. (Internet Website).
- 1843: Marác, László: Szentkatolnai Bálint, Gábor (atw.hu: Internet Website).
- 1844: Scitovsky, Tibor (matud.iif.hu: Internet Website).
- 1845: Marác, László (maraczlaszlo.atw.hu; Internet Website).
- 1846: Sebestyén, Jenő (proteo.hu; Internet Website).
- 1847: Dusicza, Ferenc and others: A Short History of the Reformed Church in Hungary (Kálvin J. Kiadó, Budapest, 1977).
- 1848: Svédország magyarok (Hunsor; geocities.com; Internet Website).
- 1849: Sántha, Károly (Dunántúli Harangszó, Julius 2003; church.lutheran.hu; Internet Website).
- 1850: Sávoly, Pál (hidak.hu; Internet Website).
- 1851: Szíki, Károly: Autobiography (MS).
- 1852: Ránki, Dezső; Pálúr, János; Victor, Máté; Kecskés Ensemble; Kalló, Zsolt; Kocsár, Mikló; Lantos, István, Perényi, Miklós; Perényi Eszter; Solti, Sir George; Szöllösy, András; Zempléni, Kornél; (bmc.hu; Internet Website).
- 1853: Református Pedagógiai Intézet Kolozsvár, Somogyi, Botond közlése, 2007.
- 1860: Samuely, Tibor (anarsi.com; Internet Website).
- 1861: Sebestyén, Jenő (proteo.hu; Internet Website).
- 1862: Skaricza, Máté, in Szigeti, Jenő: Évszázadok fénye (Confessio, 1994. 4, Budapest).
- 1863: Somogyi, László in Kerekes, István: Volt egyszer egy magyar karmester... (Kunst & Cultuur, 2005, Budapest).
- 1864: Süli, András (algyo.hu; Internet Website).
- 1865: Revisionist movement in Hungary, in Hungary the unwilling stallite (hungarianhistory.com; Internet Website).
- 1866: Kovács, Anikó: Adalékok a magyar revizionista mozgalom történetéhez (regifolyoirat.hu; Internet Website).
- 1867: Riesz, Marcell (csillagaszattortenet, csillagaszat.hu; Internet Website).
- 1868: Perényi, Miklós; Solti, György; Illényi, Katica; Meixner, Mihály; Sólyom Nagy, Sándor; Schiffer, András; Szokolay, Sándor; Vass, Lajos; Sándor, János, (fidelio.hu; Internet Website).
- 1869: Horkovics Kováts, János Péter (Biography, kézirat, Dingolfing, 2008).
- 1870: Pécsi, Eszter (gsonline.hu; Internet Website).

- 1871: Szakály, Sándor (kupe.hu; nbk.hu; Internet Websites).
- 1872: Sarlós, Róbert Károly (Biography, after Béla Lipták, 31 August, 2008, USA).
- 1873: Varga, Zsigmond (drk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1874: Unitarianism by Szabó László; translated by Koncz László and Czire Szabolcs (unitarius.com; Internet Website).
- 1875: Bütösi, János: 62 nap a föld körül (Confessio, 1984; reformatus.hu; Internet Website).
- 1876: Ráday Library (kre.hu; Internet Website).
- 1877: Rudnai, Béla (kre.hu; Internet Website).
- 1878: A (Cseh)szlovákiai magyarok kislexikona (forumnist.sk; Internet Website).
- 1879: Stalin, Joseph (bbc.uk; Internet Website).
- 1880: Manninger, Jenő (mno.hu, October 5, 2008; Index.hu, October 4, 2008; Internet Website).
- 1881: Szenes, Iván (andy.hu; Internet Website).
- 1882: Marsigli (minerac.org; Internet Website), Lázini, Miklós András in Magyar Hírlap, 9 October 2008, Budapest).
- 1883: Lotharingiai, Károly, Muhi, Battle of (bel.freeweb.hu; Internet Website).
- 1884: Sárosi, György dr (vb.sportklub.hu; ftc.hu; Internet Websites).
- 1885: Szakonyi, Károly (pmk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1886: Szász, János (hirextra.hu; Internet Website).
- 1887: A török kiűzése Magyarországról (bel.freeweb.hu; Internet Website).
- 1888: Szilvay, Kornél (feltalalo.hu; Internet Website).
- 1889: Szinte, Gábor (festomuvesz.hu; Internet Website).
- 1890: Schleicher, László: A (Cseh)szlovák magyarok kislexikona 1978-tól (forumnist.sk; Internet Website).
- 1891: Schmidt, Mária (orwell.hu; Internet Website).
- 1892: Marton Lefébre, Julia (belfold.ma; cciced.org; Internet Websites).
- 1893: Marton, Kati (MTA.hu; gondola.hu; Internet Websites; Chronicles Magazin 18 March 2008, USA).
- 1894: Szilágyi, Ákos (primmedia.hu; Internet Websites).
- 1895: Sárosi, György dr (vb.sportklub.tv; ftc.hu; Internet Websites).
- 1896: Tolnai Nagylexikon (DVD, Multimedia.PCCD-Roma. I-XVIII kötet, 1928).
- 1897: Tangl, Ferenc; Tolnai, Sándor; Tormay, Béla (konyvtar.univet.hu; Internet Website).
- 1898: Kiszely, István dr: Az ősmagyarok fegyverzete (kiszely.hu; Internet Website).
- 1899: Kennedy, Tom (canadahun.com; Internet Website).
- 1900: Jelenczky, Isván (jelenczky.hu; Internet Website).
- 1901: Javasasszony (rpg.hu; Internet Website).
- 1902: Jordanes (ludens.elte.hu; Internet Website).
- 1903: Vizin, Viktória (viktoriavizin.com; Internet Website).
- 1904: Jugarok (tolnaigyuri.uw.hu; Internet Website).
- 1905: Takács, Kati (muveszek.hu; Internet Website).
- 1906: Takács, Klára (ifo.bmc.hu; Internet Website).
- 1907: Takács, Mária; Sugár, András, (mtv.hu; Internet Website).
- 1908: Zoványi, Jenő: Magyarországi protestáns egyházörténeti kislexikon (digit.drk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1909: Kormorán Ensemble (komoranfolk.hu; Internet Website).
- 1910: Kárpátia Zenekar (network.hu; Internet Website).
- 1911: Keresztes, Kálmán (c3.hu; Internet Website).
- 1912: László T. László (Gondola Online, 27 December, 2008, Budapest; gondola.hu; Internet Website).
- 1913: Magas, István (MS. from Mrs. Dóra Magas, 2008, Calgary).
- 1914: Korzenszky, Richárd Miklós (C.V. from P.Szabó, György, 2009).
- 1915: Losonczy, Áron (hvg.hu; Internet Website).
- 1916: Kercaszomor (mno.hu; 7 February 2009, Internet Website).
- 1917: Töltéssy, Zoltán (sdgszarszo.hu; Internet Website).
- 1918: Nicolsburg Peace Treaty; Kazinczy codex.; Székely, Kános, (mek.niif.hu; Internet Website).
- 1919: The Columbia Encyclopedia, eds. W. Bridgwater & S. Kurtz, 3rd edn. 1968, pp. 1974-1975; G.Z. Földváry (1988) Geology of the Carpathian Region, 75-176, 265-273, 274-275; Encyclopaedia Britannica, 15th edn. 1977, 2002, 883-884; C.A. Macartney (1968), Hungary and her Successors, chapter on Slovakia 73-199; Colin McEvedy (1961), The Penguin Atlas of Medieval History, pp. 14-52.
- 1920: Aradi, Éva (Biography 1, MS., Miskolc, 2008).
- 1921: Röck, István (loero.hu; Internet Website).
- 1922: Róna, Emy (magyarkronika.wm; Internet Website).
- 1923: New World Encyclopedia (by Michael Upshall (Century Hutchinson. Ltd., London 1988).
- 1924: Congregatio Jesu (Angol kiasszonyok) (uj.katolikus.hu; Internet Website).
- 1925: Szamosközi, István (Sz.I. in Memoriam, by Ladányi, Sándor, in, No.22, June 2003, Budapest).
- 1926: Domonkos Rend Magyarországon (ed. Illés, Pál Attila, Z. Czigány, Balázs, Piliscsaba, Pázmány Péter Katolikus Egyetem, 2007).
- 1927: Camerata Hungarica (sztaki.hu; Internet Website).

- 1928: Csohány, János dr: A Debreceni Református Kollégium, MS. Debrecen, 2008).
- 1929: Kálmán, Lajos; Osváth Viktor (MS from Pungur, Béla, Kecskemét, 2008).
- 1930: Marik, Miklós (Csillagasztorinet, csillagaszat.hu; Internet Website).
- 1931: Dancs, Rózsa (Biography, MS., Montreal, Québec, 2008).
- 1932: Aradi, Éva (Biography 2, MS., Budapest, 2008).
- 1933: Szakács, Gábor (Biography 1, MS., Budapest, 2008).
- 1934: Szakács, Gábor (Biography 2, MS., Budapest, 2008).
- 1935: Magtudin (Magyarságtudományi Intézet, USA, magtudin.org; Internet Website).
- 1936: Gencsi, Sári (index.hu; Internet Website, 7 May, 2008); Sükösd, Mihály (12 October 2000); Sajdik Ferend (19 August 2010).
- 1937: Csollány, Szilveszter (nssz.hu; Internet Website).
- 1938: Cserey, Erzsébet (MS., from Szíki, Károly, Eger, 2008).
- 1939: Varga, Erzsébet: In memoriam Cserey Erzsébet (gimagine.com; Internet Website).
- 1940: Mózes, Edit: Csíksomlyói búcsú (in article in pozitív_negatív.ro; Internet Website).
- 1941: Kovács, Bálint: Dr. Bodoky Richárd a diakonissza szolgálat tudósa (1908-1996) in Confessio 1966 Budapest).
- 1942: Bíró, Zoltán (nemzetiforum.hu; Internet Website).
- 1943: Gömböc (origo.hu; gombos.eu; Internet Websites).
- 1944: Harmatta, János (ungarisches.institut.de; Internet Website).
- 1945: Arvisura (arvisura.freeweb; arvisura.van.hu; Internet Websites).
- 1946: Szilágyi, Ákos (Kislexikon; server2001.rev.hu; Internet Website).
- 1947: Benes, Eduard (spartacus.schoolnet.co.uk; Internet Website).
- 1948: Magass Miklós (Lengyel, Károly: on Return of Hungarian Crown (27 May 2008, nemzetihirhalo.hu; Internet Website).
- 1949: Holy Crown of Hungary, returning of (28 May 2008, nemzetihirhalo.hu; Internet Website).
- 1950: Ósbudavár (day.hu & geoaching.hu; Internet Websites).
- 1951: Blága, Károly (Boros, Károly interjúja; Horváth, Lajos közlése, Torontó).
- 1952: Dénes, János (magtuding.org; Internet Website).
- 1953: Grandpierre, Attila (magyarmenedek.com; Internet Website).
- 1954: Darai, Lajos Mihály (kodolány.hu; Internet Website).
- 1955: Gyárfás, Ágnes (Biography from P.Szabó, György, May 2008, Budapest).
- 1956: Zsirai, Miklós: A magyarság őstörténe (MTA & Franklin Társulat, Budapest, 1943).
- 1957: Böszörményi Nagy, László (juditti.hu; Internet Website).
- 1958: Tolsztoz, Sz.P.: Az ősi Chorezm (Hungária Könyvkiadó, Budapest, 1950; Meszlényi, Róbert, Imre: A vallásalapító ősmagyarok két lilioma..., A szerző kiadása, Budapest, 2002).
- 1959: Csohány, János dr (Biography, MS., Debrecen, 2008).
- 1960: Bíró, András Zsolt (Biography, MS., Budapest, 2008).
- 1961: Hungarológia (enc.hu; Internet Website).
- 1962: Kristóf, János (Budapest-art.com; Internet Website).
- 1963: Szabadi, Sándor (Pungur, Béla: Feljegyzések Sz.S. életéről, MS., Kecskemét, 2008).
- 1964: Tihanyi, Kálmán (sasovits.hu; Internet Website).
- 1965: Kislexikon.hu; Internet Website.
- 1966: Kovács, Ildikó: Mangalica (uj-.dieta.hu; Internet Website).
- 1967: Bíró, Zoltán írása alapján (mho.hu; Internet Website, 26 January 2009, Budapest).
- 1968: Obrusánszky, Borbála & Marác, László dr: Magyar kapcsolatok (Manuscript, Budapest, 2009).
- 1969: Space travelers, Hungarian (vfe, vmfk.hu & planetologia.elte.hu; Internet Websites).
- 1970: Vajda, László (ungarisches-institut.de; Internet Website).
- 1971: Váledí, Béla: A rendszerváltás...(A nagy kirándulás kora, 2001.4, Budapest) (historia.hu; Internet Website).
- 1972: Zalatnay, Sarolta (storyline.hu; Internet Website).
- 1973: Újszászy, Kálmán (Confessio, 1993.3, Református Zsinati Iroda, Budapest).
- 1974: Zempléni, Kornél (bach-cantatas.com.& info.bmc.hu; Internet Websites).
- 1975: Lóránt, Károly (magyarkonzervatit.hu; Internet Website).
- 1976: Khrushchev, Nikita (bbc.co.uk; Internet Website).
- 1977: Lengyel, Károly (tenkker.hu; Internet Website).
- 1978: Laky, Zsuzsanna (sztatlexikon.hu; Internet Website).
- 1979: Takaró, Mihály (fasori.hu; Internet Website).
- 1980: Záray, Márta & Vámosi, János (allmusic.hu; Internet Website).
- 1981: Virágh, András (members.chello.hu; Internet Website).
- 1982: Malí, Katalin: Orona kalauz (myorganmusic.com; Internet Website).
- 1983: Végvári, Vazul (mno.hu; Internet Website).
- 1984: Magyar Politikusok (freedom.hu; Internet Website).
- 1985: Victims of Bolshevic...(mho.hu; Internet Website, 24 April 2009).
- 1986: Ruyter, Michiel de (members.lycos.nl; Internet Website).
- 1987: Iron Curtain (mno.hu; Internet Website, 3 May 2009)

- 1988: Zas, Lorant (krater.hu; Internet Website).
- 1989: Rózsáligeti, László: Rácz, Lajos (2008 Budapest, shvoong.com; Internet Website).
- 1990: Táltos (mek.iif.hu; Internet Website).
- 1991: Tihanyi, László (fidelio.hu; Internet Website).
- 1992: Török uralom Magyarországon (enc.hu; Internet Website).
- 1993: Ráta, Dániel (eduline.hu & szemeszter.hu; Internet Websites).
- 1994: Nagy, L. Gábor (Autobiograohy, Emonton, 2009).
- 1995: Koltay, Gergely (kairos.hu; Internet Website).
- 1996: Knézy, Jenő (mtv.hu; Internet Website).
- 1997: Potsdam Conference (masodikvilaghaboru.hu; Internet Website).
- 1998: Yalta Conference (bibl.szeged.hu; Inernet Website).
- 1999: Tabányi, Mihály (allmusic.hu; Internet Website).
- 2000: Art-portal.hu; Internet Website.
- 2001: Sára, Sándor (filmunio.hu; Internet Website).
- 2002: Sher-Gil, Anrita (nol.hu; Internet Website, 22 August 2009).
- 2003: Hóman vol. i, in Hóman and Szekfü (1935): History of Hungary vols. i-v (Magyar Történet), István Lázár (1990): Hungary, A Brief History; Peter Sugar, Péter Hanák & Tibor Frank (1990): A History of Hungary, Ferenc Glatz ed. and partial author (1996): The Chronicle of Hungarians (A magyarok krónikája), Nemzeti hírháló, 2009 July.
- 2004: Turanian Curse (hhrf.org/kárpátiigazszo; Intenet Website, 12 July, 2007).
- 2008: Jobbik (jobbik.hu; Internet Website).
- 2009: Vukics, Ferenc (193.224.76.4; Internet Website).
- 2010: Magyar's Alliance (magyarokszövetsége.hu; Internet Website).
- 2011: Meszlényi, Zoltán L. (mho.hu Internet Website, 12 September, 2009).
- 2012: Makk Family (webartestore.com; Internet Website).
- 2013: Sucsan, Charles (sucsan.ca; Internet Website).
- 2014: Kőrösi Csoma, Sándor (lotsawaschool.org; Internet Website).
- 2015: Tíbetan-Hungarian relation (Czakó, Gábor írása után, karpatiharsona.info; Internet Websie).
- 2016: Kovács, Ákos; Miklósa, Erika, Varnus, Xavér, Érdi, Tamás; Szakcsi Lakatos Béla, (zene.hu; Internet Website).
- 2017: Yuezhi (indopedia.org; Internet Website).
- 2018: Szombathely (szombathely.hu; Internet Website).
- 2019: Bulak people (tibor-borsos.blogspot.hu; Internet Website).
- 2020: Iancu, Laura (hungarianambiance.com; Internet Website).
- 2021: Imreh, István (korunk.org; Intgernet Website).
- 2022: Széles, Gábor (amcsam.hu; Internet Website).
- 2023: Metzenauer, Margaret (weblaopera.com; Internet Website).
- 2024: Tatros Bible (magyartheologia.lapunk.hu; Internet Website).
- 2025: Ural Altaic Languages by Robert Austerlicz Abondolo, Daniel, Hungarian Inflectional Morphology (1989); Benke, Loránd, and Imre, Samu, eds., The Hungarian Language (1972); Collinder, Bjorn, An Introduction to the Uralic Languages (1965); Comrie, Bernard, Languages of the Soviet Union (1981); Hakulinen, Lauri, The Structure and Development of the Finnish Language (1953-55; Eng. trans., 1961); Menges, Karl H., The Turkic Languages and People: An Introduction to Turkic Studies (1968); Miller, Roy Andrew, Japanese and Other Altaic Languages (1971); Poppe, Nicholas, Introduction to Altaic Linguistics (1965) and Mongolian Language Handbook (1970); Raun, Alo, Essays in Finno-Ugric and Finnic Linguistics (1971); Shirokogoroff, S. M., Ethnological and Linguistical Aspects of the Ural-Altaic Hypothesis (1970); Vago, R., The Sound Pattern of Hungarian (1980) (members.trypoid.com; Internet Website).
- 2026: Transylvania: Köpeczi (ed.-in-chief, 1987: Erdély Története (History of Transylvania) I-III; The Columbia Encyclopedia, eds. W. Bridgwater & S. Kurtz, 3rd edn. 1968; G.Z. Földváry (1988): Geology of the Carpathian Region; S. Sisa (1984): The Spirit of Hungary; C.A. Macartney (1968): Hungary and her Successors, chapter on Transylvania; Colin McEvedy (1961) The Penguin Atlas of Medieval History; C. McEvedy (1972) The Penguin Atlas of Modern History (to 1815); W. Bray & D. Trump (1970): The Penguin Dictionary of Archaeology.
- 2027: Soós, Árpád: Trianon (MS, Debrecen, 2007).
- 2028: Szöcs, Géza (Új Ember, Weekly, 29 November, 2009, Budapest).
- 2029: Lendvai, Ildikó (Tornádó hírközlő, 29 December, 2009 Budapest; Internet ebsite).
- 2030: Kaláka Ensemble (ebai.com; Internet Website).
- 2031: Érdy Kódex (varoslod.hu; Internet Website).
- 2032: Kenyérmező Battle (mommo.hu; Internet Website).
- 2033: Kerpely, Antal (joszerencset. hu; Internet Website).
- 2034: Vámos-Tóth, Bátor (telia-com and lelekt.eoldal.hu; Internet Website).
- 2035: University of Keszthely (georgikon.hu; Internet Website).
- 2036: Partium Keresztyén Egyetem (partium.ro; Intgernet Website).
- 2037: Corvinus Library (Tájékoztató, Hamilton, Ont. Canada, szeptember 2009).
- 2038: Király, Ede (sportforum.hu; Internet Website)

- 2039: Vályi Nagy, Ervin (Szűcs, Ferenc: In Memoriam V.N.E. in Confessio 1994/1, M.R.E., Budapest).
- 2040: Térey-Smith, Mary (classiconline.com; Internet Website).
- 2041: Széchenyi István Egyetem (sze.hu; Internet Website).
- 2042: Béla Bartók String Quartet Ensemble (britannica.com; Internet Website).
- 2043: Muraközi Horse (horses.wikia.com; Internet Website).
- 2044: Kobzos Kiss, Tamás (népzeneiskola.hu; Internet Website).
- 2045: Koch, Sándor (stop.hu; 18 February 2009, Internet Website).
- 2046: Kodály Institution (kodaly-inst.hu; Internet Website).
- 2047: Kodály Quartet (kodalyquartet.com; Internet Website).
- 2048: Kóka, Rozália (folkinfo.hu; Internet Website).
- 2049: Lukin, László (baja.hu; Internet Website).
- 2050: Maczkó, Mária (eletfa.uw.hu; Internet Website).
- 2051: Mistral Music Ensemble (misztral.hu; Internet Website).
- 2052: Muharai, Elemér (muharaiszovetseg.hu; Internet Website).
- 2053: Muzsikás Hungarian Folkmusic Ensemble (muzsikas.hu; Internet Website).
- 2054: Orczay, Csaba (indiana.edu; Internet Website).
- 2055: Várpalota (Palace of the Buda Castle) (regnumportal.hu; Internet Website).
- 2056: Vay Family (vaja.hu; Internet Website).
- 2057: Vienna Awards (encyclopedia.com; Internet Website).
- 2058: Varga, Richard Steven (math.kent.edu; Internet Website).
- 2059: About the Hungarian Language (magtudin.com; Internet Website).
- 2060: World War I, Hungary in (staff.lib.msu.edu; wikipedia.org; richthoffen.com; thinkingquest.org; Internes Websites).
- 2061: Western Hungary (szentkoronaradio.com; Internet Website).
- 2062: Ritoók, Zsigmond (2) (colbud.hu; Internet Website).
- 2063: Sugár, András (mtv.hu; Internet Website).
- 2064: Tökéczki, László (xxszazadintezet.hu; Internet Website).
- 2065: Segesváry, Victor's Article (M.S. 2009, Switzerland).
- 2066: Simonffy, Gyula (derimuz.hu; Internet Website).
- 2067: Tarján, Ferenc (pantheon.hu; Internet Website).
- 2068: Sumerians: Ceram, C. W, Gods, Graves and Scholars – The History of Archeology. 2nd. Revised and enlarged ed. London/Toronto/New York, Bantam Books (1967); Érdy, Miklós, The Sumerian, Ural-Altai, Magyar Relationship: A History of Research. Part I: The 19th Century. New York, Gilgamesh (1974); Kramer, Samuel Noah, The Sumerians – Their History, Culture and Character. Chicago/London, The University of Chicago Press (1963); Zakar, András, A sumér hűvilág és a Biblia (Sumerian Beliefs and the Bible), Garfield, N.J., Turán Printing (1972).
- 2069: Kuvasz, Hungarian (canadaguidetodogs.com; Internet Website).
- 2070: Trianon PeaceTreaty, Statesmen on (World Federation of Hungarians' Document).
- 2071: Sorg, Antal (leanyfalu.hu; Internet Website).
- 2072: 2nd Orbán Government (MNO Internet Portal, 20 May, 2009).
- 2073: P.Szabó, György CV (MS, 11 June 2010, Budapest).
- 2074: Iványi, Sándor: Constitution of Hungary, a summary; his Website).
- 2075: Tahy Clan and Family (tahy.hu; Internet Website).
- 2076: Tihany Abbey (hungarystartshere.com; Internet Website).
- 2077: Toplica Abbey (cecol.com; Internet Website).
- 2078: Partium Christian University (partium.ro; Internet Website).
- 2079: Végel, László (vegel.org; Internet Website).
- 2080: Tüskés, Tibor (MNO hu; Internet Portal, 2 December 2009).
- 2081: Varga, Csaba (vargacsaba.hu; Internet Website).
- 2082: Vas, István (yivoencyclopedia.org; Internet Website).
- 2083: Báthory, Prince Gábor (atti.info; Internet Website).
- 2084: Vekerdí, László (FN.hu; Internet Website).
- 2085: Reigl, Judit (judit-reigl.com; estihirlap.hu, Internet Website, 1 August 2010).
- 2086: Rotter, Lajos (hupont.hu; Internet Website).
- 2087: Sebestyén, Farkas, Ilona (emlekev.hu; zek.org; Internet Website).
- 2088: Sebő Ensemble (kulturalis.tv; Internet Website).
- 2089: Schweitzer, Pál (loero.hu; Internet Website).
- 2090: Szelényi, Károly (kepes.society.bme.hu; Internet Website).
- 2091: Révész, László (2) (regeszet.org.hu; Internet Website).
- 2092: Szőkefalvi-Nagy, Béla (termeszetvilaga.hu; Internet Website).
- 2093: Szisz, Ferenc (spiritus-temporis.com; Internet Website).
- 2094: Szentmártoni Szabó, Géza (mandula.pte.hu; Internet Website).
- 2095: Szalai, Lajos (kulturport.hu; Internet Website).
- 2096: Bortnyik, Sándor (weimrart.blogspot.com; Internet Website).

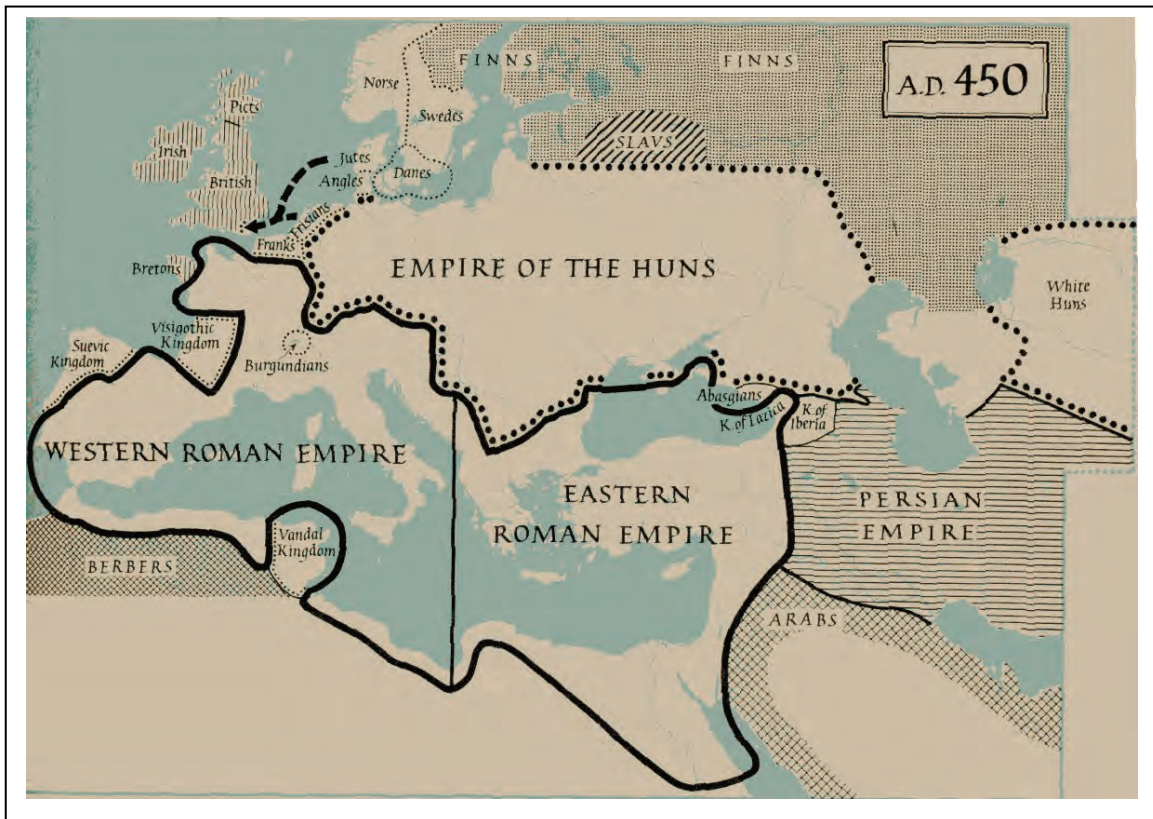

- 2097: Tarján, Imre (iucr.org; természetvilaga.hu; Internet Websites).
- 2098: Vigh, Tamás (artnet.fr; Internet Website).
- 2099: Zelnik, József (mmakademia.hu; Internet Website).
- 2100: Zétényi, Zsolt (jobbkamaraert.hu; Internet Website).
- 2101: Móricz János (aranylaci.freeweb.hu; Internet Website).
- 2102: Kiss B. Attila (warnermusic.hu; Internet Website).
- 2103: Vikidal, Gyula (wikipedia.org; Internet Website).
- 2104: Szegedi-Maszák, Aladár (Obituary, New York Times, 27 March 1988, nytimes.com; Internet Website).
- 2105: Wittmann, Feren (Rudósnaptár, kfki.hu; Internet Webdite).
- 2106: Vasváry, Ödön (epa.oszk.hu; Internet Website).
- 2107: Ütő, Endre (utoendre.hu; Internet Website).
- 2108: Hornyik, György. Hornyik, Miklós (hosis.wmmi.org; Internet Website).
- 2109: Csaba, László (pds.ceu.hu; Internet Website).
- 2110: Szaniszló, Ferenc (echoTV.hu; Internet Website).
- 2111: Magyar Nemzeti Sportszövetség (nssz.hu; Internet Website).
- 2112: Codex Literature (nyelvemlekek.oszk.hu; Internet Website).
- 2113: Obrusánszky, Borbála (hungarianampbiance.com; Internet Website).
- 2114: Tóth, Miklós Tamás (unvp.eu; Internet Website).
- 2115: Bolvári, Antal (magyarhirlap.hu, Internet Website, 29 January 2011, Budapest).
- 2116: Ella, István (hodog.hu; Internet Website).
- 2117: National Philharmonic Orchestra (filharmonikusok.hu; Internet Website).
- 2118: Peller, Károly (operettszinhaz.hu; Internet Website).
- 2119: Sopron Division (by Prof. Antal Kozak, UBSC Canada).
- 2120: Pleszkán, Ferenc (quart.hu; Internet Website).
- 2121: Makkai, Ádám (makkai.org; Internet Website).
- 2122: Metzger, Frigyes (Obituary from Miklós Szigeti, Cancouver, BC, Canada).
- 2123: Forrai, Sándor: Az ősi magyar rovásírás az ókortól napjainkig (Antológia, Lakitelek, 1994).
- 2124: Tüski, István (parokia.hu; Internet Website).
- 2125: Religious Orders in Hungary, Roman Catholic: Országos Katolikus Névtár, edited by Mária Káldy, Balázs Mig. (II. Szerzetesi kötet. Budapest: Szent Gellért Press 2001); Tibor Horváth, S.J. professor of Systematic Theology, Regis College, Toronto, Canada; Peter Nemeshegyi, S.J professor and director of Faludi Academy, Budapest, Hungary.
- 2126: Astronomy in Hungary (mek.nif.hu; Internet Website).
- 2127: M. Szabó, Imre: his CV and Nemenyi. Net; Website (17 September, 2000).
- 2128: Belovai, István (telegraph.co.uk; Website, 17 November 2009).
- 2129: História-Tudósnaptár (kfki.hu; Internet Website).
- 2130: Szerzetesek Dél-Amerikában, In: Forrai Sándor: Az ősi magyar rovásírás az ókortól napjainkig. (Lakitelek, 1994).
- 2131: Csermák, Antal György (answers.com, Internet Website).
- 2132: Mohács, Historical Site of (mohacs.hu; Internet Website).
- 2133: Bacque: Other Losses - An Investigation Into the Mass Deaths of German Prisoners at the Hands of the French and the Americans After World War II. (Toronto, Stoddart Publishing Co., 1989).
- 2134: Biography of Béla István Boros (manuscript, Budapest, 2012).

Map of Hungary under Louis the Great of Hungary (1342 – 1382) and Poland (1370-1382)

LIST OF PICTURES

- |                          |                        |                        |
|--------------------------|------------------------|------------------------|
| Ábrahám, Pál             | Déryné                 | Hortobágy              |
| Ady, Endre               | Dohnányi, Ernő         | Hubay, Jenő            |
| Aggtelek, National Park  | Dózsa, György          | Hunyady, Mátyás,       |
| Andrássy, Count Gyula    | Dsida, Jenő            | King                   |
| Apor, Count Vilmos       | Dugonics, Titusz       | Hungarian Runic Script |
| Apponyi, Count Albert    | Early Church           | Hungarian Runic Script |
| Aquincum, Organ of       | Eötvös, Baron Loránd   | Inscription            |
| Arany, János             | Erdős, Pál             | Hussar                 |
| Árpád, Reining Prince    | Erkel, Ferenc          | Illés Ensemble         |
| Attila, King of the Huns | Erzsébet, Queen        | Illuminated Chronicle  |
| Balassi, Bálint          | Erzsébet, St.          | Illyés, Gyula          |
| Bartók, Béla             | Esze, Tamás            | Irinyi, János          |
| Béla IV, King            | Esztergom Cathedral    | Iron Curtain           |
| Bethlen, Prince Gábor    | Fadrusz, János         | István I, King         |
| Bibó, István             | Ferenc, József         | Iványi Grünwald, Béla  |
| Bocskai, Prince István   | Feszty Cyclorama,      | Ják Abbey              |
| Böhm, Károly             | Árpád                  | Janus Pannonius        |
| Bottyán, János (1)       | Fonó, Albert           | Jászai, Mari           |
| Buda Castle              | Fortress Church,       | Jedlik, Ányos          |
| Budapest                 | Marosvásárhely         | Jókai, Mór,            |
| Chain Bridge             | Fráter, Lóránd         | József, Attila         |
| Cimbalom                 | Freedom Fight of 1956  | Káldor, Miklós         |
| Coat of Arms             | Gábor, Áron            | Kállay, Miklós         |
| Coronation Insignia      | Galamb, József         | Kálmán, Imre           |
| Corvina                  | Gemenc Natural         | Károli Bible           |
| Csikós of Hungary        | Reserve                | Kempelen, Farkas       |
| Csíksomlyó Pilgrimage    | Germanusz, Gyula       | Kézai Chronicle        |
| Csokonai Vitéz, Mihály   | Gesta Hungarorum       | Klebelsberg, Kunó      |
| Csontváry Kosztka,       | Gidran Horse           | Kodály, Zoltán         |
| Tivadar                  | Golden Bull            | Komondor               |
| Cumania Greater          | Görgey, Artur          | Környei, Béla          |
| Dance, Hungarian         | Gray Cattle of Hungary | Kossuth, Lajos         |
| Deák Ferenc              | Haban Deep Dish        | Kuruc Hussar           |
| Deák Square Luheran      | Hadik, Count András    | Kuvasz                 |
| Church, Budapest         | Halas Lace             | Lajos I, King          |
| Debrecen Great Church    | Hamvas, Béla           | Lajtha, László         |
| Debrecen Reformed        | Holy Crown, Hungarian  | László I, King         |
| College                  | Horthy, Miklós         | László, Gyula          |

Latinovits, Zoltán
 Lehár, Ferenc
 Liszt, Ferenc
 Lorántffy, Zsuzsanna
 Lotharingiai, Károly
 Ludovika Academy
 Madách, Imre
 Makovecz, Imre
 Mangalica Pig
 Márai, Sándor
 Mátyás Hunyadi
 Mátyás I, King
 Mindszenty, József
 Molnár, Ferenc
 Móricz, Zsigmond
 Munkácsy, Mihály
 Nádasdy, Kálmán
 Nagy Imre
 Nagyszentmiklós Gold
 Treasure
 Nándorfehérvár Victory
 National Anthem
 National Museum,
 Budapest
 National Theater,
 Budapest
 Neumann, von John
 Nyíró, József
 Ódry, Árpád
 Oláh, A. George
 Opera House, Budapest
 Orbán, Viktor
 Ordass, Lajos
 Ormándy, Jenő
 Özséb, The Blessed
 Páger, Antal
 Pannonhalma
 Archabbey
 Parliament Building

Pataki, George E
 Pázmány, Péter
 Petőfi, Sándor
 Pilinszky, János
 Porcelain of Herend
 Prohászka, Ottokár
 Puli
 Puskás, Ferenc
 Rákóczi II, Prince
 Ferenc
 Rátonyi, Róbert
 Ravasz, László
 Reconquest of Buda
 Reformed College of Sárospatak
 Rhédey, Countess
 Claudina
 Richter, Gedeon
 Rippl-Rónai, József
 Rózsa, Miklós
 Runic Script Inscription
 Sándor, Erzsébet
 Selye, János
 Semmelweis, Ignác
 Solt, Sir George
 Szabó, Dezső
 Szabó, Lőrinc
 Széchenyi, Count István
 Székács, József
 Szeleczky, Zita
 Szent-Györgyi, Albert
 Szűr Mantle
 Takács, Károly
 Tamási, Áron
 Teleki, Count Pál
 Teller, Ede
 Thököly, Count Imre
 Tótkés, László

Tolnay, Klári
 Tot, Amerigo
 Ujházy, Ede
 University of Debrecen
 Uray, Tivadar
 Uyghur Girl
 Vahot, Imre
 Vajda, János
 Vámbéry, Ármin
 Várkonyi, Zoltán
 Vasarely, Victor
 Verebély, Tibor
 Vikár, Béla
 Vizsla
 Vörösmarty, Mihály
 Wallenberg, Raul
 Wass, Count Albert
 Weiner, Leó
 Weöres, Sándor
 Wigner, Eugen
 WFH Coat of Arms
 Women of Eger
 Xantus, János
 Ybl, Miklós
 Zala, György
 Zathureczky, Ede
 Zenthe, Ferenc
 Zilahy, Lajos
 Zrinyi, Countess Ilona
 Zrinyi, Count Miklós

(Pictures are from the Wikipedia
 Free Lexicon)

A GUIDE TO HUNGARIAN PRONUNCIATION

In the Hungarian language words are always pronounced phonetically.
The following Tables show the correct pronunciation of the Hungarian alphabet.

VOWELS - They are either short or long, always indicated with an accent

A, a	like in	all	Hungarian word:	a: alma (apple)
Á, á		army		á: álmos (sleepy)
E, e		at		e: ember (man)
É, é		shame		é: édes (sweet)
I, i		it		i: igen (yes)
Í, í		eager		í: íz (taste)
O, o		over		o: okos (clever)
Ó, ó		hole		ó: óra (hour)
Ö, ö		church		ö: öt (five)
Ő, ő		murder		ő: ős (ancestor)
U, u		should		u: unalmas (boring)
Ú, ú		pool		ú: úr (Sir, Mr.)
Ü, ü		same as the French "u"		ü: üres (empty)
Ű, ű		same as in the German word "für"		ű: úr (chasm)

NB. It is important to differentiate between short and long accented vowels for they can change the meaning of the word E.g. "örülni" means "to be glad" while "örülni" means to be mad.

CONSONANTS – same as in English, with some exceptions

C, c	like in	tzigane	Hungarian word:	c: cigány (Gypsy)
Cs, cs		church		cs: csak (only)
eh		when appears within foreign derivatives then pronounced as in mech anic
D, d		do		d: dél (noon)
F, f		full		f: foot (láb)
G, g	always as in	grow		g: gaz (weed)
Gy, gy		dj		gy: magyar (Hungarian)
H, h		hot (always pronounced)		h: bat (six)
J, j		yoga		j: jó (good)
K, k		key		k: kapu (gate)
L, l		look		l: ló (horse)
Ly, ly		yoke		ly: lyuk (hole)
M, m		mom		m: mama (mom)
N, n		no		n: no (nem)
Ny, ny		new (Spanish "fi")		ny: nyak (neck)
S, s		shoe		s: sok (many)
Sz, sz		see		sz: szép (nice)
T, t		town		t: te (you)
Ty, ty		Antje		ty: tyúk (hen)
W, w:	there is no "w" in Hungarian, except in some names and foreign words: pronounced "v".
X, x:	eks. There is no "x" in Hungarian, except in some foreign derivatives, eg. "komplex", and names like "Xenia".
Y, y	Never appears as an initial or individual letter, except in foreign derivatives. Yolk j: jó (good)
Z, z		zest		z: zene (music)
Zs, zs		garage		zs: zseb (p)

N.B. "y" at the end of personal names sounds like the letter "i" in (like in "it"), if it is not part of gy, ly, ny, or ty. Sometimes consonants are doubled for grammatical reasons. E.g. "rövid" means "short", but "rövidebb" means "shorter"; or "knife" means "kés", and "késsel" means "with knife". They are pronounced with a slight emphasis. In certain cases emphasis is placed on consonants, e.g., "hosszú" means "long", or "menny" means "heaven". They should be slightly stressed.

IMPRESSUM